chairman of that committee in having a law enacted taxing wild lands. He is now (1895) representing Mitchell county in the general assembly. At the last session of that body he introduced the famous "anti-bar-room" bill. Mr. Bush comes of a family of legislators, his father, all of his brothers and he himself having at different times been prominent members of the lower branch of the general assembly, and all but one brother, James S., having represented their district in the state senate. Mr. Charles C. Bush, who now represents the Eighth district in the state senate, is the youngest brother of the subject of this sketch. Mr. Bush was married in September, 1870, to Miss Calista W., daughter of W. G. Sheffield, a leading citizen of Calhoun county, Ga. Six children who have blessed this union are now living: Robert D. and Marshall E., who are now practicing law with their father under the firm name of I. A. Bush & Sons, both of whom are A. B. graduates of Emory college and have attended the law school of the university of Georgia; Nina Irene, a member of the junior class of the Wesleyan Female college, Macon, Ga.; Isaac A., Jr.; Ross, and Calista. Mr. Bush is a royal arch Mason, and he and his family are zealous and exemplary members of the Methodist church. He has been elected three times a delegate from the annual to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church south; first, that held at Richmond, Va.; second, that at St. Louis, Mo., and, third, that held at Memphis, Tenn., in 1895. This is the highest honor the church can confer upon a layman. He is noted for his liberal support of the church and of intellectual and moral progressiveness.

ROBERT H. COCHRAN, planter, Camilla, Mitchell Co., Ga., son of James and Martha (Smith) Cochran, was born in Chambers county, Ala. His great-grandfather, Adam Cochran, was one of three brothers who came from Scotland to this country before the revolutionary war and settled in Virginia. John Cochran, his grandfather, when grown to manhood, moved to North Carolina, where he married Miss Sarah McMillan. They remained in North Carolina until they had nine children, seven sons and two daughters, when he migrated to Alabama, whence, subsequently he removed to Georgia, and settled near Albany in what is now Dougherty county. But one of his children, Mrs. Rose M. Beverly, Thomas county, Ga., is now living. Although when a young man he became paralyzed on one side, he lived to be ninety years old. He was a stanch democrat, a large and successful planter, and himself and wife consistent members of the Missionary Baptist church, and both were buried in the family burying ground in Dougherty county. Mr. Cochran's father, fifth child of his parents, was born in North Carolina, and while yet young moved with his family to Alabama, where he grew to manhood and married Miss Martha Smith, who was born in North Carolina. He served as a soldier in the Florida war. Subsequently he moved from Alabama to Georgia, and settled near Albany, in what is now Dougherty county, where he died. To him were born six children: William, who died in Yorktown in the Confederate service; John, deceased, widow and four children now living in Mitchell county; James, deceased, merchant, left widow and two children in Camilla; Callie, deceased at fifteen; C. C. Cochran, and Robert H., the subject of this sketch. The family subsequently moved to Baker county, and thence to the neighborhood where our subject now lives, with whom his mother, born in 1814, now eighty years of age, makes her home. Mr. Cochran, when five years old, came with the family to a place near Albany, Ga., where the family lived twelve years. When he was eighteen years of age he enlisted in Campbell's siege artillery company, and was stationed at St. Mark's, Fla., performing guard duty, and skirmishing more or less for the two years and two months he was in the service, when he was compelled to come home on account of seriously impaired health.

He then assumed the management of the home place, not far from where he lives. Mr. Cochran's life has been an eventful and very busy one. Being wholesouled, and, hence, popular, and withal of great capability, his fellow-citizens have kept him almost constantly in some public position. He has been sheriff of the county, deputy sheriff four years, tax collector fourteen years, and in 1892 was elected to represent the county in the general assembly. He is extensively engaged in planting, has a splendid well-managed and improved plantation, and takes an active and deep interest in everything promising to develop and add to the material prosperity of the county. He makes his influence felt in whatever cause or object he espouses. Mr. Cochran has been married three times. His first wife was Miss Emma Haile, by whom he had three children: Underwood, a graduate of the medical college, Louisville, Ky., physician and druggist, Camilla, Ga.; Mattie Lou, wife of James Hall, Thomas county, and B. H., Camilla. His second wife was Miss Blanche Haile, by whom he had two sons, Roy and Edward, both at home. For his third wife he married Miss Henrietta Haile, a cousin of his first wife, who has borne him three children: Mildred J., Robert H., Jr., and Eustis. Mr. Cochran and his family are exemplary members of the Baptist church. Mr. Cochran's brother, C. C. Cochran, is a successful planter and stock raiser, living in Mitchell county. He has been twice married, his first wife being Janie, a daughter of James Collins, a well-to-do farmer of Mitchell county, and his second wife, Douglas Collins, a sister of the first wife. By the first marriage three children were born: Maud, Collins, and Janie; and by the second one son, Will.

GEORGE C. COCHRAN, farmer-merchant, Flint, Mitchell Co., Ga., son of Robert and Elizabeth (Smith) Cochran, was born in Chambers county, Ala., in 1845. His great-grandfather, Adam Cochran, was one of three brothers who came from Scotland to this country before the revolutionary war. John Cochran, his grandfather, settled in North Carolina, where he married Miss Sallie McMillan—he dying at ninety and she at eighty-four years of age. Mr. Cochran's father was born in Anson county, N. C., in August, 1805. He was raised a farmer, and farming was his life pursuit. His wife was born Feb. 2, 1817, and they were married in 1836. After their marriage they migrated to Georgia and stopped in Talbot county one year. They then went to Meriwether county, Ga., where they spent another year, and then moved to Alabama and settled in Chambers county, where they remained until 1850, when they returned to Georgia and settled in Baker county. After remaining there ten years they moved to Mitchell county and settled near Flint, where he died in February, 1889, aged eighty-four years. He was a democrat and an active member of the Missionary Baptist church, in which he took a lively interest. His widow, hale and hearty for one of her years—seventy-seven—makes her home with the subject of this sketch. She is also a devout member of the Baptist church. They were the parents of thirteen children, of whom twelve were raised to maturity, and eight are yet living: John W., Thomasville, Ga.; Robert T., Mitchell county; G. B., Flint; George C., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Sarah A. Johnson, Meigs, Thomas Co.; Mrs. Martha M. Adams; Mrs. Elizabeth Stripling and Mrs. Rosa Jones. Those deceased are J. T., Mrs. Mollie Putnam, Marquis De La Fayette, who was accidentally killed after his return from the Confederate army; Ida and Alice, an infant. Mr. Cochran was raised and educated and grew to manhood in Mitchell county, excepting the time he was in the army. After the war he began life for himself on the old homestead and operated it three years. He then went to Dougherty county and permanently located at Flint, where he has since been extensively engaged in farming and a general merchandise business. He has

1,600 acres under admirable cultivation, wisely diversifying his crops. For seven years after coming here he did a milling business, but of late years he has devoted himself entirely to his farm and store, prospering in both. Mr. Cochran married Miss Anna B., daughter of Dr. James S. and Mary Summerlyn (nee Partridge) Jones, natives, respectively, of Virginia and Georgia. Dr. Jones received a liberal education in his native state, and coming to Georgia, was for some years local editor of the "Morning News," Savannah. He afterward went to Florida, where he became a leading physician. He was born in May, 1817, and died in South Florida, Sept. 18, 1885. His wife was born in 1817, and died in November, 1889. Dr. Jones was a royal arch Mason and himself and wife were members of the Presbyterian church. Three children were born to them: Minor S., Titusville, Fla.; Anna B., wife of our subject, and William L., Houston county, Ga. Mrs. Jones had three children by her first husband, of whom one, Mrs. John S. Purviance, Hamilton county, Fla., is still living. Mrs. Cochran was raised in Florida, was educated in Lake City and Fernandina, and was engaged in teaching in Dougherty county, Ga., when she married Mr. Cochran. Five children have blessed their union: Ida Lou, who died at the age of thirteen; George H., Eva Florida, Robert S. and Anna Jones. A leading and prosperous farmer and merchant, he is prominent and influential, socially, politically and financially. He is a staunch democrat and himself and wife are consistent members of the Missionary Baptist church.

L. A. M. COLLINS, planter and turpentine distiller, Flint, Mitchell Co., Ga., son of Bryant and Martha (Bullard) Collins, was born in Coweta county, Ga., in 1838. His parents were natives of North Carolina, who, soon after their marriage, came to Georgia and settled in Wilkinson county. In 1826 or 1827 they moved to Coweta county, settled on a farm and lived there eighteen or twenty years. They then moved to Stewart county, farmed particularly successfully some years, and then moved and settled near Flint, in that part of Baker, now included in Mitchell county. Here they lived until they died—he in 1862, aged sixty-eight, and she, a member of the Baptist church, in 1863, aged sixty-five years. He was a man of considerable ability, of strong and determined character, and before the war accumulated a handsome property. Left an orphan, and poor, he enjoyed no educational advantages, but entering a store as a clerk while a boy, he acquired the rudiments of an education, and such a knowledge of business affairs as to be consulted about, and employed to write deeds, contracts, etc. Later in life he served as a justice of the peace; while living in Coweta county he taught school, and also served as a soldier in the Florida war. Politically he was an old-time democrat. To this worthy couple nine children—five sons and four daughters—were born, of whom three are now living: James A., L. A. M., the subject of this sketch, and Mrs. Martha Tyar, Americus, Ga. Those deceased are: Jessie, Mrs. Beck, Mitchell county; Caroline, wife of Daniel Palmer; Priscilla, Mrs. Joiner, Mitchell county; Joseph, served during the war, died in Camilla; Charles, served during the war, wounded in battle at Ocean Pond; Benjamin, wounded at Petersburg, died while on his way home. Mr. Collins was raised mainly in Stewart and Mitchell counties, attending schools in both, coming to what is now Mitchell county in 1854, and located near the home place, where he lived until he went to Camilla. After five years' residence there he moved to his present property, where he has since been extensively and profitably engaged in the turpentine and rosin business. He has two plants, one at Flint, and a larger one on the line between Mitchell and Colquitt counties, about ten miles east of Flint, which is the largest in the county. He owns about 11,000 acres of land, and his output is about 1,000 barrels of turpentine and 5,000 barrels of rosin. He is the largest producer in Mitchell county. He has been postmaster at Flint since the office was established. Besides his turpentine and rosin business Mr. Collins conducts a very extensive farming interest. He is one of the shrewdest and best money-making men in the county, and possesses great force of character. He is a democrat and has represented Mitchell county in the general assembly. Mr. Collins was married to Mrs. Laura A. (nee Fitzgerald) Hilliard, of Stewart county, by whom he has had six children: Della, Martha L., Rosa, C. D., J. E. and D. B. Mrs. Collins is an ardent and exemplary member of the Missionary Baptist church, and the family is one of the most interesting and intelligent in the community.

L. B. C. EVANS, planter, Baconton, Mitchell Co., Ga., son of Ezekiel and Zarah (Bacon) Evans, was born in Bernwell (now Aken) district, S. C., in 1830. The family is of Welsh extraction—members of it having gone from Wales to Belfast, Ireland, where they were linen weavers. Mr. Evans' great-grandfather emigrated thence to America and settled in South Carolina, bringing his flax wheel with him. His son James, Mr. Evans' grandfather, was born in South Carolina. His father, Ezekiel, was born in Abbeville district, S. C., in 1787, and was reared and received a good education there. His wife was born in Edgefield district, S. C., in 1803. During the war with Great Britain in 1812-14 a cavalry company was raised in the Evans neighborhood, which he joined, but the company was not called into service. In early life he taught school, then settled on a farm and married—thereafter making farming his life pursuit. In 1836, with his wife and seven children, he came by wagon to Georgia and settled in Houston county, purchasing two tracts of land partially improved, where he lived until he died. He was very successful and accumulated a quite valuable estate. For a number of years he was a justice of the peace, the only office he ever held, for although well qualified he never desired or sought office. He was an "old-line whig" and an uncompromising union man. Ten children were born to them, only two of whom are now living: L. B. C., the subject of this sketch, and Mary, widow of Kinchen Radford, who makes her home with Mr. Evans. The deceased children are: Henry, died in Dooly county, Ga.; John, died in Houston county in 1877; Sarah, died in the same county and year; Clara, wife of John K. Long, Thomas county, Ga.; James R., died in the Confederate service near Charleston, S. C., and three who died when young. Himself and wife were members of the Methodist church, and both died in Houston county—she in 1844 and he in 1854. The maternal grandfather of Mr. L. B. C. Evans, Lydwell Bacon, was a small boy when the British occupied Augusta, and went with his mother to live near that city, their home neighborhood being full of tories. His father at the time was in the patriot army, under Gen. Greene. Mr. Evans was but five years old when his parents moved to Georgia; yet he says he well remembers the trip, especially the first day, as it rained the entire day and he wondered where he was going to sleep. He received a common school education in Houston county, and when he became of age he began farming on his own account. Soon after himself and his brother John bought the home place and operated it until 1859, when they sold it with the intention of going to Louisiana. But the war having been precipitated, they abandoned their purpose. In 1858 he went to Texas to look at the country, going overland to Greenwood, Miss., thence by water to Baton Rouge, La., from there up Red river to Shreveport, La., and then on a prospecting tour in Texas. In March, 1862, he enlisted in an artillery company, Capt. Joe Palmer, now (1895) ordinary of Houston county, and served under Gens. Bragg, Johnston and Hood. He was a participant in the battle of Perryville, Ky., was with Morgan in his Kentucky raid, in front of Gen. Sherman's army, Chattanooga to Atlanta, and with his command aided in the defense of that city. His command did not accompany Gen. Hood to Tennessee, but remained in Georgia, and in the service until the surrender. He received two flesh wounds from bullets—one in the leg and one on his jaw—during the war, but was otherwise unhurt. After the war he returned to Houston county, bought a farm, and cultivated it until 1877, when he sold it and bought land near Baconton and settled on it. He now owns 500 acres, a large portion of which is under productive and profitable cultivation, with a roomy and comfortable residence and large and substantial outbuildings such as a prosperous and progressive farmer would have. Mr. Evans was married three times. His first wife was Miss Hattie Lane, by whom he had two children: Susie, wife of E. D. Glousier, merchant and postmaster, Baconton, and Edith C., deceased wife of J. D. Frazier. The mother of these having died, he married Miss Julia Logan, who bore him two children: James L., at home, and Matthew, who died when nine months old, in 1874. His son by this marriage was educated at Cuthbert, Randolph Co., Ga., and is with the family, assisting in the management of the farm. For his third wife he married Mrs. Hazleton, of Muscogee county, Ga. Mr. Evans is a democrat, and himself and family are members of the Methodist church, of which he is a steward.

JOHN C. FRAZIER, planter and sheep raiser, Raiford, Mitchell Co., Ga., son of David and Penelope (Crawford) Frazier, was born in Pulaski county, Ga., in 1825. His father was a native of North Carolina, was left an orphan, and raised by Stig. Graham of Pulaski county. After he had attained manhood and married and had one child, he moved to Thomas county, where he lived until his death, which occurred when our subject was four years old, by his falling from a house he was raising. His mother married again and lived in Thomas county until her children were grown, when she moved to Mitchell county and lived with one of her sons until she died, eighty years of age. By her first husband she was the mother of three children: John C., the subject of this sketch; W. B., who served through the late civil war, the only survivor of the first company he was a member of, and one of four survivors of the second, and is now engaged in stock raising near Ft. Myers, in Everglade county, Fla.; Eliza Jane, near Camilla, widow of David Faircloth. Mr. Frazier was reared a farmer and stock-raiser in Thomas county, and received an exceedingly limited education. When grown he purchased a farm on the Flint river in that part of Baker now included in Mitchell county, and lived there about eight years. He then bought and settled the place where he now lives, and has since been engaged in farming and sheep husbandry. For forty-five years he has lived in sight of where he now lives, and small oak trees he planted on his present home place are now large enough for saw-logs. He owns a very large body of land, and besides being extensively engaged in farming, has about 2,000 sheep. During the war Mr. Frazier was detailed to look after government stock. Mr. Frazier has been married twice. He first married Miss Susan Faircloth, Georgia-born, who died in April, 1884 (a member of the Baptist church), leaving six children: Raiford C., merchant and postmaster at Raiford, named for him; Calvin, deceased; John W., near Baconton; William B.; J. D.; and Andrew J., all three near the home place. His second wife was Miss Elizabeth Jassiert, of German descent, born in Greene county, Ga. Mr. Frazier belongs to the democratic party, and is a member of the Baptist church. He is a hard worker and good manager; the largest sheep grower in the county, honorable in everything, and held in the highest esteem.

JUDSON L. HAND, planter, merchant and manufacturer, Pelham, Mitchell Co., Ga., son of Columbus W. and Columbia A. (Bower) Hand—natives respectively of Burke and Baldwin counties, Ga.—was born in Houston county, Ga., in 1851. His father early in life settled on a plantation in Houston county and followed farming. In 1856 he moved to Sumter county, where he died in 1880, aged fifty-seven years. His widow, our subject's mother, is still living on the home plantation. He was a very successful planter, a democrat in politics, served as a lieutenant in the late civil war, and was wounded in one of the fights around Macon, Ga. Of the children born to him, five are now living: Mrs. Emma Stewart, living on the old homestead; Judson L., subject of this sketch; Mrs. Ella McKellar, living on a part of the old homestead; Mrs. Ida Scarborough, Twiggs county; Mrs. Alice Barrow, wife of Rev. A. Barrow. Mr. Hand was raised and educated and prepared for college in Sumter county, and graduated with honor in 1871 from the university of Georgia. At college he was a member of the K. A. fraternity, and editor and business manager of the college paper. Starting in life for himself he invested largely in lands and located at Pelham, in Mitchell county, where he engaged extensively in agriculture and the lumber business, in which he was very prosperous. He owns 20,000 acres of land, 13,000 of which is virgin forest, and 2,600 acres under cultivation. Of this, in 1894, he had 600 acres in watermelons. Besides his extensive farming and lumber interests at Pelham he is interested in a large ginnery and a cottonseed-oil mill. In 1876 he commenced a general merchandise business on a small scale, and this business has grown, until now it is the largest business in plantation supplies in south Georgia. From 1878 to 1888 he was extensively engaged in the turpentine business, and in 1883 he was the largest naval stores operator in the south. He is to-day the largest melon grower in the United States. Evidences of his sagacity and business enterprise are seen in the development and prosperity of the country around him everywhere. A few years ago he introduced in his section the culture of sea island cotton by planting it on his own farm, and now it is one of the most important crops in South Georgia. He takes an active interest in politics and has represented Mitchell county and the Eighth senatorial district in the general assembly. His home is one of the most delightful and charming in all that section, his residence being one of the finest, almost palatial in its magnificent proportions, its imposing architectural exterior, and its elaborately finished and embellished interior, all surrounded by a profusion of flowers unexcelled for gorgeousness and fragrance. Mr. Hand married Miss Enna Collinsworth of Sumter county, a graduate of Furlow college at Americus; a union which has been blessed with three children: Florence, Irene and Leland. He is a strong working democrat, and a master Mason. He is the master spirit and president of the Hand Trading company, and one of the wealthiest citizens in that part of Georgia.

ABSALOM JACKSON, deceased, son of William Jackson, was born in Greene county, Ga., early in the present century. William Jackson, his father, was a descendant of English-Scotch emigrants, who came to this country some time before the revolutionary war and settled in Georgia. He served through that war in the patriot army, lived in Greene county afterward, where he accumulated a valuable estate, and died in 1835 or 1836, at a very advanced age. His wife survived him a number of years. To them four children were born: Nathan, who settled in Florida, where he raised a large family; Absalom, the subject of this sketch; Elizabeth, wife of Archibald Odum, a revolutionary soldier, who died at the age of eighty-four years, at the home of George S. Jackson; Susie, who died unmarried. Absalom Jackson when a boy accompanied the family to Wilkinson county, Ga., where after attaining his majority he married Miss Elizabeth Smylis of Jefferson county, Ga. They remained in Wilkinson county until 1841, when they removed to that part of Baker now included in Dougherty county, and settled at Blue Springs, near Albany. His intention was to build a saw and grist mill, but abandoning the enterprise, he returned a year afterward to Wilkinson county, where, forty-five years of age, he died. He was an "old-line whig," and a consistent member of the Baptist church. Soon after his death his widow and children returned to Blue Springs, where they lived until 1855, when the family moved to Mitchell county and settled near what is now known as Baconton, where the mother died in 1880, aged seventy-six years, at the home of George W. Jackson. She was a strict member of the Baptist church. They were the parents of six children: Rev. James W., deceased, Methodist minister; Greene S.; John L., Pike county; George W., near Baconton; Jason M., Miller county, and Mary, deceased wife of Joseph Walker, Camilla.

GREENE SMYLIS JACKSON, planter, Baconton, Mitchell Co., Ga., son of Absalom and Elizabeth (Smylis) Jackson, was born in Wilkinson county, Dec. 25, 1826. He was raised on the farm and enjoyed good school advantages, including attendance at Cool Springs academy, until he was fifteen years old, when his father moved to Baker (now Dougherty) county, after which his school education was very limited. He remained with his mother—his father having died when he was in his nineteenth year—until he was twenty-five years old. He then commenced farming for himself, and, in 1862, removed to his present place, four miles east of Baconton, which has been his home ever since. During the latter part of the war he served as a militiaman; and after the surrender he was appointed an agent of the bureau to preserve peace between the whites and the colored people. He was elected justice of the peace some years ago and held the office until 1892. Mr. Jackson was married in 1858 to Miss Virginia Peacock, daughter of Robert Peacock, a native of North Carolina, who migrated to Georgia. Mr. Peacock was twice married, and was the father of eighteen children. Three of those by the first, and eight by the last marriage are still living, the eldest of whom, Benajah, is nearly ninety years old. Mrs. Jackson was a daughter by the second marriage, the twelfth born to her father, was born in Macon county and raised in Brooks. Nine children have blessed this union: Ella, deceased wife of J. A. Jones, Camilla; W. T.; Thomas; Minnie, wife of Daniels; Robert T., dentist, located in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, South America; Lillie; Flora; Julius; Greene S., Jr. Mr. Jackson is a stanch democrat, and himself and family are members of the Methodist church, of which he was a steward for many years, and has been Sunday school superintendent for fifteen years.

GEORGE W. JACKSON, planter, Baconton, Mitchell Co., Ga., son of Absalom and Elizabeth (Smylis) Jackson, was born in Wilkinson county, Ga., Jan. 20, 1834. He was but a boy when his father and family moved to near Blue Springs, in what is now Dougherty county, and what education he received was obtained at the common schools of the country. His father died when he was about ten years old, but the family lived together until 1855, when his mother, with his sister, youngest brother and himself, moved to near what is now Baconton, where his mother bought a tract of 160 acres of land and settled upon it; where she lived, cared for by the subject of this sketch, until her death. Mr.

Jackson has gradually added to this original purchase until he has 2,000 acres of choice, eligibly located land, 1,250 acres of which have been cleared; nearly all of which is under improved cultivation. Mr. Jackson enlisted early in the war between the states, and was a lieutenant in Dearing's brigade, W. H. F. Lee's division. He served about four years, two of which were on picket duty along the Virginia and North Carolina coast, and participated in the obstinately contested fights around Petersburg. After the war he returned to his farm, which it has been his pride to improve. He is wide-awake and progressive, and an active and liberal promoter of every movement calculated to advance the material and moral interests of the county. He was county commissioner eight years, which is the only public office he ever held. He is devoted to his home and interesting family, and is particularly anxious that all his children should be well educated. Mr. Jackson married Miss Eulelia Peacock (a sister of the wife of his brother, Greene S.), daughter of Robert Peacock, a wealthy Brooks county planter—a union which has been blessed with eight children—three sons and five daughters; Lula V., wife of W. H. Brimberry, Camilla; Nellie A.; Florence May; George Pierce; Harry N.; Jewell; Irvin Finton, and Lucia. Mr. Jackson is an ardent democrat, a member of the A. O. U. W., and himself and wife and family are ardent members of the Methodist church.

THOMAS PALMER, planter, Camilla, Mitchell Co., son of Daniel and Caroline (Collins) Palmer, was born in Stewart county in 1853, and was a mere babe when the family moved by wagon, camping by the wayside over night, from Stewart to Mitchell county, where he was raised, and educated—limitedly—in the common schools of the county. He began life for himself as a merchant in Camilla in 1875-76, and then went to Texas, where he remained a year. Returning to Camilla he re-entered mercantile life there, but, later moved to Flint in the same county, where he did business one year. He then went to Florida, where he followed merchandising, milling and fruit-growing a number of years. Coming back to Mitchell county he settled permanently on the "old plantation," where he is now extensively engaged in farming. Partaking of the practical characteristics of the family, and of genial and friendly traits, he has been successful in his various enterprises, and won the respect and esteem of those among whom he has lived. Mr. Palmer married Miss Josie McClain, daughter of Dr. W. R. McClain, a practicing physician of Early county, Ga. She was born and raised, and liberally educated at Damascus, in that county. Two children—a son and a daughter—have been born to them: Martin and Mittie C. He is a democrat, and a master Mason, and Mrs. Palmer is a member of the Methodist church.

J. B. PALMER, planter, Camilla, Mitchell Co., Ga., son of Daniel and Caroline (Collins) Palmer, was born in Stewart county, Ga., in 1846. His father was born in Twiggs county, Ga., in 1818, and when quite young was left an orphan, and taken in charge by his grandmother—Bullard. She died before he was fully grown and he went to Stewart county, where he engaged in farming, and was very prosperous. In 1854 he moved with his family to that part of Baker, now included in Mitchell county, settling on Flint river east of Newton, where they resided some years. From there he went to a place below Newton, where he lived until settling his place near Camilla. During the late civil war he enlisted in the Seventh Georgia regiment, Gen. Bennings' brigade, as a private, and saw much active and arduous service. At the battle of Chickamauga he was seriously wounded and was left insensible—probably for dead—on the battlefield. Being disabled by the wound he was discharged from further service.

Seven children were born to him: J. B.; Marthana, Mrs. Baggs; Joseph (deceased); Thomas; Mittie, Mrs. Spence; J. H.; and Mollie (deceased). The mother of these children died in the fall of 1866, and he subsequently married Mrs. Rhoda (nee Adams) Swearingen, and is now, in his old age, enjoying the accumulations of a usefully spent life, at his cosy home in Camilla. J. B. Palmer was raised in what is now Mitchell county, receiving the little education he has at the common schools. During the war he was a member of Capt. Wimberly's cavalry company, Hood's command. In 1867 he commenced farming on his own account, and in 1870 settled on the tract of land two miles north of Camilla on which he now lives. It was in the woods, but he cleared a large portion of it, and has it in a fine state of cultivation. Mr. Palmer was married Jan. 13, 1871, to Miss Mollie E., daughter of A. H. Cox of Mitchell county, by whom he has had three children: Carrie, wife of O. O. Worley; Willie D., and Benjamin F. (deceased). Mr. Palmer is a democrat, and has served as county commissioner eight years. He is a member of the Baptist church, and his wife is a member of the Methodist church, and no members of the community are held in higher esteem.

J. H. SCAIFE, lawyer, ex-judge county court, Camilla, Mitchell Co., Ga., son of Rev. Jamieson and Melissa (Lovejoy) Scaife, natives, respectively, of South Carolina and Georgia, was born in Selma, Ala., Feb. 5, 1849. His father was born in Union district, S. C., in 1810, and was raised on a plantation not far from Spartanburg. His educational advantages were exceedingly limited, but by devoting all his spare time to study after reaching maturity, he acquired a good education. About this time he came to Georgia and settled in Jasper county, where he married his wife, who was born in the county. Later he was received into the Georgia conference of the M. E. church, in which he remained many years, when his family had become so large his salary was inadequate to their proper support. Withdrawing from the conference he went to Alabama and went on a farm; but at the expiration of a year he returned to Georgia and purchased land in Stewart county, where he farmed extensively, and so profitably that at the close of the civil war he freed fifty negroes—the result of his accumulations. After the surrender he moved to Eufaula, Ala., where he engaged in merchandising until 1869; giving his personal attention, however, to the ministry. In 1873 he came to Mitchell county and settled—and died in April, 1875. His wife died in Alabama in 1891 in the eighty-first year of her age. Thirteen children were the fruit of this union, six of whom survive: Mrs. M. A. Doris, Cairo, Ga.; Mrs. Bostwick, and Mrs. J. H. Powell, Camilla; Prof. J. F. and Dr. W. L. Camilla; and J. H., the subject of this sketch. Those deceased are: Mrs. B. Noble; F. A., killed at Murfreesboro, Tenn.; J. W., and Miss Lou; and three died in infancy. Judge Scaife was raised principally in Stewart county, Ga., where he attended the academy at Lumpkin. While in Eufaula he attended the male academy, of which Rev. W. H. Patterson was principal. Subsequently he attended Cumberland university, Lebanon, Tenn., and after his graduation he read law under Col. W. B. Wilborn, Eufaula, Ala., and was admitted to the bar in 1875. He returned to Camilla soon afterward, where he has since been engaged in the practice of his profession, securing by his ability an influential and remunerative clientage. In 1884 he was appointed judge of the county court, but resigned in 1886 on account of impaired health, and went to Florida, where he remained until the following year. In 1892 he was elected to represent the Eighth senatorial district in the general assembly. Ardent and active he has always been prominent in politics; his opinions are convictions; he is outspoken in his expression of them, and is very influential with his party. Judge Scaife married Mrs. Emmons, widow of Dr. Emmons. She was born in Louisiana, but was raised in Kentucky and Cincinnati, Ohio. When grown to young womanhood her parents moved to Denison, Texas, where she married Dr. Emmons. He came from Texas to Georgia and located in Camilla, where he died. Judge Scaife is a master Mason, and Mrs. Scaife is an active and earnest Christian and an ardent mission worker. Their home, in its surroundings, and its religious and social attractions, is one of the most delightful and charming in the county.

WILLIAM N. SPENCE, solicitor-general Albany circuit, Camilla, Mitchell Co., Ga., son of William and Susan (Hilliard) Spence, was born in Stewart county, Ga., Feb. 25, 1851. The family in this country descended from two brothers, Joseph and William Spence, who came from England to America among the earliest colonists, and settled—Joseph in Virginia, and William in North Carolina. Thorpe Spence, great-grandfather of our subject, was born in Virginia, and when a young man came to Georgia and settled in Burke county, where he married Miss Charity Smith, an orphan girl raised by a Mr. William Hinds. He died in middle age leaving five sons: Bluford, Greene, Littleton, Eastern, and Joseph, all deceased. His widow afterward married a Mr. Miller, by whom she had two sons: George and Levi, both now living in Alabama. Mr. Spence's grandfather, Bluford Spence, was raised in Burke county, where he married Miss Polly Fann, who died after bearing one child—Susan, now deceased—who married James Adams. For his second wife he married Miss Elizabeth Fitzgerald, also of Burke county. Subsequently he moved to Pulaski county, and thence—about 1830—to Stewart county, and settled on a farm on the Chattahoochee river, where he died about 1836. He served with an Alabama command in the Florida war. He left his widow and seven children, of whom three—Joseph T., Greene, and Sarah, wife of J. A. Collins, are now living; and four—Ann, Mrs. Metcalf; Mary, Mrs. Walker; Martha, Mrs. Thompson; and William, our subject's father, are dead. His widow married James Hilliard in Stewart county, who moved the family to Mitchell county and lived there awhile, and then went to Brooks county, where she died, and he married Miss Clara Clark of Florida. William Spence, the father of our subject, was born in Burke county in 1822, but was raised and educated in Stewart county, where he followed farming, and where, about 1845, he married Miss Susan Hilliard. About 1861 he enlisted in a company of state troops—after moving his family to Mitchell county—and was in the service in Tennessee with Gen. Johnston's army, participating in very many engagements of more or less importance, and in the fights around Atlanta. After the war he resided a few years in Mitchell county, then removed to Brooks county; but in a short time he moved back to Mitchell county. Subsequently he moved to Houston county, where he died in 1885, aged sixty-three years, having for the greater part of his life been a consistent member of the Baptist church. He was twice married. By his first wife he had nine children, five of whom are living: William N, the subject of this sketch; Mary C., wife of Mr. Perry, postmaster at Camilla; Irene E., wife of Rev. William B. Bennet, Quitman, Ga., county judge of Brooks county; Carswell, Hawkinsville, Pulaski Co.; and Susan, wife of R. Tip Ragan, Hawkinsville. The following four are dead: Andrew J., James Hilliard, Celia Ellen, and Bluford. The mother of these died in Stewart county, 1863, and the father afterward married Miss Nancy Halliburton, who survives him and makes her home with Mr. W. N. Spence, in Camilla. Mr. Spence lived in Stewart county until he was twelve years of age, when his father moved to Mitchell county, and after remaining three years moved to Brooks county, he attending the schools in the several counties. He afterward attended the university of Kentucky, at Lexington, and then returning home took a law course in Macon, Ga., graduating in 1876, and locating in Camilla, which has since been his home. The people called him to the mayoralty in 1877-78, and in 1880 elected him to represent the county in the general assembly—re-electing him in 1882. In 1884 he was elected solicitor-general of Albany circuit, and has been continuously re-elected since—a sufficient evidence of the efficiency and fidelity of his service. In addition he is quite extensively engaged in farming, and ranks high in his county and section socially and politically. Mr. Spence married Miss Anne R. Curry, born in Virginia, but reared in Baker county, Ga., daughter of Rev. W. L. Curry, a Missionary Baptist minister, formerly of South Carolina. Five children have blessed this union: Susie, Emily Toy, Henry Turner, William, and Julia, who died when three years old. Himself and wife are prominent and influential members of the Missionary Baptist church.

REV. JOHN L. UNDERWOOD, judge county court, Camilla, Mitchell Co., Ga., son of Launcelot V. and Martha Cobb (nee Thomas) Underwood, was born near Sumterville, Sumter Co., Ala., March 27, 1836. On his father's side he is of English ancestry, his grandfather, Levi Underwood, being descended from one of three brothers who came from England to the colonies before the revolutionary war and settled in Virginia and North Carolina. He was born in Nash county, N. C., where he farmed and married and had children born to him. In 1824 he moved to Rutherford county, Tenn., and died at an advanced age near Murfreesboro. He married a Miss Due, who, through her father and the Viverettes, was of French blood, by whom he had several sons and daughters, all of whom are now dead. Judge Underwood's father was born in Nash county, N. C., in 1808, where he was raised and schooled until he was sixteen years old, when his father moved to Tennessee, where he grew to manhood. About this time he left Tennessee and went to Sumter county, Ala., and engaged as a clerk at the old Choctaw Indian agency, called the Factory, on Tombigbee river. The trade was principally with Indians. He was very successful as a merchant and planter, founded the town of Sumterville, and was rapidly accumulating a fortune when the panic of 1837 swept over the country and ruined him. But, nothing daunted, he went to work, resumed business, and by hard work, careful management and judicious investments again acquired a competency. He was a man of great energy and fine business capacity, coupled with unusual sagacity. Possessed of a very retentive memory, he kept well posted as to current events and prominent men, and became a leading man in the county. While never a candidate for civil office, he took a great interest in politics and was always an ardent whig. When the war between the states began he was in easy circumstances, and saved enough from the general wreck to buy a plantation when it was over—on which he died in 1873. He was a very strict member of the Presbyterian church, of which he was an elder. He was twice married, his first wife being Mrs. Martha T. Cobb, widow of John Cobb, and a daughter of F. Gabriel Thomas, a prominent and influential citizen of Hancock county, Ga., and afterward of Rupell county, Ala. She died at the age of forty-nine years, leaving four children by Mr. Cobb and one by Col. Underwood. His second wife was Miss Ruth C. Harwell, formerly of Pittsburg, Pa., by whom he had two children, a son and a daughter, both of whom are dead. Judge Underwood was raised in Alabama, where he enjoyed the best educational advantages afforded by the schools and academies of the county. A part of his boyhood was passed in a school in Mississippi, and in 1853 he entered Oglethorpe university and was graduated in 1855 with first honors. On his return home he was placed in charge of Newborn academy, in Greene county, where he had been prepared for college, retaining his position until 1857.

That year he entered the Theological seminary at Columbia, S. C., then presided over by Dr. Thornwell, one of the profoundest and most distinguished divines of the south. After completing his studies at the seminary he went to Europe, where he spent the greater part of two years at the university of Heidelberg, Germany, and at the Sorbonne, Paris. While attending lectures at Sorbonne the war between the states was precipitated and he returned home in 1861 to shoulder his musket as a matter of principle for the constitutional rights of the southern states, and enlisted as a private in the Twentieth Alabama regiment, Col. I. W. Garrett, then stationed at Mobile. With his command he participated in Kirby Smith's Kentucky campaign and in the memorable engagements at Baker's Creek and the siege of Vicksburg. Soon after reaching Vicksburg from Tennessee, in compliance with the urgent request of the officers and privates of the Thirtieth Alabama regiment (Col. Shelley), he was made chaplain of that regiment. In the fall of 1863, he was compelled to retire from the service and came home on account of failing health. Later he volunteered under Gen. Wright and did active service in front of Gen. Sherman when he was marching through Georgia. In 1865 he made his home in South Georgia for the sake of its balmy climate. Judge Underwood founded the Camilla "Clarion," of which he was sole proprietor and editor, and conducted it with marked ability for eight years. He was foremost and ardent in the support of all movements calculated to promote the interest of his county and section, conspicuously prominent in support of the state railroad commission and tariff reform, vigorous and persistent in opposition to the populist (third) party movement, in advocacy of the local option prohibition policy, and favored the education and general advancement of the negro. Judge Underwood on his return from Europe was married to Miss Amy, daughter of Joel Curry, of Edgefield district, S. C., by whom he has had thirteen children—eight daughters: Mattie, Mrs. W. C. Twitty; Holly, Mrs. W. C. Harris, Albany, Ga.; Amy, Mrs. R. E. Brown, Barnesville, deceased; Bessie, Ida, Bruce, Dona and Eugenia, and five sons: John L., William C., Robert M., Edwin and Joel. His daughters have a superior musical education, and Miss Bruce has a wide reputation as a pianist, and is the organist at the Baptist church in Albany. The judge and his wife have taken great pains to give their children the best possible education, mostly at home, and himself and family are exemplary members of the Baptist church. Judge Underwood professed religion in 1846, while at Black Hawk, Miss., and was baptized the following year, and received into the fellowship of the church by Rev. J. K. Clinton. In 1857 he was licensed to preach, since which time he has devoted the greater part of his time to the ministry. After the war he settled in Decatur county and accepted the pastorate of the churches at Bainbridge, Milford and Red Bluff. During the years 1867-68-69 he was pastor of the Baptist church at Cuthbert, Ga., and then returned to his farm in Decatur county. In 1871 he was employed by the foreign mission board to travel four months in Texas. On his return he served the churches around him, or labored as an evangelist, until he accepted calls in 1872 to serve the churches at Camilla, Evergreen and Mt. Enon. He is now located on a farm about one mile south of Camilla, where he has a delightful home, is surrounded by his interesting family and hosts of admiring and appreciative friends, and dispenses a generous Christian hospitality. He is universally beloved, and is considered one of the ablest men in Mitchell county. In 1891 he was appointed judge of the county court of Mitchell county, an office he still holds and honors. He has been offered professorships in colleges and church work in higher latitudes, but has persistently clung to the piney woods, in a new section where he felt that he was needed. Naturally there was little pay, and he has always been too independent to ask for financial help from the mission boards. He feels it a privilege to support his own family, and to "make tents" by any honorable manual or brain work. However busy during the week, he is always found on Sunday preaching either to country or village churches, or to the poor and the negroes. Few men have ever had a stronger hold on the best class of colored people. His only eccentricity has been that as a minister he has avoided the public gaze and is contented to storm "forlorn hopes."

MONROE COUNTY.

J. T. CASTLEBERRY, merchant, Cabaniss, Monroe Co., Ga., is a son of Jephtha and Susanna F. (Bass) Castleberry, and was born in Monroe county, April 24, 1845. His father was born in Warren county, Ga., and went to Monroe county about the time he reached his majority. He married soon afterward and engaged in farming, which he continued in Monroe county until 1856, when he removed to the vicinity of Indian Springs, in Butts county, where he died April 27, 1866. His wife survived him about twenty years, dying July 30, 1887. Of ten children there are now living: Mrs. Mary A. Tingle, Mrs. Martha E. Roberts, Jephtha T., Mrs. Susannah F. Scarborough, William P., John P., Theresa M. and Mrs. Carrie O. Scarborough. As the civil war was precipitated about the time Mr. Castleberry reached the age when the blood runs hottest and the impulses are strongest, he hastened to volunteer as a member of Company A, Thirtieth Georgia regiment, and did his duty as a private in the western army. He participated in the battles about Jackson, Miss., at Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge, and was with Gen. Johnston as he retired before Gen. Sherman. In the memorable and bloody battle of July 22, 1864, his brother was mortally wounded, from which he died at La Grange on July 28, and he was himself severely wounded in the right leg below the knee and left on the field of battle. He was taken prisoner and kept within the enemy's lines, most of the time at Chattanooga, until the surrender. Mr. Castleberry is the merchant at Cabaniss, a prosperous community in the northeastern portion of Monroe county, where he has been doing business since the war. His fine business ability and his great popularity in that section has attracted to him the large trade he enjoys. He is also conducting a quite large planting interest and operating three public ginneries at different points. Mr. Castleberry began his business life in 1868 as a clerk for Steele & Watson. In 1871 he bought an interest in the business, the firm then being Steele, Watson & Castleberry. In 1873 Steele & Castleberry bought out Mr. Watson, and in 1874 he (Mr. Castleberry) bought out his partner, and for the last twenty years has been sole proprietor. He carries a $2,000 stock of merchandise and plantation supplies and does a nearly cash business. Mr. Castleberry was married in Butts county, Nov. 28, 1872, to Miss Maggie L., daughter of Richard W. Willis, a pioneer and substantial citizen of Butts county. They have had but one child, James E., nineteen years of age and a law student at Forsyth. Mr. Castleberry is an ardent democrat and a Missionary Baptist, and a reliable working member in each cause.

WILLIAM H. CASTLIN, planter, Culloden, Monroe Co., Ga., son of John and Eliza (Goodin) Castlin, was born near Taylorsville, Hanover Co., Va., Jan. 27, 1827. His grandfather, John Castlin, was a native of Wales, and came to America and settled in Virginia before the revolutionary war, he being a soldier in the patriot army. He had two sons, Andrew and John. Andrew died, and John, after his marriage, came with his family to Georgia and settled on the Flint river in Upson county. In 1845 he moved to Monroe county and settled where William, the subject of this sketch, now resides. In 1856 he removed to Macon, Ga., where he died in January, 1861, aged seventy-three years. He started a very poor boy, but was a model farmer and manager, and left a quite large estate. He reared a family of ten children: John, Gold Hill, Ala.; Sarah, widow of a Mr. Coffin, Thomaston, Ga.; W. H., the subject of this sketch; Fleming, physician, deceased; Ann, wife of Peyton L. Cocke, Bolingbroke, Ga.; Edwin, White Bluff, Chatham Co., Ga.; Bradford, Thomaston, Ga.; Marcellus, merchant, Thomaston, Ga.; Catharine, wife of Addison P. Cherry, South Mills, Camden Co., N. C.; Caroline, wife of John S. Timberlake. His wife died June 10, 1887, aged eighty-seven. Mr. Castlin was reared, and has continued to be a planter. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in Company D, Thirteenth Georgia regiment, and went to Savannah with the regiment. His health failing he returned home, and went into a regiment of state troops. He was again discharged on the ground of disability. About 1852 he removed from Monroe to Upson county, where he lived some years, then returned to near Culloden. After a brief stay he went to his Upson plantation again, where he remained until 1870, when he moved back to his present location. Mr. Castlin was married on the line of Monroe and Crawford counties, Dec. 13, 1852, to Miss Mary A., daughter of Irvin H. Woodward. She was of an old and prominent family, and had two brothers of great influence, and who were high-toned, honorable gentlemen. To Mr. and Mrs. Castlin ten children have been born: Irvin H., drummer for Tidwell & Pope, Atlanta; Willie, wife of Charles Gray, Fort Valley, Ga.; John H., deceased; Eugene, deceased; Woodward, at home; Sallie M., deceased; Clifford and William, both at home. In the suburbs of the far-famed old school town, Culloden, in an old-time southern mansion, Mr. Castlin is spending his declining years on a plantation of 1,600 acres. He has another in Upson county of 300 acres. He is a democrat and a master Mason. He is a member of the Methodist church.

WILLIAM P. CLEMENTS, merchant and postmaster, Brent, Monroe Co., Ga., son of Wesley and Jane (Smith) Clements, was born in Muscogee county, Ga., March 19, 1855. His grandfather, Davis Smith, one of the earliest settlers of the county, was the son of Dixon and Elizabeth Smith, and was born in Washington county, Ga., in 1793. Early in life he engaged in merchandising in Dublin, Laurens Co., in which he was very successful. During this period Mr. Smith married Mrs. Elizabeth Jordan, and, in 1820, moved to Forsyth. Soon afterward he acquired possession of the 400-acre tract of land on which William P. Clements now lives, between five and six miles southwest of Forsyth. In 1825 he moved and settled upon it, and established a planting and mercantile interest which laid the foundation of a fortune. He carried on his business, and was a central figure in the community for a lifetime. He became one of the largest land and slave-owners in that locality, and attained to a strong and wide influence. At one time he owned 2,000 acres of land, and when emancipation was proclaimed had some hundred slaves. He was elected colonel of militia, then regarded a distinction, and being a strong whig partisan and politician was elected several times to represent the county in the general assembly. He was a Missionary Baptist, and began early in his Christian life to speak in public, and for the greater part of his lifetime was a local preacher of that denomination. Col. Smith died in 1867, and his wife in 1868. They reared nine children: Miranda, widow of Orlando Holland, Monroe county; Mary, deceased; T. T., retired merchant, living at the old homestead; Davis, Habersham county, Ga.; Elizabeth and John D., both deceased; James, Macon, Ga.; Judson, killed in the last battle of the war, at West Point, Ga.; Jane, married to Wesley Clements, who was killed while in the Confederate service. By Wesley Clements she had three children: William P., the subject of this sketch; Thomas, in railway service, Athens, Ga., and Lizzie, wife of J. E. Chambliss, Macon, Ga. After the war Mrs. Clements married Thomas Y. Brent, formerly of Louisville, Ky., but now a merchant, Macon, Ga. By this last marriage she has had two children: Taylor Y., planter, Monroe county, and J. I., merchant, Macon, Ga. William P. Clements was reared on a farm, in the community of which he is now a member. At the age of nineteen he embarked in the mercantile business, for which he has shown such remarkable aptitude, and in which he has been so successful. Besides the store he has large planting interests. Through his instrumentality the postoffice of Brent was established, of which he was made postmaster. The firm is Brent & Clements, and carries a stock of $3,000, but Mr. Clements has the sole control and responsibility. The management of these three interests—plantation, store and postoffice—requires good business capacity, energy, close attention and up-to-date information, and all those Mr. Clements gives and displays. He evidently inherits the superior business sagacity and judicious enterprise of his grandfather Davis, combined with hustling activity, else he would prove unequal to his work. Politically Mr. Clements has always been devoted to the democracy, and feels that he is yet, so far as Jeffersonian principles are concerned. He ardently favors the reform embodied in the platform of the people's party, and is giving his influence to its success. Mr. Clements was married Oct. 28, 1885, to Miss Sallie, daughter of Mrs. Julia D. Thweatt, of Forsyth. She was born in Columbus, and by her name will be recognized as a member of an old and very prominent family. Four children have been born to them: John Brent, deceased; Julia Thweatt, Jennie Brent, and Marie Keto. Mr. Clements and his wife are active, enthusiastic Methodists; and he takes great interest in all church work, especially the Sunday school, of which he has been superintendent four years.

W. C. CORLEY, planter, Forsyth, Monroe Co., Ga., son of Austin W. and Margaret N. (Matthews) Corley, was born in Troup county, Ga., Oct. 24, 1838. His grandfather, Austin V. Corley, of Irish descent, was born in South Carolina in 1745, and was a soldier in the revolutionary war. By his uprightness and thriftiness he attained to considerable influence, and was repeatedly elected a member of the legislature. Later in life he removed from South Carolina to Troup county, Ga., and thence, after some years, to Meriwether county, where he died in 1850 at the advanced age of 105 years. His wife, also very old, died about the same time. Both were devout, consistent members of the Missionary Baptist church. His father was born, reared and married in Richland district, S. C., and the next fall after his marriage he removed in wagons to Troup county, Ga., and settled. The Indians were still there, and he helped to move them. He was absent thirty-six days, during which time his wife and child were entirely alone. His parents lived in Troup county about twenty years, and then moved to Meriwether county, where they lived until after the war, when they removed to Dougherty county, Ga., where his father died in 1868 and his mother in 1872. Although his father began life quite poor, he succeeded by his industry and frugality and good management in accumulating a comfortable fortune. He was a democrat and a warm partisan; himself and wife were active and prominent Missionary Baptists, and did much toward upbuilding and advancing the denomination wherever they lived. They reared seven children: J. E., planter, Baker county, Ga.; Martha E., deceased; W. C., the subject of this sketch; S. M., single lady, at home; Robert B., deceased; Simeon B., deceased; Austin V., enlisted in Confederate army, and was killed in battle of Perrysville, Ky. Mr. Corley was reared partly in Troup and partly in Meriwether counties. When eighteen years old he went to Cuthbert, Ga., and became one of the firm of John R. Hull & Co., wholesale grocers. Several years afterward he went to Dougherty county and engaged in planting in that and in Calhoun county. The war between the states occurred while he was in business in Cuthbert, and he enlisted in the Randolph Light guards, was made second sergeant, and while stationed at Pensacola participated in the Santa Rosa fight. His command did guard duty about Savannah for a time, was in the conflicts of Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge, was in the Georgia campaign, and finally surrendered at Bentonville, N. C. In 1877 he went to Monroe county, where, Oct. 24, he was married to Miss Ellen S., daughter of Thomas and Sena Dewberry. This family was among the pioneers of the county, having settled in it in 1825, moving from Warren county. He was a wealthy planter before the war, worth probably $300,000, largely in several valuable tracts of land. Their children were: Madison, deceased; Thomas, Jr., deceased; William F., planter, Monroe county; Martha, deceased; Mary, widow, in Alabama; Sarah F., deceased; Jane, deceased; Amanda, deceased; Ellen S., deceased; Moses J., Monroe county; Berry W., Monroe county. Capt. Corley's wife died childless, Feb. 25, 1894. Her demise was sudden and unexpected, occasioned by internal hemorrhage. She was reputed to have been one of the most beautiful ladies in the county, which was emphasized by a very delicate organization bordering on the ethereal. His delightful home is about six miles south of Forsyth, and contains 700 acres; and he has another tract of 800 acres near by. In addition he has 330 acres within half a mile of the city limits of Columbus, Ga. He is a great lover of fine stock, and is perfecting arrangements to establish a stock farm on the property near Columbus. Capt. Corley is a democrat in politics, and a Missionary Baptist. He is also a master Mason.

G. W. HEAD, planter and merchant, High Falls, Monroe Co., Ga., son of Dr. J. D. and Nancy H. (Underwood) Head, was born in Monroe county, Dec. 18, 1847. Mr. Head's great-grandfather emigrated from England to Georgia before the revolutionary war, during which he served in the patriot army. On one occasion a band of Tories visited his home and drove off all the stock. The old patriot visited his home soon after, and being told of the raid went to the Tories and at the point of a pistol made them return the spoils. William Head, his grandfather, raised his family in Clarke county, Ga. Mr. Head's father was a physician of no inconsiderable prominence, and married his wife in Putnam county. They raised a family of five children: Thomas J., planter, near Griffin, Ga., and a Primitive Baptist preacher; Savannah E., widow of Dr. L. J. Dupree, Milner, Ga.; G. W., the subject of this sketch; Hattie H., single; Emily E., wife of R. F. Strickland, Griffin, Ga. His father died in 1882, and his mother in 1888. When he was six years old Mr. Head's family moved to Butts county, where he was raised and educated. Not being old enough to enter the regular service during the war, he joined a cavalry troop of Georgia reserves, and was principally with the scouting forces, where his experience oftentimes was very exciting, to say the least of it. On one occasion, when out on a scout, he fell in with the Texas brigade that surrounded the Union Gen. Kilpatrick, and was present when he broke through. He was about Atlanta on the same duty when Gen. Sherman held the city, and would often run into his scouts. He took the measles a little later, and was at home at the time of the surrender. After the war Mr. Head spent four years in the west, from Texas to California and Mexico, in stock business and mining, and one year in Pike county. He then returned to Butts county and engaged in farming with the most satisfactory results. He started with very small means, but prospered beyond his most sanguine expectations. He has added merchandising to his planting interest, and is one of the largest land-owners in Monroe county, owning 2,200 acres, and occupying a spacious brick dwelling near High Falls. The immediate surroundings are wildly beautiful and romantic in the extreme—few localities in Georgia surpass this locality in this respect. The name "High Falls" is derived from falls on the Towaliga river near by, the scenery presented to view being thus described in W. C. Richards' Georgia Illustrated, published half a century ago: "So fine is the view afforded from many different points that it is difficult to decide which is the most attractive; and passing from rock to rock the beholder is ever delighted with new features. This variety is the greatest charm of the scene. The river above the falls is about 300 feet wide, flowing swiftly over a rocky shoal. At its first descent it is divided by a ledge of rock, and forms two precipitous falls for a distance of fifty feet." The Towaliga is a stream of large volume and constant flow, and at this point has a fall of 100 feet within one-fourth of a mile. Great as the water-power is there is but one small grist-mill on it. Mr. Head was married in Monroe county, March 14, 1875, to Miss Carrie, daughter of J. G. and Eliza (Stewart) Phinazee, who has borne him nine children: Lucy, Hattie, James P., Robert T., Nancy E., George D., Carrie, Philip and Benjamin. For many years Mr. Head has been afflicted with rheumatism, and has to use an invalid wheel chair. Notwithstanding his affliction he is genial, jovial and hospitable, and, hence, very companionable. He is an ardent populist, and a master Mason, member of Patillo lodge No. 360.

R. C. M'GOUGH, planter and member of general assembly of Georgia for Monroe county, 1894-95, son of Bob G. and Sandal (Cabaniss) McGough, was born Sept. 24, 1831. The McGoughs are of Scotch-Irish blood, whose ancestors were colonized in the north of Ireland during the protectorate of Oliver Cromwell. About 1760, Matilda Carson McGough, a widow with five or six children, in company with other emigrants, relatives and neighbors, settled in North Carolina. John McGough, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, though still a minor, enlisted in the patriot army under Col. William Washington and participated in the battles of Brandywine, Eutaw Springs and Saratoga, where he saw the proud Burgoyne surrender to Gen. Gates. He was twice wounded, once on the head by a saber in the hands of a British officer, and once by a gunshot. Soon after the revolution he was married to Margaret Mill and settled in Edgefield district, S. C., from which place he moved to White Plains, Greene county, Ga., where he died in 1847, at the ripe age of eighty-six. Mr. McGough's maternal grandfather, George Cabaniss, was of a French Huguenot family, which settled in Maryland or Virginia early in the last century. About the beginning of this century he, G. C., came to Georgia, settled for awhile in China Grove in Oglethorpe county, from whence he moved to Jones county, where he farmed, merchandised and traded with the Indians from across the Ocmulgee river. Robert McGough, father of R. C., was born in Edgefield district, S. C., March 28, 1786, and was soon after brought by his father to White Plains, Ga., where he grew to manhood. In early life he settled in Jones county, where in 1810, he was married to Miss Sandal Cabaniss. To them were born ten children, six boys and four girls: John, merchant, Columbus, Ga., accumulated quite a fortune in ante-bellum days, now deceased; Matthew O., was never married, deceased; Sarah B., married to Jacob A. Clements, Buena Vista, Ga.; Matilda died unmarried; Elizabeth, wife of Ezekiel Hollis of Brundidge, Ala., deceased; William T., mortally wounded at the battle of New Hope Church, died in Atlanta, July, 1864; George L., merchant, Columbus, Ga., deceased; Mary A., deceased, married to Robert Minten, Buena Vista, Ga.; Robert C., farmer, Marion county, Ga.; C. C., entered First Georgia regiment, 1861, and after his time of enlistment expired joined the Forty-fifth Georgia, was made first lieutenant for gallantry on the field of battle, in 1862, and was killed leading a forlorn hope at Gettysburg, July 3, 1863. Robert McGough was a soldier in the war of 1812, and for his services drew a pension. He moved from Jones county, where he was married, to Monroe in 1823, clearing out a road through the primeval forest to his new home on Little Tobesofkee creek, where he opened a good plantation, reared and educated his children, and spent the remainder of his life. He was what is termed a good liver and accumulated a handsome property. Though he never connected himself with any church and did not believe in any creed except that of right conduct, he was always partial to the faith of his mother, who was a devout Presbyterian. He died without recantation, March 10, 1882, aged ninety-six years, lacking eighteen days. R. C. McGough received a preparatory education in the schools of the state in 1852, graduated in 1855, taught school the next year at Brownwood academy, La Grange, then a flourishing institution under the management of Hooten & Cox, and the next two years at Russellville, Ga. He studied law under the Hon. Cincinnatus Peeples and was admitted to the bar in 1860; but war coming on immediately, he was engaged in the service of the Confederacy either as soldier, enrolling officer or tax assessor during its whole continuance, and after its close retired to his farm. He served as postmaster under President Cleveland's first administration, but resigned in favor of the present incumbent before the expiration of his term. Mr. McGough was married Jan. 10, 1860, to Maggie Hollis, daughter of one of the most successful farmers and earliest pioneers of Monroe county. His wife died April 9, 1871. To them were born five children: Thomas H., now a merchant at Leavenworth, Wash; Maud, Nelly and Robert at home; and May, wife of Dr. F. L. Cato, De Soto, Ga. Robert was graduated with the degree of A. B. at the Georgia university in 1890. Mr. McGough, after the death of his consort, devoted himself to the rearing and education of his children, endeavoring to supply the place of both father and mother. He has a good library and devotes much of his time reading and tries to keep in full accord with the progress of the age. He has an interesting family and kind and appreciative neighbors. He is a rationalist, believing that faith should be subordinate to reason. He is a true democrat, who thinks as long as reason is unfettered, humanity will advance; that all repressive laws that cannot be enforced are mischievous, the parent of crime, and the greatest government is the greatest individual liberty consistent with the rights of all others.

E. M. MOORE, planter, Forsyth, Monroe Co., Ga., son of John and Nancy (Curry) Moore, was born in Monroe county, June 15, 1827. His grandfather, Elijah Moore, migrated from Maryland to Georgia in the latter part of the last century, and settled in Baldwin county, where he died. His father was born in Maryland in January, 1792, came to Baldwin county with his father, where he grew to manhood; was married in Hancock county in 1813 to Miss Nancy Curry (of Irish descent), who was born and raised there. Ten children were born to them, of which eight were raised to maturity: James C., deceased; Narcissus, widow of David Davis, Stewart county, Ga.; Mary, widow of D. M. Davison, Pike county, Ala.; E. R., planter, Bossier Parish, La.; B. F., deceased; E. M., the subject of this sketch; Jemima, deceased wife of Robert McGinty; John C., enlisted in Confederate service, 1862, and was killed in the battle of Fredericksburg. Mr. Moore's parents lived in Baldwin county until 1826, when they removed to Monroe county and settled eight miles south of Forsyth, where they lived until their death—that of the father occurring in 1870, and that of the mother in 1871. Both were members of the Primitive Baptist church. Mr. Moore was of a quiet and retiring disposition, caring nothing for politics except voting for his democratic friends; had no use for courts, and was so good a manager as to accumulate a handsome estate. He is reputed to have seen some service in the war of 1812. E. M. Moore, the subject of this sketch, has passed his life in Monroe, at the homestead where he was born, and lived the life of a farmer. In November, 1855, he was married to Miss Ann, daughter of Duncan and Mary (Holmes) McCowen, Monroe county, by whom he has had ten children: Dodie, wife of J. R. Worsham, Monroe county; John T., cotton factor, Macon, Ga.; B. M., planter, Monroe county; James M., at home; Lelia, at home; Annie, deceased wife of J. A. Smith, Houston county, Ga.; Alice, wife of D. M. Owen, Athens, Tenn.; Gussie, at home. During the war he was in the state militia, for home defense, and was detailed to help on the farm. Mr. Moore has a fine 1,250-acre plantation—reduced to that by giving off tracts from time to time to his children. He is a quiet, sociable and sensible country gentleman, looks carefully after his farm interest, and is companionable around his own hearthstone. His stock is sleek, his barns and corn cribs are never empty—"he lives at home." He is a democrat and a Primitive Baptist.

WILLIAM A. NORWOOD, planter, Culloden, Monroe Co., Ga., a son of Caleb M. and Jane (Manson) Norwood, was born in Charlotte, N. C., Dec. 3, 1819. His father was of English and his mother of Scotch parentage; and both were born in Tennessee. After their marriage the young couple moved to North Carolina, but after living there eight years went back to Tennessee. In 1824 they moved to Georgia and settled in Talbot county, where they lived and thrived, until 1837, when they moved to Culloden, in Monroe county. They lived there until they died—his father in 1854, and his mother Oct. 26, 1878. Mr. Norwood's father was a planter, but he operated a tannery and a shoe factory in addition, and was very successful in all. He was a man of great energy, enterprising and thrifty. He was one of the trustees of the school. This couple raised six children, all yet living; all have done well; one or more distinguished: Mary A., widow of Philip J. W. Echols, Columbus, Neb.; Rebecca J., widow of James Alston, near Eufaula, Ala.; William A., the subject of this sketch; Oscar A., lawyer, Navasota, Texas; Elizabeth, widow of William Askins (with son-in-law, Robert O. Banks), Forsyth, Ga.; Thomas M., lawyer, Savannah, Ga., ex-United States representative and senator. Mr. Norwood was a democrat, and a member of the Methodist church. After the death of his father, Mr. Norwood continued his enterprise until the war, when, the hands going into the war, he abandoned all except farming—a pursuit he has since very profitably followed. April 15, 1852, Mr. Norwood was married to Samantha E., daughter of William Askins—born near Culloden, Sept. 17, 1833. To them eight children have been born: Anna M., wife of James M. Ponder, Atlanta; Jane M., deceased, wife of John Colbert; Amelia, wife of O. Winn, Dallas, Tex.; Evelyn, wife of W. W. Griffin, Atlanta; Caleb M., and three others. Mr. Norwood is enjoying life on his fine 1,100-acre plantation, near the old school town so famous in Monroe's history as an educational center, where many of Georgia's distinguished men were academically educated. Mr. Norwood is a democrat, a royal arch Mason, and a Methodist.

W. H. PARKER, planter, Strouds, Monroe Co., Ga., son of Christopher and Sallie (Stroud) Parker, was born in Monroe county, March 29, 1832. The family is of Irish origin, and settled in North Carolina some years before the revolutionary war, in which Mr. Parker's grandfather, John Parker, was a soldier.

He removed from North Carolina to Georgia and settled in Putnam county late in the last century, and after several years' residence there moved, about 1803, to Monroe county, where the family has since made its home. Of a family of six children, none are living. Mr. Parker's parents were born (his father about 1806) in Monroe county, where they were also married. To them twelve children were born: W. H., the subject of this sketch; Seaton, deceased; Frances, wife of Joseph Dennis, Ark.; Sarah, wife of James Rodney, Roanoke, Ala.; L. B., deceased; Mary, deceased wife of Fletcher Owens, Pike county, Ala.; Amanda, widow of a Mr. Fambro, Atlanta; Levi, enlisted in the Confederate army and killed in Pickett's famous charge at Gettysburg; John, deceased; Christopher, Arkansas; Owen, Arkansas, and Sallie, deceased; an unnamed infant, which caused the death of the mother in 1859. Mr. Parker's father was a man of great energy, very prominent and popular. He was a democrat, but such was his popularity that in the forties he overcame a whig majority of 200, and was elected to represent the county in the general assembly. He was a "war" democrat, and though exempt by age from military duty, he enlisted and served through the war, becoming the adjutant of his regiment. He was a master Mason and a member of the Primitive Baptist church. He died June 3, 1893. Mr. Parker was reared and educated in Monroe county, where he has made a life-business and a very successful one, of farming. He was married in Monroe county to Miss Nancy, daughter of Eleazor and Mary Adams, Nov. 11, 1853, by whom he has had two children, one an unnamed infant, and Eunice, wife of E. C. Elder, Barnesville, Pike Co., who is the mother of five children: William, George, Samuel, Eunice and John. On a splendid 1,000-acre plantation, eleven miles south of Forsyth, 500 acres in cultivation, producing 150 bales of cotton, Mr. and Mrs. Parker are spending their declining years. He lived after the war a few years in Barnesville, but superintended his plantation. He is a very positive man, prominent in county affairs, a royal arch Mason and himself and wife are members of the Missionary Baptist church.

CAPT. A. L. PERKINS, planter and capitalist, Bolingbroke, Monroe Co., Ga., son of Alexander and Selete (Jernigan) Perkins, was born in Monroe county, Jan. 25, 1827. The family is of Scotch-Welsh origin, and have been in the main agriculturists. Capt. Perkins' grandfather, Archibald Perkins, was born in North Carolina, and before he was of age went to Virginia, where he lived during the revolutionary war, engaged as an overseer. There he married a Miss Gibbs, and not long afterward migrated to Georgia and settled in Greene county, where they raised a large family of children, and where they died, the grandfather at the age of ninety-six. As the children settled in life they remained mostly in Georgia. Alexander Perkins, the captain's father, was born in Greene county, Feb. 8, 1795. During the war of 1812-14 he was in the army on the Indian frontier. He met and married his wife, Miss Jernigan, in Hancock county, Ga. (where she was born and reared), Dec. 26, 1816. A brother of hers, Seaborn Jernigan, is now living at White Plains, Ga. Mr. Perkins lived in Greene county five years, then in Jasper two years, and thence in 1823 removed to Monroe county and settled about eight miles southeast of Forsyth on the road to Dame's ferry. Here they raised a family of eight children: Adeline, who married A. D. Steele, both deceased; Archibald, deceased at twenty-one; Elizabeth, wife of Henry Sharpe, Atlanta; A. L., subject of this sketch; W. H., deceased; Frances, wife of W. C. King, Monroe county; John, enlisted in the Fourteenth Georgia regiment, after serving in several campaigns, died of measles at Alum Springs, Va., and Albert C., Monroe county. Mr. Perkins was a systematic, painstaking and hard-working man, and accumulated considerable property, including land and slaves. He was also abstemious in his habits; chewed a little tobacco, but never smoked. He was a whig in politics, and a Methodist in religion. His wife died May 17, 1875, aged seventy-five years, and he died March 26, 1892, aged ninety-seven years. The family is remarkable for longevity, reaching years from eighty to ninety-seven. Capt. Perkins was married in Monroe county Dec. 20, 1849, to Miss Mary Jane, daughter of Amos and Nancy M. (Head) Ponder. She was born and raised in the county, her father having come to Monroe in 1824, and settled five miles north of Forsyth. To this happily-mated couple only two children have been born: Josephine Lee, at home, and Mary Lee, wife of S. B. Price, ex-mayor and present postmaster, Macon, Ga. He is one of the most popular and influential—indeed one of the foremost men in Georgia's "central city." At his large plantation of 3,300 acres at Bolingbroke, managed and cultivated under progressive, up-to-date ideas, his beautiful, modernly arranged home and elaborately laid-off and beautifully adorned grounds, Capt. Perkins is enjoying his well-earned wealth and dispersing that lavish hospitality so characteristic of the "old-time" southern planter. Capt. Perkins is as public-spirited as he is wealthy, takes great interest in everything calculated to advance the community, and in political matters—local and Federal. In addition to his extensive farming interests, Capt. Perkins owns stock in the oil mills in Forsyth, in which he is the largest stockholder. He is a democrat and a Mason of forty years' standing.

CAPT. D. S. REDDING, planter, Juliette, Monroe Co., Ga., son of Thomas and Maria (Searcy) Redding, was born in Monroe county, July 5, 1832. The Redding family is of Irish descent and members of it came from Ireland to America about the middle of the last century. The grandfather of Capt. Redding, Anderson Redding, was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, and was present at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. He migrated from Virginia in 1782 and settled on land subsequently included in what is now Baldwin county, Ga. He lived on this land until late in the twenties, when he followed his son (the father of Capt. Redding) to Monroe county, where he lived the remainder of his life. He raised a family of six children—all now dead. One of his sons, W. C., represented his county in the general assembly. He was a Methodist and very devout. Mr. Redding's father was born in 1792 and was married in Baldwin county and moved to Monroe county in 1822 and settled near Pope's Ferry, on the Ocmulgee river. Later he moved to where Capt. Redding now lives, and the house he then built is still standing. Here nine children were raised, of whom two only are living. These children were: Martha, died in Macon; William A. and James M., killed at Griswoldsville, Ga.; Thomas A., killed at Jonesboro, Ga.; Charles, captain of Floyd rifles of Macon, Ga., killed at Gettysburg in Pickett's famous charge; Mary E., widow of Thomas Dougherty, Macon, Ga.; D. S., the subject of this sketch; Sallie M., deceased wife of Capt. Joseph H. White, who was killed at Manassas; John M., a member of Capt. Redding's company, killed in the battle of the Wilderness. Capt. Redding's father began life very poor, but by hard work, economy and good judgment he accumulated a good property. He was one of the first settlers in Monroe county, which was organized in 1821. His mother's father (Searcy) was a teacher quite prominent in his day and accumulated a fortune, and one of her brothers was a fine physician, and another was a Baptist preacher. She died in 1857. Mr. Redding was a democrat and a very pious member of the Methodist church. He died in 1877, aged eighty-five years. Excepting when absent during the war, Capt. Redding has passed his life on his plantation in Monroe county. He enlisted in March, 1862, in Capt. J. H. White's company, which became Company D, Forty-fifth Georgia regiment, and was made sergeant. The command went at once to the front, and subsequently participated in the great battles of Chancellorsville, Fredericksburg, the Wilderness and others. Having been detailed to guard prisoners, he was not in the Pennsylvania campaign. In 1864 he was appointed captain of the company, and was captured at Petersburg six days before the surrender. He was taken to Johnson's island, where he was kept about two months. It is an incident worthy of record that of six brothers in this family five of them gave their lives to the "lost cause." Few families can parallel this devotion, and such a sacrifice for what they deemed the right. Capt. Redding was married the year he was twenty-seven years old (1859) to Miss Clara P. Blanton, of Spalding county. She was a graduate of the Female college of Griffin, Ga., in 1860, was the valedictorian of her class and was a woman of a superior mind and much intelligence. Her education and refined habits enabled her to be of great aid to her children in their early training, and by them she was idealized. Her goodness endeared her to neighbors and friends and it can be truly said, "None knew her but to love her." She was a conscientious Christian and was president of the Woman's Missionary society of her church when she died. Twenty-five years of a happy married life and she passed to the other shore, leaving by her pure life, holy influences, good lessons and bright works such impressions that even time can never obliterate. By this marriage there were born to him nine children: Charles D., physician, Bibb county, Ga.; W. B., teacher, Bibb county; Mamie, teacher, Bibb county; Julia, teacher, near home; Annie, at home; Alice, wife of Redding Howard, Houston county, Ga., and Rosa, Arthur T. and James A., all at home. The mother of these children died in 1885, and Capt. Redding was married in Jones county, Dec. 4, 1888, to Miss Addie J., daughter of J. C. and Addie C. White. Her grandfather, James White, migrated from Virginia to Georgia, and lived first in Meriwether county, and then in other counties, and died at the age of forty-eight years. Her father settled and lived in Jones county, where his father had lived before him, and where her parents raised ten children, of whom, besides Mrs. Redding, four are living: George B., William F., Thomas A. and Carrie, wife of F. C. Goolsby. Altogether the Redding family has a rather remarkable history in war and in peace, in its patriotic sacrifices through generations, for country, and in its historic connection with the portion of the state in which they live. Among the first settlers in Baldwin and Monroe counties, on both sides, their names are connected with their historical records, and written in blood on battlefields. It is the pride of Capt. Redding that he gave all his children the best education in his power, that they are intelligent and useful members of the communities in which they live, and are honored and esteemed, the elder ones who have gone out into the world occupying honorable positions. Capt. Redding is a democrat and has served a term as county commissioner. He lives and is enjoying life on a fine 500-acre plantation nine miles east of Forsyth. He is a master Mason and is a member of the Methodist church, of which he has been a steward and class leader for forty years.

W. E. SANDERS, merchant and mayor of Forsyth, Monroe Co., Ga., son of Brown and Elizabeth A. (Smith) Sanders, was born in Jasper county, Ga., Oct. 13, 1851. The family came from England to South Carolina before the revolutionary war. Mr. Sanders' great-grandfather, Ephraim Sanders, a soldier in the patriot army, was killed in the battle of Eutaw Springs, S. C., Sept. 8, 1781. The latter part of the last century his grandfather, a planter, migrated from South Carolina to Georgia and settled in Jones county, where he raised a large family, whose members scattered and made homes elsewhere. Here Mr. Sanders' father was born in 1808 and grew to manhood. He then moved over into Jasper county, where he married in 1850. His mother's family were of Georgia birth, and she was raised by her grandfather, Aquilla Phelps, one of the oldest of the first settlers. After their marriage his parents moved to Jones county, where they lived seven years, and then returned to Jasper county to the old Phelps plantation, where they are living now, his father engaged in his lifetime business of farming. They had four children born to them: W. E., the subject of this sketch; Mary A., died at thirteen; Frances M., died when eighteen months old; Florence, died when seventeen years of age. Mr. Sanders was reared in Jasper county, and educated in the county schools and the Monticello high school, and took a course in the Macon Business college. In 1871 he clerked in Monticello, Ga., and beginning with 1872, he clerked for L. Greenwood & Bros., Forsyth, for several years—clerking in the fall and winter—making a crop in the summer in Jasper county. In 1877 he engaged with Solomon & Mount, remained with them until 1881, when he went into business with E. R. Roberts, under the firm name of Roberts & Sanders. The firm continued until 1883, when they were burnt out. Mr. Sanders then bought his partner's interest, and has since conducted the business with phenomenal success on his own account. He carried a fine assorted general supply stock. He was elected mayor of Forsyth in 1890, re-elected since in 1892, 1893 and 1894, and is mayor now. He is captain of the Quitman guards (Company K, Second regiment infantry, Georgia volunteers). This is a "crack" company, and he has been a member of it twenty years. He is also a member of the military advisory board of the state of Georgia. Mr. Sanders was married Dec. 13, 1876, in Forsyth, Ga., to Miss Ada O., daughter of W. B. and Mattie A. Chambers, who now live in Griffin, Spalding Co., Ga. To them seven children have been born: Florence; W. B., died in 1890; May; Charlie; an infant, died unnamed; W. E., Jr., deceased. Mr. Sanders is a democrat. He is very popular, ranks high for energy and business capability, and commercial integrity. His accomplished success gives assurance of a brilliant business future.

THOMAS G. SCOTT, planter, Brent, Monroe Co., Ga., son of Peter and Eliza S. (Gary) Scott, was born in Newton county, Ga., Dec. 12, 1828. The family is of Scotch descent, whose ancestors, as also those of Gen. Winfield Scott, were adherents of Charles Edward, the pretender. Persecution which followed the defeat at Culloden in 1745 compelled them to flee from England, and they came to America and settled on the Appomattox river in Dinwiddie county, Va., about the middle of the last century. Mr. Scott's grandfather and other members of the family were soldiers in the patriot army in the revolutionary war. Between 1790 and 1800 his grandfather, Thomas Scott, together with two brothers, Woodlief and Frederick, migrated with their families to Georgia and settled in Hancock county. Here Mr. Scott's father was born in March, 1800, and grew to manhood. He married his wife in Newton county, but he lived on and cultivated his plantation in Hancock county until his death. Six children were born to them: Thomas G., the subject of this sketch; H. G., who, after faithful service in the Confederate army, was killed at the battle of Chickamauga; Duke H., died at the age of twenty-six; Elizabeth, married William H. Means, who was killed at Sharpsburg. She afterward married W. W. Lawrence, and is now deceased. Peter W. died in his youth; Benjamin S. served in the Confederate army, now a planter, Monroe county. Mr. Scott's father was a very quiet man, conducted his planting interest with excellent judgment and success and was highly esteemed. Politically he was a democrat. In religion himself and wife were ardent, working Methodists; he a pillar in, and both are alive to, the interests and advancement of Methodism. He died in 1853 and she in 1856. Thomas G. Scott was reared in Hancock county and educated at Emory college, Oxford, Ga., whence he graduated in 1853, with the degree of A. B., and taking the first honor. Adopting the profession of teaching he taught first at Sparta, Hancock Co., three years; next at Eatonton. Putnam Co., two years, and then at Forsyth—the first teacher and principal of Hilliard institute—until near the close of the war. He made his residence where he now lives in 1862. Mr. Scott was married Dec. 25, 1859, where he now lives, in the room now his family room, in which all his children were born, to Miss Emma L., daughter of Early and Lucy (Wilder) Cleveland. Mr. Cleveland came from Elbert county, Ga., to Monroe county early in the twenties, and, although not a college graduate, became one of the most distinguished and successful educators in that part of the state. Among others he prepared for college were Rev. Edward Myers, D. D., and ex-Judges Robert P. Trippe and Alexander Speer, men who rose and rank high as members of the legal fraternity and of the judiciary, and in the councils of the state and nation. His educational work covers thirty years of time—the scope of its influence none can measure. Mr. Cleveland was a successful planter as well as a ripe scholar and eminent educator. He was an ardent whig and a prominent and devoted Methodist. To Mr. and Mrs. Scott eight children were born: Milton C.; Lucy S., wife of George P. Rankin, Macon, Ga.; Lizzie E., died in infancy; Thomas G., Jr., student at Emory college, and Mary, Alice, Early Cleveland and Edwin at home. His attractive old-time home—"Pleasant Grove"—is one of culture and refinement, sunshine and happiness; himself well-read on all subjects, his wife a congenial companion and his children educated and intelligent. It has been the home of his wife since she was two years old. Mr. Scott is a democrat, and royal arch Mason. He is a devoted, working Methodist, has been a local preacher forty-one years—thirty-six of them in the community in which he lives. In 1877 he was elected county school commissioner of Monroe county, and has held the office continuously since. His reputation as an educator extends far and wide.

JAMES T. SEARCY, planter, Bolingbroke, Monroe Co., Ga., son of Dr. Daniel B. and Camilla J. (Thweatt) Searcy, was born in Monroe county Jan. 13, 1834. Of the many old families of Monroe and adjoining counties none stood higher in the estimation of their fellow-citizens than that represented by this estimable citizen and gentleman. For many years prior to the war the wealth and intelligence and conspicuous moral characteristics of his ancestry, on both sides, made them social and political leaders in their several communities. His great-grandfather, Searcy, was a citizen of North Carolina and reared three sons, one of whom went to Tennessee, one remained in North Carolina, and the third, William, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, came to Georgia between 1770-80. He was a school teacher by profession, and early in life followed it, but became a planter and amassed a large property in Talbot county, where he died at the advanced age of ninety-seven years. He left three sons: John, a Baptist preacher; William, a planter, and Daniel B., physician, and father of James T. Daniel B. was given a good education, studied medicine, and was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania Medical college, Philadelphia. He located in the southern part of Monroe county, where he built up a practice whose extent was limited only by his endurance. Dr. Searcy is affectionately remembered as a man of deep religious convictions and high moral principles; one who was actively foremost in every good work and movement promotive of the community's welfare and advancement. The sterling qualities of his character caused him to be elected several times as the standard bearer of his party for legislative honors, but the county being largely whig, and he a democrat, he never succeeded. He came to Monroe county a poor man, but his great skill and ability as a physician, supplemented by uncommon sagacity in the investment of his gains, caused him to become one of the wealthiest men in the county. Dr. Searcy was married the year he came to the county, 1833. His grandfather on his mother's side, James Thweatt, was a physician, and was a surgeon in the army during the war of 1812-14. He became very wealthy, was unusually intelligent, prominent and active in politics, and quite frequently represented his county in the general assembly. The family was of Scotch descent, and moved from Hancock to Monroe county in 1821, about the time the county was organized. Dr. and Mrs. Searcy were blessed with four children: James T., the subject of this sketch; W. E. H., Griffin, Ga.; Fannie, wife of A. T. Holt, Macon, Ga.; and Carrie, deceased. The last mentioned married first B. F. Davis, who died leaving her with several children, and afterward married L. O. Hollis, and, after bearing him one child, died. Dr. Searcy was an ardent, working Methodist, and died Aug. 1, 1885; his wife died Nov. 17, 1885, aged sixty-nine years. Mr. James T. Searcy was reared in Monroe county, and has lived there all his life. He was educated at Emory college, Oxford, Ga., from which he was graduated in 1854. Early in the war he enlisted in Company D, Forty-fifth Georgia regiment, and was made second lieutenant, but was soon promoted to the first lieutenantcy. He participated in the seven days' battle around Richmond, Va., but becoming disabled by sickness he came home and put in a substitute. He afterward served, however, in the Georgia militia. Mr. Searcy was married in Monroe county Aug. 21, 1854, the year of his graduation, to Miss Sarah V., daughter of John H. and Elizabeth (Redding) Greene. The Reddings were also among the earliest settlers of Monroe county, having come from Baldwin county about the time Monroe was organized. The Greenes came from Virginia, and are reputed to have been related to the great revolutionary general, Nathaniel Greene. Mrs. Searcy has two brothers living—James R. and William A., both in Lee county, Ala. To Mr. and Mrs. Searcy ten children have been born: John D., planter, Monroe county; James Thweatt, physician, Waco, Tex.; Charles R., planter, Monroe county; Henry and Herbert, at home; Kittie, single, at home; Annie, wife of Albert Harries, Meriwether county; Julia, wife of J. T. Lamar, Macon, Ga.; William E. and Abner H., deceased. Mr. Searcy has resided at his present delightful home since the war, where he enjoys his ample income and the domestic comfort and pleasure it is his good fortune to be blessed with.

JOHAN R. SHANNON, physician and surgeon, Cabaniss, Monroe Co., Ga., son of John and Rachel (Johnston) Shannon, was born in Cabaniss, Aug. 15, 1858. His grandfather, Mathew Shannon, a native of Monahan county, Ireland, raised five sons, all highly educated. Of these, three—James, Joseph and John—came to the United States in 1822. James became a very distinguished educator: First, was professor of ancient languages in the university of Georgia; then was president of the university of Louisiana, next he was president of the university of Kentucky, and, lastly, chancellor of the university of Missouri, in which position he died. Joseph, after graduating at the medical college of Georgia, established himself in the practice of medicine in Louisiana, where he died. John Shannon, the doctor's father, was born in Monahan county, Ireland, in 1807, and came to Georgia when fifteen years of age. He read medicine with Dr. Milton Antony, and, also, while boarding with his brother James, in Athens, with Dr. Henry Hull. He then entered the medical college of South Carolina, Charleston, and, graduating in 1830, located in Clinton, Jones Co., Ga.; but, after remaining there a year, removed to Cabaniss (then Gullettsville), where he remained as long as he lived. He married his wife—whose family had recently removed thither from Elbert county—just after settling in Cabaniss, and to them ten children were born: Sarah J., deceased wife of Fleming J. Ward; Annie E., wife of Judge Monroe Clowerm, Forsyth, Ga.; James M., Cabaniss; Susan B., married Judge Mobley, now deceased; James H., Company H, Thirty-second Georgia regiment, killed at bombardment of Charleston, in 1864; Elizabeth B., deceased wife of W. B. Watts; William L., Company H, Thirty-second Georgia regiment, killed at Rivers' bridge, in 1864; John L., died in infancy; Walter D., died in infancy; John R., the subject of this sketch. His reputation for skill as a physician was excellent. He also took great interest in politics—and was a member of the constitutional convention of 1866. He died in July, 1872, and his wife in August, 1891. Dr. Shannon was educated at Hilliard institute, Forsyth, where he took the scholarship of the university of Georgia, from which institution he graduated with the degree of A. B. in 1873. Only fifteen, out of a class of sixty, obtained degrees. He then took a course at the Eastman Business college. In 1874-75 he engaged in mercantile business in Forsyth, and in 1875 traveled in the west. The next three years he taught school at his old home, Cabaniss. He then merchandized at Cabaniss until 1893, when he entered Atlanta Medical college. When he graduated, was valedictorian of his class. He located at Cabaniss, where he has taken high rank, and is building up an excellent and prospectively lucrative practice. Well educated, and of superior intellectuality, a refined gentleman, literary and scientific in taste, and ambitious of distinction, he is quite certain to rise in his profession. He is, as yet, unmarried. He is a member of the board of education, of which he has been president twice. He is a democrat, a royal arch Mason, and a Missionary Baptist.

WILLIAM D. STONE, lawyer, Forsyth, Monroe Co., Ga., son of Charles and Mary S. (Griffin) Stone, was born in Dadeville, Ala., Sept. 12, 1844. His grandfather was of English descent, and came from Virginia to Georgia, went to Florida, and, later, thence to Montgomery county, Ala. He was a planter, and was very wealthy in both land and negroes. He was married three times, and had twenty-four sons and three daughters. Judge Stone's father was born in Montgomery county, Ala., and he grew to manhood in that state. He was a planter and a prominent politician. As a whig he represented Tallapoosa county in the legislature of Alabama from 1835 to 1846. After that he went as first lieutenant of Capt. Dennis' company of volunteers to the Mexican war. He was married in 1838, in Dadeville, Tallapoosa county, to Miss Mary E. Griffin, who was born in Columbus, Ga., whence her family moved to Alabama. About 1858 his father moved to Lafayette, the county-seat, for the purpose of educating his children, and died there in 1865. He was a member of the Missionary Baptist church. Judge Stone's parents raised a family of seven children: Fannie, deceased, wife of Thomas B. Mitchell, Gilmer, Texas; William D., the subject of this sketch; Eugenia, wife of George Bertram, Macon, Ga.; Alice B., widow of Charles P. Toney, now Mrs. Joseph Copps, Macon, Ga.; Tecumseh, paying teller, Central bank, Macon; Oceola B., and Black Hawk. Mr. Stone's mother makes her home with him. Mr. Stone received his early education at Lafayette, and, later, at Southwood, Talladega, Ala. He ran away from school and enlisted in the Tuskegee Zouaves, at Winchester, Va., which became Company B, of the Fourth Alabama regiment. He participated in the first Manassas battle, and saw Gen. Bartow fall, when killed. His regiment went into battle 1,000 strong, and came out with a little over 100—Mr. Stone was slightly wounded, and reported killed. He remained in the army in Virginia two years, and was in the seven days' and other bloody battles. He got a discharge and returned home; but in two or three months joined Forrest's cavalry, Sixth Alabama, and remained with him until the surrender. He was in the battles of Resaca and New Hope, and on the retreat from Atlanta, and was paroled at Forsyth. After a farming venture he taught school at Hilliard institute, Forsyth, meantime studying law under Col. A. D. Hammond, and was admitted to the bar in 1867. He entered into partnership with his preceptor—the firm being Hammond & Stone, which continued until 1872, when he withdrew and purchased an interest in the “Monroe Advertiser.” After a year’s editorial life he sold his interest in the paper and resumed the practice of law in partnership with J. H. Turner—as Stone & Turner. Mr. Turner moved away and Mr. Stone was appointed judge of the county court—a position he held four years—1879-83. He next entered into partnership with G. J. Wright, as Wright & Stone, which continued—1889-92—when he went into partnership with William Clark, as Stone & Clark, which firm still exists. Judge Stone has an excellent patronage, and stands high in rank with the bar and the people. When at home on a furlough, March 1, 1865, Judge Stone was married to Miss Mary E., daughter of O. H. P. Ponder, who was born and raised in Monroe county. Two children have been born to them: Charles O., and Clyde. Charles is in business with Cox & Corbin, wholesale supply house, Macon, Ga. He is married to Addie, Mr. Corbin’s daughter, who was educated by Judge Stone, when he was principal at Hilliard institute. Clyde, the daughter, who is at home, finished her education at Wesleyan Female college, Macon Ga. Judge Stone is a very ardent and enthusiastic Mason—a Knight Templar, past high priest of his chapter, and past eminent commander of William Tracy Gould commandery. Judge Stone has in his possession a very interesting—and to him very valuable—heirloom of his family, in connection with masonry. It is a masonic apron—real sheepskin—beautifully and elaborately embroidered with colored silk, which has passed from generation to generation in the Stone family for nearly eight centuries. It was presented to Lieut. Donworth—who married a Stone—in England, in 1102, and, as may be supposed, Judge Stone is very proud of it, and cherishes it most fondly. Judge Stone is member and a steward of the Methodist church.

EDEN TAYLOR, planter, Pope’s Ferry, Monroe Co., Ga., son of Job and Mary (Warthen) Taylor, was born in Monroe county, Nov. 8, 1834. He is a descendant on both sides, from some of the best Virginia families, and from the earliest settlers in Washington and Monroe counties, a noble scion of old, honorable and honored ancestral stock. Job Taylor, his father, was born in Virginia, and, at maturity, came with his brothers, George and Robert, to Georgia, and, in 1824, settled in Monroe county, a few miles east of Forsyth. As he prospered he added to his domain until he was the largest land-owner in the county, his holdings amounting to 10,000 acres in Monroe and adjoining counties, besides about 30,000 acres of wild lands in Alabama. He lived to accumulate the largest landed and slave property of any citizen of the county, and at the same time was known and recognized as one of the most austere religious of men. Mr. Taylor is remembered by the older citizens as one who possessed, in a very remarkable degree, true piety and extraordinary business ability, a rare combination to maintain, as the money-making faculty too often overshadows or entirely overcomes, the religious sentiment. It was often remarked of him that Job Taylor came nearer “serving God and mammon” than any man of his time. In the use of his wealth Mr. Taylor was exceedingly public-spirited and charitable. No school or church committee ever failed to receive a liberal response, while he was ever ready to extend generous aid to neighbors in obtaining facilities for utilizing or making their products. When the Central railway was projected (then known as the Monroe railroad) he was one of its earliest and staunchest supporters in his locality. He finally lost over $30,000 in consequence of his excess of enthusiasm and over-zealousness, as he graded a large number of miles for which he never received a cent. As already remarked, Mr. Taylor lived his religion. It entered into every act of his life. The family altar was as much an institution of his home as his dining table. It is said that, no matter what time of night he came in, if delayed from any cause, the candles were lit and the entire family assembled to be present at prayers. Mr. Taylor married Miss Mary Warthen, in Washington county, when she was but sixteen years old—he being thirty-five. She proved to be a helpmate indeed, a woman fit in every respect to be his life-companion. Loving, affectionate and charitable, she was the embodiment of Christian gentleness. In her latter days she became entirely blind, but it is related that during the war, notwithstanding this sad deprivation, she kept an entire company supplied with socks, knitting them with her own hands. She died in 1880, aged eighty-two years, having outlived her husband twenty-four years. This union was blessed with ten children: William, deceased; Sarah, widow of Col. W. H. Long; Frank, deceased, George, deceased; Mary, deceased; Job E., deceased; Eden the subject of this sketch; Camilla, deceased; Elijah B., Monroe county, and Rebecca, deceased. Eden Taylor has passed a life of usefulness on his plantation in Monroe county. He is best known throughout the state as the efficient secretary of the state grange during its entire existence, from 1872 to 1888. It is but just to say that the success of that excellent farmers' organization in Georgia was largely due to his untiring efforts. He is now a member of the board which has charge of the state experiment station. Mr. Taylor has been married twice. He was first married near Perry, Houston Co., in 1859, to Miss Georgia V. Tharp, by whom he had four children: Guy, farmer, Bibb county, Ga.; Maud, deceased; Claudia, wife of Will G. Bass, Bibb county, and Georgia E., a lovely girl, who died June 1, 1894. The mother of these children died in 1872, and Mr. Taylor contracted a marriage in 1874, near Hayneville, Houston Co., with Miss Sallie H. Brown. This second union has been blessed with four children: Rosa, Odille, Brown and Eden, Jr. As were his people before him, he is a member of the Missionary Baptist church, a public-spirited citizen, and a courteous gentleman.

J. M. THOMAS, planter and stockman, Forsyth, Monroe Co., Ga., son of John H. and Nancy (Carr) Thomas, was born in Monroe county, March 9, 1839. Mr. Thomas' father was born and reared in Jones county, Ga. About 1835 he moved over into Monroe county and settled within three miles of Forsyth. A few years afterward he moved into the town, where he engaged in merchandising, trading and speculation. He was cautious and shrewd, a careful manager, and regarded as a man of the highest integrity. For these reasons he was frequently selected as administrator of estates. He was a strong democrat, and although he cared nothing for the distinction or emoluments of office for himself, he took great interest in the success of his friends. He was very successful and accumulated a large estate before his death, which occurred in 1858. His last wife died in 1890. He was married twice and reared a family of nine children, all of whom are dead but two. His first wife was a Carson, by whom he had two children: W. J., deceased, and Sallie, now wife of W. W. Jackson, of Culloden, Monroe Co. Of Mr. Thomas' full brothers and sisters only two lived to maturity: Isaac, now deceased, and Lucy, who married Alvin Stafford, of Barnesville, Ga., now dead. Mr. Thomas was reared in Monroe county, and received his early education at Hilliard institute and Mercer university, and was at the university of Virginia when the war between the states began. He came home, and, in conjunction with his brother, W. J., assumed the management of his father's business. During the war he operated a tannery for the government, and made shoes for the soldiers. Since the surrender he has been engaged in planting and trading in stock. He owns several plantations, aggregating about 500 acres, near town, and is one of a company owning several thousand acres in the county. Mr. Thomas was married in Macon, Ga., Nov. 26, 1863, to Miss Greta, daughter of Dr. D. W. Hammond, of Macon, formerly of Culloden, where she was born and reared. She was of a family, which, though not numerous in Georgia, is conspicuous for its intellectuality and religion. Five children blessed this union: Leola, wife of C. L. Edwards, Atlanta; Greta, wife of J. B. Fleming, planter, Monroe county; Ida, single, at home; Ella, widow of J. B. Barnes, formerly of Marietta, Ga., who, with her daughter, is with her father, and Jeffie, also at home. Mr. Thomas' wife died in June, 1890. She was a member of the Methodist church, of which Mr. Thomas and the children are also members. He is also a master Mason.

T. E. WALTON, merchant and farmer, Bolingbroke, Monroe Co., Ga., son of Henry W. and Loranía P. (Redding) Walton, was born in Monroe county, June 7, 1844. His father was born and reared to manhood in Virginia. When of age he came to Baldwin county, Ga., and, about 1820, married his wife, who belonged to an old pioneer and influential family. In 1825 he moved to Monroe county, and settled about twelve miles east of Forsyth. Here were born and reared nine children: B. F., planter, New London, Ark.; Rebecca D., wife of J. H. Evans, Monroe county, Ga.; David A., deceased; H. H., Grapeland, Texas; Mary E., wife of B. F. Cadenhead, Sand Mountain, Ala.; J. G. R., enlisted in an Alabama regiment and died of typhoid fever soon after the battle of Bull Run; Martha L., wife of J. H. Cates, McRae, Ga.; Thomas E., the subject of this sketch; William W., planter, Monroe county. His father was a member of the Methodist church and died in 1854; and his mother died in 1884 aged eighty-one years. Mr. Walton was reared on a farm and his education limited to county common schools, but he was industrious, saving and ambitious. In 1869 he bought an interest in the general merchandise business of J. W. Jackson, and continued it under the firm name of Jackson & Walton; subsequently Mr. Ewing bought Mr. Jackson's interest, and the firm was changed to Walton & Ewing, under which it is now conducted. From a small beginning he has built a good trade, has a good stock of general merchandise, and a nice farm and comfortable home. In 1876 Mr. Walton was married in Monroe county to Miss Fannie B. Ewing, who died childless in 1881. In February, 1883, he was married to Miss Sallie, daughter of Peyton and Annie E. Cocke, who was a native of the county, and who has borne two children: Thomas E., Jr., and Annie Lou. Mr. Walton is a democrat, a member of the Methodist church, of which he is a steward and Sunday school superintendent, and is held in high estimation by the community in which he lives.

R. L. WILLIAMS is the principal merchant in the prosperous little community of Juliette, on the E. T., Va. & Ga. railway, in the northeastern part of Monroe county. Although young in years, Mr. Williams is old in experience, having been reared and thoroughly educated in the business in which he has been so successful. His genial, and jovial, and sunshiny nature has drawn to and around him hosts of friends and a liberal patronage, which his unswerving integrity of character, and the downright honesty of dealings have kept, and disclose the real reason for the large trade he commands. Mr. Williams is the son of R. M. and Virginia (Chambliss) Williams, and was born in Tazewell county, Va., June 1, 1861. His father was also born in the same county, but in his young manhood came to Monroe county, Ga. His stay, however, was not long, as after his marriage he returned with his young wife to his Virginia home. After the birth of his boy Mr. Williams brought his wife and child to Monroe county, and placing them in charge of her parents that they might be safe from the impending ravages of war, he returned to Virginia and entered the Confederate army and served faithfully to the end. In 1863 Mr. Williams' mother died leaving him to the care of his grandparents. After the war his father returned to Monroe county and married Miss Alice Chambliss, sister of his first wife, who survives him, at Juliette. He engaged in merchandising for some years at Forsyth, and then in the country, where, in addition, he had extensive planting interests. Being a man of excellent business judgment, combining enterprise with prudence, and a complete master of the details of business, he was successful in his undertakings, and at his death, in 1884, left his family in comfortable circumstances. R. L. Williams was reared behind the counter. After passing his eighteenth birthday he supplemented his common school education with a thorough business course at the Eastman Commercial college at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Returning home thus equipped he engaged for a year as a clerk with J. J. Cater & Co. at Forsyth. In 1882, in company with his father, Mr. Williams established the business at Juliette, which, under his able management, has grown to such magnitude and attained to such prosperity. Occupying a spacious and cheerful-looking store building of his own, eligibly situated and carrying a $3,500 stock of merchandise and plantation-supplies, combined with his superior business training and capabilities, his commercial future is bright in the extreme. Mr. Williams was happily married June 1, 1884, to Miss Lizzie, daughter of Dr. William and Melinda (Harris) Speer, who, at the age of seventeen, graduated with the first honor at the Georgia Baptist seminary, at Gainesville, Ga. Dr. Speer was a successful and prominent physician in Monroe county, who had two children besides Mrs. Williams: Robert J., reading law, and acting as stenographer in the law office of Dessau & Hodges, Macon, Ga., and Annie Belle, at Macon. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Williams has been blessed with eight bright children: R. L., Jr., Paul R., Jack H., Guy W., Helen V., Alice E., Charles M. and Malinda M. Mr. Williams in politics is a democrat. He is a master Mason, a member of Zabud lodge No. 175, and a Methodist, a steward in the church at Juliette.

JUDGE B. H. ZELLNER, Forsyth, Ga., is the head of one of the largest and most influential families in Monroe county, all of whose members occupy honorable positions in their several communities, commercially and socially. For seventy years, continuously, Judge Zellner has been a resident of the county, during which period he has come to be regarded as one of the most reliable and trustworthy of men—a man of the sternest morality and of unbending integrity. So conspicuous have been these characteristics, and so excellent his business capabilities, that he has been entrusted, as administrator or executor, with the management of more estates than any man in the county. He has the remarkable record of having settled some twenty-three estates, some of them the largest in the county, without the loss of a dollar or the aid of the courts. The family is of German origin, George Zellner, the judge's grandfather, having been born and reared to young manhood in Hanover, Germany. The independence of the United States having been established he concluded to cast his lot with the new nation, and came first to North Carolina and settled in Bertie county, where not long after he married a Miss Mary Capheart. Several years afterward, in 1799, he migrated to Lincoln county, Ga., thus introducing the name into this state. He was not a robust man, his constitution having been impaired in consequence of medicine having been carelessly administered in his youth, and he died at a comparatively early age. He raised a family of four sons and two daughters, who scattered after his death to Tennessee, Alabama and elsewhere. Andrew Zellner, Judge Zellner's father, was born in North Carolina in 1798, and was only six months old when the family came to Georgia. He was reared in Lincoln county, and was married in 1818, just across the line in Wilkes county, to Rebecca Holmes, who bore him eight children: B. H., the subject of this sketch; Francis A., deceased; George; Andrew B.; John W., planter, Monroe county; James, deceased; Mary, widow of Ebenezer Pharr, Forsyth, Ga., and Sarah J., wife of William Walker, Thomaston, Ga. In 1824 he moved with his family to Monroe county and settled about eight miles southwest of Forsyth, where he lived until 1837, when he moved to the place where Judge Zellner now lives, four miles southeast of Forsyth. His wife died in 1875, aged seventy-two years, but he survived until 1892, having attained to his ninety-fourth year. In some respects he was a remarkable man, his longevity being largely due to his methodical habits and abstemiousness, it being a fact worthy of note and imitation that he never used tobacco in any form, nor drank a drop of liquor except as a medicine. Before the war he was a whig in politics; a Primitive Baptist always. Judge B. H. Zellner was born in Lincoln county, Feb. 2, 1820. He received a common school education such as the time and the locality afforded, and his youth was passed in the pursuits congenial to the planter-life of the day. In 1850-51, as soon as he attained to his majority, he served the county as sheriff, and for several years following as one of the justices of the inferior court. Before the war he was a whig and strongly opposed to secession. In the convention which nominated the delegates to represent the county, his name was presented without his consent, but he came within four votes of being chosen. Although opposed to secession, he acquiesced in the action of the convention, and earnestly supported the cause to the end. Having large planting and milling interests, he was exempt from military duty; but he contributed largely to the support of the army, and sent two of his sons to the front to do battle for the cause. He was elected to represent the county in 1868-69 in the general assembly, and again in 1878-79. In 1876 he was chosen as one of the new board of county commissioners and served until 1883, which terminated his official life. There has been no period in the life of Judge Zellner when he did not feel a profound interest in the welfare of the county—local, state and Federal—whether in office or not. In all the trusts confided to him he has maintained his character for faithfulness and strict integrity, and given the same careful attention to public business as to his private affairs. He was at one time one of the largest land owners in Monroe county, but he has divided his holdings among his children until he has reduced his own to about 500 acres. Judge Zellner was married in Monroe county, Sept. 27, 1842, to Susan, daughter of Thomas M. Evans. She was born in Jones county, but her family moved into Monroe county about the same time the Zellners did. Judge Zellner and his wife have had eight children born to them: Thomas J. and Andrew J., planters, Monroe county; Nancy R., widow of Dr. B. F. Chambliss, Culloden, Monroe Co.; Emma, wife of Hon. W. A. Worsham, Monroe county; Wiley E., planter and county treasurer; William J., planter, Monroe county; Charles J., merchant, Forsyth, Ga., and Lillie, wife of Col. C. J. Shipp, lawyer, Cordele, Ga. Although an ardent whig before the war, he cheerfully fell into line with the only white man's party, and has since acted with the democrats. For fifty-two years himself and wife have harmoniously "kept together" on life's pilgrimage, and for more than fifty years he has been a constant member of the Primitive Baptist church, and can now look back upon a well-spent life and duty faithfully done, and look confidently forward to the fulfillment of the glorious promises "to him that overcometh."

WILLIAM J. ZELLNER, planter, Strouds, Monroe Co., Ga., son of B. H. and Susan (Evans) Zellner, was born in Monroe county, Jan. 31, 1857. He was reared and educated in the county and has thus far passed his life as a planter, deriving his chief enjoyment and most real pleasure from the successful management of his plantation. This is a tract of nearly 600 acres of as choice land as can be found in Monroe county, about ten miles southwest of Forsyth. Intelligent and progressive in his methods, and availing himself of improved machinery, he realizes the most satisfactory results. Mr. Zellner was married in Spalding county, Ga., May 23, 1889, to Miss Hattie, only daughter of D. C. and Pelly (Jones) Fountain, who has borne him one child, Elsie Louise. Mr. Zellner is a worthy representative of one of the deservedly most honored families in Monroe county, and is himself held in the highest esteem by his fellow-citizens. Upright and blameless in life, of irreproachable character and unswerving integrity, he is justly entitled to the confidence reposed in him by his neighbors and friends.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY.

ASA LEMUEL ADAMS, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., son of Asa and Louisa (Phillips) Adams, was born in Montgomery county, April 1, 1834. Mr. Adams' father was born in the county, and his family was among its early settlers. He was a farmer, was born Dec. 17, 1809, and died June 19, 1891. Mr. Adams' mother was born Oct. 12, 1812, and died July 29, 1884. Of seven children born to them, three lived to maturity: William R. born Feb. 21, 1829; Nathan A., born June 7, 1832, and Asa Lemuel, all living in Montgomery county. Asa L. Adams received a common school education, and began life as a farmer, which has continued to be his occupation, excepting a brief interval of school teaching when a young man and periods of public service. In 1861 he enlisted in Company A, Fourth battalion, Georgia sharpshooters, Bates' division, Bragg's army. He was in all the important engagements in Kentucky, Tennessee and North Georgia, and in several in Virginia. His last battle was when Hood's army was defeated, and practically destroyed, at Nashville, Dec. 15, 1864. He was wounded in that battle while stooping to raise his brother, Andrew J., who had received a wound, from which he died. Mr. Adams was captured and carried to Cumberland hospital, where he remained until Jan. 5, 1865, when he was transferred to Camp Chase prison, Ohio, with more than 500 others. He was detained there until June 13, 1865, when he was paroled, and he returned to his farm. Mr. Adams was notary public eight years—1866-'74—and was elected sheriff in 1874, serving one term. In 1881 he was elected clerk of the superior court, which office he held two years; and 1892 he was elected to represent Montgomery county in the general assembly, and was assigned to the following committees: General agriculture, corporations, immigration, lunatic asylum, and wild lands. May 6, 1866, Mr. Adams was married to Mrs. Mary Jane (nee Ryals) McAllister, daughter of William R. and Eliza (Connor) Ryals, of Montgomery county. By her first husband, Mrs. Adams had two children: Eliza, born Jan. 23, 1851, and John, born Oct. 2, 1854. To Mr. and Mrs. Adams have been born: Sophia F., Mrs. John B. Wootten, and Mary J., Mrs. Cornelius Wootten, both of Wootten's Mills, Telfair Co., Ga. Mr. Adams is a master Mason, and is enjoying life and the esteem of life-long friends at Long Pond.

GEORGE W. ADAMS, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., son of Wylie and Frances (Collins) Adams, was born in Montgomery county Oct. 5, 1830. His father was born in Montgomery county March 5, 1798, was a thrifty, successful farmer, represented the county twice in the general assembly, and died May 21, 1873. His mother was born Aug. 3, 1804, and is still living. They had ten children, of whom five survive: Joe, farmer, Montgomery county; M. C., farmer, Montgomery county; George W.; Margaret, widow of William McLeod, and Thomas, a farmer of Montgomery county. Mr. Adams was educated at the common and high schools of the county, and then engaged in farming. In 1862 he enlisted in the First Georgia regiment, under Capt. Davenport, and was stationed at Savannah. After serving there ten months, he was transferred to the Thirty-second Georgia regiment, Col. Harrison, and was on service in Georgia and Alabama, and was with the forces at Atlanta when besieged by the Federal army. Returning from the army, he resumed his farm work, which he has successfully followed since. Mr. Adams was married to Miss Elizabeth L. Wilcox, of Telfair county, Aug. 8, 1858. She was the daughter of Gen. Mark Wilcox—who served in the Florida Indian war, and Sarah A. E. (Coffee) Wilcox, and was born Dec. 31, 1841. Ten children were the fruit of this marriage: George Lewis, born Feb. 1, 1860, farmer, married Miss Nenie Coffee, of Gwinnett county, Ga.; James Le Conte, born Feb. 5, 1864, Ailey, Ga., married Miss Nell Sutton; Agnes Lee, born July 10, 1865, Mrs. Herbert Wright, Montgomery county; John C., born Dec. 6, 1866, farmer, married Miss Hattie Cave, of Dodge county; Rosa P., born March 1, 1868, Mrs. Henry Simpson, Montgomery county; Elizabeth L., born April 17, 1870, wife of Thomas Thompson, merchant, Mount Vernon, Ga.; Charles M., born Feb. 26, 1873; Mary Emma, born July 17, 1874; Lucy, born Oct. 29, 1879, and Sam Jones, born Aug. 30, 1885. Mr. Adams is a master Mason, and has a beautiful, well-arranged and productive farm about two miles south of Mount Vernon, the county seat.

NATHANIEL REID BEASLEY, deceased, lawyer, Mount Vernon, Montgomery Co., Ga., was the eldest of ten children of Isaiah and Jane Augusta (Way) Beasley, and was born in Liberty county, Ga., Jan. 14, 1867. His father, a prominent lawyer of Reidsville, Tattnall Co., Ga., was born in 1838, and his mother was born Oct. 1, 1847. Mr. Beasley, after receiving the best education the common schools of the county afforded, taught school in Tattnall and Bulloch counties in 1885-'86-'87, and in May, 1888, began the study of law under his father's preceptorship, and was admitted to the bar Oct. 13, of the same year. He was at once accepted by his father as a partner, and practiced with him until 1892, when the partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Beasley removed to Mount Vernon, Montgomery Co., Ga., where he died Sept. 11, 1894, in the flush of a vigorous young manhood, and the beginning of a career, bright with the promise of a brilliant and prosperous professional and political career, leaving his devoted wife and two lovely children to mourn their irreparable loss. Mr. Beasley was married Oct. 29, 1889, to Miss Nora, daughter of Remer Franklin, of Bulloch county, Ga., by whom he had three children: Nannie McLesky, died in infancy; Janie Lucille, born in 1891, and Minnie Reid, born in 1894.

MALCOLM L. CURRIE, M. D., Ailey, Montgomery Co., son of Duncan and Martha A. (McLendon) Currie, was born in Montgomery county July 13, 1853. His great-grandfather emigrated from the highlands of Scotland and settled in Robeson county, N. C. His grandfather, Malcolm Currie, was born in Robeson county, and emigrated from there to Montgomery county, Ga., settling in the latter county about 1818. Dr. Currie's father was born in Montgomery county, Jan. 29, 1825, and died Jan. 11, 1883. His mother was the daughter of Dennis and Martha A. (Tyson) McLendon, and was born in Laurens county Feb. 22, 1824, and is still living. His parents had eight children, of whom Dr. Currie was the second. Dr. Currie received a good preparatory education at the common and other schools of the county. He was elected tax receiver of the county in 1883 and served one term. In the spring of 1886 he entered the college of physicians and surgeons, Baltimore, Md., and graduated with distinction in 1888. He immediately entered Bay View hospital for a post-graduate course. Completing that, he came home and began the practice of medicine at Mount Vernon, the county seat, in August, 1888, where he established a drug store, the first the county ever had, and which did a thriving business. After practicing one and one-half years with excellent success, he entered Johns Hopkins hospital, Baltimore, for another post-graduate course. He went from there to Brunswick, Ga., and practiced some time, meeting with satisfactory patronage, but had to abandon it and return to Mount Vernon, where he remained until May, 1894, when he determined to locate in the new and enterprising town of Ailey, on the Georgia & Alabama railway. Having sold his original drug stock to Messrs. J. F. Currie & Co., he established a new drug store at Ailey, which is now being run in the name of E. T. McBryde & Co., with satisfactory results. Dr. Currie, in addition to the above, is engaged in conducting a real estate business at Mount Vernon and Ailey. Dr. Currie was married to Miss Minnie J. McBryde—born Nov. 28, 1869—daughter of William F. and Ala (McNott) McBryde, of Montgomery county. Their home has been gladdened by the advent of two children: Anna May, born Dec. 28, 1891, and Nora Earline, born May 4, 1894. Dr. Currie is a very public-spirited and energetic and progressive citizen, and as a physician, is the leading member of the profession in this part of the state. His success in the general practice has been phenomenal, and he has attained to an enviable reputation. He has, at the same time, successfully performed some of the most difficult operations in this county, or outside the best hospitals. He is a member of the medical association of Georgia, the South Georgia Medical association, and the American Medical association. He is an enthusiastic Mason, and is a member of Vedalia chapter of royal arch Masons, at Vedalia, Ga. He is also a member of Rush lodge of I. O. O. F., No. 48, Brunswick, Ga.

JUDSEN BEECH GEIGER, lawyer, Mount Vernon, Montgomery Co., Ga., son of Rev. Washington L. and Catharine C. (Tillman) Geiger, was born in Tattnall county, Ga., March 20, 1864. His father was born in Effingham county, Ga., is a Baptist minister of considerable prominence, and to some extent connected with journalism, being now editor of the "Baptist Watchman," Abbeville, Ga. His mother was born in Tattnall county, and died in 1881. J. B. Geiger received an ordinary common school education, and then, under his father's instruction, learned the printer's art; and was business manager and associate editor of the "Bulloch Banner," Bulloch county, Ga., at the age of nineteen. After teaching school for two years he entered Mercer university, Macon, Ga., where he remained until the completion of his sophomore year. He then taught school again, and in 1889, entered the law school at the university of Georgia, whence he graduated with distinction, class of 1890. After an interval of two years, during which he engaged in teaching school a part of the time, he located in Mount Vernon and commenced the practice of his profession, in which he is having excellent success, with a splendid future before him, being regarded as the coming man of his county. On the 27th day of May, 1894, he was happily united in marriage with Miss Clifford E. Morrison, of Montgomery county.

CHARLES S. HAMILTON, farmer and merchant, Montgomery county, Ga., son of Josiah and May (Poole) Hamilton, was born in Montgomery county, Dec. 9, 1831. His father was of Scotch descent, born in North Carolina in 1791, came to Georgia with the family in 1800 and settled in Montgomery county, where he was reared a farmer. His mother was a native Georgian. Charles S. was sixth in birth of a family of eleven born to his parents. He received such education as was obtainable at the common schools of the county at the time, and he began life as a farmer. He enlisted in the army soon after the war began, and was detailed for duty in Georgia in Col. Clinch's regiment of cavalry, and was in the service three years. In 1860 he was elected justice of the peace and held the office until he resigned fourteen years later. He was elected to represent the county in the general assembly in 1884, and served two years, during which he introduced a bill for the relief of disabled Confederate soldiers, which passed and was ratified by the people, and under which the Confederate soldiers are now receiving pensions. Mr. Hamilton has a very large farm and has besides very extensive timber land possessions. In connection with his farming he has a very large general merchandise store at Higgston, where he has done and continues to do a large business. From his store, his large farm and his extensive tracts of timber lands he enjoys a splendid income. Mr. Hamilton has been twice wedded. His first wife was Mrs. Jenkins, of Jefferson county, Ga., whom he married in 1857, and who died, childless, in 1862. His second wife was Miss Ruth Williams, born in 1844, daughter of Joshua Williams, of Tattnall county, by whom he has had eleven children, three of whom (all boys) died in infancy. The living children are: Charles L., born Feb. 25, 1870; Benjamin F., born Feb. 6, 1872, married Miss Effie Williamson, daughter of A. J. Williamson, of Montgomery county; Mollie L., born May 23, 1874, now Mrs. Emerson Almand, Montgomery county; George W., born Aug. 10, 1877; Claudius W., born Oct. 20, 1879; Ruth L., born May 24, 1883; Arthur, born Aug. 11, 1886, and a boy baby, born March 16, 1893, not named. Mr. Hamilton's father lost a large amount of property by the war, and he was a large slave-holder himself. He lives on an extensive farm at Kibbee, Montgomery Co., in the enjoyment of robust health and an ample competency, an interesting family and thousands of friends. Mr. Hamilton is a royal arch Mason.

PETER JOHNSON, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., son of Alexander and Mary (Wester) Johnson, was born in Montgomery county, Oct. 24, 1843. His father, a son of Peter Johnson, a native of Scotland, was born in Robeson county, N. C., Jan. 29, 1810, and came to Montgomery county when a young man. He was a shoemaker, blacksmith and gunsmith. Guns and rifles that he made are in possession of members of the family now. He died in March, 1886. Mrs. Mary Johnson, now living, was born Sept. 23, 1817, and was married March 9, 1837. The education of Mr. Johnson was as good as the county schools at that time afforded. He enlisted in Company E, the first organized in the county, Sixty-first Georgia regiment. The company, Capt. Charles W. McArthur, was a part of Lawton's, afterward Gordon's brigade, Early's division, Ewell's corps. The command left Georgia for Virginia in the spring of 1862, where it remained until the close of the war. Mr. Johnson was shot through the left side and wounded in the hips and left on the field at the battle of Gettysburg, where he was taken prisoner. When sufficiently recovered he was paroled and came home. As soon as he was exchanged he returned to the army, and re-entered his old company. At the battle of Cold Harbor he was again wounded, was given a furlough and came home to recover. He met Sherman's army on its march through Georgia, was taken prisoner and held till the close of the war. He and others were locked up in the courthouse, Sandersville, Ga., and while thus confined some Federal soldiers set fire to the building. Gen. Sherman rode up and ordered the release of the prisoners just in time to save their lives. For eight years succeeding the war Mr. Johnson followed timbering down the river, and then turned his attention to farming. In 1882 he established a saw-milling and cotton-ginning business, which he has continued till now, satisfactorily to his patrons and profitably to himself. Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Mary Lou, born May 27, 1843, daughter of W. D. W. C. and Martha (Sharp) Connor. To them the following children have been born: Ella Victoria, born May 24, 1871; Mrs. E. J. Wells, Montgomery county; Willie A., born June 28, 1875, and Mattie Elizabeth, born Oct. 16, 1880. He is now enjoying a quiet and pleasant home-life on his farm at Long Pond, Ga.

JOHAN W. M'ARTHUR, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., son of John and Nancy (McLeod) McArthur, was born in Montgomery county, September, 1838. His father was born in Robeson county, N. C., in 1797, came to Georgia when a boy and settled in Montgomery county, where he lived a farmer until his death in 1853, at the age of fifty-six years. He once represented the county in the senate of the general assembly. Mr. McArthur's mother was born in North Carolina in 1816, and was the daughter of James McLeod, a native of Scotland. She died in 1888, at the age of seventy-two years. John W. McArthur was the first son and the fifth born of eleven children, who all lived to be grown, and of whom eight are still living. He was reared a farmer, and he is a farmer yet, but every year he ships timber by river to Darien. The first two years of the war he was a justice of the inferior court. He afterward enlisted and was in Anderson's brigade, Phillips' division, and was at Atlanta when besieged in 1864. During the march through Georgia he was severely wounded in an engagement with Sherman's army at Griswoldville, near Macon. Mr. Arthur married Miss Louisa, daughter of Thomas B. and Elizabeth (Smith) Calhoun; she was born Aug. 25, 1844, and bore him two children: John Henry, born Sept. 6, 1861, physician, Long Pond, Ga., and Willie T., born Feb. 6, 1863, manufacturer of naval stores, Montgomery county. Mrs. McArthur died Feb. 27, 1863. Mr. McArthur was next married March 20, 1866, to Mary C., daughter of John B. and Maria (Connor) Ryals, who was born May 14, 1848. Mrs. Ryals was the daughter of Rev. Wilson Connor. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. McArthur: Ferdinand F., born Dec. 5, 1866, merchant, Ailey, Ga.; Alexander Bruce, born July 15, 1875, now a student, Mercer university, Macon, Ga., and Ada Maria, born Aug. 17, 1880. Mr. McArthur is a master Mason, is much respected as a citizen and as a member of a very numerous and influential family. He lives at Dry Pond, the center of the county.

JOHAN M'ARTHUR, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., was born in Robeson county, N. C., in 1797, and died in 1853, aged fifty-six years. He came to Georgia when a boy and settled in the eastern part of Montgomery county, where he farmed until he died. He once represented the county in the senate of the general assembly. His wife, Miss Nancy McLeod, was born in North Carolina in 1816, and was the daughter of James McLeod, a native of Scotland. She died in 1888, aged seventy-two.

DUNCAN M'ARTHUR, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., seventh child of John and Nancy (McLeod) McArthur, was born in Montgomery county Dec. 25, 1843. He enlisted the second year of the war in the Seventh Georgia cavalry, under the command of Col. Millen, and remained on guard duty until the last year of the war, when the command was sent to join Gen. Young in Gen. Wade Hampton's division. He was so fortunate as to escape injury and captivity, and when he left the army returned to the farm. But he makes his home with his brother, William H. McArthur.

WILLIAM H. M'ARTHUR, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., ninth child of John and Nancy (McLeod) McArthur, was born in Montgomery county Feb. 24, 1848. He was reared on a farm and his life-occupation has been that of a farmer. He married Miss Florence, daughter of Christopher and Charity (McCrimson) McRae, Dec. 9, 1886. They have no living children, the only one born to them having died when three years old. He has a nice, comfortable home at Long Pond, where he and his unmarried brother, Duncan, quietly enjoy their competency.

DUNCAN M'ARTHUR was born in Georgia, was a prosperous farmer in Montgomery county, and died when about forty years of age. His father was a native of Scotland. Mr. McArthur married Miss Eliza McLeod, who after his death married again, and now is Mrs. Mozo, of Eastman, Dodge Co., Ga. Two sons were the fruit of this marriage: John J. and W. McArthur, both living.

JOHN J. M'ARTHUR, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., son of Duncan and Eliza (McLeod) McArthur, was born in Montgomery county, near the line of Tattnall, Aug. 17, 1838. His educational advantages were good, having attended the best schools in the county. His occupation has been that of a farmer chiefly. In 1861 he enlisted in Company C, Sixty-first Georgia regiment, Col. J. H. Lamar, and was made second lieutenant of the company. While stationed on Jekyll island he left the company and returned home. Soon afterward he was elected captain of Company C, Seventh Georgia regiment, Georgia state troops and, serving in Gen. Johnston's and Hood's armies, participated in the battles around Atlanta. Returning home after the war he was elected in 1868 and again in 1878, to represent the county in the general assembly. In 1871-72 he was engaged in the commission business in Savannah, then abandoned it and has since devoted himself to his farm interests, excepting the time needed to perform the duties of justice of the peace, an office he has held for twenty years. He married Miss Marie E., daughter of William Patterson, of Bryan county, born April, 1851, and died Oct. 8, 1888, by whom he had one child, Marion Udell, born Aug. 1, 1877, and who died Aug. 17, 1889, and was regarded by all who knew her as a child of remarkable promise. Mr. McArthur is a master Mason and commands the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens.

JAMES M'ARTHUR, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., second son of Duncan and Eliza (McLeod) McArthur, was born in Montgomery county in 1840. Receiving the best education the county schools afforded he attended Trinity college, N. C., in 1859-60, but his studies were interrupted by the war. Since leaving college he has devoted himself to cultivating and improving his farm and shipping timber to Darien. Mr. McArthur was married March 14, 1867, to Eliza, born Jan. 21, 1842, daughter of Thomas B. and Sarah A. Connor. Mr. and Mrs. McArthur have had born to them the following named children, besides three which died: Walter Benton, born Feb. 15, 1868; Willie Theodore, born Dec. 8, 1869; James Jefferson, born Nov. 13, 1871; John J., born Sept. 8, 1873; L. Anna, born Dec. 23, 1879; Torem C., born Nov. 8, 1882, and Mary Clyde, born Jan.

10, 1885. He is enjoying life on his farm surrounded by his interesting family. Mr. McArthur is a master Mason.

JOHN HENRY M'ARTHUR, M. D., Long Pond, Montgomery Co., Ga., son of John W. and Louisa (Calhoun) McArthur, was born in Montgomery county Sept. 6, 1861. His father was also born in Montgomery county in 1838, and is still living, a very successful farmer, and one of its most highly-esteemed and influential citizens. His mother was a daughter of Thomas B. Calhoun—was born Aug. 25, 1844, and died Feb. 27, 1883. Dr. McArthur received the best education the high schools of the county could bestow. He attended courses of lectures during the winters of 1882-3 and 1883-4 at the medical college of Georgia, Augusta, and in the spring of 1884 graduated with distinction, being third-honor member of his class. He located at once at Long Pond, Montgomery Co., where he has established an excellent reputation, and been very successful, professionally and financially. Since 1887 he has been engaged, also, with his brother, W. T. McArthur, in the manufacture of naval stores, and has also operated a farm. Dr. McArthur married Miss Anna L.—born Oct. 2, 1868—a daughter of Dr. J. E. Mobley, Jan. 1, 1890, by whom he has had two children: John Herman, born Nov. 16, 1891, and Charlotte Louisa, born April 14, 1893. Dr. McArthur enjoys to the fullest extent the esteem and confidence of the people.

WALTER T. M'ARTHUR, deceased, of Montgomery county, Ga., the fifth of nine children of Duncan and Elizabeth (McLauchlin) McArthur, was born in Montgomery county, Ga., Aug. 3, 1837, and was of distinguished Scotch ancestry. His father was a native of Tattnall county, Ga., and his mother a native of Argyleshire, Scotland. His ancestors were among the first Scotch families who came from Scotland and settled, in 1747, in Cumberland and Robeson counties. His great-grandfather was a young man when he came over; and was a soldier in the revolutionary army, from North Carolina. His grandfather was born during that memorable struggle, May 25, 1780. This branch of the McArthur family trace their origin to the original chieftain of the highland clan Campbell, of Scotland, a distinction recorded down to the time of the reign of James I of England. Mr. McArthur's father was a farmer, a man of superior intelligence and great influence. He represented Montgomery county—sometimes in the house, sometimes in the senate—in the general assembly. His father died Oct. 17, 1877, aged seventy-four years, and his mother in August, 1885, aged eighty years. Walter T. McArthur enjoyed excellent educational advantages, and was a student of Trinity college, North Carolina, when the war between the states began. Coming home, he enlisted in the Confederate service, in which he remained until the war closed. He was with the forces defending Atlanta during the siege, and in front of the Federal army when marching through Georgia. In an engagement at Griswoldville, Ga., he received a slight wound in the foot. Being tendered a position as civil engineer on the Macon & Brunswick railway, he was detailed by the secretary of war for that purpose. After the war he was employed by Hon. William E. Dodge (for whom Dodge county was named), to look after his large real estate interests in Georgia. Mr. McArthur was also engaged in the real estate business on his own account for years, and was exceptionally successful. From 1868 to 1871 Mr. McArthur represented the fifteenth district in the senate of the general assembly. He was a member of three national democratic conventions, viz.: At St. Louis, in 1876; at Chicago, in 1884, and at Chicago, in 1892, and voted in two conventions for the nomination of Grover Cleveland. Mr. McArthur was married, in 1880, to Miss Victoria, daughter of William and Sarah Ryder, of Bibb county, Ga. To them three children have been born: Addison Arthur, named for two brothers, who died during the war; Douglas Stuart, named for two powerful Scottish clans, and William Ryder, named for his grandfather, who died when young. Mrs. McArthur's father, who was considered one of the best educators in that part of the state, was a native of Liverpool, England, and when W. T. McArthur went to Europe, Mr. Ryder accompanied him, visiting England for the first time in fifty years. Mr. McArthur left one of the most beautiful homes in Georgia, about five miles northeast of Lumber City. Having traveled and seen much of the world, being well educated and possessing an unusual fund of information, of genial disposition, and being large-hearted, his friends were, during his lifetime here, entertained with lavish hospitality. Masonically, Mr. McArthur was outranked by few in Georgia, having passed through all the thirty-two degrees, and being a member of Yaarab Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles Mystic Shrine. He was also a Knight of Pythias. His death occurred Dec. 16, 1894. While in Atlanta he was taken sick with congestion of the brain, and only lived a few days after being removed to his home.

GEORGE M. TROUP M'LEOD, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., son of Angus and Nancy C. (McMillan) McLeod, was born in Montgomery county Jan. 1, 1827. There were seven children, all of whom lived to be grown and married, but of whom, the subject of this sketch, the youngest, is the only one living. Angus McLeod, his father, was born in Scotland, and was brought by his father, Alexander McLeod, to the United States the latter part of the last century, when he was quite young—at the time when so many Scotch emigrants came to this country and settled in Richmond county, N. C. About the year 1800 Mr. McLeod's grandfather, Alexander McLeod, removed from North Carolina to, and settled in, Montgomery county, Ga. Mr. McLeod's father, Angus McLeod, was born Nov. 10, 1774. He became a large slave-owner, and was a slave dealer down to the time of the suppression of the slave trade; after that he dealt in real estate on a large scale, and acquired immense tracts of land. He died Sept. 4, 1827, of yellow fever, contracted in Savannah. Mr. McLeod's mother was the daughter of Archibald McMillan, also a Scotch emigrant to North Carolina, and who, later, removed to Georgia. She was born Nov. 15, 1780, and died May 4, 1852. Mr. McMillan became a very prominent citizen in Montgomery county. He had a family of eight children—two sons and six daughters. Malcolm McMillan, one of these sons, came from North Carolina to Montgomery county in 1800, and pitched his camp near an oak tree on the tract of land where Vidalia now stands. One of his children died, and was buried there under an oak tree; the spot became the family burying ground. Mr. McMillan built a house and made his home near-by. He erected a Presbyterian house of worship—which was the second meeting house built in the county. The first Presbyterian preacher was Rev. Murphy McMillan, a distant relative of Malcolm, who subsequently became his son-in-law. Margaret McMillan, sister of Malcolm, married Charles McKinnon, and reared thirteen children—eleven sons and two daughters—all of whom became prominent people. The eleven sons were all men of tall stature and massive frames, and settled mostly in Telfair county. Alexander Talmage McLeod, brother of George, was born May 28, 1817, and died in 1869. He was a man of much force of character, and a very prominent citizen. He was clerk of the superior court a number of years, and twice represented the county in the general assembly. He married Miss Nancy McCrimmon, a member of one of the first of the Scotch families which settled in this part of the state. William Archibald McLeod, another brother of George, was born May 27, 1821, and died Aug. 27, 1867. He was, for a period of twenty years prior to his death, county surveyor of Montgomery county, and work of his, on the original grants, is among the records in the secretary of state's office in Atlanta.

He married Miss Adams, a daughter of Wylie Adams. Margaret McLeod, his oldest sister, was born Feb. 20, 1812, was married to Daniel McLeod, and died Aug. 31, 1830. Delilah McLeod, the next oldest sister, was born Jan. 6, 1814, married Charles McCrimmon, who twice represented Montgomery county in the general assembly. She died in 1893. Catharine A. McLeod, the next sister, was born May, 28, 1819, married George McCrimmon, of Montgomery county, and died in May, 1894. Nancy C. McLeod, his youngest sister, was born June 27, 1824, married Matthew Sharp, Montgomery county, and died Dec. 9, 1862. George M. T. McLeod received the best education the county schools could give him, and then attended one of the best private academies in North Carolina one year. From 1851 to 1855 he was a merchant in Savannah. Returning to Montgomery county he was surveyor and agent for the Georgia Land and Lumber company, continuing his relations with them until 1858. He enlisted early in the war, and June 29, 1861, he was commissioned by Gov. Brown captain of the first company ever raised in Montgomery county for Confederate service. Before taking up his commission he was three times elected captain, and, on account of some dissention among disappointed office-seekers, he refused to take the company out. Later, he enlisted in the Twentieth battalion, Georgia cavalry, which command was mainly employed in coast service. In May, 1864, he went to Virginia, and was in Capt. Williams' company, and was in Hampton's brigade, Young's division. In the engagement at How's shop, his battalion, not half of which was present, was almost annihilated. After this he was in Cobb's and in Phillips', and fought in various commands. In the engagement at Trevilian's Station, he was severely wounded in the hip, the effect of which he feels at the present time. Since the war Mr. McLeod has given his attention to farming. On the inauguration of the present school system, he was appointed county school commissioner. He was commissioned as a delegate to the cotton states convention, at Vicksburg, Miss., by Gov. McDaniel; and after that, appointed to represent his section of the state in the Piedmont exposition, and was also a member of the interstate agricultural convention, at Atlanta. For a number of years he has been reporter, for his part of the state, for the State Agricultural association, and for the weather bureau, at Atlanta. Mr. McLeod has been postmaster of Stirling, Ga., for fifty years, beginning with the time when it was one of the only two in the county. Mr. McLeod has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Josephine L. Ryals, who was a daughter of Joseph and Lucy (Connor) Ryals, to whom he was married Jan. 23, 1856. She was born Feb. 22, 1833, and died Nov. 12, 1859. She was a sister of Rev. James G. Ryals, D. D., who was professor of the theological department of Mercer university, Macon, Ga. By this marriage Mr. McLeod had three children. George W., born Oct. 10, 1856, is a farmer, and contractor and builder. He married Miss Ida Phillips, of Tattnall county, has seven children, and lives at Altamaha, Ga. Georgiana J., the second child, was born March 5, 1858, married William Wilkes, Montgomery county, and has ten children. Mary R., the youngest, was born Nov. 1, 1859, married Philip A. McQueen, Montgomery county, and died in December, 1893, leaving five children. His second wife was Miss Imogene Stripling, daughter of Alexander Stripling, of Tattnall county, who was born Jan. 5, 1848, and whom he married Jan. 26, 1865. Two children have blessed this union: Roderick Dhu, born Nov. 30, 1865, and a physician, a graduate of Atlanta Medical college, and is located at Lyons, Ga., where he is prominent in his profession, and has a lucrative practice, and has a drug store; and Robert Bruce, born May 29, 1868. Mr. McLeod is a leading and enthusiastic Mason; was a member of the first lodge instituted in the county, and has been a charter member of three lodges.

CHRISTOPHER M'RAE, farmer, Montgomery Co., Ga., son of John and Margaret (McRae) McRae, was born in Marlboro district, S. C., Dec. 15, 1815. His father was born and reared in the same district, and was a farmer by occupation; his mother was a native of Richmond county, N. C. The family moved to Telfair county, Ga., in 1815, where the father died at the age of seventy-seven years. Mr. McRae received such education as could be obtained in his youth in the district schools, and at the age of sixteen embarked in merchandising. He continued in business for twelve years, and was postmaster in Mount Vernon during the Indian war in Florida. After relinquishing the mercantile trade he engaged in farming and rafting timber down the Ocmulgee and Altamaha to Darien, and still continues his farming operations. He was too old for military service when the late hostilities began, but was a member of the board of examiners. Before the close of the war he went as far as Savannah to enter actual service, but was turned back on account of age and feebleness. Mr. McRae married Miss Charity McCrimmon, who was born in Montgomery county, Ga., April 28, 1829, and was the daughter of Duncan McCrimmon, a native of Marlboro district, S. C. By this wife who died July 21, 1853, he became the father of three children: Duncan J., Brooks county, manufacturer of naval stores; Florence, Mrs. William McArthur, Montgomery county; Charity, deceased wife of J. Eugene Hicks, Laurens Co., Ga. On Jan. 19, 1859, Mr. McRae married Miss Margaret McCrimmon, born Feb. 28, 1834, who has borne him four children: Colen, born Dec. 9, 1861; Charles D., born Feb. 17, 1864, practicing physician, Rochelle, Wilcox Co., Ga.; Franklin M., born 1867, and Lochlan, born April 12, 1869. Mr. McRae is one of Montgomery county's most substantial citizens, ranks deservedly high, and is a man of great influence.

JOHN M'RAE, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., son of Farquhar and Isabella (McCrimmon) McRae, was born in Montgomery county, Ga., July 16, 1824. His father was born in Scotland, and he was three years old when his parents came to the United States and settled in Robeson county, N. C. He died in Montgomery county, Ga., in March, 1838. His mother, born in Robeson county, N. C., in 1778, died in Montgomery county, in November, 1868. John McRae was reared on the family farm, and received such education as was obtainable at the common country schools in his locality at that time. In 1848, when twenty-four years of age, he was elected justice of the peace, and in 1852 he was elected a justice of the inferior court, in which capacity he served the county, having been continuously re-elected, until 1868, when the court was abolished. In 1850 he was elected to represent Montgomery county in the convention called to consider Federal relations—questions pertaining to the acquisition and annexation of new territory, whether slave or free. In 1851-52 he was elected senator from the district composed of Appling and Montgomery counties, and again in 1857-59. In redistricting the state, Montgomery county was transferred from the sixth to the fifteenth district, and in 1861 Mr. McRae was elected senator. In 1872, and again in 1882, he was elected to represent Montgomery county in the general assembly. Mr. McRae is now one of the county commissioners, an office without emolument, to which he has been continuously elected for ten years. From 1869 to 1882 he conducted general merchandise stores at Little York and Scotland, and in 1890 began his present business, the manufacture of naval stores. About 1849 Mr. McRae married Miss Mary L. Brantley, born July 17, 1829, in Laurens county, by whom he had four children, two of whom are living: Isabella, Mrs. John W. Clement, and Christina, Mrs. John G. Bright. John W. Clement was born Oct. 17, 1850, and is now the father of eight children. The deceased children of Mr. McRae, Margaret and Harriet, died at the respective ages of fourteen and nine years. Mrs. McRae died in April, 1883. Mr. McRae has been a prominent and useful citizen, and is now one of the most influential citizens in Montgomery county. The esteem in which he is held and the confidence reposed in him are evidenced by the many offices with which he has been honored, and by the fact that now, at his advanced age, his fellow-citizens insist on keeping him in official position.

MATTHEW SHARP, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., son of Grove and Annie (Higgs) Sharp, was born in Tattnall county, Ga., June 29, 1824. His grandfather, Grove Sharp, Sr., was of English parentage. His father was born June 18, 1802, and died Jan. 5, 1865. Mr. Sharp's parents had twelve children—Matthew being the first born—eleven of whom are living: Matthew; Martha, born Sept. 28, 1825 (Mrs. W. D. W. Connor); Littleton, born Feb. 20, 1827, farmer, Montgomery county, married Caroline McAllister; Hiram, born Nov. 28, 1828, farmer, married, first, Miss Mary Hughes, second, Miss E. Cribb; Caroline, born Oct. 11, 1830, widow of James C. Connor, who died during the war; Hamilton, born Aug. 30, 1832, died July 22, 1862, also during the war; Willie, born Dec. 11, 1834, farmer, Tattnall county, married, first, Miss Edith Moses, second, Miss Susan Brewer; Rebecca Ann, born Dec. 22, 1836 (Mrs. John Sharp); Elizabeth, born Nov. 24, 1838 (Mrs. John Peterson, Montgomery county); Mary, born Nov. 22, 1840 (Mrs. Alexander Hughes); Nancy Higgs, born March 28, 1843 (Mrs. M. D. Peterson); William Henry, born Jan. 24, 1847, farmer, married Miss Emily Gibbs. Matthew Sharp worked on the farm and attended school during his boyhood until of age, and then commencing farming, which has since been his occupation. About 1849 he was elected tax receiver and collector; this was when the two offices were united. During his incumbency they were separated, and he filled one or the other for several years. In 1859 he was elected to represent the county in the general assembly. At the end of his term he enlisted in Company A, Twentieth Georgia battalion cavalry. A few months afterward a new company was organized—Company F—and he was made first lieutenant of it, a position he retained, although often offered promotion, until he returned to take his seat in the general assembly, having been elected to represent the county. Since then he has been elected to several offices in the county. Mr. Sharp has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Nancy C., daughter of Angus and Nancy C. (McMillan) McLeod, born June 27, 1824, to whom he was married Jan. 1, 1852. Her parents were of Scotch descent, and she died Dec. 9, 1862, leaving five children: Annie C., born Dec. 23, 1853 (Mrs. John D. McLeod, Telfair county); William H., born Jan. 26, 1855, farmer, married Miss Jennie Carlisle; Elizabeth L., born April 20, 1857 (Mrs. John A. Galbraith, farmer, Montgomery county); Catharine A., born Feb. 12, 1859 (Mrs. James D. McGregor, Montgomery county); Franklin M., born Nov. 23, 1860. Mr. Sharp's second wife was Miss Ann, daughter of Thompson G. and Elizabeth (Wester) Gibbs, born May 29, 1845, to whom he was married April 6, 1865, and who has borne him two children: Robert Lee, born Nov. 24, 1872, and Nancy Udell, born Oct. 20, 1878. He lives on a fine farm in the eastern part of the county, and is a master Mason.

SIMEON SIKES, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., son of Matthew G. and Sarah (Wood) Sikes, was born in Wilkinson county, Ga., Oct. 3, 1822. His father was born March 21, 1787, in North Carolina, and was partly reared in that state, and died in Georgia in May, 1863. His mother was born in 1788, and died July 30, 1849. Of their eight children four are now living. When a young man Simeon Sikes farmed a few years in Houston county, and then went to Tampa Bay, Hillsboro Co., Fla., but in a short time returned to Houston county. After living in Houston three years he went back to Alachua county, Fla., remaining a year, and then concluded to try Houston county again. Leaving Houston at the end of four years he removed to Clinch county, Ga., whence, after two years' sojourn, he removed, in 1859, to Montgomery county, which he decided to make, and which became, his permanent home. He was reared a farmer, and has been one all his life—a part of the time, however, conducting a sawmill in connection with his farm. He was a member of the second of two regiments of state troops raised for duty in Georgia. He entered the service under Capt. (afterward Col.) Storey. He was elected tax receiver in 1881 and served two years. He is now school commissioner of the county. Mr. Sikes was married Dec. 16, 1845, to Miss Elizabeth Bone, born in North Carolina March 4, 1824, daughter of Richard and Isabella (McArthur) Bone. Mr. and Mrs. Bone were natives of North Carolina, but died in Georgia. To Mr. and Mrs. Sikes children have been born as follows: Columbus H., born Nov. 14, 1846, married Miss Mary Graham, and is now farming in Telfair county; Laura Isabella, born April 6, 1848, is Mrs. Leonard F. Hinson, Montgomery county; Sarah Emeline, born Jan. 9, 1851, is wife of Mr. James J. Mobley, farmer, Montgomery county; Mary Jeannette, born Jan. 4, 1853; Florence Elizabeth, born April 19, 1855, is now Mrs. Henry Cook, farmer, Coffee county, Ga.; Eliza Jane, born Sept. 15, 1856, is now Mrs. J. Lowry Clements, farmer, Montgomery county; Martha Ellen, born July 17, 1858, is Mrs. Avery B. Clements, farmer, Montgomery county; Henrietta R., born Feb. 20, 1860, is Mrs. F. R. Mann, Telfair county, Ga.; Aleph Thomas, born Oct. 21, 1861, married Gabriel M. Clements, and is a farmer of Montgomery county. Mr. Sikes has never belonged to any secret society, nor has he ever signed any pledge or taken upon himself any obligation not strictly required by the laws of the state. He has always dealt fairly with his fellow-men and enjoys their confidence and respect.

JESSE M. WALL, farmer, Montgomery county, Ga., son of William D. and Sarah (Gowin) Wall, was born in Montgomery county March 21, 1816. He was the sixth of his parents' children, and is the only one now living. His father was born and reared in Camden district, S. C., and came to Georgia in 1816. He was a farmer, but when a young man he taught school. Mrs. Sarah Wall died in 1856, and her husband in 1859. Jesse M. Wall was given a good common school education in the county schools, and has followed farming all his life. His fellow-citizens, however, appreciating his ability and fitness, have not allowed him to entirely escape the responsibilities of public life. In 1844, when he was twenty-eight years of age, he was elected sheriff, and was continued in the office six years. He was then elected a justice of the inferior court, and held the office sixteen years. In 1878-79 he represented the fifteenth senatorial district in the general assembly. Mr. Wall was married March 21, 1839, to Miss Martha L., born March 30, 1818, daughter of Rev. Wilson Connor, associate founder of Mercer university. Mr. and Mrs. Wall reared three children: John W., born June 8, 1852, married to Miss Mollie Mozo, Eastman, Ga., where he now lives; Fannie, born Feb. 22, 1849, Mrs. John Smith, Telfair county; William D., born Sept. 3, 1855, who lives at the old homestead near Lumber City, Ga., taking care of his father in his old age. Mrs. Martha L. Wall died June 24, 1887.

MORGAN COUNTY.

MR. A. ATKINSON, deceased, and a noted contractor and for many years an eminent and respected citizen of Madison, was born in New Hampshire in 1816, and was a son of Silas and Sarah (Hutchers) Atkinson. He came to Georgia in 1836 and located in Columbia and helped defend that place from the Indians. He was a contractor and built many of the court houses, jails and bridges, and many large manufactories in Georgia. He was long a Mason and held high honors in that fraternity. In 1839 he married Martha J. Forte, and of this union ten children are living, viz.: Charles D., Norcellus, H. O., Silas, Hale, Eugene, Belle, Emma, I. M. and May. The mother was born in Baldwin county, Ga., and was of one of the oldest leading families in Georgia. She lived until 1892. Mr. Atkinson was in the state militia during the war. He was an enterprising man, with much energy and possessed of the best habits, and was honored by all.

ATKINSON. The Atkinson family occupies an important position in the history of Georgia and embraces many prominent citizens. Mr. N. B. Atkinson, a well-known resident of Morgan county, born in New Hampshire in 1819, is the son of Judge Daniel C. and Mahala (Tilton) Atkinson, natives of the granite state. Mr. N. B. Atkinson spent the first thirty years of his life in the New England states and received a liberal education. He came to Georgia and took up a home in Madison in 1850, traveling for a wholesale house of New York. He had been married in 1847 to Zapharine D. Robinson, and having had experience in the drug business, he was during the war stationed in the hospital at Augusta. After the close of hostilities he went into the drug business in Madison and continued the same until 1882, when he retired from business. Mrs. Atkinson is a dutiful member of the Baptist church and her husband is a Mason and Odd Fellow, who has taken the high degrees of the orders. He is one of Madison's most substantial and respected citizens, and is highly esteemed by all who are so fortunate as to know him.

BROOKS. The Brooks family of Morgan county descend from William Brooks, a native of Virginia, who came to Georgia previous to 1800. He settled in Walton county and cleared up a farm, and when the United States was called on the battlefield with Great Britain in 1812 he shouldered his flint-lock musket and took part in the war. A son, Larkin, was born on the farm in Walton county in 1805, and when about eighteen years old went out with a surveying party engaged in establishing the boundary line between Georgia and Alabama. Upon his return he went to South Carolina, where he met a Miss Jones, daughter of a planter of that state, and the new made man and wife returned to Walton county, and began life under prospects of sunshine. His wife died in a few years and Mr. Brooks took for his second wife Permelia J., daughter of Austin and Mary J. (Mayne) Clements. The Clements were early residents of Morgan county, and came overland from their native state of Virginia. While en route on this journey, which was an important event in the lives and fortunes of the family, Miss Matilda Clements, a sister of Mrs. Brooks, fell out of the wagon while a river was being crossed and her life was only saved through the almost superhuman efforts of the father. Mr. Clements became one of Morgan county's best citizens and successful farmers. Larkin Brooks fought against the Creek Indians and became one of the substantial farmers of his day. He was a good Christian and a strict member of the Missionary Baptist church. Mr. Charles G. Brooks, youngest son of Larkin Brooks, spent his early life on the farm and grappled with learning as the opportunities were presented to him, with the satisfaction of obtaining a good common school education. In March, 1864, he enlisted in Company D, Third Georgia regiment, under Capt. J. K. Wright, Col. Snede. He was made a guard of Hill's ordnance wagons and was always in a bomb-proof position. In October, 1864, he was transferred to the ranks and remained there until the surrender. Since the war, with a devoted mother, Mrs. Permelia J. Brooks, and a loving sister, Miss Lizzie Brooks, he has spent a happy and successful life at the homestead on their farm near Madison, engaged in farming. He is of the Baptist faith, and has served as deacon of his church since 1871. He is a member of the jury commissioners and a citizen of which the county is proud.

JOHN W. BURNEY, farmer, Godfrey, was born and reared in Morgan county; he first saw the light of day Dec. 2, 1829, and is the son of Thomas J. and Cornelia (Walker) Burney. The father was born in Greene county, Ga., in 1801, and came to what is now Morgan county in 1806, where he cleared a farm and built a home. He was a son of John and Elizabeth (Walker) Burney. The grandfather was a native of Ireland. Mrs. Thomas J. Burney was the daughter of Isaac and Martha Jane Walker. John W. Burney grew up in Madison, where he received his early educational training. He matriculated at Mercer university, at Penfield in 1845, and was graduated in 1848. He went to Cave Spring and taught two years in the Horn high school, and a year or two in the Dunn school with Oliver P. Fannin as principal. He then taught a select school in Madison and returned to the farm, where he now lives. This place was given him by his maternal grandfather, and for a few years he kept bachelor's hall there. In June, 1855, he married Fannie C. Walker. She was a niece and ward of A. Reese and a daughter of Alexander and Caroline (Reese) Walker. The union has been blessed with six children, three of whom are living: William, Crawford and Julia. The mother was born in Greene county, but reared in Morgan. Both husband and wife are members of the Baptist church, and Mr. Burney is a Mason high in the degrees. He was exempt from service during the war, but joined "Joe Brown's pets" and served six months. In 1866 and 1867 he served as judge of the county court and in 1890-91 represented Morgan county in the legislature. He was an able legislator and a leader in measures of interest to the farmers. He is a member of the board of education of the county. During the war Mr. Burney was a commissary agent to get up the supplies for the soldiers and a large amount of pork that went to feed the families of the soldiers away in the war was raised on the farm of Mr. Burney and found its way to the larder without any requisition from or cost to the Confederate government. He is a big-hearted, kind and sympathetic man, and when he found soldiers needy, or their families in want, he did not wait on formality or red tape, but supplied them. At the close of the war the Confederate states owed him over $100,000, and all the money he had was twenty-five dollars in bills of the Confederacy. The Burney family occupies a high place in the political and civil history of Georgia, and John W. Burney is one of Morgan county's most distinguished citizens.

L. L. CHENEY, an old farmer and much-respected citizen of Morgan county, was born there on March 27, 1820, and was the son of Thomas B. and Lucy (Middlebrooks) Cheney. The parents were natives of Maryland and came to Georgia about 1780. Mr. L. L. Cheney has been a farmer all his life, and was united at an early age with the Baptist church. He has been frequently solicited to run for political offices, but has always declined, preferring the quietude of a farmer's life. Mr. Cheney's father was reared in Wilkes county, and came to Morgan county in 1808, where he lived till his death. He was the son of John Cheney, a native of Virginia, who came to Georgia about 1800, and served in the second war with Great Britain. Mr. Cheney's mother—Lucy Middlebrooks—was a daughter of Isaac Middlebrooks, a native of Virginia, and a settler in Georgia in 1800. Mr. L. L. Cheney was reared in Georgia, and his education was obtained from the meager advantages afforded by the old log school-house. He was married, in 1843, to Elizabeth Spence, daughter of George and Mary (Knight) Spence, and they had born to them five children—two of whom are living—George F. and Francis. The mother was born and grew to womanhood in Georgia, and, with her husband, belongs to the Baptist church. Since 1851, Mr. Cheney has belonged to the masonic order. He has always been a farmer, and a most successful one. He has a fine estate near Rutledge.

JAMES A. FANNIN, farmer, Madison, was born on the old farm, where he now lives, in 1821, and was the son of Jephtha and Catharine (Porter) Fannin. The father was a native of North Carolina, and came to Georgia about 1808, and settled on the land where the son now lives. All was then a dense woods, and the site of the home was cut out of the brush and trees, and in a log cabin, quickly built, the fearless pioneers began their new life. He helped organize the county, and was the first clerk of the superior court. He was one of the first to volunteer in the second war with Great Britain, and an interesting and prized heirloom of the family is the sword the brave soldier wore in the war of 1812. He was in middle life when the war with the Creeks occurred, and was one of the Georgians to go to battle against the Indian foes. The mother of James A. Fannin was the daughter of Oliver and Elizabeth (Watson) Porter. The father was a soldier of the revolutionary war, and after the struggle was ended, came to Georgia and settled in Greene county. They were in the midst of Indians, and their block-house, erected in the woods, was the scene of frequent fights with the red skins. Mr. James Fannin was reared on the farm and obtained his education in the old log school-house. In 1861, he enlisted in Company D, Third Georgia regiment, under Capt. James Reed, then Capt. Andrews and then Capt. James K. Wright. He was out one year, when he returned home, by reason of expiration of enlistment. He then joined the Joe Thompson battery, and was placed with Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, and was in the battles of Bentonville, Soldiers' lane, and many skirmishes. After the war he returned to the old home, where he has since lived. He has been a member of the masonic order since 1850, and lives on the land his father took up in the original purchase, beside many acres which have been added to it by both of them. Mr. Fannin is a well-known and esteemed citizen of Morgan county.

JONAS H. HOLLAND, attorney, Madison, was born Nov. 26, 1843, and is the son of Jonas H. and Eunice (White) Holland. The father was born in Virginia and came to Georgia in 1816, on horseback, and took up a farm and built a home in Jasper county. His marriage was of a romantic type—he being only sixteen years old and his sweetheart a Virginian lass only thirteen. Their youth led to many objections on the part of parents in the "Old Dominion," but they were finally overcome by the assistance of an uncle, who signed his bond to take care of his wife, and a friendly minister, who made them man and wife. Placing his child-wife on a horse, he mounted another, and thus they journeyed to his new home, far away from parents, brother, sisters and friends. His wife died in 1818, and he remained a widower until 1826. Mr. Holland's father was a son of Joseph J. and Elizabeth Ann (Odom) Holland. Joseph was a native of Ireland, and came with his parents to America, when the colonies were subjected to the tyranny of Great Britain. He fought with the patriots, and attained the rank of colonel, and was twice wounded in battle. His parents were cruelly persecuted by the tories, even to the extent of having their homes burned over their heads. A memento of this heroic service to his country is an old flint-lock pistol, carefully preserved, in Mr. Holland's home—a treasure prized above all others by the family. Mr. J. H. Holland's mother was born and grew up in Jones county, and was a faithful member of the Hardshell Baptist church. The son spent the ordinary life of a farmer boy, educating himself by reading, with a few opportunities of schooling. In 1861, he enlisted in the Glover guards and went to Virginia, but was not sworn in on account of his youth; so he returned home in Jasper county, to later join the militia. After the war he farmed until 1869, when he began the study of law, and was soon admitted. He was the first justice of the peace in the Monticello district after the war. In 1869 he married Kate Harris, daughter of Thomas and Martha (Peteet) Harris, and to them have been born five children—two of whom are living—Thomas and Martha E. The mother has always lived in Morgan county, and belongs to the Baptist church, as does her husband. He has been a member of the masonic fraternity since he reached his majority, and is a temperance man by example and teaching, never having drank a drop of liquor in his life. He has frequently canvassed the county in behalf of teetotalism. In 1872-3 he was justice of the peace in Morgan county; and in 1883, as a member of the Baptist church, was appointed a delegate to a meeting in Monterey, Mexico. Besides his extensive law practice, he has always manifested great interest in farming and stock raising, and his efforts were instrumental in securing the first colt show ever held in Georgia, which was held at Madison, Aug. 12, 1888.

WARREN J. IVEY, farmer, Rutledge, was born in 1838, and is the son of Wilkins S. I. and Jane (Herring) Ivey. The father was born in Greene county in 1812, and came to Walton county when eight years old, and remained there until his death. He was judge of the Walton county superior court five years, and was sheriff thirty-six years, holding that position when he died. He was a prominent Mason, and an influential citizen. His father, and the grandfather of W. J. Ivey, was Jeremiah Ivey, who was a native of Virginia, and who came to Georgia about 1800. He built him a home in the thick woods of what is now Morgan county, and, clearing a farm, began life as a pioneer. He was a deacon in the Baptist church for years. Mrs. W. S. I. Ivey was a daughter of David Herring, who was a Virginian by birth and an early resident of Georgia. Mr. Warren J. Ivey was brought up on the farm and attended the common schools. In 1862 he enlisted in Company D, Eleventh Georgia infantry, under Capt. Nunnally, and Col. Tige Anderson, but was sent home on account of severe rheumatism. Upon his recovery, a few months later, he joined Company D, Second cavalry, Capt. William Grant, Col. Cruse, in Gen. Forrest's command. He saw much active service and lots of hard fighting. At Murfreesboro, he was with Forrest when his cavalry captured 1,300 Federal infantry with three small regiments, and his company, dismounted, fought two days again near Murfreesboro. He was in east Tennessee, and had a hard fight at Sevierville, when his company surrendered, and he himself surrendered three times in one day and escaped each time. He was orderly sergeant of his company when it went to Chattanooga, and met Sherman, and had a hot time of it from there to Atlanta. He was in the battle of Perryville, Ky., and was at Salisbury, N. C., at the time of the surrender. After hostilities had ceased he returned to Walton county, Ga. His father gave him 125 acres of woodland, and like his ancestors, he set to work to clear it and build himself a log cabin. In 1867 he married Sallie F. Cheney, daughter of Linton L. and Elizabeth (Spence) Cheney. By this union there are two children: Walter C., and Lillian. The mother was born and reared in Morgan county. Both are members of the Primitive Baptist church. He is a master Mason, and is one of the most successful and best farmers in the county. That he is a man who can get on in life with his neighbors is attested by the fact that he was never interested in a case in court, or never required as a witness.

RANSLEY B. MALLORY, farmer, Madison, was born in district No. 284 in 1827, and was the son of Horace and Anna (Rogers) Mallory. The father was a native of Connecticut, and when a young man, by industrious application, established himself in the peddling and mercantile business. He married and then purchased a farm from his father-in-law and upon this erected a large store and for years conducted a prosperous business. He was elected justice of the peace for many successive terms and discharged the duties satisfactorily to all. The wife was a daughter of Robert and Lucy (Parish) Rogers. They were natives of Virginia and came to Georgia in 1796, with his household goods stored in one of the old block wheel-carts of a century ago. He was one of the pioneers of Morgan county, prominent in the organization of the county and was a large farmer. Mr. R. B. Mallory now lives on a farm about three miles distant from his birthplace, and is proud of the distinction of being a farmer. A deep old well on the farm where he was born was the first one dug in the district, and is as a distinct part of the old farm as the house itself. On Jan. 30, 1849, he married Elizabeth Lester (nee Stovall), daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Arenton) Stovall. They have been made glad by the birth of two children: Augustus H. and Alonzo R. The mother was born in Morgan county and died in 1886. She was a member of the Baptist church and a conscientious Christian woman. In November, 1888, Mr. Mallory was married to Fannie, daughter of Josiah and Nancy W. (Clements) Whitlock. His wife is a member of the Baptist church. For several years Mr. Mallory was bailiff and also served a number of terms as justice of the peace. He has been a member of the board of road commissioners, and was county commissioner for several years. Though handicapped in life's battle by an injury which made him a cripple by depriving him of the use of one arm, Mr. Mallory never complained, but fought it out, and not only has he been successful, but can look back over a life of happiness. He enjoys the esteem and confidence of all who know him.

JAMES M'HUGH, farmer, Rutledge, was born in Morgan county in 1825, and is the son of Charles and Mary (Pritchell) McHugh. His grandfather, George McHugh, was a native of Ireland, and came to America before the revolutionary war and served with the patriots in that conflict. He first settled in Virginia on coming here, then moved to South Carolina, where he remained until his death. Charles, a son of George, was born in South Carolina, came to Georgia in 1815, and settled among the Indians. He was a teacher most of his life, and was employed in the early academies and colleges. He was justice of the peace for over twenty-five years. His wife was the daughter of Joshua Pritchell, one of the early residents of the state. Mr. James McHugh was reared on the home farm and received his schooling in the old-time log cabin and by the aid of the pine knot and fireside. When he was seventeen years of age he left home and went to Stone Mountain and began work for the Georgia railroad, continuing there until about ten years ago, or over thirty-eight years. When he left home all of his possessions were a homespun sack of clothes, which had been spun and woven by his mother, but his industry and energy brought him success, and at the time of the breaking out of the war he was in good financial circumstances. The war wrested from him the larger part of his property, and he had to start over again. He now owns about 1,500 acres of good land, a large part of which is in a good state of cultivation. In 1849 he married Lydia Garner, daughter of Samuel Garner. They have six children, four of whom are living: Baily, Benjamin, Edward and Mary. The mother was born and reared in Morgan county. She is a member of the Methodist church, and Mr. McHugh has been a Mason for twenty-five years.

MADISON A. MURROW, merchant, Rutledge, Morgan Co., was born in 1857. His paternal great-grandfather, John Murrow, was a native of Ireland, emigrated to this country before the revolutionary war, and settled in South Carolina, where he did gallant service under that great general and true-hearted patriot, Francis Marion, in the swamps of South Carolina. After the war he married and settled in Orangeburg district in that state, where four children were born to him. The eldest of these was John, the grandfather of Mr. Murrow, who was born Feb. 25, 1787, and at the age of twenty-five was received into the South Carolina Methodist conference and remained in the itineracy a number of years, when his family becoming too numerous for the necessary frequent removals he was located. Subsequently he removed with his family to Louisville, Jefferson Co., Ga., where in 1840 himself and wife united with the Baptist church. Removals to other counties followed, until himself and wife died in Bryan county in 1868, within eight days of each other, he eighty-one and she seventy-five years of age. He was a man of sterling character, of great force, a fervid preacher, of pure and spotless life. In 1820 he married Miss Mary Amelia, born Sept. 29, 1793, daughter of Jonathan and Mary Amelia Dorothea (Haunbaun) Badger. Her father had been a prosperous and rich merchant of Charleston, S. C., was unusually well-educated and highly accomplished, of sweet and sunny disposition and a great favorite in society. All their sons, except one, became preachers. Mr. Murrow's father was the second child and eldest son of this most excellent couple, and was born in Effingham county, Ga., Oct. 12, 1823. He was a farmer and Baptist minister. He commenced preaching when only sixteen years of age, was ordained when eighteen, and was graduated from Mercer university, Penfield, Ga. After he married he located in Burke county, where he hewed a home out of the woods and started in on a happy and successful life. He was one of the pioneer teachers in the old log school houses, a soldier in the late civil war, a high degree member of the masonic fraternity and a zealous, influential and effective working minister of the Baptist church. Mr. Murrow's mother was a daughter of William Wallace, who was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. So it will be seen that in Mr. Murrow's veins flows some of the best blood of our revolutionary history. Mr. M. A. Murrow was reared in Burke county, Ga., and received a good common school education, finished at Bunyan academy and then he engaged in telegraphy. He held a position at West Point, then Union Point, and was finally located in Rutledge, Oct. 27, 1877, and has held that position since. In 1886 he engaged in general merchandising and conducts one of the largest stores in the town. In 1880 he married Miss Georgia, daughter of Benjamin and Mary (Willard) Vinning, the father meeting his death in the late war. This union has been blessed by six children: Maude, Mabel, Vaughn, Belle and Bessie (twins) and Frederick. The mother was born in Tennessee, but grew to womanhood in Morgan county, Ga. Husband and wife are members of the Baptist church. Mr. Murrow, though young in years, is old in business, and enjoys a high reputation for his discernment and judgment and is frequently called to give his advice to those with much more experience and age. He is a man of strict integrity, whose word is his bond, and of a character amiable in intercourse and liberal in charity.

JOHN T. NEWTON, farmer, Pennington, Morgan Co., Ga., was born in the house in which he now lives Feb. 28, 1854, and is the son of William H. and Mirian Keturah (Walker) Newton. The father was born in Clarke county July 11, 1823, and was graduated from the old Franklin college at Athens, and from the medical college of Georgia, Augusta. He began the practice of medicine at Madison, but was obliged to give it up on account of his health and commenced farming, which he followed until he moved to Athens to educate his children. He was a strict Presbyterian and his grandfather, John Newton, a native of England, preached the first Presbyterian sermon in Georgia and organized and was the president of the first presbytery of the state. William Newton died May 17, 1893, at Maysville. His father, grandfather of Mr. John T. Newton, was Elizur Newton, who married Eliza Collier. Elizur Newton was born in Oglethorpe county, Feb. 11, 1796. His father died when he was a boy and he helped support his widowed mother and the family on the farm until nearly of age, when he went to Athens and engaged in the mercantile business. His store was the second one established in the town and he owned the first buggy ever brought to Athens. He remained there in business until well up in years, when he retired. When the clouds of war enveloped the country he was a staunch supporter of the south, and when the conflict began was a firm advocate of the Confederacy, by word and with money. He was too old to enlist in the ranks, but his encouragement in the way of help in raising troops was great. To his friends he said: "It is the duty of every man to help the government under which he lives, and being too old to go, I will support the cause with my money," and this he did liberally. He was very successful in business and at one time owned nearly half of Athens. To him and the Thomas family are credited the making of Athens. An incident illustrating the firm character of Elizur Newton happened during the Sherman raid. A northern soldier went to the Newton home and broke into the stable in search of horses. Mr. Newton took down his shot gun, and though quite aged, followed the intruder. The latter opened fire on the owner of the property, but it did not deter him from pursuing and driving the soldier from the premises. Elizur Newton was graduated from old Franklin college, Athens, with third honor. For many years he was a trustee of the college and was a vice-president of the board of trustees at the time of his death. He was justice of the inferior court for many years, and president of the great temperance movement that went through Georgia, being the first reform crusade of the kind ever had in the state. He was a charter member of the first Presbyterian church of Athens, built in 1821, and was an officer in the church up to the time of his death. His wife was born in Oglethorpe county in 1821. Mr. John T. Newton went to Athens with his father and entered the university of Georgia in 1871, but on account of his health had to give up his course in 1873. He then took charge of the farm, which he has since managed. In 1881 he was married to Christiana H., daughter of Floyd and Emily (Henderson) Childs. The father was born in 1826, and was a prosperous farmer. To this union have been born five children: William, Floyd, Anna, Walker, and Kitty. The mother was reared in Monroe county. Mr. Newton and wife are members of the Baptist church. He has been a member of the county board of education for about seven years, and is one of Morgan county's best citizens.

EDMUND L. NEWTON, farmer, Pennington, was born Sept. 22, 1847, in Clarke county, Ga. He is the great-grandson of John and Catharine (Lawrence) Newton, natives of England; grandson of Elizur and Eliza (Collier) Newton, and the son of Dr. William H. and Mirian Keturah (Walker) Newton, sketches of whose lives appear in the memoir of Mr. J. T. Newton. Mr. Edmund L. Newton received a common school education and entered the university of Georgia, Athens, in 1866. He completed his course in 1867 and returned home to engage at work on the farm. In 1868 he married Julia, daughter of William H. and Mary A. (Robinson) Bailey. Her grandfather, Azariah Bailey, was a general in the Indian war and was killed by the enemy. The union has been blessed with three children: Mamie, wife of J. M. Nowell; Lipscomb, and Hoyt L. The mother was born in Jasper but reared in Newton county. The family belong to the Presbyterian church, the faith of their ancestors for many generations back. Mr. Newton has been justice of the peace for a dozen years, and has filled many other positions of honor and trust. He takes much interest in the cause of education, and was a member of the school board for five years, and has served four years on the jury commission. He is a member of the Royal Arcanum, the social and fraternal order. Mr. Newton has 260 acres of land that was of the tract his father originally opened up, besides a body of 1,000 acres connected with it, and other pieces of good farming lands. He is a progressive, spirited citizen, and has much pride in the development of his county and state. His farming property is well cultivated and shows the systematic attention given it. When but a lad of thirteen years Mr. Newton left books and home and tried to get into the ranks of the Confederacy, but his youth was against him, and spite of his protests he was turned aside. He renewed his efforts several times but without success, and it was not until he had just turned sixteen, and it was necessary to fill up the thinned out ranks with boys, that his hopes were realized and he was accepted. This was in 1864, and he enlisted under Capt. C. R. Hanleiter, and served until the surrender, taking part in every engagement of his company, and being an active participant in the battles of Averasboro and Bentonville.

L. T. PENICK, merchant, Madison, was born in Morgan county, in 1838, and was the son of Joseph and Martha (Coleman) Penick. The father, son of William Penick, was born in Virginia in 1794, and came to Georgia when a young man. He was a farmer all his life, and when in Virginia was employed as an overseer and worked nine years as such, receiving $125 per year. Out of this sum he saved $100 annually, and with this money he came to Georgia and bought land in Morgan county, and to his homestead he added land as long as he lived. He was a justice of the inferior court and a member of the state legislature and senate, and was a leader of the whigs in his county. The parents of his mother were pioneers of Morgan county. Mr. L. T. Penick grew up on the farm and was educated at Emory college. In 1856 he went to Texas, and purchasing a farm lived there until the clash of arms of the civil war was heard, when he returned home and enlisted with the Panola guards, the second company organized in Morgan county. It was under Capt. D. B. G. Knight and belonged to T. R. Cobb's legion. He was in various battles and served throughout the war, being wounded at Richmond. In 1859 he was married to Mary E., daughter of Jesse and Mary (Fears) Mathews. This happy union has been favored with eight children: Jesse M., Lucius M., Jefferson Clay, James H., Lazarus T., Mary E., Edgar C. and Mattie E. The mother was born in Greene county, and is a strict member of the Baptist church. Mr. Penick began his mercantile career in Madison, Morgan Co., in October, 18—, with T. J. Hilssman, and the partnership continued until 1878, when Mr. Penick purchased his partner's interest, and has since conducted the business with gratifying success. His well-known interest in public affairs, and the pride and interest he takes in the growth and prosperity of his county has caused the people to keep him on the town board for ten years, and to elect him to the county board of education and the board of commissioners for several terms. He is now jury commissioner, and one of Madison's best and most public-spirited citizens. Mr. Penick is a member of the Royal Arcanum.

W. B. R. PENNINGTON, farmer, Pennington, Morgan Co., was born in the same county in 1828, and is the son of Samuel and Eliza (Shy) Pennington. The father was born in Warren county, Ga., in 1800, and bought land in Morgan county after his marriage. He served as justice of the peace in the early days of Morgan county, was prominent in the masonic lodge, and for years was a steward in the Methodist church south. He was a son of Thomas and Leitha (Bell) Pennington. The grandfather was a native of Virginia, and came to Georgia and settled in Warren county for awhile, whence he removed to Jasper county, Ga., where he resided until death claimed him. He was an influential citizen and acquired much wealth. The mother of W. B. R. Pennington was a daughter of Samuel and Jane (Patterson) Shy, who were natives of Virginia, and came to what is now Hancock county, Ga., a short time after the revolutionary war. He was a prosperous man and much respected by his friends. W. B. R. Pennington spent his early years like the usual farmer boy improving what few chances were given him for learning and frequently resorted to the pine knot at night. In 1845 he married Nancy J., daughter of John and Sarah (Betts) Maddox. They were early settlers in Georgia, first locating in Hancock and then going to Jasper county, where Mrs. Pennington was born and grew to womanhood. She is the mother of eleven living children, viz: Thaddeus, J. C., Eliza, J. L., N. F., W. B. R., Jr., Nancy, Lucy, Elizabeth, Kate and Minnie. Husband and wife are members of the Methodist church, and Mr. Pennington was made a Mason long before the war. He has been justice of the peace for ten years, and was commissioner of the roads in his district many years. For nearly a third of a century he has belonged to his church, and for thirty years he has officiated as steward. Immediately after marriage he commenced farming for himself on land in Jasper county, and he remained there until 1852, when he came to Morgan county and purchased an estate, and here he has educated a large family and lived a life of prosperity and contentment. His domestic relations are a loving example for every family—prayer morning and night—and the spirit of affection and awe of God going hand in hand throughout the household. Mrs. Pennington died Aug. 8, 1893. The family home is near Pennington, a town named in honor of the family, and the farm is well cultivated and stocked.

REID. The Reid family has long occupied a leading place in business and social circles in Morgan county, and among its prominent representatives of to-day is Col. James P. Reid, Sr., a farmer and much-honored citizen of Buckhead. He is the son of Edmund and Elizabeth (Terrell) Reid, and was born Oct. 25, 1830, in Putnam county. Edmund Reid was a native of Hancock county, being born in 1802, and in 1856 served that county in the state legislature. He was the son of Alexander and Elizabeth (Brewer) Reid. The mother of Col. Reid was the daughter of Richmond and Kate (Butler) Terrell. The parents were natives of Virginia. Col. Reid was given a good education, and his early training was received at the old Phoenix school house in Putnam county. He was given military instruction and was graduated from the Western institute in Kentucky, a military school in which Gen. B. R. Johnson and Gen. F. P. Blair were then professors. In 1851 he married Virginia, daughter of Merritt and Olivia (Bell) Warren, natives of Virginia and Georgia respectively. Col. Reid and wife have been blessed with three children: James P., Jr., Merritt W. and George. The mother was a native of Georgia, a sincere Christian belonging to the Methodist church, and died in 1887. In 1861 Col. Reid organized Company B, Third regiment, and started his war career as captain, but before the command reached Norfolk he was made lieutenant-colonel. He served seventeen months and then returned home, and later joined the state militia. In 1859 he was elected state senator and served until the breaking out of the war. He has been road and county commissioner, and in 1876 was elected to the legislature from Morgan county. Col. Reid was strongly opposed to the states seceding from the Union, but when that step was taken he stood shoulder to shoulder with his countrymen, and raised the first company to go into the Confederate army from Morgan county. Col. Reid is a progressive man and enjoys the reputation of always being ready to help any legitimate enterprise whose success will benefit the people of his county.

H. R. RICKERSON, farmer, Rutledge, was born in Hancock county, Ga., Aug. 16, 1840, and is a son of William and Elmira (Rogers) Rickerson. William Rickerson was born in Hancock county in 1812, and grew to manhood in Georgia, serving as a soldier in the Creek war of 1836. He was an officer in the state militia, was influential and highly respected. He is the son of Abraham and Dicey (Ogletree) Rickerson. Abraham, the grandfather of H. R. Rickerson, was one of Hancock county's pioneer citizens, and was a hard-shell Baptist when the only church was forty miles up the Savannah river. The distance to this church was so great that all kinds of transportation and vehicles had to be brought into use to attend divine service. Abraham Rickerson was a brave soldier in the revolutionary war, and immediately following it located in Georgia. The mother of H. R. Rickerson was a daughter of Rev. Henry and Caroline (Jackson) Rogers. Her father was a native of Virginia and came to Georgia to preach the gospel about 1809, was a minister of the Methodist church about forty-five years, and lived to the great age of eighty-seven years. Mr. H. R. Rickerson was reared on the farm and received his education from the schools of the period, his principal instructor being William Mattox, who is still living. In 1861, in March, he enlisted in Company G, Twelfth Georgia regiment, under Capt. William C. Davis, and Col. Connor. He saw very active service, and was in the battles of Malvern hill, Bull run, Slaughter mountain, Gettysburg, Martinsburg, Md., and Winchester. Six miles from Fishers' hill—north—they had a hot engagement, and Mr. Rickerson was shot, the ball going through his body. He was carried to Staunton, Va., then to Richmond, and thence to Petersburg, Va., where he recovered. He joined his company again and went to Maryland. He was wounded at Sharpsburg—the second time—and then at the Inn, in Washington, D. C. In these instances the balls passed through him and lodged in the skin in the opposite side of the body, where they are yet to be seen. He had his big toe shot off while on picket duty, and was transferred to the cavalry, Company D, Second Georgia, commanded by Gen. Lawton, and at Hampton's crossing was shot in the elbow. He was wounded six times and carries in his body four of the bullets. He attained the rank of corporal, and experienced capture at Harper's Ferry, but was exchanged in six months. He was present at the general surrender, and returned to Augusta, Ga. He afterward went to New York, where he was employed by the Hubble, Hall & Goaly Fur company, and went to Dakota, and built forts for them. He was a carpenter by trade, and at this work was engaged for twelve years in the northwest. Then he went to St. Louis and worked in a foundry four years, when he returned to Georgia. In 1874 he married Mary Brossell, daughter of Judge J. C. and Emma (Carender) Brossell. She died in 1886, and in 1888 he married Mary, daughter of Heziah (Stoddard) Tomlin. By his second marriage he has had two children—Elmo and Orlander. The mother was born and reared in Georgia, and with her husband belongs to the Methodist church. Mr. Rickerson was sheriff of Coweta county for two years, and is one of Morgan county's best citizens.

JUDGE A. M. SPEER. For many years prominent in the political history, and an eminent member of the judiciary of Georgia has been Judge A. M. Speer, of Madison. He was born in 1820, and his parents were Alexander and Elizabeth (Middleton) Speer. The father was born in Abbeville district, S. C., and, being possessed of a liberal education, arose to great prominence in the palmetto state. He was a leader in the state and the legislature during the eventful years from 1830 to 1833, and was recognized to be the full peer of James M. Hamilton and the great McDuffie. He was in the legislature at the time the nullification act was passed, and took a great part in the fight. He was always a Union man, but was elected in the district in which John C. Calhoun lived and was never defeated for any office to which he aspired. He was a minister of the M. E. church, and took much interest in religious affairs. He removed to Georgia in 1833, and was editor of the "La Grange Reporter" for some time. In Georgia, as in his native state, he was active in politics, and was distinguished for his oratory and his high-minded character. He possessed a depth of wisdom and breadth of thought that placed him in comparison with Daniel Webster or Bishop Elliott. His demise was a great loss to the state, as well as to a large circle of friends. Judge A. M. Speer spent his childhood days in South Carolina, and his first school was the old log cabin so distinctive an educational institution of the time. When his father was elected comptroller of the state of South Carolina, he went to the schools of Columbia, but returned in four years to the farm, and was again a scholar in the country classes. In 1833 he came with his father to Georgia and attended school at Culloden, a place that has furnished some of the leading men of Georgia. In 1835 his father moved to Savannah, and he there was under the instruction of George Smith, a private teacher. In 1836 he entered the university of Georgia, from which he was graduated in 1839. He then went to Columbus and began the study of law with Jones & Burnett, and in one year was admitted to the bar. He commenced the practice of his profession at Forsyth, where he remained several years, going thence to Macon. In 1853-6 he made his debut in public life as clerk of the house of representatives for that period. When the war between the states was begun he was among the first to offer his services to the south, and April 20, 1861, he enlisted in what was called the Macon volunteers, an organization which was in the very heart of the war. In 1862 he was elected as major of the Forty-sixth Georgia regiment, and was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. In 1863 he was elected to the state senate, and retired from the service. In 1865 he was appointed judge of the Flint circuit court, and served until 1868, when he was removed by Gov. Bullock, and returned to his practice. When the democratic party again resumed the management of affairs of state, he was re-elected to the judgeship; meanwhile, however, he had been elected to the legislature from Spalding county and served two years there, afterward taking his place on the bench. In 1879 he was elected to the supreme court bench and served in that honorable position for two years, when his health failed, and he had to resign and return to his practice. In 1841 Judge Speer was married to Mary, daughter of Rev. Thomas Battles, and to this union four children were born—Eugene, Isabella J., Dr. Arthur, and Mary L. The wife was born in Warren county in 1822, and died in 1878. She was a noble Christian wife and mother, and an active member of the M. E. church. In 1880 Judge Speer married Mrs. Celesta B. Sanders, daughter of John A. Brockton. Mr. and Mrs. Speer are members of the Methodist church, and he was made a Mason in 1843, and has obtained the royal arch degree.

AUGUSTUS STUDDARD, farmer, Rutledge, was born April 26, 1824, and is the son of James and Anna (Lemmond) Studdard. The father was born in South Carolina, and came to Georgia in 1807, and settled on the farm where the son now lives. The grandfather of Mr. Studdard, on his father's side, was John Studdard, a Virginian, and his mother was a daughter of Joseph Lemmond, who was a native of South Carolina, and an early resident of Georgia. When the father of Mr. Augustus Studdard came to Georgia, he settled within twenty-two feet of the line dividing his household from the Indians, and lived within one-fourth mile of the Brantleys, who were all murdered by the Indians while at dinner. This spot is about three-fourths of a mile from the house Mr. Studdard now lives in. His father died when he was in his early teens, and he was obliged to help his mother around the home, which greatly interfered with his schooling. He was not discouraged by this, but applied himself at night and odd hours, and by thorough reading secured a good education. His boyhood days were full of hardships and privations, but his indomitable energy conquered them all. When the family estate was settled up, he received $65, and this small sum was the foundation of his present large estate. He started out by raising a crop of cotton, and then he purchased the finest pair of Sunday shoes he ever owned. From then on Mr. Studdard's career has been a continued success. In 1849 he married Judith Malcom, daughter of Ganaway and Rebecca (Wadley) Malcom. They have two living children—James F. and Ophelia. The mother was born and reared in Morgan county. Mr. Studdard, after his advent into business life, by his cotton crop, was an overseer for two years, then he purchased a farm, which he has since managed and improved, with remarkable success, and to-day he is one of the wealthiest men in the county. In 1862 he enlisted in the state militia, and served three years and two months under Capt. Sehe Saffold. He is a popular citizen, and has twice been called upon to serve his county in the legislature. He is prominent in county and state politics, and is a staunch democrat.

BENJAMIN F. THOMAS. One of the best farmers of Morgan county is Benjamin F. Thomas, of Fair Play. He was born on the old farm, which was cleared by his father, Dec. 17, 1858, and is the son of William R. and Susan (Allen) Thomas. The father, the eldest son of Jesse and Mary (Vason) Thomas, was born in Georgia in 1808, and was in the Indian war of 1836. He was a man of limited education and accumulated considerable money as a teamster, which he invested in land, and became the owner of a small estate. He was a sincere member of the Baptist church, and a man whose integrity was never questioned by word or act. He had the confidence of everybody and his life was one of peace and good will with his fellow-man. The paternal grandfather of Mr. B. F. Thomas, Jesse Thomas, was born in Virginia, was a revolutionary soldier, served in the war of 1812 after coming by wagon to the sparsely settled country of Georgia. The mother of Mr. Thomas was a daughter of Thomas V. Allen, who married Miss Lucinda Hardeman. Mr. Allen was an early settler and leading man of his time in Georgia. He served in the war of 1812, and for many years was tax collector of his county. This was when the capital was at Milledgeville and Mr. Allen had to carry the money to the state treasurer by horseback, tied up in sacks. Mr. B. F. Thomas was brought up and now resides on the farm, which in early days his father purchased and cleared up, and received his educational training in the public schools. In 1885 he married Josie, daughter of John and Josie (Woods) Dickinson and they have four children living: Estelle, Mattie, Lottie and Mary. The deceased son was named Turnell. The mother was born in Walton county, Dec. 25, 1863. Mr. Thomas is one of the most progressive and scientific farmers in the county, and his lands and improvements demonstrate the thoroughness of his cultivation, and the application of his mind to the pursuit of knowledge relating to agriculture.

P. G. WALKER. The Georgia branch of the Walker family descends from George Walker, who with a brother, Thomas, and sister Mary, wife of John Dallas, came from Ireland to America in 1750. George Walker settled on Brier creek in what is now Burke county, and in 1756 married Mary Dahart. He was a blacksmith by trade and brought over his tools which, with his bed-clothes, constituted his possessions on his arrival in Georgia. He soon relinquished his trade and purchasing a farm followed farming. He was a fine Christian gentleman, and during the revolutionary war he refused to take sides, having conscientious scruples against rebelling against England. George Walker and Mary Dahart had twelve children: John, the eldest, was born in 1760, and when his father died took his place at the head of the family and helped raise it. He was married to Frances Byne, a sister of Gen. William Byne, and in 1810 moved to Morgan county and cleared up a farm. Edmund Walker, a son, was born in Burke county in 1796, and received his education in the common schools, when the terms of study were between "laying-by" time and "fodder-pulling." He was a captain in the state militia and was in the war of 1812. He was a member of the Baptist church and for years was a deacon. When he was married in 1817, he went eight miles northeast of Madison to his wife's home on horseback, and after the wedding he brought his bride home to the log cabin which he had erected on the place where his son now lives. He was a farmer all his life and amassed a large estate. His wife was the daughter of Peter and Lucy Chilton (Waddy) Gautier. The father was born in Bristol, England, in 1771, and his parents were natives of Normandy, France—Huguenots who had fled to Great Britain for safety. Peter Gautier came to America about 1796 and first settled in Maryland, where he married Lucy Waddy, born Oct. 25, 1778, in Somerset, Md. She was the daughter of Capt. William Waddy, who was an officer in the revolutionary war. Mr. P. G. Walker was reared on the old farm, and attended school at Madison and when through there, was given his choice of a course in college, or the management of the farm. He selected the latter. In 1881 he married Bessie Robertson, daughter of Dennis M. and Susan J. (Lumsden) Robertson. Mr. Robertson was a native of Rahway, N. J. He was born in 1812 and came to Georgia about 1836. He was a carriage-maker and his work was the first executed in Madison. To Mr. and Mrs. Walker have been born four children: Mineola, Lula, Edmund and Dennis. The mother was born in Madison. Himself and wife are members of the Baptist church and he is a deacon. Mr. Walker was justice of the peace and notary public for two years, and county commissioner for five years. He owns about 1,000 acres of land he received from his father, and to this he has added about as much more. It is one of the best improved farms in the county.

PETER W. WALTON, a prominent citizen of Madison, was born in Morgan county, Oct. 9, 1840, and is the son of Peter W. and Mary F. (Fitzpatrick) Walton. The father was born in Virginia in 1792 and came to Georgia with his parents in 1806. He was a farmer all his life, and worked for twelve and a half cents per day, and with money thus saved in his boyhood he attended school. When the United States became involved in war with Great Britain the second time he was among the first to go to the front, and served in defense of his country through the whole struggle. For his service he received a land warrant and settled near Madison. The mother of Mr. Peter Walton was born and always lived in Georgia, and was the daughter of Perkins Fitzpatrick, one of the early residents of this state, and a soldier in the revolutionary war. Mr. Walton received his early teachings in the schools of Madison and then spent a year at Marietta. He had just entered a college in Virginia when the civil war broke out, and left school in 1861 to enlist in Company D, Third Georgia regiment, under Capt. James Reed, Col. Robert Wright. He saw hard fighting from the first, and was at Sawyer's Lane, Elizabeth City; then Norfolk, at Seven Pines, Malvern Hill and Drury's Bluff, where he was taken sick and discharged and sent home. As soon as able he joined the state militia and served till the surrender. While out on vidette duty at Atlanta on one occasion two companions with him were killed, and he by chance escaped. While the three were hiding in the shade of a tree, he stooped down to look for the enemy just at the time a shell was fired which killed his comrades and mutilated the tree on range of his breast when standing. He was at Griswoldville battle, and just ahead of Sherman a few days in the latter's march through the state. After the war he returned to Madison and began farming. In 1875 he married Susan, daughter of Edmund and Susan (Terrell) Reed. This union has been followed by six children: Fannie, Peter, Bessie, Reed, Susan and Richard. The mother was born in Eatonton. Mr. Walton and wife and three oldest children are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Walton takes much interest in educational matters, and is a member of the board of education. He has been county commissioner for eight years and is prominent in county politics. He lives on an excellent farm near Madison.

E. H. WATKINS. One of Georgia's most enterprising and wide-awake farmers is E. H. Watkins, of Rutledge. He was born in South Carolina in 1836, and is the son of Bailiss and Frances (Martin) Watkins, both natives of South Carolina. The father was born in 1796, and was one of the best farmers in Morgan county during his day. He was a son of David and Temperance (Camp) Watkins. David Watkins was born in Virginia and lived on Three and Twenty creek in South Carolina all his life, to which place he was taken when a child. His father, great-grandfather of Mr. E. H. Watkins, was a native of Wales and a revolutionary soldier. Mrs. Bailiss Watkins was the daughter of Thomas and Hester (Duckworth) Martin. They were natives of North Carolina, and soon after their marriage left for South Carolina to take up a new home on Beaverdam creek, Anderson county. Mr. E. H. Watkins was given a good education and worked on the farm in South Carolina until he reached manhood. In 1859 he married Martha Smith, a daughter of William and Maria (Matteson) Smith. The father was a native of South Carolina and the mother was born in Anderson county, S. C., a daughter of James Matteson, a revolutionary hero. Mr. and Mrs. Watkins have three children—Bailiss, Newton and Myra. In 1861 Mr. Watkins enlisted in Company G, Twenty-third South Carolina regiment, under Capt. Sam Watkins, afterward lieutenant-colonel under Col. Abner, of Edgefield. Mr. Watkins enlisted as a private, but when the company was reorganized in May, 1862, he was elected third lieutenant, and was soon promoted to first lieutenant, and as such was in command of the company more than the captain. He was in many hard-fought battles: Second Manassas, Kingston, Jackson, Miss., and at Frederick City, Md., where he was wounded and taken prisoner, and held until the close of the war. Mr. Watkins owns a fine farm near Rutledge, which he purchased in 1883, and then brought his family from South Carolina to make their home there. As a citizen and neighbor Mr. Watkins is ever frank and liberal and strong in his attachments, enjoying the highest esteem of his friends and neighbors.

JOSIAH WHITLOCK, farmer, and one of Morgan county's oldest and most respected citizens, is the son of Josiah and Nancy W. (Clements) Whitlock. The father was born in Virginia two years before the Declaration of Independence was signed and came to Georgia with his father in 1796. He received the advantages of the best schooling of that period, and in 1818 was married to the daughter of an old Virginia friend. Of eight children born to this union Mr. Josiah Whitlock is the only son of living. Josiah Whitlock was a sergeant in the war of 1812, and in appreciation of his services was given a land warrant for land in northeast Georgia. After his return from the war he visited his cousin, Beasley Whitlock, who lived in Morgan county, and there he met and married his wife. Following his wedding he was overseer for a few years, then a farmer for himself. The wife was a daughter of Charles and Mary (Main) Clements, natives of Virginia, who came to Georgia before 1800 and cleared up a farm from the woods. The paternal grandparents of Mr. Josiah Whitlock were Josiah and Mary (Clayburn) Whitlock, both Virginians, who came to Georgia about 1796 and settled in Tulliver county. Here they passed the hard life of the pioneer and reared a family of children. The subject of this memoir was reared on the farm and received a common school education. He taught school during the war, and after his father's death took charge of the estate, and he still holds the 400 acres of land which his parents originally took up. Mr. Whitlock has been bailiff, and justice of the peace for three terms. In 1861 he joined Company D, Third Georgia regiment, under Capt. Charles Andrew, and was out eighteen months. Mr. Whitlock is well known throughout the county, and enjoys the esteem and good will of all. He has been very successful in business and is the owner of a fine farm near Fair Play, and other valuable property.

CAPT. JAMES K. WRIGHT, retired merchant, Madison, was born in Greene county, Ga., in 1828, and is the son of Joseph and Mary (Stark) Wright. The father was born in Greene county in 1792 and grew up on his farm, dying April 4, 1836, in the prime of life. He was a member of the Baptist church, a justice of the peace for many years and was a highly esteemed citizen. He came from revolutionary stock, his father being Thomas Wright, a brave soldier and native Virginian. His wife, the mother of Capt. Wright, was the daughter of John Stark, who served so meritoriously in the war for independence, and when the freedom of the colonies was established was so unfortunate as to kill a man in a quarrel, and, disappearing, was never again heard of. She was married to Joseph Wright, Dec. 11, 1817, and gave birth to nine children, of whom only Capt. Wright is now living. Capt. Wright received his learning in the "old field" schools, to which he walked four miles, between crop times. He went to California a few years before the war, and when the struggle was on, was one of 365 men to leave the Pacific state to come and enter the Confederate army. He enlisted in the Third Georgia regiment as a private, was elected lieutenant, and afterward was promoted to the captaincy for brilliant services on the field, and in this rank he served until the surrender. He possesses a brilliant war record, and was never wounded, captured or in the hospital. He was in active engagement with his company at South Mills, Roanoke, Seven Pines, Malvern Hill, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Sharpsburg, Fredericksburg, and all the fights around Richmond. When hostilities were over he returned home penniless and commenced life again, with success from the start. In 1877 he married Kate E. Baldwin, daughter of Howell and Harriet (Boswell) Baldwin, both natives of Georgia. Mr. Baldwin was one of "Joe Brown's pets" during the war, and was a member of the state senate during the conflict. Mr. and Mrs. Capt. Wright have no children, two born to them having died. She is a member of the Methodist church, and takes a prominent part in church and charity affairs. For a number of years Capt. Wright was a leading merchant of Madison and succeeded in his business as he did in earning the respect and esteem of the people of this charming town.

JOHN T. WOOD, farmer, Madison, Morgan Co., Ga., was born in 1841, on the farm where he now lives. He was the son of John C. and Eliza S. (Blount) Wood. The father was born in North Carolina in 1793 and came to Georgia when twenty-five years old. He started for the war of 1812, but before he reached Baltimore it was over. He was a justice of the peace in Morgan county for many years, and a farmer all his life. His wife was born in Putnam county in 1811 and was the daughter of Edmund Blount. She was a devoted member of the Baptist church and a noble Christian woman. Mr. John T. Wood was reared on the farm and given a good education. In 1861 he enlisted in the state militia under Col. Cowart, and later was sent to Virginia. In February, 1864, he joined Cobb's legion of cavalry and remained there until the war closed, serving as a good and loyal soldier and brave man. In 1868 he married Rebecca L., daughter of Benjamin and Eliza (Brown) Harris. This union has been cheered by ten children, nine of whom are living: Edward H., William B., John H., Benjamin, Olander S., Anna M., Ruby L., Thomas M. and Oliver M. The deceased child was Birdie. Mr. Wood and wife are members of the Baptist church. He has been a notary public in his district for twenty years. He joined the masonic lodge when he was twenty-five years old and is high in its degrees. Mr. Wood is a popular and respected citizen, and lives with his interesting family on his fine farm near Madison.

MURRAY COUNTY.

WALTON W. ANDERSON, M. D. Dr. Anderson is a resident of Spring Place, Murray Co., Ga., where he was born in 1853, and has always resided. He was educated in the schools of Murray county, and after completing his literary studies engaged for a brief period in agricultural pursuits. In 1876 he began the study of medicine under the preceptorship of his father, the late Dr. William Anderson, at Spring Place. In 1877 he entered the Atlanta Medical college, and there took a full course in medicine and surgery during the years 1877-79 and was graduated in the spring of 1880. He commenced the practice of his profession at Spring Place, and has acquired a good general practice in the various branches of medicine and surgery, and enjoys an excellent reputation both as a reliable physician and an upright citizen. In 1875 Dr. Anderson was married to Miss Margaret Woods, daughter of Robert Woods, an old resident of Murray county. As the fruit of this union four children have been born to them: Claudius, Remma, Emma W. and Malcomb. The father of Dr. Anderson was born in Monroe county, Tenn. He married Miss Manda Gray and reared a family of eight children: Mary J., wife of William Wilkins, now deceased; W. L. Anderson, at present residing in Texas; Andrew J., who died in that state; Mrs. Alice Woods, of Murray county; Mrs. Fannie Dixon, who died in that county in 1893; C. M. Anderson and Walton W. The paternal grandfather of Dr. Anderson was Stephen Anderson, a resident of the state of Tennessee, where he died, in Monroe county, in 1885, at the advanced age of ninety years. The father of Dr. Anderson was a captain in the Confederate service during the late war, and during his residence in Murray county he was frequently entrusted with the management of county affairs. For several years he was treasurer of Murray county, and during the period of his residence there he practiced his profession with marked success. He was a prominent citizen and a practical man of affairs, in whom the public reposed full confidence. His death occurred at Spring Place in 1887. The mother of Dr. Anderson died in 1884. The doctor is a member of the masonic fraternity, Spring Place lodge No. 145.

SAMUEL M'DONALD CARTER is the owner of the largest and most valuable plantation in Murray county, commonly known as "Carter's Quarter," on which he has resided nearly half a century. He was born in Baldwin county, near Milledgeville, in 1826. His family and ancestors have been prominent in the public affairs of Georgia during several generations, and have borne an honorable and distinguished part in the history of this state, while contributing largely to its social and industrial progress. His paternal grandfather, Maj. Carter, served in the patriot army during the war of the revolution and was killed in the battle of Augusta, toward the close of that prolonged struggle for human rights and independence. His father, Farish Carter, was born in South Carolina, but was reared in Georgia and settled in Baldwin county about 1809, where he resided until his death in 1861. Farish Carter was an active business man, and an extensive and successful planter. Early in life by his zeal, industry and good management, he accumulated a large fortune, and his influence in political and financial affairs was felt throughout the state. Cartersville, the prosperous county seat of Bartow county, received its name in his honor. He married Miss Eliza McDonald, sister of Hon. Charles James McDonald, a distinguished citizen of Georgia, an associate justice of the supreme court and governor of the state from 1839 to 1843. The issue of this marriage was five children: Samuel McD., Mary, who married Jonathan Davis, of South Carolina; Catharine, wife of Dr. John H. Furman, of that state; Benjamin, who died while representing Murray county in the general assembly, and James. The mother of Col. Carter died in Baldwin county in 1865. He was educated in that county and at Oglethorpe college, from which institution he was graduated about 1846. In 1850 he settled in Murray county upon his plantation, where he has since resided, an esteemed, respected and influential citizen. During the war, from 1861 to 1865, he supported the cause of the Confederacy. In 1850 he married Miss Emily Colquitt, daughter of Senator Walter T. Colquitt, and sister of the late Senator Alfred H. Colquitt. They reared five children: Farish, who died while a student at Norwood school in Virginia; Colquitt, at present clerk of the United States district court for the northern district of Georgia, residing at Atlanta; Mary, now deceased, who became the wife of Benjamin H. Hill, of the Atlanta bar; Kate C., who married Prof. Robert Emmett Mitchell, of Atlanta, and Benjamin F., married Lillian Whitman, of Dalton, Ga., at present residing in Atlanta, and is in the service of the agricultural department. The wife of Col. Carter died in Murray county in 1867. He was again married to Miss Sallie Jeter, daughter of William Lamar Jeter, formerly of Columbus, Ga. This lady was a grand-niece of Mirabeau B. Lamar and ex-Senator Walter T. Colquitt. By this marriage he had five children: Emily Colquitt, wife of Hal Divine, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Sallie Jeter, Pauline, Samuel McD., Jr., and Eliza. Col. Carter has four grand-children: Mary Hill, and Emily Cornelia, daughters of Benjamin F.; Robert Emmett, son of Kate C. Mitchell, and Rebecca Lamar, daughter of Emily C. Divine.

OSCAR C. GOINS, farmer, Spring Place, Murray Co., was born in Grainger county, Tenn., Feb. 24, 1830. In 1833 his parents moved to Hamilton county, in that state, and settled on a farm among the Cherokee Indians. There Mr. Goins resided until he was sixteen years old, and received his education in such schools as Hamilton county then offered its youth. The elder Goins died when Oscar was in his eleventh year, and being the eldest son the management of the farm fell upon him. However, when sixteen years old, he went to Chattanooga and there engaged as a clerk in a mercantile house, where he remained during thirteen years, and acquired an extensive and practical knowledge of mercantile affairs, which has since proven of infinite value to him. In 1858 he married Miss Esther Reynolds, a daughter of Anderson Reynolds, of Chattanooga. Immediately after his marriage he engaged in business, establishing a grocery and supply house, which he conducted successfully until the commencement of the war, when he entered the Confederate service, enlisting in Company B, Nineteenth Tennessee regiment, Col. J. C. Cummins. Mr. Goins was commissioned lieutenant of his company and was first engaged at Fishing Creek, and afterward participated in the two days' fight at Shiloh. After these battles he was detailed to bring the wounded to Chattanooga by way of Mobile, Montgomery and Atlanta. After performing this service he assisted in raising the Lookout battery, commanded by R. L. Berry, and accompanied that battery to Knoxville and to West Point, and Pollard, near Mobile, Ala., where this battery was stationed for upward of one year to guard and protect the railroad at that point. Later he entered Mobile, on his way to Jackson, Miss. He fought at the battle of Baker's Creek in 1863, and returned to Jackson under Gen. Loring, and marched to Yazoo City, where he was engaged under Joseph E. Johnston against the Federal gun-boats. After the fall of Vicksburg, in July, 1863, he returned with his command to Jackson. During the winter of 1863-64 he was taken sick and was ordered home, where he was obliged to retire, after having rendered valiant and efficient service in defense of the Confederacy and local self-government. He settled in Chattanooga, broken in health and in fortune, as a result of his military experiences. He made a vigorous effort to gain a permanent footing and in the end was successful. He engaged as traveling salesman, which occupation he followed successfully during thirteen years, and again acquired by his zeal and industry a respectable competency. In 1873 he settled in Murray county, Ga., near Spring Place, on a large, beautiful and productive plantation, where he has since resided. He owns and occupies one of the oldest mansions in North Georgia, erected in the early part of the present century by Joe Van, a noted Cherokee. This house has many historic reminiscences and is known far and wide as a pioneer landmark. His estate is one of the most valuable in Murray county, well improved, and watered by running streams and pellucid springs. The father of Mr. Goins, a native of Wythe county, Va., was born during the early part of this century. He moved to Cocke county, Tenn., with his parents, and later settled in Hamilton county, where he married Miss Nancy Biby, of Cocke county. They had five children, four sons and one daughter: Oscar C., William W., Pleasant W., George W. and Sarah J. She married James K. Connell, of Virginia, and now resides at Birmingham, Ala. The others are now deceased, Oscar W. being the survivor.

CHARLES L. HENRY, a rising member of the Murray county bar, residing at Spring Place, and a member of an old and respected family in that county, was born near Sumach in Murray county, on March 23, 1872. He was educated in the schools of his neighborhood, and at Sumach seminary, and having completed his literary studies he formed the resolution of adopting the practice of law as a profession. He began the study of law in his native county, but desiring to avail himself of the best means with which to become proficient in the intricacies of that science, he pursued a course of study with A. P. Haggard of Dayton, Tenn., and later the law department of Cumberland university, at Lebanon. He was graduated from that institution in June, 1893, having, in May of that year, been admitted to the bar before R. P. McLean. Returning to Murray county he was regularly admitted to the bar by Hon. Thomas W. Milner, presiding judge of the Cherokee circuit, at Spring Place, where he located, and has since been engaged in the practice of his profession. Mr. Henry is a young man of fine promise, sterling integrity, excellent habits, and of very considerable natural and acquired abilities. He has already taken an advanced and enviable position at the Murray county bar. Mr. Henry is the son of Rev. Samuel H. Henry, an old resident of Murray county, who was born in Polk county, Tenn., and came to Georgia about 1850. He studied for the ministry, was duly ordained, and for upward of forty years has been pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian church in Murray county. He settled on a plantation near Sumach, where he now resides, and is the founder of the Sumach seminary, a widely known and justly celebrated institution of learning in north Georgia, and in the interest of which he has labored zealously for many years. He married Miss Rosie Harris, a daughter of Nicholas Harris of Murray county, and reared a family of ten children: Nancy, wife of John Haggard of Texas; William L. and John T., a physician of Murray county; Mattie, wife of James McEntire; Nicholas, George R., physician, residing at Memphis, Tex.; Rev. James R., at present pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian church in Pittsburg, Pa., a graduate of the Cumberland university, Tenn., Union Theological seminary, New York city, and who finished his studies at Oxford, England,—a ripe scholarly man of distinguished talents; Onie, a graduate of Peabody Normal college, Tennessee, in 1894, where she took the first honors of her class; Eliza, who married John P. Gregory of Murray county and Charles L.

DAVID E. HUMPHREYS, farmer and stock raiser, Ramsey, was born in Murray county in 1840, and received a common school education. His father was Rev. Joab Humphreys, born in McDowell county, N. C., in 1810, the son of David and Ann Humphreys. David was also born in North Carolina in 1780, his father being a native of Virginia. Joab married Lyda Harrison of the Virginia family of that name. They reared two children, David E. and Laura, who married James Johnson of Murray county. They now reside in Texas. The parents of Mr. Humphreys settled in Murray county in 1836, on the land now owned by Mr. David Humphreys and were among the first white inhabitants of the county. Joab died there in 1864. For many years he had officiated as minister of the Methodist church, and was a highly esteemed and respected citizen. His wife died in that county in 1878. David E. Humphreys entered the Confederate service, enlisting in Company C, Eleventh Georgia infantry. His captain was William Luffman. The regiment was commanded by Col. G. T. Anderson. On July 3, 1861, he was mustered into service, and missed participating in the first battle of Manassas by reason of a railroad accident, which prevented his command from appearing on the field of action. He fought at Malvern Hill, and at the siege of Yorktown. In 1862 he participated in the seven days' fight in the defense of Richmond, fought in the second battle of Manassas, and was the second man to pass through Thoroughfare Gap. In July, 1863, he was engaged with his command in the celebrated battle of Gettysburg, where he was wounded and made prisoner. He was confined for three months at David's Island prison in New York. He was paroled, and in March, 1864, was exchanged, and returned to his command under Longstreet. After the siege of Knoxville, at Bull's Gap, Tenn., he followed Longstreet to Virginia, and was engaged in the siege of Petersburg. He was again wounded at Reams Station, N. C., and fought in all the engagements in which Longstreet's corps participated during the trying days of 1864, until the surrender at Appomattox in April, 1865, when he returned to his home in Murray county, after undergoing four years of hardship and peril in support of the authority of the Confederacy. From 1880 to 1882 he served as justice of the peace, and for seven years was a member of the board of education. In 1880 he was appointed by the census bureau, census enumerator for his district. In the various positions to which he has been called by public authority he has acquitted himself well, and has at all times retained the entire confidence of the people of his county. In 1864 he married Rebecca T. Peeples, daughter of Drury and Mary Peeples of Murray county. They have nine children: Lyda P., wife of L. D. Covington, now residing in Texas; Mary E., who married W. T. Brown of Gordon county; Joab O. of Chattanooga, Tenn.; Laura P., wife of S. H. Fincher of Murray county; Mattie, Nora, Myra, Annie and Julia.

JAMES A. MADDOX, one of the earliest of the adventurous and hardy pioneers who settled in Cherokee county, Ga., and whose descendants are influential citizens of several of the counties of North Carolina, was born in Elbert county, Ga., in 1815. His father, Benjamin Maddox, was a native of Dumfries, Prince William Co., Va., and was born July 4, 1760. He belonged to one of the oldest and best of the Old Dominion families, was reared on the banks of the Potomac, was well acquainted with Gen. Washington and his wife, and was a frequent visitor at their Mount Vernon home. During the latter part of his life nothing seemed to delight him more than to entertain his family and friends by repeating numerous interesting incidents and anecdotes relating to Washington and his family. He died in Atlanta in 1864 at the very advanced age of 104 years. He was blessed with a strong and robust constitution and retained his physical vigor to a remarkable degree. His intellect was clear to the last, and his eyesight was so good that he was able to read his Bible to within a very short time of his death. He migrated to Georgia and settled in Elbert county, in 1804, where he married Miss Elizabeth Waldroop, and reared a family of nine children: Fielding; Sarah, wife of John Bush; Thenie, wife of Mr. Prior; Stanfield; Posey; James A.; Walter; John, and Henley. Mr. Maddox passed his boyhood and early youth in the county of his birth, receiving such education as the then pioneer condition of the locality afforded. When he was about seventeen years of age he left home to work out the problem of life. He went to what is now Cherokee county and settled on or near where Canton, the county seat, now stands. He acquired considerable property and attained to political prominence—serving the county as sheriff and as a justice of the inferior court many years. In 1855 he moved to Cass (now Bartow) county, and settled in Cartersville. He owned a large plantation and conducted a milling business; and for many years was agent at Cartersville for the Western & Atlantic (state) railway. Before the war between the states began he was an anti-secessionist, but after the war acted with the democratic party. On the approach of the Union army in the spring of 1864 he fled to Fort Valley, Houston Co., Ga., where he remained until 1872, when he removed to Cedar Ridge, in Whitfield county, and settled on a large and excellent plantation, where he remained until his death, which occurred in 1886. His widow died in Spring Place, Murray Co., Ga., in 1892. Mr. Maddox was a man of strict integrity, great force of character, and superior executive ability. He left the mark of his influence on every community favored with his citizenship. He had a large and influential acquaintance in what is known as Cherokee, Ga., and no citizen possessed or deserved warmer or truer friends than he—and he retained the respect and confidence of all who knew him to the last. He was among the last of the survivors of the pioneer settlers of that mountain region, whose courage, industry, thrift and progressiveness have placed that then unknown extended area—a treasure-house of wealth in forest growth and minerals—on the highway to development and prosperity. Judge Maddox was married Dec. 31, 1849, to Miss Martha, daughter of Col. Samuel Tate (also an early settler) of Cherokee county, and one of its most influential citizens, and to them nine children were born: Mary, now of Atlanta, for many years a school teacher in Pickens, Whitfield and Murray counties; Eliza, wife of W. A. Simmons, Jasper, Pickens Co.; Stephen, merchant, Weatherford, Tex.; Samuel, lawyer, Dalton, Ga., who has been mayor of the city; Joseph, mechanic, Columbus, Ga.; John, deceased; Sally, wife of W. J. Wrinkle, Columbus, Ga.; Martha, wife of R. A. Pierce, Spring Place, Ga., and Charles, Spring Place.

HON. JAMES A. M'KAMY. Col. McKamy is one of Murray county's prosperous agriculturists and representative citizens. He was born at Maryville, Blount Co., Tenn., on Oct. 29, 1825, the son of William McKamy and his wife, Nancy Caldwell, who were married on Jan. 20, 1820, in Blount county. William was born in that county in 1790, and was reared among the hardy pioneers of those days. His wife was born in Hawkins county, Tenn., and was the daughter of David Caldwell. Col. McKamy was brought up on his father's farm, and was educated in the schools of his neighborhood. At the commencement of the Mexican war he entered the service of the United States and was commissioned first lieutenant of Company F, Fifth regiment, Tennessee infantry. His regiment served under Gen. Twiggs, and saw active service on the line between Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico, and was engaged at the battles of La Soladad and Palverde. He continued in the service until the close of the war, and in 1848 returned with his regiment to the United States. He was honorably discharged at Memphis, Tenn. After the war he was engaged as bookkeeper and accountant for a mercantile house in his native county and later conducted a mercantile business on his own account. During the administration of President Buchanan he served as postmaster at Maryville. At the commencement of hostilities between the states he entered the Confederate service as captain of Company E, Third Tennessee infantry, and later was commissioned major and lieutenant-colonel of his regiment respectively. He was engaged with his regiment at the first battle of Manassas. His regiment was next ordered to Tennessee, where he participated in the campaign in east Tennessee, and for a time served as member of court-martial at Knoxville. Returning with his regiment to Virginia he remained engaged in active service in the valley during the greater part of the war. While fighting under Early at the battle of Winchester, Sept. 19, 1864, he was made prisoner of war, and sent to Fort Delaware, where he was confined until July 24, 1865. Returning to his home after valiant service rendered in behalf of the south, and for the maintenance of her rights under the constitution, he found it necessary for his personal safety to depart from his native state, then overrun with Federal troops and lawless mobs. He accordingly settled in Murray county, this state, where he has since resided, and engaged successfully in agricultural pursuits. He became one of the leading citizens of his adopted county, and has taken an active interest in the management of her affairs. From 1871 to the present time he has been a member of the board of education of Murray county, and has served as a commissioner of roads and revenues. In 1886 he became the candidate of the democratic party for the office of senator from the Forty-third senatorial district, comprising the counties of Gordon, Whitfield and Murray. He was elected and served as senator during the years 1886-87. In the legislature he was assigned to the committees on agriculture, public property, privileges and elections, mines and mining, and immigration. In committee work he soon demonstrated his efficiency as a valuable legislator, and also took an active part in the deliberations on the floor of the senate. At the close of his legislative term it was generally conceded that he had made one of the best representatives ever returned from the Forty-third district. By their marriage the parents of Col. McKamy had seven children: David; James A.; John; William; Margaret, who married George Maxwell; Nancy; and Mary, who married S. W. Eldridge. The paternal grandfather of Col. McKamy was James McKamy, born in Rockbridge county, Va., about 1752. He served in the patriot army during the war of the revolution, and settled in Tennessee in 1787, married Nancy Telford, reared a family, and died in Blount county, that state, in 1845. His son William served in the war of 1812. Col. McKamy is a member of the Presbyterian church and belongs to the masonic fraternity.

MAJ. M. D. L. M'CROSKEY, retired merchant, Cohutta Springs, was born in McMinn county, Tenn., May 22, 1830. His early life was spent in that county, where he received his education. In his youth he acquired a taste for a mercantile and business career, and his first business venture was at Montgomery, Ala., where he disposed of a lot of horses, and acquired in 1855 an interest in a livery stable. This interest he soon disposed of and went to Atlanta. In the spring of 1858 he visited New York city and became associated with a leading mercantile house, and was at once launched upon a business career, successfully conducted through many and various ventures for upward of a quarter of a century. During this period his calling as a salesman required his presence at different times in all parts and sections of the Union. He early acquired an extensive business acquaintance, and profited by his opportunities to familiarize himself with business methods, and to obtain an acute knowledge of human nature in all its phases. There is, probably, no resident of this state better informed regarding the condition of the country, its business needs and requirements, than Maj. McCroskey. A gentleman of affable and agreeable presence, of broad mind, ripened by many years of personal experience with men and affairs, he is doubtless possessed of advantages that can only be acquired in the school of personal experience. The opening of the great war between the states found him in New York city. His sympathies were naturally with the southern people, and his trade relations and patrons were chiefly south of Mason and Dixon's line. He accordingly resolved to return to the south, and arrived in Savannah in the spring of 1861. He engaged in the drug business in Atlanta until 1863, when he went to Saltville, Va., and was there engaged in the salt trade and manufacture until the close of the war. He received a major's commission from the Confederate government, and held the rank from 1863 until the surrender of Lee and Johnston. He sustained close business relations with that government, and supplied the army with the product of his salt works until his plant was captured by Federal troops under Gen. Stoneman. In the autumn of 1865 he returned to New York and again engaged in mercantile pursuits, which he followed until 1890. In the latter year he retired from business and settled with his family in Atlanta. In that city he resides during the winter seasons, retiring to his fine country seat in Murray county in the summer of each year. His plantation is one of the largest and most productive in North Georgia, and contains 2,240 acres of choice agricultural land, interspersed with heavy timber and possessing excellent spring water. Here Maj. McCroskey enjoys in quiet retirement the profitable results of many years of honest business industry, and a competency honorably achieved. Besides his estate in Murray county he is the owner of a valuable business block in Atlanta and a fine dairy farm in the suburbs of that city, on which is located his winter residence. And here, as well as on his Murray county plantation, this social and genial gentleman is ever at home to his friends. In 1868 Maj. McCroskey was united in marriage in Brooklyn, N. Y., to Miss Lizzie Carn. His wife was the daughter of John and Lizzie Carn, of Bamberg, S. C., and was reared and educated at Charleston, where she resided until the commencement of the war, when she took up her home in Atlanta. Mrs. McCroskey was present at the bombardment of Fort Sumter, and stood within fifty feet of the first gun fired at the fort. By their marriage they had two daughters: Lizzie Bell and Julia Evans. Lizzie died in New York city in April, 1870, a child remarkable for intelligence and precocity. Julia is at present a student in the high school in Atlanta. The father of Maj. McCroskey was a native of Sevier county, Tenn., where he was born in 1807. He resided in that county until 1860, when he settled in Atlanta and engaged in mercantile business. He died at Cleveland, Tenn., in 1892, at the age of eighty-four years. He married Sarah Stephenson, a daughter of Andrew Stephenson, of Sevier county, Tenn. They reared two sons and six daughters: Louisa, now deceased; Caroline, deceased; Amanda, wife of J. T. Horle, of Cleveland, Tenn.; Tennie and Harriet, residents of Chattanooga, and Addie, also deceased. The mother of Maj. McCroskey died at Tunnel Hill, Ga., in 1871.

HON. PLEASANT M'GHEE, farmer, Spring Place, is a native of Morgan county, Tenn., although by nurture and long established residence, he has acquired all the tastes and manners of the Georgian. His parents died during his early infancy. In 1840, at the age of seven years, he was brought to Murray county by his grandfather, and was chiefly reared in that county. In 1849 the gold fever broke out in California and he migrated to southwestern Missouri near the Indian territory, where he lived and traded among the Indians. In 1855, with a company of friends he started for the gold fields on the Pacific slope, journeying by way of Fort Scott, Fort Kearney, and Fort Laramie, over the vast prairies, crossing the Rocky mountains, to the north of Salt Lake City, at Soda Springs, and after experiencing divers adventures and hairbreadth escapes finally arrived at Sacramento in August. At what is now known as Eldorado he engaged in mining during the following eighteen months, and succeeded fairly well. In 1857 he recrossed the mountains and the prairies, and again located in southwest Missouri, engaging in the cattle trade, which he operated successfully until 1858, when he returned to Georgia and married Miss Frances Cleveland, daughter of Robert Cleveland. They moved to southwest Missouri, where Mr. McGhee engaged in farming and trading. Previous to the commencement of the war Mr. McGhee was a sturdy Union man; but when state after state withdrew from the Federal compact he took sides with the Confederacy. He first enlisted in the territorial regiment. Obtaining a leave of absence he returned to Georgia with his family, and then rejoined his command under Col. Stanwiddie. The forces were reorganized and Mr. McGhee aided in raising a company, of which he was first made lieutenant; and later, on the death of the captain, he was elected and commissioned captain of Company H, Sixteenth Missouri infantry. This regiment was commanded by Col. Lewis, and was attached to Parson's brigade. He was first engaged at the battle of Prairie Grove, in Arkansas, and fought at Helena, on July 3, 1863, under Price, where his command sustained defeat. Capt.

McGhee entered the fight with forty men and retired with fifteen, twenty-five having been killed, wounded or captured. He, too, sustained a slight wound. He was next engaged in the battle of Mansfield, La, under Gen. Kirby Smith. Here Banks and the Federals sustained a severe defeat, losing a large amount of commissary stores. His command entered winter quarters at Camden, Ark., and continued in active service until surrendered at Shreveport, La., in 1865, where he was paroled and returned to his home in broken health. His property interests were ruined during the war, and as a result of four years of strife. He engaged in agricultural pursuits and by his industry, perseverance and good judgment he soon found himself in possession of a reasonable competency. As a man of affairs he rapidly arose to prominence in his county. His friends realizing his worth frequently urged his name for public office. In the years 1881-82-83-84, he served as a member of the board of commissioners of Murray county. In 1886 he became the candidate of his party for representative in the legislature; he was elected and served in the general assembly for 1886-87, and served on the committee on agriculture, mines and mining, counties and county matters, wild lands, and roads and bridges, and in all of these committees he was an active and zealous worker. He introduced a bill to prevent landlords and retail merchants from charging in excess of 15 per cent. of the value of the property or goods. This bill stirred up considerable commotion, and Mr. McGhee is still of the opinion that it was a just and equitable measure and should have been enacted into a law. He returned from the legislature with clean hands and a good name, and has since followed the peaceful pursuits of agriculture on his farm near Spring Place. While not actively engaged in politics he still takes an active interest in all questions affecting the prosperity of Georgia and her people. By his marriage Mr. McGhee has five children: Orazaba E., wife of John L. Galt; William T.; Florence J., who married Howard Lowry; Pleasant F.; and Oscar R.

JOSEPH A. PRICE, M. D., is by birth a Tennessean, having been born in McMinn county in July 5, 1854. He was educated at Cog Hill. On finishing his studies he engaged for three years in agricultural and mercantile pursuits. He began the study of medicine under the guidance of Dr J. C. King of Cog Hill, and engaged in the practice of medicine in Tennessee in 1875. In 1878 he settled in Murray county, Ga., where he has since resided. In 1880 he entered the Southern Medical college at Atlanta, and continued a student in that institution until the spring of 1882, when he was graduated. He at once entered actively upon the practice of his profession in Murray county. In 1886, he took a special course in the Atlanta Medical college on diseases of women and children, and at the close of his course he received the Adynamia degree. His practice is extensive throughout the counties of Murray and Whitfield in this state, and in Polk and Bradley counties in Tennessee. Dr. Price makes a specialty of the treatment of the diseases of women and children. He is a gentleman of high character and acknowledged ability in his profession. He is an active member of the Cumberland Presbyterian church at Sumach. In 1876 he married Miss Susie E. Smith, daughter of B. F. Smith of Murray county, and has one son, Thomas. The father of Dr. Price was George W. Price, a native of Virginia, who migrated to Tennessee in his youth. He married Matilda Howard of Union Court House, S. C., and reared eight children: John H., now deceased; Nathaniel S. of Polk county, Tenn.; Henry B. of Texas; Joseph A.; Martha, who married George W. Moore and is now dead; Louisa, wife of M. M. Baker of Polk county, Tenn.; Abigail (deceased); Tenny S., wife of James Osborne of Polk county, Tenn. John H. and Nathaniel S. both served in the Confederate army during the war. On the death of his father Dr. Price inherited an estate of the value of $1,500 which soon passed from out his hands. Being thrown upon his own resources he earned every dollar afterward spent on his education, and defrayed his expenses at college with the proceeds of his early professional earnings. To his energy and perseverance is due his success in life, and his present position of independence.

E. O. STAFFORD, physician, Dennis, is one of Murray county's leading physicians. He is a native of Sevier county, Tenn., where he was born in 1834. In 1846 he moved with his parents to Georgia, settling first in Chattooga and later in Dade county, where he grew to manhood. The father of Dr. Stafford was Mathew A. Stafford, born in North Carolina, who was a son of Henry Stafford, of Virginia. Mathew married Sally M. Smith in Tennessee, reared a family and died in that state about 1857. Dr. Stafford was educated in the common schools of the country and at Sulphur Springs academy, Alabama. He taught in the common schools for a time, but having manifested a strong desire to engage in the practice of medicine, he resolved to prepare himself for that profession. In 1855 he entered the medical department of the university of Georgia at Augusta, where he pursued a course of study until the autumn of 1856, when he entered the Nashville (Tenn.) Medical college, and was graduated from that institution in the spring of 1857. Immediately thereafter he commenced the practice of his profession in Marion county, Tenn., where he continued to reside until the first year of the late war of 1861-65. He enlisted in Company H, Third Tennessee cavalry, of which company he was made first lieutenant and afterward captain. His regiment was attached to Gen. Forrest's brigade, that was organized at Murfreesboro, Tenn., in 1862. He saw active service during the Tennessee and Kentucky campaign of 1862-63, and fought at Mumfordsville, Perryville, Fort Donelson, Shiloh and many other places. In 1862-63 he participated in the celebrated raid made by Gen. Forrest over the Mobile & Ohio railroad and fought during this raid at the battle of Lexington, Tenn., and other engagements. In this raid more than 200 miles of railroad were destroyed from below Grand Junction to Union City and more than 5,000 Federals made prisoners of war. He was again engaged under Gen. Forrest at the battle of Spring Hill, Tenn., both followed and preceded by active skirmishing. His command covered Bragg's retreat from Tullahoma to Chattanooga, and in September, 1863, he fought at the great battle of Chickamauga. In May, 1863, he participated in the pursuit and capture of Gen. Strait and his command near Rome, Ga. The object of this raid of the Federal force of 2,500 cavalry was the destruction of the arsenals and cap factories at Rome and Atlanta. As senior captain, Dr. Stafford commanded the advance guard of Gen. Forrest's brigade during this running fight. The pursuit commenced at Moulton, Ala., and continued for five days and nights, in which there were quite a number of engagements, and resulted in the capture of Gen. Strait and his forces at the widow Larence's, twenty-three miles west of Rome. During the pursuit and just before the capture the advance guard, under command of Capt. Stafford, arrived at a stream in the immediate rear of Strait's forces. The stream was swollen, and the bridge had just been destroyed by the Federals and was still burning and falling in. Capt. Stafford realizing that immediate action was necessary, hastened back to an adjoining residence, some three or four hundred yards, where he inquired of a young girl sixteen years old, a Miss Sansum, whether the stream could be safely forded anywhere near by, as it was dangerous swimming at the bridge. During the conversation Gen. Forrest and his command came up at double quick time. The young lady pointed out a fording place a half mile distant. She was invited by Gen. Forrest to direct the course of the troops, and leaping upon the horse of Gen. Forrest, she rode behind him, and soon succeeded in piloting over the stream the entire command, an event which resulted a few hours later in the capture and surrender of Gen. Strait and all of his forces. In the fall of 1863 Dr. Stafford retired from the service in the Confederate army. Being in constant danger of capture by lawless and marauding bands, he surrendered himself to the Federals soon after, and was appointed surgeon of the First Vidette cavalry, United States volunteers, where he served for nearly a year. At the close of the war he settled in Murray county, Ga., where during the past thirty years he has been actively engaged in the practice of his profession, in which he has risen to eminence, and enjoys a high reputation as a skillful physician and surgeon. His practice at one time was very large and extended over a good portion of the counties of Murray, Whitfield, Gordon, Pickens and Gilmer. He is an active man of affairs in Murray county, and took an active part in the suppression of white-capism in 1894-95. He is a master Mason, and a member of the Methodist church south. Dr. Stafford is the father of four children, two of whom are living: Laura M., wife of James G. Prigmore, of South Pittsburg, Tenn., and Emmie O., a recent graduate of the Dalton Female college, in the class of 1894.

VAN L. WATTS, a rising member of the Murray county bar, residing at Spring Place, was born at Fairmount, in Gordon county, Ga., in 1871. In 1881 he moved to Cherokee county with his parents, where he grew to manhood. He was educated in the schools of Cherokee county. He early resolved to prepare himself for the practice of law, and engaged in the study of that science in Cherokee county, where on Sept. 28, 1892, he was regularly admitted to the bar in the superior court of Pickens county, at Jasper. In May, 1893, he settled at Spring Place, where he has since practiced his profession, and is winning a reputation as commendable as it is merited for skill and dexterity in the trial of cases, and for prudence and diligence in the management of the legal business. In June, 1894, Mr. Watts married Miss Minnie Daly, of Spring Place, daughter of Simon Daly, and they have one son, Roy F., born May 14, 1895. The father of Mr. Watts was Sylvester R. Watts, born in Gordon county, this state, who married Miss Celia E. Stanton, daughter of Hon. J. W. Stanton, of Gordon county. The issue of this marriage was seven children: Henry L., of Cherokee county; Emma L., engaged in teaching at Ducktown, Tenn.; John Q., a student at Young Harris college, Union county, Ga.; Stanton P., of Fairmount, Ga.; Martin F., of Cherokee county; Sylvester R., Jr., also of that county, and Van L. He enlisted in the Sixth Georgia cavalry the last year of the war, when but seventeen years old, and defended the cause of the south. He died in Cherokee county in 1883. The paternal grandfather of Van L. Watts was Pleasant Watts, a native of South Carolina, who died in Gordon county in 1856.

MUSCOGEE COUNTY.

JOHN HICKS BASS, county commissioner of Muscogee county, Ga., was born in Monroe county, Ga., in 1821. His paternal grandfather was John H. Bass, who was a native of Virginia. He married in Virginia and came to Georgia and settled in Hancock county, where he died about 1852. The father of John Hicks Bass was Eden Bass, a native of Hancock county, and born in 1777. He was a merchant in Troup county, Ga., for many years. He was a soldier in the war of 1812 and married a Miss Nancy Clay. They had eleven children, of whom nine lived to maturity and two now survive: John H.; Rebecca E., widow successively of William L. Stanley and J. W. Sappington, both of Columbus. John Hicks Bass had two brothers who saw military service, viz.: Robert L., a soldier in the Creek war in 1836, and Maston G., a major in Col. John Brown's regiment, Confederate states army, and killed at Richmond. In 1828 J. H. Bass removed with his parents to Troup county, Ga., and lived there and in Chambers county, Ala., until 1841. He received his entire education in Troup county, and left school at the age of seventeen, working on his father's farm until he had arrived at the age of twenty. In 1841 he removed to Columbus, and entered the City hotel, kept by his father, and clerked there four years. Then he and his brother, Robert L. (deceased), took charge of the Oglethorpe hotel and conducted it until October, 1860. In 1857 they also bought and opened another hotel called the Perry house and conducted that also until the war began, when they were compelled to close it. In 1861 J. H. Bass bought an interest in the "Columbus Times" and ran that paper throughout the war; and was in the Home guards during the last year of the war but saw no active service. After the war he commenced to farm and still follows that pursuit. He has large farming interests in Muscogee and Chattahoochee counties, and produces about 400 bales of cotton annually. Mr. Bass is a member of the board of directors of the Third National bank and of the Hamburger cotton mills, Columbus. He has served as an alderman, and has been county commissioner for twelve years. He is a demitted Mason and affiliates with the Presbyterian church. He was happily married in 1854 to Frances E., daughter of the late Archibald McGruder, a native of Georgia, and an old and respected resident of Chattahoochee county, who died in Muscogee county, 1865. This union has been blessed by the birth of several children: Dr. A. C. Bass, of Columbus, Ga.; Jennie B., wife of V. M. Brown, of Charlotte, N. C., and Roberta S., wife of James A. Lewis, of Columbus.

CAPT. THOS. JEFFERSON BATES, a prominent mechanic of Muscogee county, Ga., was born in Columbus, Ga., in 1836 of Scotch-Irish parentage. His father, Asa Bates, was a native of Springfield, Mass., who came south as a captain in the First regiment of United States infantry during the Seminole war and settled in Columbus, Ga., where he was engaged in contracting and building. During the Creek war he was a colonel of volunteers and removed to Russell county, Ala., soon after the close of that war, dying there in 1880. As a citizen he was prominent and popular and was elected sheriff of Muscogee county in 1836. His father, Eli Bates, was a lieutenant-colonel of Massachusetts volunteers in the war of 1812, and was in command of his regiment at Lundy's Lane under Gen. Scott. His grandfather, Edwin Bates, was a soldier in the French war and was at the storming of Quebec under Gen. Wolf. When the revolutionary war commenced he was sixty-five years old and a farmer living near Deerfield, Mass. There he raised a company of rifles, his own relations mostly, and old frontier men who had fought through the French war with him, and joining Gen. Starke marched to Boston and was in the battle of Bunker Hill, and out of forty men in the company all were kinsmen but fifteen. He followed the fortunes of the patriot army until its close at Yorktown, a captain of New England continentals—seventy-three years old—in his last battle. This grand old soldier is justly the pride of the Bates family. He was an honest patriot who would not accept promotion that would keep him from his children as he called his men. At the age of seven years Thomas J. Bates removed with his parents to Russell county, Ala., and lived there until 1876, when he moved to Muscogee county, near Columbus, Ga., where he now resides. He received his primary education in Columbus, and was for a time a student at the Georgia Military institute, at Marietta, leaving there in 1855 and going with his father into the bridge building business, remaining with him until March 15, 1861. He was mustered into the service of the Confederacy at Montgomery, Ala., in the Sixth Alabama regiment commanded by Col., now United States Senator, John B. Gordon. Mr. Bates entered as a private and in a week was made line sergeant. In October, 1861, while he was in prison at Washington, having been captured at First Manassas and held five months, he was made brevet second lieutenant of the provisional army, receiving an informal parole in December, 1861, and was regularly exchanged later. He reported for duty at Richmond, Va., in December, 1861, and served there until after the battle of Malvern Hill, thence being ordered to Columbus, Ga., to report to Capt. J. F. Waddell in command of Waddell's battery. Arriving in Columbus, Ga., the company was reorganized and sent to Kentucky under Gen. E. Kirby Smith. After the battle of Murfreesboro the battery was sent to Vicksburg and thence to Champion Hills or Baker's Creek, where Mr. Bates was made first lieutenant. He served as first lieutenant until after the battle of New Hope church, when he was brevetted captain, and, on July 22, 1864, in front of Atlanta, he was made full captain and sent to Macon and thence to Columbus, Ga., where his last fight was with Wilson's raiders. He was captured at Champion Hills, Miss., afterward at Vicksburg, but escaped in a few minutes. After the war Capt. Bates returned to Russell county, Ala., and commenced to farm, and in 1867-8 began contracting. In 1869 he built 206 bridges on the Mobile & Girard railroad. In 1876 he was chief master carpenter in the construction of the great Eagle & Phoenix mills, of Columbus, Ga., which took five years, working under Engineer-in-Chief John Hill of Columbus, Ga. Then in 1881 Capt. Bates and A. C. Young started a brickyard near Columbus, Ga., and four years later Capt. Bates bought his partner's interest and carried it on alone until 1891, when he sold out, and has since devoted his attention to agriculture. Capt. Bates is an Odd Fellow and a Knight Templar Mason. He was married in 1855 to Miss Nettie L., daughter of the late Isaac McGehee of Russell county, Ala., and this union has been blessed by the birth of five children, viz.: Eugenia, wife of Thos. L. Tate of Columbus, Ga.; Thomas Weems Bates, and George C. Bates, both in the Merchants' and Mechanics' bank of Columbus, Ga.; Mattie Bridget; and Belle Cleburne, the wife of George H. Smith of Macon, Ga.

DR. M'DUFFIE BLANCHARD, a prominent physician of Columbus, Ga., was born in Lincoln county, Ga., Jan. 7, 1836. When at the age of two years his parents removed to Harris county, Ga., and it was in that section of the state that he received his earlier training and education. At the age of nineteen Mr. Blanchard began the study of medicine in the university of Nashville, Tenn., and two years later, in 1857, he was graduated as a doctor of medicine from the university. After his graduation Dr. Blanchard entered actively upon the practice of his profession and was located at intervals in several of the southern states, finally making his home at Wharton, Wharton Co., Texas, and resided in that town during the war between the states. He served as a member of the Texas state militia six months and was then transferred to the regular army as an assistant surgeon, serving as such for less than a year. He took part in a number of battles, and is said to have been a good soldier. After the close of hostilities, Dr. Blanchard practiced his profession at Wharton until 1868, at which time he removed to eastern Alabama and resided at Society Hill for two years. In 1871 he became a citizen of Georgia and practiced his profession at Green Hill, Stewart Co., until January, 1880, when he removed to his present residence at Columbus. In 1885 Dr. Blanchard was elected city physician of Columbus. He is a consistent member of the Baptist church and is not a member of any secret fraternity. He was joined in the holy bonds of matrimony in July, 1860, to Miss Sarah J. Whitby, a most estimable lady of Russell county, Ala., and this union has been blessed by the birth of three sons and two daughters, Burton L., who is a prosperous farmer and planter of Russell county, Ala., being the only surviving child.

WILLIAM C. BRADLEY, cotton factor and commission merchant, Columbus, Ga., was born in Russell county, Ala., June 28, 1863, and is the youngest of seven living children born to Forbes and Theresa (Clark) Bradley, viz.: Mrs. Emma J. Nuckolls; Mrs. Alice B. Nuckolls; Edmund; Forbes, Jr.; Dan; Fannie B.; Orr, and William C. Forbes Bradley was born in Connecticut, Dec. 1, 1809, moved to Georgia in 1828, settled in Milledgeville, Baldwin Co., where he remained until 1832, removed thence to Columbus, Ga., where he engaged in merchandising until 1840, and then removed to Russell county, Ala., where he has since resided. He was a large slave-holder and has always been considered a very successful planter. His father was Dan Bradley, a native of Connecticut, and of Scotch extraction. Theresa (Clark) Bradley was a daughter of William Clark, who was of Welsh extraction. The gentleman whose name heads this article lived with his parents in Russell county, Ala., until he had arrived at the age of eleven years. He received his primary education in Columbus, and later attended the agricultural and mechanical college, at Auburn, Ala. Leaving that institution in his sophomore year he returned home and managed his father's plantation until he was nineteen years of age. He then came to Columbus, and entered the office of Bussey, Goldsmith & Co., cotton factors, as a clerk, and remained with that firm two seasons, when in 1885 he and Mr. S. A. Carter succeeded to the firm, and the business was carried on under the style of Carter & Bradley. A flattering patronage was enjoyed by the firm until its dissolution, Jan. 1, 1895, when S. A. Carter sold his interest to W. C. Bradley, who continued the business the same as heretofore, giving his entire personal attention to its management. The aptitude of his resources and facilities is such that the establishment is of that class which commands the respect, confidence, and consideration of the citizens of Columbus, and of the people at large. Though yet a young man, Mr. Bradley is possessed of rare talent and business experience. He is a member of the board of directors of the Third National bank of Columbus, of the Columbus Savings bank, and vice-president of the Rose Hill Improvement company. He has devoted much time to agricultural pursuits and is probably one of the largest cotton planters in Georgia—marketing about 750 bales of the fleecy staple annually. In politics Mr. Bradley is a firm democrat, is a pay member of the Columbus guards, and a member of the benevolent and protective Order of Elks. On April 27, 1887, he was married to Miss Sarah M. Hall of Columbus, an estimable lady of culture and refinement, and a daughter of Harry T. and E. J. (Howard) Hall. Harry T. Hall was a native of Boston, Mass., and his wife, E. J. Howard, was born and reared in Columbus. Both Mr. Hall and his wife are dead.

REV. W. A. CARTER, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Columbus, Ga., was born in Mobile, Ala., May 13, 1836, and is the son of Dr. Jesse and Mary L. (Kennedy) Carter. Dr. Jesse Carter was born in North Carolina in 1807 and was graduated from the university of North Carolina, then from the university of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, and in 1830 settled in Mobile, where he was engaged in the practice of medicine until his health failed. He was for fifty years an elder in the Presbyterian church. Mrs. Mary Carter was also a native of Mobile and was a daughter of Dr. William E. Kennedy. The gentleman whose name heads this article was the eldest of seven children born of their union, the others being Susan V., Mary E., Cecil, Jessie, Florence D. and Braxton. Rev. William A. Carter received a part of his education at Oglethorpe university, Midway, Ga., near Milledgeville. He was also a student at the university of Virginia, and subsequently attended the Union Theological seminary at Columbus, S. C. In the spring of 1861 he entered the Confederate service as a member of the Twenty-first Alabama volunteers, Mobile rifles, and was appointed chaplain. He was made a prisoner of war at Port Morgan, taken to New Orleans, La., and incarcerated three weeks, when he was exchanged. He was soon after ordered to report to Gen. Robert E. Lee for duty in the army of Northern Virginia, and was detailed as chaplain of the Twelfth South Carolina regiment, but was afterward sent to the department of the gulf, with headquarters at Mobile, Ala. After the close of the war he returned to Mobile and preached for four months in the Government Street Presbyterian church, and was soon thereafter employed by the American Seaman's Aid society to work among the sailors at that port, which duty he performed about one year, going thence to Pensacola, Fla., where he was pastor of the Presbyterian church for fifteen years. He has had charge of the First Presbyterian church of Columbus since 1881. He was happily married on March 21, 1864, to Miss Agnes L. Quigley, a most estimable lady of Columbia, S. C., whom he had met while a student of the theological seminary, and this union has been blessed by the birth of five children, three of whom survive: William Alonzo, Braxton Curtiss and Edith Lee. In July, 1891, Mr. Carter was called upon to mourn the sad death of his eldest daughter, Mary A., who was a devout Christian and noted for her tenderness and charity, and love of her parents, the comfort and joy of her aged father, whose loss is almost irreparable.

WILLIAM L. CLARK, now retired from business and residing at Columbus, Ga., was born in Savannah, Ga., Oct. 15, 1827, and is a son of John L. and Harriet F. (Poullen) Clark. John L. Clark was born in the state of New York in 1801 and was a son of John G. Clark, who was a sea captain for many years and also a cotton manufacturer of New York state and of English extraction. John L. was a cabinet-maker by trade and was also a dealer in furniture. His death took place in 1859. Mrs. Harriet F. Clark was a native of Savannah, Ga., and a daughter of John P. Poullen, who was born in France. William L. Clark is the eldest of the four children born to his parents, the remaining three being Sarah L., Maria H. and Laura B. He learned the trade of machinist in the shops of the Central Railroad & Banking company of Georgia, and in 1851 became master of the machine department. In 1853 he removed to Columbus, Ga., having accepted the position of master mechanic of the Muscogee railroad, also of the Mobile & Girard railroad, and subsequently became superintendent of the latter road. In 1867 he was appointed general agent in Columbus for the Central Railroad & Banking company. In 1868 the Mobile & Girard railroad was consolidated with the Southwestern railroad and Mr. Clark was appointed general agent of the new corporation. In 1871 he was elected superintendent of the Mobile & Girard Railroad company, and held that position until 1887. He was also general manager of the Columbus & Rome Railroad company from 1882 until 1887, with headquarters at Columbus. Although now retired from active business, Mr. Clark is a director in the Merchants' and Mechanics' bank, and for many years has been a director of the Columbus & Western Railroad company. He has also served as a member of the city council of Columbus. In 1858 he married Miss Pauline, daughter of John I. Ridgeway, of Columbus, and became the father of nine children, seven of whom are now in life, viz: Frederick A., William L., Paul, Ira P., John G., Harry M. and Robin. Mr. Clark is a member of the masonic fraternity and is exceedingly well posted in the rites of that most ancient order.

JUDGE ABRAM WHITENACK COZART, judge of the recorder's court of Columbus, Ga., was born on June 14, 1870, in Loudon county, East Tenn. His early childhood was spent in the beautiful Sweetwater valley. Col. A. W. Cozart, his father, was a wealthy merchant and one of the most highly respected citizens of that entire section. Abram was the youngest child, on which account his father was particularly attached to him. Before he was old enough to go to school he traveled with his parents extensively throughout the north and south and thereby had excellent opportunities to learn by observation. When he was fifteen years old he was sent to Hiwassee college, Monroe county, Tenn. Hiwassee is the alma mater of ex-Postmaster-General D. M. Key, Judge C. J. Wellborn, Hon. L. N. Trammell, Judge John L. Hopkins and Hon. A. S. Clay. Young Cozart remained at college for three years and was graduated in the A. B. course May 15, 1888. During his entire stay at college he was absent only two days. He was the youngest member of his class, but notwithstanding that fact stood first. On commencement day he delivered an oration on Unity of Purpose, which he wrote in less than a day. While he was at college his parents moved to Columbus, and he came here shortly after he completed his studies. Desiring to perfect his education, he wanted to teach. President J. Harris Chappell and Supt. W. H. Woodall, of Columbus, Ga., gave him great assistance in this, his first work. He was elected principal of the high school at Waverly Hall, Ga., during the year 1889 and was wonderfully successful. In 1890 he was elected principal of the Cusseta high school, Cusseta, Ga., and there he met with the same success. At the beginning of the year 1891 he entered the law office of Goetchius & Chappell to read law. These gentlemen took great interest in the young student and instructed him thoroughly in the elementary principles of law. He was admitted to the bar before Judge Roger L. Gamble, Jr. After finishing the prescribed three years' course subsequent to taking the A. B. degree, his alma mater conferred upon him the A. M. degree. At the beginning of the session of the general assembly of Georgia of 1892 he was appointed to a clerkship in the house of representatives. On account of his strong and clear voice he was made the reading clerk. This was very fortunate for Cozart, for there is no one in the entire legislature who has as good an opportunity to learn parliamentary law as the reading clerk. In addition to his appointment as reading clerk he was appointed clerk of the general judiciary committee. Here he had an opportunity to get intimately acquainted with thirty learned lawyers and also to learn the minutiae of law-making. His services were so satisfactory during this session that many of the members voluntarily asked that he be reappointed for the session of 1893, and in compliance with their wishes he was reappointed. During the session of the legislature of 1893 the city council of Columbus created the office of recorder and Mr. Cozart was elected to fill the office over one of the best and most prominent young men of the state, and he has since enjoyed the distinction of being re-elected twice without opposition. The young judge is a polished scholar and has already gained prominence in his profession, the practice of law. He is an entertaining speaker and is invited to deliver addresses on numerous occasions. He is in demand at every political gathering which he may attend, and during the last state campaign did good work for his party.

Judge Cozart is one of the rising young men of the state and his friends predict an honored and useful career for him.

DANIEL PRESTON DOZIER was born in Muscogee county, Ga., twelve miles east of the city of Columbus, April 26, 1848. His father was John Beall Dozier, a native of Warren county, Ga., born in 1807. He was a farmer all his life, and died in Muscogee county in 1873. His grandfather was Rev. Richard Dozier, a Methodist Episcopal minister, a native of Georgia, who died in 1855 at the age of seventy years. John Beall Dozier married Emily Huff, a native of Edgefield district, S. C., who died in 1884. Of this union were born eight children, of whom seven now survive: Antoinette, wife of Joseph F. Pou, of Columbus, Ga.; James L., who was a private in the Forty-sixth Georgia regiment, and served throughout the war; Virginia, wife of W. A. Little, of Columbus, Ga.; Homer W., Atlanta; John Edger, who died in January, 1882; Lula, wife of George S. Loundes, of Columbus; Albert S. Dozier, of Columbus; and Daniel Preston. Daniel Preston Dozier was brought up and primarily educated in Muscogee county, and in 1869 entered the university of Georgia, Athens, but was compelled to leave college a year before graduation on account of illness. In April, 1864, he entered the Confederate service as a private in Company A, Third Georgia regiment, and served as such until the war closed. He participated in the battles of Atlanta, Griswoldville, and Columbus. After the close of the war Mr. Dozier entered the dry goods house of John McGough & Co., and was with that firm twelve years. He then bought an interest in the hardware business of J. A. Frazer & Co. and the firm became Frazer & Dozier, which continued until Oct. 10, 1894, when Mr. Dozier sold his interest. In 1882 he was elected a member of the city council from the Third ward of Columbus, and then was elected mayor for two years. Mr. Dozier is a director in the North Highlands Land and Investment company, and in the North Highlands Electric Railroad company, of Columbus. He is a member of the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Red Men, and of the Elks. Mr. Dozier was married in 1877 to Miss Havanna P. Beach, a daughter of William Beach, one of the most prominent citizens of Columbus. This union has been blessed by the birth of four children, all of whom are living: William B., Helen, Daniel Preston, and Edwina.

JOHN FRANCIS FLOURNOY, one of the progressive, active and wide-awake business men of Columbus, Ga., was born in the village of Wynnton, a suburb of that city, on March 13, 1847. His father was John Manley Flournoy, a native of Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga. He was a farmer all his active life, and died in Columbus, Ga., in September, 1859, at the age of forty-five years. He was a soldier in the Creek war of 1836. Josiah Flournoy, grandfather of John F. Flournoy, was born in Chesterfield county, Va., in 1789, and came to Georgia in 1797, locating in Eatonton, Ga., and died June 14, 1832. John Francis Flournoy was reared and received his earlier education in Columbus, Ga., spending one year at the university of Alabama at Tuscaloosa, and leaving there about July 1, 1864. Soon afterward he went to Mobile, Ala., with the Alabama corps of cadets, where he went into active service, remaining there about two months. He then returned to Columbus, Ga., and joined Nelson's Georgia rangers at Florence, Ala., as a private. This company was an independent cavalry company and acted as escort to Gen. Stephen D. Lee throughout the Tennessee campaign, coming through with the army to Greensboro, N. C., where the company surrendered. Mr. Flournoy was in the battle of Chehaw, Ala., July, 1864, with Rousseau and his raiders, who were destroying the Western railway of Alabama; also the battles of Franklin, Tenn., Columbia, Tenn., and Nashville, Tenn. He had two brothers in the Confederate service, viz.: Charles Gordon Flournoy, who entered the service as a private in Nelson's rangers in 1862. He was captured at Mechanicsville, Miss., in 1863 and held until the war closed. Josiah, who enlisted in Nelson's rangers in 1864, at the age of fourteen, was sent home on account of his youth. After the surrender of Johnston's army at Greensboro, N. C., John F. Flournoy, with one dollar in silver in his pocket, started to his home in Columbus, Ga., reaching there two weeks later. Soon afterward he went to a plantation belonging to his mother in Russell county, Ala., and raised cotton there until 1873 with fair success. He managed the farm for his mother, and bought it a few years thereafter. In 1873 Mr. Flournoy returned to Columbus, Ga., and together with C. C. McGehee, H. H. Epping, Sr., and Joseph Hanserd went into the cotton warehouse and commission business. This firm (Flournoy, McGehee & Co.) was dissolved about a year later, Epping and Hanserd retiring, and Mr. B. T. Hatcher was taken in, the name being retained. The firm continued four years, when H. H. Epping, Jr., and J. F. Flournoy formed their present partnership in the warehouse business under the name of Flournoy & Epping. They handle about 20,000 bales of cotton annually. In August, 1893, Mr. Flournoy, who had for several years been a director in the Chattahoochee National bank of Columbus, Ga., was made vice-president of that institution. In 1889 Mr. Flournoy and others, for the purpose of aiding the upbuilding and development of Columbus, organized the Columbus Investment company, with a capital stock of $200,000, of which he was made president. In October, 1887, he and L. F. Garrard, of Columbus, Ga., and several others organized the Muscogee Real Estate company, with a capital stock of $300,000, which company bought 750 acres of suburban territory east of the city, calling it East Highlands. Mr. Flournoy was made president of the company at its organization, and has remained so since. How well this company succeeded a brief paragraph from the "Enquirer-Sun," a Columbus daily paper of Aug. 31, 1890, tells: "The development of East Highlands within the past year is simply wonderful. The originators of the enterprise gave the signal for the breaking of the old routine improvement plan and opened a world of progression and rapid growth, and kindled that fire and enthusiasm which has marked every successful enterprise in the recent wonderful growth of Columbus. Here, where but three years ago stood less than half a dozen old houses, are hundreds of handsome dwellings, occupied by a contented, happy and prosperous people," etc. This company also bought a controlling interest in the Columbus Railroad company, which at that time covered only about three miles of track, sixteen-pound rail on stringers, five small cars and about twenty small mules. To-day Columbus has twenty miles of the best-built and best-equipped electric street railway in the south. This is the first and the only electric street railway plant operated by electricity generated by water-power in Georgia. In 1888 Mr. Flournoy was made president of the Columbus Railroad company, and to him is Columbus indebted more than all others combined for the development of her street railway system. His pluck and energy caused to be developed at Columbus the finest electric plant south, generating electricity by water-power for the purpose of operating its street railways and for furnishing cheap power to manufacturing plants. To him also is Columbus indebted for the opening and development of the first pleasure park the citizens of that city have enjoyed. Wildwood park, near the center of the East Highlands, one of the prettiest parks in the country, stands to-day a monument to the endeavors of one who believed in providing innocent pleasure and amusement for the people. He was chairman of the committee of citizens which, in two weeks' time in 1886, raised $150,000 for the building of the Georgia Midland road. He was made vice-president of that road in 1889. He is also a director of the Columbus Water Works company. Mr. Flournoy was lieutenant in the City Light guards of Columbus in 1886, but resigned after filling that office three months. He regularly attends the Presbyterian church, though not a member of any church. He was happily married in November, 1869, to Rebecca Epping, daughter of H. H. Epping, Sr. She departed this life in May, 1873, leaving as the fruit of that union two children, viz: John F., Jr., and Rebecca. Mr. Flournoy was again married in 1881 to Mary W., daughter of the late Walker Reynolds, of Talladega county, Ala., and by this marriage has been blessed by the birth of seven children, viz.: Reynolds, Maude, Josiah, Gordon, Mary Hannah, John Manley and Walker.

Geo. F. Houston

FREDERICK B. GORDON, of the firm of Joseph Kyle & Co., Columbus, Ga., was born in Newton, a suburb of Boston, Mass., in 1857. He was reared and educated in the town of his birth and is a graduate of its high school. He left school at the age of eighteen and soon after came to Columbus, becoming a partner with J. O. Matthews & Co., of Augusta, Ga., in the commercial fertilizer business, continuing in that business for several years. In 1887 Mr. Gordon became a member of the firm of Kyle & Co. On his shoulders falls the responsibility of the active management of the business of his firm, his duties including the purchase of all the goods for the dry goods and manufacturing departments, the dictation of all correspondence and the decision of all questions of credit. So well, however, has he systematized the business of the house that he finds time to shake hands with customers of the house on the street, and to make occasional trips into the surrounding country in addition to his regular trips to the northern markets. His qualifications are best summed up by the statement that under his management the business has been more successful than at any time in its history. He was secretary and treasurer of the first exposition given by the Chattahoochee Valley Exposition company, and is now the president of the Columbus board of trade. He has served on the public library board, and is a member of the board of school trustees. Mr. Gordon was happily married in November, 1883, to Miss Rosa Crook, a step-daughter of Joseph Kyle, his partner, and this union has been blessed by the birth of two daughters: Mary Elizabeth and Margaret Crook. Mr. Gordon is a deacon in the First Presbyterian church.

ROBERT S. GRIER, general manager of the Chattahoochee Brewing company of Columbus, Ga., was born in Burlington, Vt., in 1850. His father was Thomas J. Grier, a native of Dublin, Ireland. He was a brevet-lieutenant of the City Light Artillery of Eufaula, Ala., was injured at Cumberland mountain, and after his recovery was employed by the government in getting out grindstones at Columbus, Ga. He was also at the siege of Atlanta. After the close of hostilities he was chief of police of Columbus, Ga., and held that position when the city was taken by Wilson's raiders. He died in 1884, leaving a son and four daughters, viz.: Robert S., whose name heads this article; Mary E., wife of R. A. Davis of Columbus, Ga.; Elizabeth E., wife of P. H. Kelly of Macon; Catharine C., wife of John J. Connors of Montgomery, Ala.; Matilda, wife of W. S. McKnight of Columbus, Ga. Robert S. Grier came to Raleigh, N. C., in 1855, in company with his sister, whose health had failed, and he resided in that city for four years. In 1859 he removed to Eufaula, Ala., coming to Columbus, Ga., three years later, and has since resided there continuously. He was drug clerk in Eufaula, Ala., for a time and in 1866 he entered a dry goods establishment as a clerk, remaining in that position five years. In 1871 he was engaged as clerk in the wholesale grocery concern of J. & J. Kaufman and remained with that firm eight years, going thence to Atlanta, Ga., where he entered the employ of Maddox & Rucker, wholesale tobacconists, and was with that firm until they disposed of their business to Russell & Co., three years later. His services were retained by the new firm for four years, when he returned to Columbus, Ga., and devoted his attention to a general merchandise business he had established there two years before. In 1886 he removed to Brunswick, Ga., and engaged in the beer and ice business. Disposing of that business three years later he returned to Columbus, thence traveled to Europe for pleasure; returning in the early autumn of 1893 he accepted his present position in November of that year. Just one mile west of Columbus is situated the plant of the Chattahoochee Brewing company, one of the most important and successful enterprises centered about that city. The long columns of black smoke which seem to rise unendingly above the plant are emblematic in a way of the quiet work that goes unceasingly on, both of the men and of the chemical actions of the ingredients of the beer, within the plant. The amount invested in their plant by the Chattahoochee Brewing company is $200,000. The plant contains the most modern and improved machinery, and nothing has been spared to arrange for making the beer wholly pure and first class. Much of the success which the company is attaining, and the excellent and widespread reputation which its beers are acquiring, is due in a large manner to the intelligent and industrious work of General Manager Grier. He is thoroughly conversant with all the details of beer-making and is well equipped to direct the interior operations of the company's plants, as well as the office work and the company's business with its hundreds of customers. Although he has never sought political preferment, Mr. Grier was at one time elected alderman of Columbus, but being a citizen of Brunswick, Ga., he was ineligible. He was very active in the reorganization of the Columbus Light guards after the war, and was made a lieutenant, serving as such twelve years thereafter. He is a member of the Roman Catholic church, and served as secretary and treasurer of the Young Men's Catholic union of Columbus, Ga., for several years.

GEORGE J. GRIMES, M. D., was born in the city of Columbus, Ga., Jan. 12, 1847. He began the study of medicine under his father, Dr. Thomas W. Grimes, one of the leading physicians of Columbus. Young Grimes was graduated from the Bellevue Hospital Medical college of New York city in 1868; returned to Columbus the same year and entered actively upon the practice of his profession, in which he has achieved a very wide and enviable reputation. In 1872-73 Dr. Grimes was made visiting physician to the Columbus City hospital, and from 1886 to 1891 was president of the board of health of Columbus. In this capacity he rendered much valuable service to the public in preventing, by a rigid system of quarantine, the influx of refugees from the various quarters infected with the yellow fever. In 1892 Dr. Grimes was elected first vice-president of the Georgia State Medical association. He is the author of a series of papers of much practical value to the medical profession, on the subjects of Aneurism, Hernia and Tubercular Meningitis. Personally Dr. Grimes is held in highest esteem, and is a social favorite and of Chesterfieldian manners. While held in high esteem by the rich, he commands the gratitude of the poor on account of appreciated services rendered them, and is a typical representative of the true southern gentleman, many of whom are yet found in the old county of Muscogee.

BENJAMIN THOMAS HATCHER, president of the Hatcher Manufacturing company of Columbus, Ga., was born in that city Oct. 30, 1847, being the second son of Samuel J. and Elizabeth (McGee) Hatcher. Benjamin Hatcher, the father of Samuel J. Hatcher, was a native of Chesterfield county, Va. He was a planter and died in the county of his birth. Samuel J. Hatcher was a native of Richmond, Va., and removed to Columbus, Ga., in 1838, where he died in 1861. Elizabeth (McGee) Hatcher was a daughter of Thomas McGee of Harris county, Ga., and died in 1878, leaving five children, viz.: Marshall J. of Macon, Ga.; Benjamin Thomas of Columbus, whose name heads this article; Susan A., deceased, wife of S. W. McMichael; Samuel B., of Columbus, Ga., and Mrs. W. T. Hunt of Columbus. The gentleman whose name heads this sketch received his entire education in the common schools of his native section, and early in 1864, at the tender age of seventeen, enlisted as a private in a company of youths organized in Columbus, commanded by Capt. Walter Gordon, a brother of Gen. John B. Gordon of Confederate fame. This company of the flower of the youth of Columbus tendered its services to the then Gov. Joseph E. Brown, and was ordered by him to West Point, Ga., where it was joined by the Georgia cadets, another company of young men. Both companies were stationed at West Point about two months, at the end of which time they were disbanded by Gov. Brown, on account of the extreme youth of the members. After the disbanding of the company, young Hatcher went to his father's plantation in Marion county, and a few months later joined another company, organized in Muscogee county, commanded by Capt. G. C. Reedy; but was soon thereafter placed on the staff of Gen. P. J. Phillip, ranking as sergeant, and served in that capacity until the surrender. Sergt. Hatcher participated in the battles around Atlanta, Griswoldville and Savannah; and the last time he saw fighting was with Wilson's raiders at Columbus, Ga. After the war closed Mr. Hatcher returned to the plantation in Marion county, and was engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1873, when he removed to Columbus and entered the firm of Flournoy, McGee & Co., cotton warehousemen, remaining with them two years. In 1875 Mr. Hatcher formed a partnership in the cotton business in connection with Flournoy, senior member of the firm, under the firm name of Flournoy & Hatcher, which lasted two years. Then Mr. Hatcher and C. C. McGee of Atlanta formed a partnership in the cotton business, lasting three years, McGee retiring. Mr. Hatcher then formed a partnership with Judge W. H. Brannon, but two years later he purchased his partner's interest and conducted the business alone until 1887, when he disposed of it and removed to Macon, Ga., where, in 1888, he and his brother, M. J. Hatcher of that city, organized a stock company known as the Hatcher Manufacturing company, with a capital stock of $50,000—M. J. Hatcher, president, and Benjamin T. Hatcher, vice-president. Two years later the plant of the Hatcher Manufacturing company was entirely destroyed by fire, but was rebuilt at once at Columbus. The following June Benjamin T. Hatcher bought his brother's interest, was made president and retains that position at this time. Under his wise administration of affairs the success of the enterprise has been marked, and the company now has an annual volume of business amounting to more than $60,000. In addition to his large manufacturing interests, Mr. Hatcher finds time to engage extensively in agricultural pursuits, owning large farming interests in Chattahoochee county, Ga., and Russell county, Ala., on which he produces annually about 1,000 bales of cotton and large quantities of hay and grain. He is a consistent member of the Methodist church, south, being a trustee of St. Paul's church in Columbus. Mr. Hatcher was joined in marriage Sept. 29, 1871, to Miss Martha J. Estes, daughter of the late Henson S. and Martha (Gray) Estes of Columbus, Ga., and this union has been blessed by the birth of one son and three daughters: Lottie T., wife of William B. Swift, a cotton factor of Columbus; Bessie, Benjamin Carl and Vera.

A. ILLGES, president of the Golden Foundry and Machine company of Columbus, Ga., was born in Lancaster county, Penn., in 1830. He is a son of Paul Illges, a native of Germany, who emigrated to Pennsylvania in the early part of 1800. At the age of thirteen A. Illges left school and five years later came to Columbus, and clerked for his brother, Jacob P. Illges, a groceryman. In 1857 he was given an interest in the business, which partnership was continued for two years, when he disposed of his interest to his brother. The next two years of Mr. Illges' life was devoted to traveling for his health and pleasure. In 1864 he entered the Confederate service as a member of the state troops and was present at the evacuation of Savannah. In 1867 he again entered the grocery business in Columbus, and two years later added to it a cotton business. After continuing in this nine years he went into the manufacture of jute bagging and is extensively interested in that industry at the present time. In 1889 Mr. Illges was made president of the Golden Foundry and Machine company, considered by experts as the best arranged and most substantial foundry in the southern states. Mr. Illges is a member of the board of directors of the Muscogee mills, of the Chattahoochee bank, of the Georgia Midland & Gulf railroad and of the Chattahoochee Brewing company. He also owns a one-fourth interest in a large rolling mill at Birmingham, Ala. Perhaps the best tribute that could be paid to his business ability is this opinion, expressed by one of his business associates: "One of our most energetic and highly honored citizens is Mr. A. Illges, a gentleman of untiring energy and sterling integrity, whose word is as good as his bond. By his own unaided efforts he has accumulated a handsome fortune, and is always ready to invest in any enterprise which tends to the advancement of the city of his adoption. As a member of the board of commissioners of the commons, he has for a number of years served the city faithfully, and as president of the Golden Foundry and Machine company, as a director of the Chattahoochee National bank, also of the Georgia Midland & Gulf Railroad company, the Muscogee Manufacturing company, and the Rose Hill company, his large brain has contributed greatly to their success." Being a strictly business man, Mr. Illges devotes none of his time to politics. He is a prominent member of the masonic fraternity, in which he takes much interest. Mr. Illges was married in 1879 to Miss Mary L. Barnett, a most estimable lady of Columbus, a daughter of John Barnett, deceased, who was a prominent citizen of the city. This union of hearts and hands has been blessed by the birth of two sons and five daughters, viz.: John, Paul, Mary, Fannie, Ethel, Almyr, Nouna and Abraham. The Illges' home is perhaps one of the most beautiful in Georgia.

RUFUS JONES, senior member of the firm of Jones Bros., lumber dealers, Columbus, Ga., was born in Chattahoochee county, Ga., in 1860. He was reared and educated in the county of his birth. Leaving school at the age of twenty he came to Columbus and began to work in the Columbus iron works, in the planing mill department. He left the iron works in 1882 and erected a planing mill of his own, with O. P. Willinsham as a partner, continuing in that business about two years. Then he was made foreman of the planing mill department of the Columbus iron works, where he remained four years. Mr. Jones and his brother, W. T. Jones, then erected a planing mill, and six months later W. T. Jones died. Rufus Jones then carried on the business alone five years, at the end of which time he formed a partnership with his brother, J. H. Jones. In 1893 T. A. Butts was admitted to the firm. This firm began business in Columbus in the fall of 1888 with a small capital, but as their business increased they added more machinery and erected more buildings, and so continued until to-day their plant comprises two acres of ground, nearly half of which is covered with buildings equipped with the very best and latest improved wood-working machinery, which is driven by a 100-horse-power engine, and they make any and everything that can be manufactured of wood. Among the employees are to be found some of the most skillful artisans and experts in the various departments of the business. The success of this firm has been phenomenal, for, although in business for the short space of three and a half years, their reputation has gone abroad beyond the limits of Georgia and adjoining states. Mr. Rufus Jones, the senior member of the firm is now, and has been from the beginning, the general manager, and to his close attention, untiring energy, watchful care and skillful management the phenomenal success of the young firm is chiefly due. Rufus Jones is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church south. He was happily joined in the holy bonds of wedlock to Miss Ida Hunt, daughter of W. T. Hunt, deceased. This union has been blessed by the birth of a son named Kirk.

G. GUNBY JORDAN, a prominent banker and manufacturer of Columbus, Ga., was born in Sparta, Hancock Co., Ga., in 1846. He received his education at the high school in his native town and his boyhood was spent in that immediate section of the state. At the age of seventeen he volunteered in the Confederate army and served as a private to the close of hostilities in the celebrated Nelson's rangers, an independent cavalry company, which was honored toward the close of the war by being made escort company to Lieut.-Gen. S. D. Lee. On his return from the army in 1865 Mr. Jordan attended school to the close of that year. In 1866 he was offered and accepted a position in charge of the office of the wholesale merchandising establishment of H. C. Mitchell & Co., of Columbus, and retained that position one year. In January, 1867, he was elected treasurer of the Eagle and Phoenix Manufacturing company, the largest cotton and woolen manufacturing concern in the southern states, and he has served as treasurer and credit-man of that corporation for twenty years thereafter. He was chosen cashier of the Eagle and Phoenix Savings bank in 1873 and was successively re-elected to that position for the next thirteen years, declining re-election as an officer of the Eagle and Phoenix Manufacturing company at the annual meeting of the stockholders in 1886 in order to organize the Georgia Midland & Gulf Railroad company. He was made president of the Georgia Midland Construction company, which company built the G. M. & G. Ry. from the city of McDonough, Henry Co., Ga., to Columbus, Ga., its western terminus, a distance of 100 miles. Mr. Jordan was made general manager of the Georgia Midland & Gulf Railroad company in 1889, and during his incumbency as general manager inaugurated the movement, organized and secured the charter for the Columbus Southern railroad, which was speedily built, connecting the cities of Columbus and Brunswick, via Albany, and affords an outlet to the sea for the numerous manufactures of Columbus. In 1888 Mr. Jordan organized the Third National bank of Columbus and in 1889 he organized the Columbus Savings bank, was elected president of both institutions, and sustains that relation at the present time. During the month of July, 1894, Mr. Jordan resigned his position as general manager of the Georgia Midland & Gulf railroad and severed his connection with railroad matters entirely in order to accept the appointment of railroad commissioner of the state of Georgia, which high trust was tendered him, unsolicited, by the then governor, William J. Northen. Mr. Jordan is one of the original founders of the Mercantile Credit Guarantee company of New York, and is a member of the board of directors of the company; also a member of the directors of the General Fire Extinguisher company, of New York, capitalized at $2,000,000. He was a member of the special commission created by act of the Georgia legislature for the purpose of settling the celebrated Western & Atlantic railroad betterments case, which commission unanimously and finally settled a case involving several hundred thousand dollars satisfactorily to every citizen of the state. In 1895 he was unanimously elected president of the Georgia Bankers' association. It may be truthfully stated that Mr. Jordan has been connected with every movement that tended to the advancement of the interests of Columbus during the past quarter of a century, and as he has held in the past, so he holds now, the responsible positions affecting the municipality. In this connection it is a pleasure to reprint some well deserved words of praise taken from the Columbus "Evening Ledger," of Sept. 28, 1891. In speaking of the rapid growth of Columbus during the past ten years that journal says: "We are great in mills, we are great in railroads and we are great in banking institutions, and out of these three have come all the other evidences of our greatness. Out of these have come a population doubled in ten years, of dwelling houses increased 100 per cent., of taxable values more than doubled in the last decade. Out of these have come a jobbing trade which has quadrupled in the last three years, a city with the lowest rate of taxation of any of its size in the country—a city that will rightfully claim the lead in manufactures. If it be true that from our mills, our railroads and our banks the prosperity of Columbus began, then to G. Gunby Jordan, who has done so much in the development of these three great agencies do the people owe a debt. Such talent as he possesses would have made him great in other fields. Had he sought political preferment the full measure of his ambition would have been met. He has elected to labor in and for the good of Columbus. Were he to be called to his long home all the people would rise to praise him, and no pen would be spared in writing his eulogy."

DR. SETH N. JORDAN of Columbus, Ga., was born in Hancock county, Ga., in 1854; received his earlier education at the noted high school of Prof. Richard Malcolm Johnston, now the renowned southern author. Mr. Jordan next became a student at the Washington and Lee university, Lexington, Va., and was graduated therefrom in 1872, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Immediately after his graduation in Virginia, Mr. Jordan entered the medical department of the Polytechnical university, Hanover, Germany, remaining there several months. Dr. Jordan next entered the celebrated university of Leipsic, pursuing medical studies for not quite three years, taking, in addition, a thorough course in tentameuphysicum, and then passing the state's examination, receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He returned to the United States in 1878 and was immediately elected visiting physician to the New Orleans Charity hospital, served in that capacity for a year and a half, returned to Georgia in 1881, and located at Columbus, where he has resided for the past fourteen years. Dr. Jordan has served as city physician of Columbus during several administrations of the city government, and has also been president of the board of health of Columbus for some years. He is a valuable member of the Chi Phi Greek letter fraternity, and a royal arch Mason. Dr. Jordan is an enrolled member of the Georgia State Medical association, and a member of the State Medical association of Louisiana. He is very highly esteemed as a gentleman of scholarly attainments, as a physician of much scientific knowledge and practical skill; and his extensive practice attests the fact that the people of that part of the state highly esteem his services.

JAMES A. LEWIS, who is the head of a house which does perhaps the largest retail dry goods business in the city of Columbus, Ga., was born in Fort Gaines, Early (now Clay) Co., Ga., in the year 1848. He resided in the town of his birth until he was about ten years of age, thence going to Eufaula, Ala., where he remained until 1866, and received the principal part of his education. Soon after coming to Columbus, Ga., Mr. Lewis engaged in clerical work for his uncle, D. D. Gauley, remaining in his employ two years, when he was given an interest in the business, the firm name being Gauley & Lewis. This firm continued the dry goods business until the death of Mr. Gauley, in 1878, at which time Mr. Lewis assumed the entire management and conducted the business alone about three years, after which he had several working partners in the business. Mr. Lewis holds several important positions in the business world of Columbus, being vice-president of the Columbus Savings bank and a member of the board of directors of the Third National bank, and of the Columbus and Gulf Navigation company. In 1879, he was united in marriage to Miss Willie Hood, daughter of Dr. E. C. Hood, a prominent physician of Harris county, Ga. She died in 1871, leaving as the fruit of that union a daughter, Vernon. In 1888, Mr. Lewis led to the marriage altar Miss Robena Bass of Columbus, Ga., the daughter of John H. Bass, a prominent citizen. This union has been blessed by the birth of four children, viz.: Bass, Fannie E., James A., Jr., and Robert M. A. Lewis, the father of the gentleman whose name heads this article, was a native of New York city, and came to Georgia in 1840. He was in business for a time at Lumpkin, Stewart Co., Ga., thence moving to Fort Gaines, Ga., where he did business until 1858, when he removed to Eufaula, Ala. In 1876 he came to Columbus, Ga., and was engaged in the shoe business until his decease, which occurred two years later. He had but two children, both of whom survive him, viz.: James A. Lewis, the subject of this sketch, of Columbus, Ga., and Mrs. Fannie S. Shields, wife of W. S. Shields, of Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Lewis is not a member of any church or secret order.

HON. WILLIAM A. LITTLE, who is probably the leader at the exceptionably fine bar at Columbus, Ga., was born in Talbot county, Ga., Nov. 6, 1839, and is a son of William G. and M. A. (Holt) Little. William G. Holt was born in Edgefield district, S. C. (1808), moved to Georgia in 1829 and settled at Milledgeville, Baldwin Co. He was a physician by profession, having graduated from the old Jefferson Medical college, Philadelphia, Pa. He subsequently moved to Wilkinson county, Ga., and represented that county and his district in the house of representatives and in the state senate. In 1837 he removed to Talbot county, Ga., where he died in March, 1877. He was a son of Thomas Little, of Scotch extraction, a native of South Carolina. Mrs. M. A. (Holt) Little was born in Putnam county, Ga., in 1819, a daughter of William Holt, a native of Virginia, and of English extraction. William A. Little had no brothers and but one sister, now Mrs. Mary L. Bruce. He was taken to Macon, Ga., when ten years of age, but was principally reared and received his earlier education in Talbot county. He attended Franklin college, at Athens, Ga., and Oglethorpe university, at Midway, near Milledgeville, Ga., graduating from the latter institution with the degree Bachelor of Arts, in 1859. He read law with Smith & Pou and was admitted to the bar, and began the practice at Talbotton, Ga.; but not being satisfied with his legal education he entered the law department of Yale university. He volunteered as a private in July, 1861, in the Bibb county cavalry, Georgia state troops, and when his term of service had expired, joined Company C of the Third Georgia cavalry, but was subsequently transferred to Company E of the Twentieth Georgia battalion. In the cavalry of the western army, under Gen. Joseph

Wm A Little

Henry Wheeler, he participated in all the battles of Bragg's campaign through Kentucky and Tennessee. He was made a prisoner at New Haven, Ky., and was carried to Louisville, where he was detained for thirty days and then regularly exchanged. During the latter part of the war he was transferred to duty on the Georgia and Florida coasts, and promoted to be a lieutenant of cavalry. He was made a captain a little later, in which position he served until the surrender. When peace was declared he returned to his home in Talbotton and resumed the practice of his profession. In 1866 he was elected county solicitor for Talbot county, and served until 1868, and shortly afterward he was elected assistant secretary of the state senate. He was appointed by Gov. Smith solicitor-general of the Chattahoochee circuit in 1872, and removed to Columbus. In 1877, when the constitutional convention was called, he was elected as one of the members of that body from the Twenty-fourth district and served with distinction, having been the originator and champion of many of the reforms brought about by that instrument. In 1882 he was elected to the house of representatives from Muscogee county, and served as chairman of the finance committee, the most important in that body. He was re-elected in 1884, and upon the assembling of that body was chosen speaker. In 1886 he was again elected to the legislature and was again chosen speaker. In September, 1891, he was appointed attorney-general of Georgia, and served in that position until October, 1892, refusing to become a candidate for the office at the end of his term. Col. Little combines in a rare degree the qualities of a genial gentleman and those of a man of fine business capacity, possessing varied and extensive information, coupled with high integrity. Few men, indeed, have lived so long in political favor and made no enemies. The secret of his life, perhaps, rests in his stanch adherence to principle, and a thorough performance of every official and social duty. He is modest, unselfish and thoroughly amiable in disposition. As a lawyer, he is profound, extremely quick of perception, firm, discreet, courteous to the opposition, and a thorough master of the science of the law and precedent. Politically he is a thorough democrat, is a master Mason and a member of the I. O. O. F. In November, 1866, Col. Little was happily married to Miss Jennie Dozier, a daughter of Emily (Huff) and John B. Dozier, a prominent planter of Muscogee county. This union has been blessed by the birth of two sons, viz.: William G., who was educated in the public schools of Columbus and at the celebrated Bingham school, North Carolina, and now in business in Columbus; and John D., a prominent young attorney in partnership with his father, in Columbus. He is a graduate from both the literary and the law departments of the university of Georgia, at Athens.

DR. J. H. M'DUFFIE, of Columbus, Ga., was born at Fayetteville, N. C., Dec. 12, 1859, receiving his primary education in the town of his birth. In the latter part of 1879 he removed to Keyser, N. C., where he was engaged in the naval store and lumber business with his father and brother until 1884. An opportunity now presenting itself for carrying out the desire he had cherished for several years, he began the study of medicine under the tutorage of Dr. J. A. Sexton, of Raleigh, N. C., and in the fall of 1885 began his attendance upon lectures in the medical department of the university of Maryland. Here he remained, serving as resident student in the university hospital and attending lectures until March, 1887, when he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Immediately after his graduation he entered actively upon the practice of his profession at Keyser, N. C., where he resided until October, 1888, when he resumed the study of medicine at the New York Polyclinic Medical college, taking a post-graduate course.

From March, 1889, to July, 1892, Dr. McDuffie resided in Anniston, Ala., practicing his profession, and at the end of that time he removed to his present home at Columbus and has resided there ever since. He is a member of the Georgia State Medical association, and while a citizen of Alabama was a member of the examining board of censors for Calhoun county and secretary of the Calhoun County Medical society. Dr. McDuffie was married in the year 1882 to Miss Sallie H. Page, a daughter of Lewis Page, a prominent citizen of Aberdeen, Moore Co., N. C., and five children have blessed their union. Dr. McDuffie is a Knight of Pythias and a consistent member of the Presbyterian church.

MORGAN M'MICHAEL, deceased, attorney at law, of Columbus, Ga., was born in Schley county, Ga., in 1866, and was the eldest son of Dr. J. R. McMichael and Ellen A. (Stephens) McMichael. His boyhood days were spent on his father's farm, entering the Buena Vista, Ga., high school in his fifteenth year. After completing the course at that institution he attended the select school of Prof. Mathes, at Americus, Ga., and later was graduated from the Southern Business university, Atlanta. He read law the following year under the tutorage of Judge M. Butt, Buena Vista, and was admitted to practice at the October term of Marion superior court (1887), Judge (ex-governor) James M. Smith presiding. So creditable was his examination that he was highly complimented by the members of the local bar. He practiced law successfully for three years at Buena Vista, removing to the city of Columbus in December, 1890, where he at once came to the front as one of the leading attorneys of that city as the junior member of the firm of Wimbish, Worrill & McMichael. He was an active and valuable member of the Georgia Bar association, served as a member of the city council of Columbus, and as chairman of the finance committee in that body, and devoted much study and labor to the preparation of a tax ordinance which has proved the most satisfactory ordinance the city of Columbus ever had. In 1894 Mr. McMichael was chosen as one of the representatives from Muscogee county to the state legislature, representing his constituency faithfully and honorably. He was a very zealous democrat and took a keen interest in all public matters. He was possessed of good judgment, steadfast convictions and was a lucid and forcible speaker. Mr. McMichael was happily married to Miss Minnie Shepherd, a beautiful and accomplished lady, who by his sudden death has suffered a crushing and irreparable bereavement.

DR. J. J. MASON was born in Greensboro, Ga., July 23, 1826. He was reared in Greene and Putnam counties to the age of fourteen, going with his father to Wetumpka, Ala. Mr. Mason lived in Wetumpka several years and later he went to the Louisiana Medical college, in New Orleans, and then to the Charleston (S. C.) Medical college in 1848. He had studied medicine four years before entering a medical college. After his graduation he located in Auburn, Ala., and resided there until 1866, acting as volunteer surgeon in the hospitals at Auburn during the civil war. In 1866 he came to Columbus, Ga., where he has since resided and practiced, and he is now the oldest physician of that city. Dr. Mason is a chapter Mason, an Independent Odd Fellow, and a consistent member of the Baptist church. His father was Wyley W. Mason, a native of Georgia, a lawyer, and for many years was chancellor of the middle judicial district of Alabama. He was also a member of the Georgia legislature when a young man.

JOHAN SMITH MATTHEWS, city treasurer of Columbus, Ga., was born in Chambers county, Ala., Sept. 18, 1846, and resided there until the age of twenty-two. He is one of two sons of Ralph Matthews, who was born in Wilkes county, Ga., in 1808, and died in Opelika, Ala., in February, 1871. He was a farmer all his life. The brother of John S. Matthews is William H., who was in the Fourteenth Alabama regiment, C. S. A., and served throughout the late civil war. He is now a resident of Wooley, Ark. John Smith Matthews, the gentleman whose name heads this article, was educated in the private schools of Chambers county, Ala., and farmed on the estate of his father until January, 1864, when he enlisted in Bonand's battalion of artillery, which battalion was afterward consolidated with the First Alabama regiment. Mr. Matthews went in as a private and served until the surrender of Gen. Johnston at Greensboro, N. C. He was in the battle of Olustee, and at the siege of Charleston, S. C., and then at Averasboro and Bentonville, N. C. After the war he returned to his home and attended school for a time. In October, 1868, he came to Columbus and entered the cotton firm of Allen, Preer & Illges as a clerk, remaining with them three years. He then began to buy cotton on his own account and carried on that business until 1878, when he formed a partnership with E. D. Swift under the firm name of Swift & Co., which business was continued until 1885. Mr. Matthews conducted the cotton business alone from September, 1885, until January, 1887, when he accepted a position in the Columbus postoffice as registry clerk, serving in that capacity until August, 1888. He then entered the employ of J. R. Holts & Co., cotton factors, and remained with them until September, 1889, at which time he was elected city treasurer and has been re-elected every year since that time. Mr. Matthews is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men and is the keeper of wampum of Pawnee tribe No. 27. He is a steward of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal church south, of Columbus, and also a teacher in its Sunday school. He was married June 4, 1872, to Miss Mary F., daughter of the late Isaac McFarland, a prominent planter of Harris county, Ga., and this union has been blessed by the birth of two children: Mary, wife of Hayward J. Pearce, of Gainesville, Ga., and Ralph.

BRICK S. MILLER, of the law firm of Miller, Wynne & Miller of Columbus, Ga., was born in Marion county, Ga., Feb. 14, 1868. He is a son of Judge E. A. Miller of Buena Vista, Ga., who was one of the best known men in Georgia. He was born in Columbia county, but his family moved to Monroe county while he was yet a boy, and there he received his early education. In 1843 he moved to Marion county and commenced the study of law at Talbotton, in the office of George W. Towns (afterward governor) and L. B. Smith. His studies continued five years, and in 1848, when the county seat of Marion was established at Buena Vista, he moved there and went into partnership with John Campbell, who was at that time solicitor-general of the Chattahoochee circuit. The partnership continued several years, and when the firm dissolved the young lawyer formed an association with Mark H. Blandford, who later became one of the justices of the supreme court, and who now lives in Columbus, Ga. His next partnership was with Judge William B. Butt, who also now lives in Columbus. In 1852 he was elected the first ordinary of Marion county. In 1855 Judge Miller determined to try a new business, and he became the owner and editor of the "Buena Vista Advertiser," which he continued to conduct with great success until the war broke out. As a major of militia, Judge Miller distinguished himself during the war, and at the battle of Griswoldville he lost a great number of his command. When peace was declared Judge Miller settled down as a lawyer and farmer, and resided at Buena Vista until his death. On several occasions Judge Miller represented his county in the general assembly to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. He was a democrat from the time he was a young man until the time of his death, and was always foremost in the battle for the supremacy of democratic principles. In 1868 Judge Miller joined the Baptist church. Judge Miller's family consisted of three sons and three daughters. The sons are: Mr. Edward Miller of Americus, and B. S. and T. T. Miller of Columbus. The daughters are: Mrs. Andrews Ashurst of Florida, and Mrs. C. H. McCaul and Mrs. William Crawford of Buena Vista. Brick S. Miller was reared and received his earlier education in the town of Buena Vista, and was graduated from the university of Georgia, Athens, with the degree of bachelor of law, in the class of 1888. During his college course he established a fine reputation as an orator and in consequence was chosen one of the champion debaters of the Demosthenean Literary society. He also delivered a eulogy on the life and character of Dr. Patrick H. Mell, the deceased chancellor of the university, which is classed as the finest tribute ever paid to the memory of that remarkable man. Soon after his graduation Mr. Miller returned to his home in Buena Vista and entered upon the practice of law, giving up his practice a year later in order to travel and thus broaden his views by actual contact with the population of the different sections of the country. In August, 1890, he located in Columbus and formed a partnership for the practice of law with his brother, T. T. Miller, to which firm Mr. E. J. Wynne was admitted in September, 1893. This law firm now does an extensive practice and its members are regular retained attorneys of some of the most important corporations and largest wholesale houses in Columbus. Mr. Miller was president of the Young Men's Democratic league of Muscogee county in the spring of 1894, and took an active part in securing the registration of the voters of that county. He secured the actual registration of 3,572 voters out of a total of about 3,600, which is regarded as the best piece of political strategy ever enacted there. Mr. Miller was selected as a delegate to the convention which nominated William Yates Atkinson as governor of Georgia, and took a very active part in the campaign for Atkinson prior to the convention. He was also a delegate to the congressional convention, at Warm Springs, Ga., in August, 1894. Mr. Miller has never sought political preferment; he was urged to be a candidate for the legislature in 1894, but sacrificed his own opportunities in favor of a friend. He is unmarried, a member of the Improved Order of Red Men and of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

MONTAGUE M. MOORE, clerk of the city council of Columbus, Ga., was born in that city Oct. 14, 1837, the son of James S. and Martha M. A. (Tarver) Moore. He is the eldest of three surviving sons, the other two of whom, James B. and George T., reside in the state of Texas, four sisters and four brothers being dead. The gentleman whose name heads this article had four brothers who saw service in the Confederate army during the civil war, viz.: Tiffany T. Moore, a member of the Columbus volunteers, and afterward in the Confederate service on the Chattahoochee river; James B. Moore, who was a member of the Seventeenth Georgia regiment, and was made a major of infantry and served throughout the war; Douglas C. Moore, who enlisted in January, 1861, served three months at Pensacola, Fla., and then enlisted in the Columbus volunteers, was made an orderly sergeant, and was killed in a railroad accident when that company left Columbus, Aug. 14, 1861; and George T. Moore, who enlisted in Gen. John H. Morgan's command and served under that renowned cavalryman to the close of hostilities. Montague M. Moore received a good education in the schools of Columbus, but before finishing his studies accepted a position in the Columbus postoffice under Col. Robert C. Forsyth, where he remained from 1855 to 1863. In 1861 he enlisted in the Columbus volunteers and was assigned to the Seventeenth Georgia regiment, but, owing to ill health, he saw no service. Later he was a lieutenant in a company of the militia reserve of Georgia and did service at Macon and Atlanta. In July, 1863, he was elected clerk of the city council of Columbus, and retained that position while in the military service of his state, and since then to the present he has been re-elected by the people or by the city council to the same position. He married, June 16, 1869, Miss Sarah E., daughter of John and Elizabeth (Jordan) Peabody, of Columbus, and this union has been blessed by the birth of five children, viz.: James M., Mary P., Lulu D., John P., and Ethel T. Both Mr. and Mrs. Moore are members of St. Luke's Methodist Episcopal church south. Mr. Moore is a Knight Templar Mason and was recorder of St. Aldemar commandery for many years, and until it ceased to exist was master of Adoniram Lodge of Perfection. He is also a member of these fraternal orders: Knights of Honor, K. of L. of Honor, Ancient Order of United Workmen, Royal Arcanum, National Union, and the Improved Order of Red Men. Of the ancestors of Mr. Moore, Killian Hogeboom came to this country from Holland about the year 1712, and settled in the state of New York, in what is now Columbia county, where the original manor house is still standing and in the possession of his descendants, the present owner being the uncle of the gentleman whose name heads this article. Jeremiah, the eldest son of Killian, was born in Holland, April 5, 1712. He married Janita Van Allen, Nov. 11, 1741, and to them were born six children, the second of whom, Stephen, was born Aug. 16, 1744, and married Nov. 24, 1763, Hellitje Muller. He was for several terms a member of the assembly and senate of the state of New York, and of its constitutional convention in 1801; he died April 2, 1814, and his wife died March 10, 1812. To them were born six children, one of whom was the mother of Gen. James Watson Webb, and one, Nancy, born July 22, 1774, married Benjamin Moore, and was the mother of nine children. She died April 14, 1844, and he, born Jan. 28, 1766, died Nov. 29, 1829. James S. Moore, the father of Montague M. Moore, was the sixth child of Benjamin and Nancy (Hogeboom) Moore, and was born May 6, 1800, in Coxsackie, Greene Co., N. Y.; came to New Orleans in 1831 and to Columbus, Ga., in 1832; married March 1, 1835, and died in Lee county, Ala., near Columbus, Ga., on March 24, 1879, a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church. He followed merchandising in Columbus, Ga., and Girard, Ala., until 1858, when he removed to Auburn, Ala., and kept a public hotel eight years, thence removing to Lee county, Ala., where he followed the business of agriculture until the year of his death. Prior to the civil war he was postmaster at Girard, Ala., for many years. Mrs. Martha M. A. Moore, wife of James S. Moore, was born in Clinton, Jones Co., Ga., Nov. 3, 1815, and was a daughter of Elisha and Maria L. (Sanders) Tarver. Her father, Elisha, son of Billison and Selah Tarver, was born Dec. 25, 1787, and died March 18, 1860. Her mother, Maria L. Tarver, was born Aug. 6, 1793, and died Sept. 9, 1851. Of the ancestors of Mrs. M. M. Moore, Francis Peabody, of St. Albans, England, born 1614, came to New England in 1635. He married Mary Foster, daughter of Reginald Foster, whose family is honorably mentioned in the Lay of the Last Minstrel and in Marmion by Sir Walter Scott. She died April 9, 1705. He died Feb. 19, 1697. They were the parents of fourteen children, of whom the eldest, John, was born in 1642; married, first, Hannah Andrews, Nov. 23, 1665; she died Dec. 4, 1702, and he married Sarah Moseley, Nov. 26, 1703. To his first wife were born ten children, of whom David was born July 12, 1678, and married Sarah Pope, of Dartmouth, Mass. He died April 1, 1726, and his widow died Sept. 29, 1756. They had eleven children, the first, Thomas, being the direct ancestor of Mrs. Moore, while the tenth, David, was the grandfather of George Peabody, Esq., of London. Thomas was born Sept. 22, 1705, and married Ruth Osgood, of Andover, Mass., Nov. 2, 1738. He died in April, 1758. His widow married Isaac Osgood, and died in February, 1803. Thomas was the father of nine children, the last, Nathan, born Aug. 31, 1756, married Polly Baker, July 30, 1786. Nathan was the father of John, the father of Mrs. Moore, who was born in Boston, Dec. 13, 1790, married in Washington county, Ga., Elizabeth Coles Jordan (afterward Hodges), June 7, 1826, and died in Columbus, Ga., Sept. 17, 1842. His wife, daughter of Jesse and Jane Jordan, was born in Washington county, Ga., June 25, 1809, and died Nov. 5, 1878, in Columbus, Ga.

DR. JOHN NORWOOD, of Columbus, Ga., was born in Hillsboro, N. C., in 1836. He received his primary education in the town of his birth, afterward becoming a student in the university of North Carolina, at Chapel Hill, but never received a literary degree. He was graduated from the old Jefferson Medical college at Philadelphia, Pa., in 1859, and located soon thereafter in Russell county, Ala., entering actively upon the practice of his profession. During the fall of 1861 Dr. Norwood volunteered as assistant surgeon to the Sixth Alabama regiment, Confederate states army, and the following year was commissioned assistant surgeon to Waddell's artillery, serving as such until after the siege of Vicksburg. After the capture of Vicksburg by the Federals Dr. Norwood was made surgeon to the Sixty-fourth Georgia regiment, with the rank of major, though he failed to receive his commission, and several months later rejoined Waddell's battery, remaining with that command until it was mustered out of service at the close of the war. After the cessation of hostilities Dr. Norwood returned to his home in Alabama and was actively engaged in the practice of his profession until 1884, at which time he removed to his present residence in Columbus, and has since been continuously engaged in the practice of medicine at that city. He sustains a desirable rank among the members of his profession. He is a consistent member of the Presbyterian church. His father, John W. Norwood, was a native of North Carolina, a lawyer, and practiced many years at Hillsboro, in that state.

FRANCIS D. PEABODY, a noted lawyer of Columbus, Ga., was born on his father's farm near that city, Nov. 24, 1854, and was the youngest of nine children of Charles A. and Frances Harriet (Williams) Peabody. His parents were born in Connecticut—his father in Bridgeport and his mother in Hartford—but came to Georgia and settled in Columbus in 1833. Mr. Peabody was prepared for college, by that distinguished educator, Prof. Otis D. Smith, in one of the famous "old field schools" of the day. His attendance upon school though was irregular, as he was often called upon to help get the crop "out of the grass." At fourteen he was compelled to stop school and to go regularly to work on the farm. For three years he made a regular and steady "hand," doing all kinds of work done on a farm; but he specially liked to plow, and could do more plowing in a day than any man on the farm. At seventeen he rented his father's farm and stock, and made a fine crop, much to the amusement, and somewhat to the astonishment of his father, who was rather disposed to predict a failure at the beginning of the season. At eighteen he entered the State Agricultural and Mechanical college of Alabama, at Auburn, where his old teacher had preceded him in the capacity of professor of English, which he afterward exchanged for mathematics. Here the struggle of his life began. Full-grown physically, his limited text-book learning almost all forgotten in his four years of farm-toil, he presented the anomaly of reciting side by side in the lowest class in college with little fellows that hardly reached to his shoulders. But though illy prepared in text books, his life had been spent in an intellectual atmosphere; his father and mother both being people of culture and wide reading, and what the boy had unconsciously absorbed, now stood him well in hand; and the brawn that came to him from his out-door life backed up the demands made on it by his unremitting study. He was graduated in 1876 with the first honor of his class. Before graduation he had already secured a position as teacher of mathematics and tactics in a private military school in Hopkinsville, Ky. Here he remained three years, making a marked success as a teacher. During this time he read law at night and on Saturdays reciting to Judge Champlin, who kindly took an interest in his studies, and was admitted to the Kentucky bar before the close of his school term in 1879. In June of that year he went to St. Louis, Mo., and when the law school of Washington university for that year was formed, he entered both junior and senior classes, and before the end of the term stood an examination in open court for admission to the St. Louis bar. During his attendance at law school he earned the money to pay his expenses by teaching a night school. Thus single-handed and alone, without one dollar of help from any source, he fitted himself for his life calling. Early in 1881 Mr. Peabody returned to Georgia and married Miss Myrtice Nelms of Griffin, daughter of the late Judge William Nelms of that place. It was his intention at that time to locate in the far southwest; but taking a visit with his bride to his aged parents at the family homestead, they persuaded him to locate in Columbus. This decision he has probably never had cause to regret, for his rise at the bar has been rapid, and his position sure. He has been identified more or less with all the public enterprises of his city, and is known, not only as a sound lawyer of ability, but as an enterprising and progressive citizen. Mr. Peabody has never held public office, nor aspired to do so. In 1892 he consented to stand as alternate presidential elector on the democratic ticket, which ticket he has never failed to vote since attaining his majority. In 1894, owing to his keen interest in educational affairs, and because of his peculiar fitness for the place, he was appointed a member of the board of educators in Columbus, where he has since done faithful and efficient service. In 1895 Mr. Peabody was elected by the city council of Columbus, as corporation counsel for the city of Columbus, a position of great responsibility and importance. It is a matter of pride with him that his earnings have all been expended in the upbuilding and improvement of his native town.

GIDEON J. PEACOCK, a leading clothing manufacturer of Columbus, Ga., was born in Upson county, Ga., Jan. 15, 1837. His father was Washington Peacock, a native of North Carolina. He devoted his whole life to agricultural pursuits and came to Georgia about 1834, settling in Upson county, thence removing to Covington county, Ala., and departed this life there in 1881, at the age of eighty-one years. He was superintendent of schools in that county for several years. He had two sons, both of whom saw service in the Confederate army, viz.: Benjamin, a member of the western army, who was captured after two months' service, was sent to Johnson's Island as a prisoner of war and was never heard of afterward. It is presumed that he died at that place. Gideon J. Peacock lived in Upson county, Ga., until the age of sixteen.. Attended the Hootensville academy in that county and in 1853 came to Columbus, where he began to clerk for Barnett, Ellison & Co., dry goods. He was with this firm until 1860, when Mr. Ellison retired and Mr. Peacock then became a member of the firm, which was Barnett, Chapman & Co. In April, 1861, Mr. Peacock went into the Confederate service as private in the City Light guards of Columbus, Ga., which, together with the Macon Volunteers, the Floyd Rifles and the Spalding Greys was afterward consolidated into the Second Georgia battalion. After the battle of Fredericksburg he was made lieutenant and served as such until the close of the war, but during the last twelve months of the war commanded his company. He participated in the battles around Richmond, Seven Pines, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Drewry's Bluff, Gettysburg, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania court house, Cold Harbor, battles at Petersburg and ten days of fighting on the retreat, which ended at Appomattox—one of the fights being at Farmville, Va. Lieut. Peacock, together with Maj. Charles J. Moffett of Columbus, Ga., and Lieut. J. W. English, now of Atlanta, Ga., received the demand of Gen. Grant on Lee for the surrender of Appomattox court house. The circumstances were as follows: On the evening of April 7, 1865, two days before the surrender, two or three officers of the Federal army came in front of the Confederate lines near Farmville, Va., waving a flag of truce. Maj. Moffett, who was in command of that part of the Confederate lines, recognized the flag and inquired what was wanted. The Federal party replied that they were the bearers of important dispatches from Gen. Grant to Gen. Lee. Maj. Moffett commanded them to stand where they were until he could communicate with his superior officers, and, later, the dispatches were taken by Maj. Moffett and Adjt.-Gen. Perry. When Maj. Moffett returned to his command Lieut. Peacock held the dispatches in his hand for a moment and saw the address. The dispatches were delivered to Gen. Lee soon afterward. After the surrender Mr. Peacock returned to Columbus, partly on foot, reaching that city May 1, 1865. He at once entered the dry goods store of W. H. Phelps and clerked for him a year, then became a member of the dry goods firm of J. A. Chapman & Co. for two years. After that the firm of Peacock, Chapman & Co. was organized, with which he remained in business about four years, when Mr. Peacock sold his interest, and with E. S. Swift organized a dry goods firm, known as Peacock & Swift, which continued for three years. In 1875 Mr. Peacock sold his interest in the dry goods business to Mr. Smith; and two years later started a clothing manufactory with a capital of $2,500. In 1892 the firm became the G. J. Peacock Clothing company, with a capital stock of $26,000. They now do a business of $65,000 annually, and give employment to more than seventy-five persons. Mr. Peacock is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, and is chairman of the board of stewards of St. Luke's. Mr. Peacock was married in 1873 to Miss Josephine, daughter of the late John Banks of Columbus, Ga., the founder of the Howard factory of Columbus, now the Eagle & Phoenix Manufacturing company. This union has been blessed by the birth of two sons and two daughters, viz.: Sarah Watkins, Elberta, James G. and John B. Peacock.

GEORGE A. PEARCE, president of the City Mills company of Columbus, Ga., was born in Hamilton, Harris Co., Ga., Aug. 8, 1854. His father, Tillman I. Pearce, was a native of Harris county, was a carpenter before the war, and a miller after the war; and died in 1893. Tillman I. Pearce married Nancy Thomasson, and they had nine children, all of whom are now living. At eight years of age George A. Pearce removed with his parents to Russell county, Ala., locating at Seale, where he was reared and educated. He attended Mercer university, at Macon, Ga., for two years, and then he returned to Russell county, Ala., where his father owned two flour mills, and managed one of them for his father for five years. He came to Columbus, in 1877, and started a small mill, ran it two years, then entered the city mills, operated by J. N. Embry; he worked there as assistant miller six months, and was then given charge of the whole business. Three or four years later J. N. Embry sold out to Frank Mitchell, who retained Mr. Pearce for four years, when he bought Mr. Mitchell out. In 1890 it was incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000, and Mr. Pearce was made president, and Thomas Salisbury secretary and treasurer. George A. Pearce is a consistent member of the Baptist church. He was married Nov. 15, 1878, to Miss Ida Embry, daughter of J. N. Embry, a native of Columbus, and who died in 1893. This union has been blessed by the birth of five daughters: Odelle, Effie May, Kate Mitchell, George Alma, and Mabel Clare.

WILLIAM REDD, JR., postmaster of Columbus, Ga., was born in Troup county, Ga., Sept. 27, 1839, and came with his parents to Columbus, Ga., five years later. His father was James K. Redd, a native of Greene county, Ga., who was a merchant and planter, led a very active life, and died in 1877, aged seventy-four years. During the civil war he held an important and responsible position in the paymaster's department. William Redd, Jr., had two brothers in the Confederate service, viz.: Nicholas L., who was a second lieutenant in a Georgia regiment, and died in 1884; and Charles, who enlisted as a private in the celebrated Nelson rangers, who acted as escort to Gen. Stephen D. Lee. He served throughout the war and died from disease contracted in the service in 1865. William Redd, Jr., was reared and received his earlier education in Columbus. He was graduated from Oglethorpe university, Midway, Ga., in 1860. After his graduation he returned to his home in Columbus, and entered the grocery store of his father, James K. Redd, continuing in that position until April, 1861, when he went away as a private with the Columbus guards, which was assigned to the Second Georgia regiment. In July, 1861, he was made brevet second lieutenant of Company C, Second Georgia regiment, serving as such until the reorganization of that regiment, in April, 1862. The term of service of the regiment having expired, Lieut. Redd was promoted to the position of adjutant and served as such until the close of hostilities. He participated in the battles of Munson's Hill, Yorktown, Garnett's Farm, Seven Pines, Malvern Hill, Second Manassas, Thoroughfare Gap, Sharpsburg and Fredericksburg. After the last named battle he was sent home on a sick furlough. Recovering from his sickness Adj. Redd rejoined his regiment and participated in the battles of Reams Station, Knoxville, Tenn., the Wilderness, and many minor skirmishes on retreat to Richmond. After the battles of Fort Harrison and Petersburg he was given leave of absence and saw no more fighting. He was wounded in front of Petersburg twice, and once at the battle of Fort Harrison, Va. After the war closed he returned to his home at Columbus without a dollar, and opened a general store, in a small way, with a stock of about $500, carrying it on about four years, and clearing a small amount. He then entered the depot of the Rome & Columbus Railroad company at Columbus, Ga., as general agent, and a year later was made superintendent and treasurer of the road, acting as such about six years. He then entered the railroad contracting business and built twelve miles of the Pensacola & Selma railroad. Then he came back to Georgia and built the Talbotton railroad, eight miles long, running from Bostwick to Talbotton, Ga. Mr. Redd next put the roadbed of the Georgia Western (now the Georgia Pacific) in order from Atlanta to Austell, Ga., a distance of about twenty miles. Then he took a sub-contract on the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia railroad, to build five miles of it in Paulding county, Ga. Returning to Columbus he was made superintendent and treasurer of the Columbus Railroad company (a street railway), serving as such one year, when he was made general superintendent of the construction of the Georgia Midland & Gulf railroad, acting as superintendent under the contractor, P. P. Dickinson, and was so engaged for about fifteen months. Mr. Redd was next made general superintendent of the railroad construction of the Chattahoochee Brick company and acted in that capacity for four years. During that time the company built part of the Atlanta & Hawkinsville (Ga.) railroad, the Chattanooga, Rome & Columbus railroad, the Columbus Southern, from Columbus, Ga., to Albany, Ga., and the Buena Vista & Ellaville, from Columbus to Ellaville, Ga. Mr. Redd then returned to Columbus and entered the real estate and fire insurance business, continuing in that business until May, 1893, when he was made postmaster at Columbus. Mr. Redd is a master Mason. He was married in November, 1865, to Miss Sarah H., daughter of the late Hon. Hines Holt of Columbus, who was a member of congress before the war, of the Confederate congress during the war, and was a member of the First constitutional convention held in Milledgeville, in 1865, departing this life while in that city attending the convention. Mr. Redd's marriage has been blessed by the birth of three daughters, viz.: Mary L., Sallie Willie, and Helen Holt.

COL. BEALE H. RICHARDSON, editor and proprietor of the Columbus "Enquirer-Sun," the leading daily of Western Georgia and Eastern Alabama, was born in Baltimore, Md., Oct. 11, 1841. His father was Judge Beale H. Richardson, a native of Hartford county, Md., was a journalist and died in 1877 at the age of seventy-four years. He served in the war of 1812, was chosen an elector on the Andrew Jackson ticket, was appointed an appraiser in the Baltimore custom house under the Buchanan administration, was for a number of terms a member of the Maryland legislature, and also served for several years in the city council of Baltimore. He was editor of the "Argus," published in Baltimore, up to 1863, and at that time the paper was suppressed by Gen. Robert Schenck, and its editor banished from Maryland, coming to Montgomery, Ala., where he edited the "Montgomery Mail" for nearly a year. After the close of hostilities he returned to Baltimore, was appointed judge of the appeal tax court in the autumn of 1865 and held that position at the time of his death in 1877. Beale H. Richardson, son of the foregoing, attended school in Baltimore until his twentieth year, at that time entering the office of the "Evening Argus," the only afternoon democratic daily then published in Baltimore, and owned and edited by his father. Young Richardson maintained charge of the mechanical department of the paper until shortly after the breaking out of hostilities in 1861, and the following May came south and enlisted in Company A of the First Maryland cavalry, in Richmond. He served as a private in that company until just before the battle of Gettysburg, when he was made a special courier and placed on the staff of Gen. E. Ewell, serving on that staff until the retreat into Virginia. He was courier later on the staff of Gen. Jubal Early during his feint on Washington, and served in that capacity until June, 1864, when he was placed on detail duty under Maj. Harry Gilmer during the raid in Maryland, when Chambersburg and Gov. Bradford's houses were burned. During the raid young Richardson recruited twenty-one men and brought them to Sheppardstown, Va., where they enlisted as soldiers in the Confederate army. Returning to winter quarters in Virginia, he participated in the battles at Centerville and Manassas, being badly injured during the latter engagement by having his horse shot from under him and receiving also a severe sabre cut in the head. In November, 1864, Mr. Richardson was transferred to the gulf department as a purchasing agent, with headquarters at Mobile, and was in charge of the blockade runners at that port, with the rank of captain. He remained in Mobile until the evacuation of that city by the Confederates, April 12, 1865. Afterward he was under Gen. Dick Taylor and was with him until the surrender at Meridian, Miss., May 23, 1865. He participated in the battle of Sharpsburg, was captured and carried to Fort Delaware, where he was held a prisoner of war from September, 1863, to December, 1863. He was also in the battles of Fredericksburg, Maryland Heights, Manchester, Harper's Ferry, Charlestown, Front Royal, Gettysburg, Chambersburg, Manassas, Brandy Station, Fisher's Hill, Newmarket, Martinsburg, Harrisonburg, Woodstock and Bridgewater. After the close of hostilities Capt. Richardson went to Mobile, Ala., and sold a watch he had captured for $40, investing the proceeds in civilian clothing. Soon after by chance he met on the streets of Mobile Maj. Henry Balantyne, the owner of the "Mobile Tribune," which had suspended publication after the evacuation of the city. Capt. Richardson, with the consent and authority of the owner, Maj. Balantyne, secured permission from the provost marshal to revive the paper. Capt. Richardson was made associate editor and remained in the position until 1868, thence going to New Orleans, where he started a book bindery and job printing business. In 1871 he accepted an offer from the Savannah (Ga.) "Morning News," serving as city editor, and later as editor of the "Sunday Telegram," both under the same management. In 1883 Capt. Richardson purchased the Savannah "Times," an evening paper, and conducted it as sole proprietor for a year and a half, when a stock company was formed. In 1886 he disposed of his interests in Savannah and bought the "Evening Capitol," of Montgomery, Ala., and changed the name of the paper to the "Evening Star." He conducted the "Star" one year, selling it in 1887, then removing to Anniston, Ala., and accepting a position as associate editor of the "Hot Blast," subsequently becoming editor, and conducted it two years. Capt. Richardson moved to his present home in Columbus, Ga., in September, 1889, and was made managing editor of the "Enquirer-Sun," leasing the paper three months later and becoming the owner of it in June, 1894. In 1878 Capt. Richardson was commissioned by Gov. A. H. Colquitt as quartermaster, with the rank of lieutenant, of the First Georgia regiment at Savannah, and held that rank until his resignation in 1886. Later he was appointed on the staff of Gov. William J. Northen, with rank of lieutenant-colonel of cavalry, and retains that rank at the present time. As an evidence of the estimation in which Col. Richardson is held by the people of Georgia, it may be mentioned that he has repeatedly been selected as a delegate to the state and congressional conventions and was secretary of the democratic executive committee of Chatham county for eleven years. While a citizen of Savannah he was brought forward as a candidate for representative in the state legislature, but declined after his nomination. In 1892 he was elected a member of the democratic state executive committee for the fourth congressional district, re-elected in 1894 and made secretary of that organization. Col. Richardson is a master Mason and has filled all the chairs up to and including senior warden of Ancient Landmark lodge No. 215, F. and A. M., of Savannah, Ga. He is also an enrolled member of the Golden Rule lodge No. 12, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Savannah, Ga., and was grand commander for the state of Georgia in 1883-84 of the American Legion of Honor. He is also first past grand regent of Georgia of the Royal Arcanum and was the first representative from Georgia to the supreme council of that order, which met in Detroit in March, 1880. He is also a life member of the grand council of the Royal Arcanum of Georgia and belongs to Columbus lodge No. 111, R. A., and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. For a time Col. Richardson was the first officer of Jasper council, Home Circle, of Savannah, Ga. He is also an active member of the Pawnee Tribe No. 27, Improved Order of Red Men, and in 1879 was dictator of the Savannah lodge, Knights of Honor. Among the strictly social organizations Col. Richardson is a member of the Muscogee club, of Columbus, and the Elks Social club of that city. Among the business organizations he has been prominently identified with the Columbus Board of Trade, and is one of the directors of the Chattahoochee Exposition company. Col. Richardson's great-grandfather was Vincent Richardson, who was one of the first men in Maryland to shoulder arms in the revolutionary struggle, and was killed in action under Gen. Stansberry. His great-grandmother was a daughter of the celebrated John Eager Howard of revolutionary renown, and a family famous in the highest social and political history of Maryland. Mr. Richardson has been twice married, his first wife being Miss Elizabeth M. Holcombe, of Mobile, one of the most prominent families in Georgia and Alabama, by whom he had five children, two of whom are living, one daughter married and one grown son. His oldest son, G. Holcombe Richardson, died on May 4, 1894, while chief clerk in the United States pension office of Knoxville, Tenn., having been appointed by Hon. Hoke Smith, secretary of the interior. His present wife was Miss Georgia M. Goodman, also of Mobile, of the same family connection. He has been from early youth an earnest and zealous democrat and may rightly be classed as of the rock-ribbed democracy.

THOMAS S. SPEAR, a prominent jeweler of Columbus, Ga., was born in Bloomfield, N. J., Jan. 19, 1825. He was reared and educated in his native town and in 1845 removed to Charleston, S. C., to engage in the jewelry business with his brother, James A. Spear, remaining with him twelve years. In 1857 the two brothers, having removed their business to Columbus, were robbed by Wilson's raiders and $150,000 of booty was carried away by the pilferers. After the close of hostilities the Spear brothers resumed their jewelry business and the first year made a profit of $15,000. Thomas S. Spear was called upon in 1870 to mourn the death of his only brother, James A., which sad event occurred in Charleston, S. C. Since his brother's death he has conducted the business alone and has been remarkably successful. In 1846 he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah M. Dodd, a most estimable and cultured lady of New Jersey, and a union which has been blessed by the birth of several sons and daughters, all of whom, save one, survive: Charles Spear, of New York city; Horace Spear, Charleston, S. C.; Mary, wife of Stephen Crawford, of Columbus, Ga.; Howard, secretary and treasurer of the Georgia Midland railroad, of Columbus. Thomas S. Spear has two widowed sisters residing in Charleston, S. C., viz.: Elizabeth L., relict of David Oaks, a native of Bloomfield, N. J., and Carrie Olivia, relict of Daniel S. Silcox, a native of Charleston, S. C.

W. W. STEWART, M. D., of Columbus, Ga., was born at Union Springs, Bullock Co., Ala., Aug. 30, 1865. When an infant his parents moved to Columbus, Ga., where he received his earlier education in private schools and subsequently became a student at the Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical college, at Auburn, graduating from that institution in the class of 1882. For a year and a half next after his graduation Mr. Stewart resided at Columbus, but removed to Jefferson county, Ala., in 1884, where he was engaged in the mining industry. He returned to Columbus soon thereafter and began the study of medicine under the direction of Dr. George J. Grimes, of very extensive reputation in West Georgia. Mr. Stewart became a student at the Bellevue Hospital Medical college, New York city, in 1886, graduating from that institution with the degree of M. D. in 1888. He served the New York city hospital, on Blackwell's island, for more than a year and a half, returning to Columbus in the autumn of 1890, when he formed a copartnership with his former tutor, Dr. Grimes. Dr. Stewart is the author of several valuable papers on subjects related to his profession, was made a member of the board of health of Columbus, and is a prominent member of the Georgia State Medical association. He occupies a very enviable position among the physicians of Muscogee county.

GEORGE P. SWIFT, the leading manufacturer of cotton goods in Columbus, Ga., was born in Fairhaven, Mass., Sept. 1, 1814. His father, Asa Swift, was a native of Wareham, Mass., was a ship captain and largely engaged in whaling. He married Sarah Mackie, a native of Long Island, N. Y., and of the children born to this union four are living, viz.: Mary Dykeman, George P., Henrietta Attwood and Andre M. K. George P. Swift, after the usual attendance at the public schools, clerked for three or four years in a dry goods store in Boston, and in 1832 moved to Georgia and located at Knoxville, Crawford Co., thence he moved to Upson county and engaged in manufacturing; next, in 1866, he removed to Columbus, Ga., and in 1867 was elected president of the Muscogee Manufacturing company, which position he still fills. This company manufactures cotton goods exclusively, operates three mills, each five stories in height, containing 15,000 spindles and 426 looms, and affording employment for 550 operatives, all of whom are white and native born. The several mills consume 3,600 bales of cotton annually, which are made into colored goods, consisting of plaids, cottonades, cheviots, shirting, ticks and denim and towels, the annual production being valued at $400,000. This company was permanently organized in 1869, has a capital stock of $157,500, and is controlled by George P. Swift, president, and W. A. Swift, secretary and treasurer. George P. Swift was also actively engaged in the establishment of another manufacturing establishment in Columbus, which still bears his name, the Swift Manufacturing company. In 1844 Col. Swift married Cornelia A. Jewett, of Boston, a daughter of Charles Jewett, and this union has been blessed by the birth of seven children, viz.: Helen W. Murphy, George P., Jr., deceased, William A., Charles J., Edward W., Elizabeth B. Swift and Adelaide Kyle. In the matter of political belief Col. Swift is an uncompromising democrat. He has no desire to enter into public life and has never sought any office, though his voice has undoubted weight in all public deliberations. Mrs. Cornelia A. Swift is a consistent member of the Baptist church.

GRIGSBY E. THOMAS, JR., a very prominent attorney-at-law of Columbus, Ga., was born at the family residence on Rose Hill, then a suburb (now annexed and a portion) of that city, Sept. 7, 1842, and is a son of Grigsby E. and Mary A. (Shivers) Thomas. Grigsby E. Thomas, Sr., was born in Hancock county, Ga., near Mount Zion, Jan. 10, 1796, was an attorney and had his first practice in Warren county, which he represented six years in the general assembly of Georgia. During his service in that body he was the author of a number of valuable acts; among the most prominent was the "honest debtors" act of 1823, which virtually abolished imprisonment for debt in Georgia. He was also an able advocate on the floor of the house and gave his earnest efforts in support of an act to establish a female college in Georgia, and to divide the state into congressional districts. He removed to Columbus, Ga., in 1830, and was soon after solicited to become a candidate for judge of the Chattahoochee circuit, to which position he was elected in 1832. He was elected during a fierce political strife in the then backwoods of Georgia, and was frequently compelled to travel his circuit through Indian trails, to swim creeks and rivers, to sleep in open houses and to hold court in log cabins in the midst of a people wild and rude in their habits at that time. He never drank intoxicating liquor, and was eloquent in his appeals against the vice of intemperance. He was educated at the school of Nathan Beman, and among his schoolmates were Hons. Charles J. McDonald, W. T. Colquitt, A. H. Chappell, M. A. Cooper, Charles J. Jenkins and others of equal prominence. He died July 5, 1865, a member and elder of the Presbyterian church. His father, Frederick G., was a son of John Grigsby, a Baptist preacher.

Mrs. Mary A. Thomas was born in Warren county, Ga., a daughter of Barnaby Shivers, of Warren county, whose ancestors were of the Isle of Wight county, Va. Her family is of French extraction, and the name was formerly spelled Chievres, but has been anglicized to Shivers. Grigsby E. Thomas, Jr., after the usual attendance at the Columbus schools, entered Oglethorpe university, at Midway, near Milledgeville, Ga., leaving that institution in 1860 and going to the state of Texas, where he was engaged in teaching school for eight months. On April 20, 1861, at the age of eighteen, he enlisted in the City Light Guards, of Columbus, which was Company A, Second Georgia battalion, the other companies of that command being the Macon volunteers, the Spalding grays and the Floyd rifles. These four companies were ordered to Portsmouth, Va., April 21, 1861, and stationed at the navy yard, where they were drilled in heavy artillery as well as tactics. One month later the Light guards were sent to Sewall's Point to mount guns and hold Fort Sewall, and then were engaged in the first battle on Virginia soil between the Confederate and Federal forces, May 21, 1861, brought about by a gunboat firing on Fort Sewall, Capt. P. H. Colquitt commanding. The company and battalion remained there a year. The Second Georgia battalion was sent to Goldsboro, N. C., in March, 1862, where they were stationed one month, and at the expiration of that time were given fifteen days' furlough. Before leaving on their furloughs, the soldiers of the command were addressed by their major, the late Thomas Hardeman, of Macon, Ga., who, having been promoted to the colonelcy of another regiment, spoke to them in farewell as follows: "Soldiers: You are going home after twelve months' faithful service, but remember that a soldier has no home so long as that home is threatened by an invader." Such was the enthusiasm aroused by this speech, of which the foregoing is the concluding paragraph, that every man of the four companies re-enlisted on the spot. After his furlough had expired Mr. Thomas rejoined his company at Wilmington, N. C., and remained there until the battle of Seven Pines, when the command was ordered to Drury's Bluff, remaining there a month. The battalion was then placed in Gen. Evans' brigade, Holmes' division, Huger's corps, of South Carolina, and sent to the left of the Confederate army in front of Richmond, arriving at Gaines' mill the noon after the battle there; thence supporting Stonewall Jackson's brigade in front of Richmond. Holmes' division, Huger's corps, intercepted McClellan near the James river and forced him to fight at Malvern hill. Mr. Thomas was promoted from private to ordnance sergeant of the post of Petersburg, Va., and was in that city during the siege, holding the rank of post-ordnance officer of the department of Southern Virginia and North Carolina. He remained in Petersburg until the evacuation of that city, when he was ordered to take charge of the ordnance stores in Lynchburg, but the surrender of Lee occurred before he could perform that service. After the close of hostilities he returned to his home in Columbus, Ga., and began the study of law under L. T. Downing and ex-Gov. Johnson, was admitted to the bar in November, 1865, was subsequently appointed solicitor of the Muscogee county court by Gov. James Smith, reappointed by Gov. Alfred H. Colquitt, and held that office six years. In 1884 he was elected a member of the state democratic executive committee, and in January, 1892, he was appointed United States circuit court commissioner for the western division of the northern district of Georgia. On Jan. 24, 1867, he married Fannie Wellborn Davie, daughter of Wellborn G. and Nancy (Lofin) Davie. She bore him one child, Wellborn Marshall, now residing at Selma, Ala., and she died Sept. 26, 1884. She was a graduate of the Talbotton Female college. On Aug. 18, 1886, Mr. Thomas married Emma Hart Miller, of Greene county, Ga., a graduate of Lucv Cobb institute, at Athens, Ga., by whom he has two children, viz.: Grigsby E. Thomas (fourth) and Maria Virginia Thomas. Mr. Thomas is a member and elder of Lucy Cobb institute at Athens, Ga. Mr. Thomas is a member of the Presbyterian church. He is also a member of the Knights of Honor, of which order he was grand dictator and representative of the supreme lodge in 1883; he has also served as grand master workman of the grand lodge of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida and the Carolinas, also serving twice as supreme representative. He is also a member of the Royal Arcanum, K. and L. of Honor, and is a master Mason. He still resides at the old family residence on Rose Hill, which is one of the landmarks of Columbus, having been built in 1837 by the late Judge Thomas, and is even now in a fine state of preservation. It is located on the west brow of Rose Hill, 100 feet above the city, and commands a view four miles down the Chattahoochee river and two miles up that stream, including the North highlands, with Girard, Phoenix City and the Alabama hills on the west. Mr. Thomas loves his native soil and believes in the future greatness of the city of Columbus and bends his every effort to assist in establishing that greatness.

DOUGLASS C. TICKNOR, M. D., of Columbus, Ga., was born at Torch Hill, Muscogee Co., six miles south of the city of Columbus, on July 31, 1852. He was reared in his rural home, receiving the larger part of his earlier education at the hands of his father, Dr. F. O. Ticknor, noted at that time as a physician, surgeon and litterateur. Young Ticknor was graduated from the Atlanta Medical college with the degree of M. D. in 1876. Immediately after his graduation he located in the city of Columbus, Ga., and entered actively upon the practice of his profession, and has continued to do so up to the present time. In the profession his skill and ability are manifest in a large and successful practice, and he sustains a very desirable rank among the members of the profession. He is of a progressive, investigating turn of mind and takes much interest in the advancement of the profession. He has been honored by his fellow-citizens at different times by being selected to fill important positions in the city government, notably as president of the Columbus board of health for three years, from 1890 to 1893, and as city physician of Columbus for one term. Dr. Ticknor is a prominent member of the masonic fraternity. He is also a consistent member of the Protestant Episcopal church.

DR. JOHN EVANS WALKER, of Columbus, Ga., was born Jan. 2, 1863, at Chester, S. C. He entered Vanderbilt university, Nashville, Tenn., in 1879, selecting a scientific course. From 1882 to 1885 he was a student in the medical department of the university of the city of New York. After the termination of his course of study in that institution he was appointed house physician to the city hospital of Elizabeth, N. J., and served in that capacity for more than a year. In 1885 he was connected with the Chambers street hospital, New York city, and later served as physician in the Emigration hospital, on Ward's island, New York, remaining there not quite three years. In 1889 he removed to Columbus, Ga., where he has since resided, except during the year 1890, when he was a medical student at the university of Berlin, Germany. In 1890 Dr. Walker was happily joined in the bonds of holy wedlock to Anna R. Lamar, daughter of Col. Albert R. Lamar, of Macon, Ga. Dr. Walker is a member of the masonic fraternity, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Presbyterian church.

DR. LOVICK WYNN WELLS, a prominent physician of Columbus, Ga., was born in Russell county, Ala., in 1847. His father was James Phillips Wells, a native of North Carolina. He was a large planter and a major in command of a battalion in the Creek war of 1836. He died in 1863 at the age of sixty-eight years. The family on the father's side is French. L. W. Wells resided in Russell county, Ala., until the age of thirteen, and then went to Oglethorpe university, then located at Midway, near Milledgeville, and was graduated from that institution in 1860. He then began the study of medicine and was graduated, in 1860, at the university of the city of New York, and in 1861 was one of the 550 southern students who left that city when the war began. He then graduated from the Tulane university, New Orleans, La. In 1861 he entered the Thirty-first Georgia infantry as assistant surgeon, and eleven months later organized a company of partisan rangers, in Albany, Ga., and was made the captain. He served as captain of that company in the army of northern Virginia until the close of hostilities. He participated in the battles of second Manassas, Fredericksburg, Petersburg, and all the battles around Petersburg except the last one; also at Bentonville, N. C., and in the battle near Raleigh, N. C. After the war Dr. Wells returned to Russell county, Ala., where he had large farming interests, and practiced medicine there until 1889, when he removed to Columbus, Ga. He has built up an extensive practice in that city. He is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men and attends the Presbyterian church. He has been twice married. The first time in June, 1880, to Julia L., daughter of the late Dr. Eli Gaither, of Wetumpka, Ala., and the second time in October, 1894, at Ozark, Ala., to Georgia, daughter of E. F. Davis, who was a lieutenant in Dr. Wells' company during the civil war.

GEORGE B. WHITESIDE, the agent of large steamboat interests in Columbus, Ga., was born in New York city Oct. 4, 1855, and resided in that city until he was fifteen years of age, attending school in the city of Brooklyn. In 1870 he removed to Columbus, Ga., where his father, Samuel J. Whiteside, was engaged in steamboating, and the son engaged in business with his father. He remained in Columbus about one year, going thence to Savannah, Ga., where he acted as superintendent of the Gordon Compress company. Returning to Columbus in 1880 he served as treasurer of the Columbus Iron Works company ten years, since which time he has been agent of steamboat lines running between Columbus, Ga., and Apalachicola, Fla. This fleet consists of three beautiful combination freight and passenger river steamers, named the "Pactolus," the "Naiad" and the "Queen City." Mr. Whiteside is also general superintendent for the lessee of the Central railroad compresses, located in the cities of Columbus and Macon, Ga., and Eufaula, Ala. While a citizen of Savannah Mr. Whiteside was elected a corporal in the Republican Blues, a prominent military organization, and he served as such as long as he resided there. In 1890 he was elected captain of the Columbus guards, and creditably filled that position for two years. He had joined the company as a private, and had been promoted to a lieutenancy, his comrades in arms having observed his peculiar fitness and ability as a commanding officer. Although he has never been a seeker after preferment of any kind, Mr. Whiteside has served for the past five years as a trustee of the Columbus public schools. He is eminent commander of St. Aldemar commandery, No. 3, Knights Templar, and a member of the vestry of Trinity Episcopal church. In 1879 Mr. Whiteside was married to Miss Carrie E. Brown, of Columbus, a daughter of W. R. Brown, a prominent citizen of that place.

DR. CHARLES L. WILLIAMS of Columbus, Ga., was born March 26, 1844, in Hamilton, Harris, Co., Ga., receiving his earlier education in the town of his birth and afterward attending the Brownwood institute at La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., and the Glennville Military institute, Glennville, Russell Co., Ala. In July, 1861, Mr. Williams enlisted, as first sergeant, in the Twentieth

Georgia infantry, serving as such until the battle of Sharpsburg, Tenn, Sept. 22, 1862. In that battle he suffered a serious wound, and in consequence, was placed on the retired list and returned to his home, but, having sufficiently recovered from his wound, he was made an enrolling officer and served in that capacity until the close of the war. While on the field Mr. Williams was a participant in the battles of Sharpsburg, Malvern Hill, second Manassas and many minor skirmishes. He had five brothers in the Confederate service, viz.: John Thomas, a member of the Third Georgia cavalry, who died about the year 1881; James F. C., in Gen. Clement A. Evan's brigade, under Stonewall Jackson; Benjamin H., a member of one of the companies composing the First Georgia regiment, which company was commanded by Capt. Frank Wilkins of Columbus, Ga.; Brittain Williams, who served during the latter part of the war; and O. S. Williams, a member of the Georgia cadets, a company formed from the students of Oglethorpe university, at Marietta, Ga. During the year 1865 Mr. Williams began the study of medicine at Hamilton, Harris Co., Ga., and later attended a course of lectures at the Augusta Medical college, now the medical department of the university of Georgia, but was finally graduated from the Atlanta, Ga., Medical college, in 1866. Immediately after his graduation and in order to further perfect himself in the knowledge of his profession, Dr. Williams entered the Bellevue Hospital Medical college, New York city, remained there one year and then returned to his home in Hamilton, Ga., during March, 1867. After practicing for a time at Hamilton he removed to Villula, Russell Co., Ala., where he entered upon the practice of his profession, but at the end of four years, to accommodate a large patronage, he changed his residence to Seale, the county seat of Russell, and remained there fourteen years, removing to his present residence in Columbus, Ga., in December, 1886. Although he has never sought political preferment, Dr. Williams was elected treasurer of Russell county, Ala., in 1877 and served four years. He was made president of the Russell County Medical society for one term and was a charter member of that organization. He is a member of the Baptist church and also a prominent member of the masonic fraternity, having served as worshipful master of the lodge at Seale, Ala., for several years. On Dec. 31, 1869, Dr. Williams was married to Miss Mary L. Evans, a daughter of John Q. Evans, a prominent citizen of Villula, Ala. Dr. Williams was called upon to mourn the death of his wife in 1889, leaving four daughters as the issue of their union, viz.: A little boy, Charles Wellborn, died in 1875, two and one-half years of age; Fanny L., Mary E., Sallie B. and Ina J. The father of Dr. Williams was Thomas A. Williams, a prominent citizen of Harris county, Ga., who died while the subject of this sketch was in infancy. He was a planter and was the first democrat ever elected to the office of sheriff of Harris county. Dr. Williams is descended maternally from Lucinda (Henry) Williams, a native of Harris county, Ga.

WILLIAM A. WIMBISH, a very prominent attorney of Columbus, Ga., was born at La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., May 1, 1859, and is a son of Dr. H. S. and Emma (Stanley) Wimbish. Dr. H. S. Wimbish was a native of Abbeville district, S. C., came to Georgia in early manhood and for a time practiced his profession at Greenville, Meriwether Co. In 1858 he removed to La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., and founded the La Grange Banking & Trust company, of which institution he was the president at the date of his decease, in 1875. He was married to Miss Emma Stanley, a scion of the famous North Carolina family of that name. William A. Wimbish received most of his primary education in La Grange, in 1875 went to Washington and Lee university, Lexington, Va., and was graduated from that institution in the academic course in 1878, and from the law department of the same in 1879. Immediately after his graduation he returned to his home at La Grange, Ga., where he was admitted to the bar the same year by diploma, and practiced his profession five years. In 1884 he removed his law office to Atlanta, Ga., practiced there four years and was regarded as an eminently successful attorney. In 1888 he removed to Columbus, where he has since been actively engaged in the practice. Together with his old law partner, Hon. William A. Little of Columbus, Mr. Wimbish was for two years the counsel of the Columbus Southern railroad, and was brought very prominently before the public in the celebrated case of that road vs. Wright, comptroller-general. Mr. Wimbish carried the cause of his clients to the supreme court of the United States, and it was here that he achieved the extensive reputation he now enjoys. Mr. Wimbish is special counsel of the state of Georgia for the Western & Atlantic railroad, an office created by the general assembly, to which he was appointed by the governor. This railroad, extending from Atlanta to Chattanooga, and having very valuable terminals in both cities, is the exclusive property of the state, though now leased to and operated by the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis railway. The state first leased the road, more than twenty-five years ago, since which time, until 1892, it had no representative to specially look after and guard its interests in this valuable property. In consequence of the growth of the cities of Atlanta and Chattanooga, and the encroachments of other railroads on the right of way and properties of the Western & Atlantic, it was found that great confusion had arisen concerning the rights of the state and much litigation was threatened. Mr. Wimbish was appointed special counsel for the purpose of ascertaining and asserting the rights of the state in this property. He has been eminently successful in this work, having recovered properties which had been lost sight of for more than forty years, and adjusted numerous controversies which otherwise would have resulted in serious loss to the state. Mr. Wimbish is a director in, and general counsel for the Interstate Building & Loan association, one of the strongest financial institutions in the south, having assets of nearly $1,500,000, with its home office in Columbus. About a year ago Mr. Wimbish founded the prominent and successful law firm of Wimbish, Worrill & McMichael. In 1881 he was happily joined in the bonds of holy wedlock to Miss Susie Dickenson, a most estimable lady of Decatur county, Ga., and a daughter of the late William Dickenson, a very prominent citizen of that county.

CHARLES B. WOODRUFF, secretary and treasurer of the Eagle & Phoenix Manufacturing company of Columbus, Ga., was born in that city on Aug. 27, 1860. His father, Louis T. Woodruff, was a native of New Jersey and came south prior to the war between the states, and at one time operated a line of steamboats on the Chattahoochee river from Columbus, Ga., the head of navigation, to Apalachicola, Fla. He died in 1863. During the war, the gentleman whose name heads this article, then an infant of two years, was removed by his parents to the city of Elizabeth, N. J., returning with his mother to Columbus, Ga., in 1866. Young Woodruff received his entire education in the Columbus city schools and in 1873, at the early age of thirteen years, began his life-work as a clerk in a dry goods establishment at Columbus. He served in that capacity for two years and then obtained employment as a bookkeeper for the firm of Gordon & Cargill, and remained in the employ of that firm five years. In 1879 Mr. Woodruff entered the service of the Eagle & Phoenix Manufacturing company of Columbus as a bookkeeper and general office man, and as such served fourteen years. For his faithfulness and efficiency in the performance of any duty devolving upon him, he was, in February, 1894, promoted to the responsible position of secretary and treasurer of the company, which is one of the largest manufacturers of cotton and woolen stuffs in the entire southern states. In 1890 Mr. Woodruff was made secretary and treasurer of the Chattahoochee Knitting company, of Columbus, also, and he was elected a member of the board of directors of the Eagle & Phoenix Manufacturing company. Though he has never sought political preferment, he was in 1893 selected as a member of the democratic executive committee of Muscogee county and served very efficiently in that capacity through the succeeding campaign. Mr. Woodruff is not a member of any church, though entertaining a most profound respect for every form of Christian belief. He is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In October, 1890, Mr. Woodruff was happily joined in the bonds of wedlock to Miss Mary L. Mott of Columbus, a granddaughter of Col. Randolph Mott of that city. This union has been blessed by the birth of one son, Randolph Mott Woodruff.

HENRY LINDSAY WOODRUFF, superintendent of the Empire flour mills of Columbus, Ga., is a son of George W. Woodruff, the owner of those mills, and was born in Muscogee county, Ga., May 20, 1851. He has resided in the county of his birth all his life except a few years, probably seven, during his childhood. His educational advantages were limited to such as were afforded by the common schools of Muscogee county, which he attended regularly until his fourteenth year. He began his work in life as a bill clerk in the Empire flour mills and by close application and a thorough discharge of the duties devolving upon him has been successively promoted from the lowest to the highest position connected with that large mill, having been unanimously chosen superintendent of the same in 1872. Mr. Woodruff is a man of much native talent and a thorough business man, energetic and full of enterprise. He occupies several positions of trust and honor in the business world at large; among others, holding the place of a director of the Columbus Investment company and in the Columbus Savings bank. He is also a large stockholder in the East Atlanta Land company, the Atlanta Home Insurance company and the Atlanta Consolidated Street Railway company, all of Atlanta, Ga.; and he has considerable stock in the Union Oil and Land company of California, besides a moderate amount of stock in several minor concerns. Although he has never sought preferment of any kind, Mr. Woodruff was, in 1881, selected as alderman from the Fourth ward of Columbus, but firmly declined re-election. However, in 1894, he was prevailed upon to accept a place as a member of the Columbus board of police commissioners, and he retains that position at the present time. He is a member of the masonic fraternity, and also a member of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Woodruff was married on Oct. 28, 1875, to Miss Mary J. Kyle, an estimable lady of Columbus, Ga., a daughter of the late John Kyle. This union has been blessed by the birth of three sons and two daughters, viz.: Virgie Bright, James Waldo, Harry Ernest, Anna Lucile, and George Cecil.

J. H. WORRILL, a prominent attorney of Columbus, Ga., was born in Talbotton, Talbot Co., Ga., Aug. 10, 1855. He was reared and received his earlier education in the town of his birth; and in 1873 he became a student at the university of Georgia (Athens), graduating with distinction from that institution in 1875. Immediately after his graduation he returned to his home at Talbotton and began the study of the law under the tutorage of his father, Hon. E. H. Worrill, who was, for fourteen years, the presiding judge of the Chattahoochee judicial circuit, departing this life in 1881. The son was admitted to the bar at the fall term of Talbot superior court and practiced his profession in Talbotton until 1889, when, desiring a wider field for the exercise of his talents, he removed to Columbus, Ga., and has since resided there. In November, 1886, Mr. Worrill was elected by the state legislature solicitor-general of the Chattahoochee circuit to fill the unexpired term of Hon. Thomas W. Grimes, who had resigned on being elected a member of congress. Mr. Worrill served as solicitor-general more than three years and in 1889 he was chosen as one of the representatives for the county of Muscogee in the state legislature. He served as a legislator for the full term of two years, and in 1891 he was elected city attorney of Columbus and has been continuously re-elected each succeeding year since. In 1884 Mr. Worrill was united in the bonds of holy wedlock to Miss Emma B. Biggers, a most estimable lady of Harris county, Ga., daughter of J. J. W. Biggers, a prominent citizen of that county. Mr. Worrill is a master Mason and affiliates with the Methodist Episcopal church, south.

ALEXANDER C. YOUNG, youngest son of William H. and Ellen A. (Beall) Young, was born in Somerville, Morgan Co., Ala., Nov. 22, 1850. William H. Young was born in the city of New York, Jan. 22, 1807. His father, James Young, was of Scotch extraction, and was a native of New Jersey. In early life he moved to New York and engaged in cabinet-making. He married Christina Ridabeck, a native of New York, whose father emigrated from Germany at an early period. William H. Young had good educational advantages and came to Georgia in the spring of 1824, engaging as a clerk for Ira Peck of Marion, Twiggs Co. In 1825 an older brother, Edward B. Young, came from New York and also settled in the town of Marion, forming a partnership with William H. Young, which continued about nine years, and was attended by a fair degree of success. The business was disposed of in 1835, his brother removing to Eufaula, Ala., where he successfully organized the Eufaula National bank, was elected its first president and held that position at the time of his death, in 1881, at the ripe age of seventy-eight years. When the partnership of the Young brothers was dissolved in the town of Marion, William H. Young returned to New York, engaging as salesman and collector for a large jobbing house. In 1839 he returned south, located at Apalachicola, Fla., forming a partnership with Dr. Henry Lockhart in the commission business, which continued ten years and was eminently successful. William H. Young then continued the business about five years longer in his own name, at the end of that time having accumulated sufficient capital to carry out his desire to embark in the cotton manufacturing business he moved to Columbus, Ga., in 1855. At that time the citizens of Columbus were organizing a bank, and they elected him as the first president of that institution, which position he continued to occupy for some years during the civil war, when he resigned, as his manufacturing business required all his attention. At the close of the war, and after Gen. Lee's surrender the Federal troops occupied the city of Columbus and wantonly burned all the factories and all the cotton in that city, the loss to the Eagle company being about $1,000,000. The shareholders met and appointed William H. Young to sell the property and to close the business. This he did and returned to the stockholders twice the amount of their investment out of the wrecked property. A new company was organized and purchased at public outcry the property, obtained a charter, William H. Young becoming a shareholder, and named the corporation the Eagle & Phoenix Manufacturing company. These mills are, at the present time, undoubtedly the largest in the south and give employment to 2,000 operatives. Thus the dream and object of the life of William H. Young was attained, and he peacefully passed to his reward, at his home in Bellwood, near Columbus, on May 8, 1894. Mr. Young was a citizen such as every city needs and is proud to claim. He worked for his own interest and the interest of those associated with him; but in so doing he never lost sight of the city's good, and wherever he could he was always ready to put in a claim and a stroke for Columbus. He watched the city's growth with pride, and as it kept pace with the ever constant and upward and onward movement of his great manufacturing establishment, he felt a keen sense of pleasure and gratification. His public and business career was marked by a strict integrity, and his home life was characterized by a pure and loving devotion to his noble helpmate, children and friends. Ellen Augusta (Beall) Young was a native of Warren county, Ga., a daughter of Robert Augustus Beall. Her family was notably prominent and of very high character. Her father was appointed by the governor as commissioner to supervise the drawing of the land lottery, when Georgia distributed to its citizens the public lands of the state by that method. The family consisted of three sons and six daughters. The sons are all dead. Robert Augustus Beall attained high rank as a lawyer and had a large and lucrative practice which extended over the larger part of Georgia. He died in Macon, Ga. Mrs. Young was next to the youngest of the six sisters and died in her seventy-eighth year. Of her sons, all save one saw service in the Confederate army, viz.: Alfred I. (deceased); William H., Jr., who was killed at the battle of Marietta, Ga.; George B.; Richard T., and James E. Alfred I. was a captain and George B. was a lieutenant in the same Georgia regiment. Alexander C. Young was brought up in Columbus, Ga., where he received his primary education and was graduated at the university of Georgia in 1870. He then went to New York city and clerked one year for his brother, a cotton merchant, then returned to Columbus, Ga., and entering the employ of the Eagle & Phoenix Manufacturing company remained with that corporation about twenty years, and during the last year was secretary and treasurer. In 1892, together with C. L. Perkins and J. W. Boyd, he incorporated the W. H. Young company—manufacturers of jeans, cottonades, worsted goods. Mr. Perkins is president of this company, Mr. Boyd is superintendent, and Mr. Young is treasurer. The capital stock of the company is $30,000 and it does a business of $100,000 annually. Mr. Young is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church south, and is a member of the board of trustees of St. Paul's church of Columbus. He is unmarried at present.

NEWTON COUNTY.

J. C. ANDERSON, physician and surgeon, Starrsville, Newton Co., Ga., son of Newton and Eunice (Askew) Anderson, was born in South Carolina in 1838. His paternal grandparents, Thomas and Anna (White) Anderson, were natives of Virginia, whence, early in life, they migrated to South Carolina. After remaining there a few years he came to Georgia in the old-time primitive ox-cart and settled in the woods in Newton county, where Oxford now stands, and cleared a farm. He was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain and became a prominent and influential citizen of Newton county, which he represented in the general assembly. Mr. Anderson's father was born in South Carolina, where he received a good education, and came to Newton county in 1837. After teaching school five years he was elected sheriff of the county and was continuously re-elected and held the office at the time of his death. In 1863 he raised a regiment of cavalry, of which he was commissioned colonel, performed gallant service in many hard-fought battles, and was neither captured nor wounded. His mother was a daughter of Dr. Stephen Askew, a native of South Carolina. Dr. Anderson was raised on the farm, and after receiving a good primary and preparatory education studied medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Willis Westmoreland, Atlanta, after which he attended lectures at the Atlanta Medical college, from which he was graduated in March, 1860, and immediately afterward located and commenced the practice of medicine at Starrsville. In 1861 he enlisted in Company H, Third Georgia regiment, and was made surgeon of his company, and afterward was made surgeon of the Third Georgia hospital at Richmond; but when his company was ordered to the front he insisted on going with it, and did so. With his command he was in the following, among other important battles: South Mills, Malvern Hill, seven days' fight around Richmond, Second Manassas, Sharpsburg, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Harper's Ferry, etc. He was slightly wounded at Sharpsburg, and again more seriously at Gettysburg. He refused to go to the hospital, and remained with his company. He finally accepted a sixty days' furlough and came home, but he rejoined his company at Jonesville before his furlough expired. He was with his command in every fight in which it took a part, excepting when he was at home. His regiment never gave up a position, and was never ordered to take a position but what it took it and kept it, and was known in the army as the "fighting regiment"—a distinction gallantly earned and as gallantly maintained. Entering at once upon the practice of his profession after the war he has established a large and remunerative practice and reputation for skill, as demonstrated by his success. He ranks high in the profession and is regarded by the people with the affection of which the faithful physician is so richly deserving. Dr. Anderson was married in 1863 to Miss Amanda C.—Georgia born—daughter of Archibald S. and Mary (Quilly) Belcher. His wife's grandparents, William and Jemima (Smith) Belcher, were natives of Virginia, who came to Georgia in ox-carts about 1800, settled in what is now Jasper county, and cleared a farm in the woods. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. His wife's father was born in Georgia in 1812; during the civil war was a member of the state militia first, and afterward under the command of Capt. Newton Anderson. To Dr. and Mrs. Anderson five children have been born, three of whom survive: Newton, practicing physician; Tommie L., wife of E. O. Lee, and Anna Gordon. He is a master Mason, and Mrs. Anderson is a member of the Good Templars. Himself and wife are working and useful members of the Methodist church.

J. S. BUTLER, farmer, Winton, Newton Co., Ga., son of Robert J. and Sarah (Boyd) Butler, was born in Virginia in 1835. His parents were natives of Virginia and lived and died in the state. He was a farmer, a soldier in the revolutionary army—for which he received a land grant, which he held in Virginia—and was a member of the old-school Presbyterian church. Mr. Butler was raised in Virginia, where he received only a limited education; he, however, was proficient enough to teach school one year. He was raised a farmer and has been content to follow that calling all his life. In 1861 he enlisted in Company C, Washington artillery, and with the exception of fifteen days, remained in the army until the surrender. He was never wounded nor captured. In 1867 he came to Georgia and settled on the farm in Newton county where he now lives. Besides attending to the cultivation of his farm he owns and operates a ginnery and a saw-mill. He is a man of energy and enterprise, of sterling character and inflexible integrity, and is one of the many solid, substantial citizens of Newton county. Mr. Butler was married in 1871 to Miss Jane—born and raised in Newton county.

—daughter of Alexander and Parmelia (Harding) Pharr. Himself and wife are active and prominent members of the Methodist church.

REV. MORGAN CALLAWAY, D. D., vice-president and professor of English, Emory college, Oxford, Ga., son of Jesse and Mary (Wootten) Callaway, was born in Wilkes county, Ga., in 1831. His paternal grandparents, Joseph and Mary (Morgan) Callaway, were native Virginians, who migrated to Georgia about 1790 and settled in Wilkes county. He was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Prof. Callaway's father was born in Wilkes county, was a planter, a volunteer soldier in the last war with Great Britain, and held the rank of sergeant. Prof. Callaway received a good primary and preparatory education at the academy, Washington, Wilkes Co., and then entered the university of Georgia, from which he was graduated in 1849. After his graduation he attended the celebrated Gould law school, Augusta, was admitted to the bar, and entered upon the practice, also supervised his farming interests. Abandoning the practice of law, he accepted a professorship in Andrew Female college, Cuthbert, Randolph Co., Ga., where he remained until 1862. That year he enlisted in Company B, Butts' battalion of artillery, but later was transferred to Capt. Reed's battery, with which he remained until the end. He was a participant in very many of the important battles of the war, and was shot down twice—first at Gordonville and again at Cold Harbor. He entered the service as a private, but became first lieutenant of the first battery, and then captain of the second, and was present when Gen. Lee surrendered at Appomattox. Since the war his time has been wholly occupied in preaching and teaching. His first pastoral work was at Washington, Ga., his old home, where he was stationed four years, and after that he was for two years president of the female college at La Grange, Ga. In 1870 he was elected professor of Latin in Emory college, and has been connected with that institution ever since, with the exception of two years given to the Paine institute, Augusta, Ga.—the honor and credit for the organization of which justly belong to him. He held the Latin professorship only for four years, since which he has taught English, and is now, in addition, vice-president of the college. In 1865 he was elected a delegate to the constitutional convention, in which he took an absorbing interest, and was one of the most useful and influential of its members. His has been a life of unceasing activity and well-directed usefulness, the luster of whose record is undimmed by a shadow, and whose motives have no taint of selfishness. He ranks among the most prominent ministers of the denomination he honors, and was given the degree of D. D. by Emory college. Prof. Callaway has been twice married. He was first married in 1850, to Miss Eliza, daughter of Fielding and Mary (Wootten) Hinton. Seven children were born to them, only two survive: Maude lived to become the wife of the Rev. James M. Lovett; and Morgan, having won the doctorate of philosophy at Johns Hopkins university, is now professor of English in the university of Texas. The mother, a very pious and exemplary member of the Methodist church, died in 1867. In 1868 he contracted a second marriage with Miss Georgia, daughter of Dr. Fielding and Frances (Wingfield) Ficklen, by whom he has had one child, who, however, is dead. Mrs. Callaway has for years been the corresponding secretary of the Woman's Missionary society of the North Georgia conference. Dr. Callaway is the author of several works: Our Mother Tongue, Woman and Art, and various sermons and magazine articles.

W. A. CANDLER, D. D., eleventh president of Emory college, is the seventh son of Samuel C. and Martha Beall Candler, and was born in Carroll county, Ga., Aug. 23, 1857. His grandfather was Daniel Candler, who was the youngest son of Col. William Candler, of revolutionary fame. This Col. William Candler was at the siege of Augusta and with Gen. Sumter in his Carolina campaign of 1780. The eldest child of Col. Candler was Mary Candler, who became the wife of Capt. Ignatius Few, and the mother of Dr. Ignatius Few, the first president of Emory college. Warren Akin Candler, the subject of this sketch, was graduated at Emory college with the highest honors of his class in July, 1875, one month before he was eighteen years of age. In December, 1875, he was admitted, on trial, to the North Georgia conference of the Methodist Episcopal church south, at its session held in Griffin, Ga. From his graduation until he applied for membership in the conference (July to December, 1875), he supplied the pulpit of the Methodist church in Sparta, Ga. In 1876 he was appointed as junior preacher on the Newton circuit, with Rev. A. W. Rowland as his senior. In 1877 he served the Watkinsville circuit with Rev. W. W. Oslin as his senior. In the years 1878, 1879 and 1880, he was pastor of the Merritts Avenue church, Atlanta. In 1881 he was presiding elder for the Dahlongega district, having been appointed to the office of a presiding elder at an earlier age than any other man in the history of his church. In 1882 he was again stationed at Sparta. In 1883-84-85 and a part of 1886 he was the pastor of St. John's church, Augusta, Ga. In July, 1886, the college of bishops appointed him associate editor of the "Christian Advocate," at Nashville, Tenn., the official organ of the Methodist Episcopal church south. There he remained until June, 1888, when he was elected president of Emory college, where he has served since. He received the degree of doctor of divinity from his alma mater at the age of thirty-one.

HON. ROBERT U. HARDEMAN. No man in Georgia is better known than Hon. Robert U. Hardeman, the state treasurer. He is the healthy embodiment of fine sense and good humor, and during his period of service he has made, perhaps, the best record of any treasurer who has ever had charge of the state's money. The subject of this sketch was born in Macon, Bibb Co., Ga., on Nov. 22, 1838. His father, Thomas Hardeman, was born in Oglethorpe county, near Lexington, in 1800. Moving to Macon he engaged in the commission business, and continued to follow the pursuit of merchandising until his death in 1865. The grandfather of Mr. Hardeman, whose name was John Hardeman, was born in Pennsylvania, but after reaching mature manhood came south with his two brothers, one locating in Tennessee, one in Georgia, and one in Texas. The boyhood of Mr. Hardeman was spent amid the cultured surroundings of the beautiful city of Macon. He attended the private schools of that city, chiefly the one taught by Gen. James Armstrong, of West Point, and Marvin M. Mason. His father being a man of liberal means felt it to be his duty to give his children a thorough education, and for this reason Robert, as soon as he was sufficiently advanced, was sent to Emory college, Oxford, Ga. He was graduated from this institution with the degrees of A. B. and A. M. in 1859. Among his classmates were Rev. Atticus G. Haygood, bishop of the southern Methodist church; Dr. I. S. Hopkins, formerly president of Emory college, and ex-president of the Technological school, and Col. McArnold, of the Sixth Georgia regiment of infantry, who was killed at Petersburg. Immediately after leaving college Mr. Hardeman was united in marriage to Miss Eugenia Morrelle, the daughter of George W. Morrelle, a successful ante-bellum merchant of Covington, Ga. He went into his father-in-law's store as a partner in the business and continued in this enterprise until the war broke out, and he entered the Confederate army in May, 1861. He enlisted in the Second Georgia battalion and went out as a private in the Floyd rifles, organized in Macon in 1845. This company was known as Company C of the battalion. After a gallant service of twelve months he re-enlisted in the Forty-fifth Georgia regiment, commanded by his brother, Col. Thomas Hardeman. He served as a private under this command for one year, after which he was made assistant quartermaster. At the time of the surrender he was acting as adjutant of his regiment. After the war he returned to Covington, but remained for only a short while. He then went to Macon, where he became bookkeeper for Hardeman & Sparks, cotton factors, remaining with them until 1876, when he was employed as bookkeeper in the office of Comptroller W. L. Goldsmith until 1884. He then entered the race for state treasurer and was elected for a term of two years. He has held that position ever since in the full confidence of the people of Georgia. The popularity of Mr. Hardeman with all classes in the state is explained by his genial and attractive social qualities and by his rugged honesty. He is known from Dade to Chatham as "Uncle Bob," and he seems to enjoy this familiar distinction. Mr. Hardeman is the president of the Southern Home Loan and Building association. His home since 1877 has been at Oxford, Ga., about forty miles from Atlanta, on the Georgia railroad. He is fond of his home and makes the trip back and forth daily. Mr. Hardeman has five living children, three sons and two daughters. His friends all over Georgia unite in the wish that his robust health may long continue and that Georgia for many years to come will reap the benefit of his patriotic and jealous guardianship of the people's money.

HAYES. Of all the early settlers of that portion of the state now known as Newton county, few came earlier, and none are now more influential or more highly esteemed than the Hayes family. Its advent precedes the organization of the county nearly a score of years, and the members of the family have been important factors in promoting its development and growth. The paternal grandparents of the subjects of the following sketches were George and Sarah (Graham) Hayes. He was born in Virginia, whence when a young man he migrated to South Carolina. About 1805 he came to Georgia and settled in what is now Newton county. He was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, taught in the public schools, and was a justice of the peace many years.

ROBERT L. HAYES was born in South Carolina and came to Georgia and cleared land between the Two Bear creeks a year or two prior to the removal of the family. He was the first actual settler; there were, however, many squatters. He dug the first well ever dug, and rived the first boards ever rived in the county. He married Miss Sarah Penn, daughter of Benjamin and Hannah (Burdine) Penn, native South Carolinians. He was raised a farmer and followed farming all his life.

JAMES L. HAYES, farmer, Hayston, Newton Co., Ga., son of Robert L. and Sarah (Penn) Hayes, was born in Newton county in 1839. He was raised on the farm and received such education as was obtainable at the "old-field" schools of his boyhood days. In 1862 he enlisted in Company B, Capt. Simms, Fifty-third Georgia regiment, Col. Doyal. With his command, he participated in the seven-days' fight around Richmond, and the Maryland campaign, including the battle of Sharpsburg. Being taken sick, he was laid off, but by the time his command reached Staunton he rejoined it. A wound received at Chancellorsville rendered him ineffective for soldier-service, and he was sent home. But about seven months afterward he returned to the army and was appointed wagon-master, under Maj. Thompson, in the quartermaster's department. In a short time he rejoined the army, but being again adjudged unfit for field duty, was re-appointed wagon-master, and was in North Carolina at the time of the surrender. Very few men, in any sphere of life—civil or military—professional or political—ever more persistently endeavored to do what they conscientiously felt it to be their duty to do than Mr. Hayes tried to do during the war, according to the above recital. He came back from the war without a dollar, but by close attention to his farming interests and judicious investment, he has become the owner of a 600-acre farm, and on it a good home and substantial improvements, possessing, along with these, the esteem and confidence of his fellow-citizens. Mr. Hayes was married in 1859 to Miss Margaret L.—born in Newton county—daughter of John and Jane (Weldon) Cowan, of old Georgia families. They have only one child—P. B. Mr. Hayes is a master Mason, and himself and wife are members of the Presbyterian church.

GEORGE F. HAYES, tanner and farmer, Hayston, Newton Co., Ga., son of Robert L. and Sarah (Penn) Hayes, was born in Newton county in 1829. All the education he received was that obtained at the “old-field” school during the leisure intervals in farm work. He was raised a farmer, but after reaching manhood he engaged in tanning, in which he has continued in connection with his farm. In 1862 he enlisted in Company F, Capt. J. M. Simmers, Forty-second Georgia regiment, Col. Henderson, and gallantly served through the war. After the surrender he resumed work in his tannery and has prospered. He, too, lives on a part of the land first settled upon by his grandfather, and shares with his brothers the popularity and esteem which is the reward of probity of character and good citizenship. Mr. Hayes was married in 1857 to Miss E. F. Marks, daughter of Robert and Nancy P. (Bolton) Marks, formerly of Warren county, Ga., of which the family was among the early settlers. Eight children have been born to them: Jeanette, Chloe, Floyd, Emma, Fannie, Joe, Queen, and Maggie. Mrs. Hayes is a devoted and useful member of the Baptist church.

F. M. HAYES, farmer, Hayston, Newton Co., Ga., son of Robert L. and Sarah (Penn) Hayes, was born in Newton county in 1837. He was raised on the farm, and was educated at the historic log school-house with puncheon seats, when Webster's blue-back spelling book was in use. During the war he was on detached duty. In 1872, while absent from home, he was elected a justice of the peace without solicitation—without his consent or wish—and has been continuously re-elected since. He is living on a part of the land which his father cleared, and on which his grandfather settled nearly 100 years ago. He is unambitious of office, and perfectly satisfied with the distinction of being a good farmer, and with the profits of his honest labor. He is a solid, substantial, model citizen, much respected by his fellow-citizens. Mr. Hayes has been married three times. His first marriage was in 1856 to Miss Jimcy D.—born in Henry county, Ga.—daughter of James and Susan (Kidd) Hootton, South Carolinians, who early in life came in ox-carts to Georgia. Four children blessed this union: James L., Ophelia, Susannah, and Sarah. The mother of these, a devout Presbyterian, died in 1868, and in 1869, he married Miss Mary C.—born in South Carolina—daughter of James and Sarah (Hutchings) McCart. To them five children were born: Minnie, Emory F., Fletcher M., Evy, and Mary D. She was an exemplary member of the Methodist church, and died in 1881. Two years afterward he contracted a marriage with Miss Sarah Thacker. He is a master Mason, and himself and wife are prominent members of the Presbyterian church.

ALBERT L. JACKSON, farmer, Hayston, Newton Co., Ga., son of John F. and Mary E. (Lazenby) Jackson, was born in Newton county in 1846. His grandparents on his father's side were Cornelius and Elizabeth (Green) Jackson. He was born in Virginia, came to Georgia about 1800 and located land under a land warrant. He was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, and was raised on a farm. He enlisted in 1863 in Company C, Capt. Henry Park, Sixty-sixth Georgia regiment, Col. Nesbit. On Aug. 7, 1864, he was captured and sent to Camp Chase, Ohio, where he died. His grandmother on his mother's side was Nancy (Pharr) Lazenby, an old settler. Mr. Jackson was reared on the farm and received a limited education at the oft-described old-time log school-house so pleasurably remembered by thousands. In 1864 he enlisted in Company C, Sixty-sixth Georgia regiment. Among the battles in which he with his command participated were: Resaca, and others in front of Gen. Sherman on his march to Atlanta. He was captured at Decatur and sent to Camp Douglas, Ill., where he was held a prisoner eight months. After the war he came back to Newton county and began farming, which he has pursued ever since with satisfactory profitable results. He is one of the best farmers in Newton county, as well as one of its most substantial citizens. Mr. Jackson was married in 1869 to Miss Jane, daughter of Timothy and Sarah (Ivy) Greenade, formerly of Warren county, Ga., by whom he has had five children: Cary W.; Homer V.; Anna Lamar; Walter C.; and Marcus Earl. He has given his children a good education, two of whom are teachers. Homer V. is now a student at Mercer university, Macon, Ga., having previously attended the North Georgia Agricultural college at Dahlonega, Ga., where he won the gold medal prize. Mr. Jackson is a master Mason, and himself and wife are members of the Missionary Baptist church.

J. G. LESTER, banker, Covington, Newton Co., Ga., son of Richard P. and Mary Jane (Waddell) Lester, was born in Forsyth county, Ga., in 1857. His great-grandfather on his father's side was German Lester, who was a soldier in the patriot army—a member of the historic "Maryland line"—during the revolutionary war. His grandparents were Richard H. and Mary M. (Simms) Lester. He was a native of Maryland, whence he migrated to Georgia in 1818. He was attorney for the Cherokee Indians in north Georgia, which was the cause of his death, as he was killed during an incursion by the Creek Indians. He was a leading attorney and very popular. Mr. Lester's father was born in Gwinnett county, Ga., in 1832, and received his primary education at the old-time "old-field" school, finishing it at an academy. He afterward entered the office of his brother—the late Hon. George N. Lester, who died in 1892 while attorney-general of Georgia—to read law. Mr. Lester's mother was the daughter of Isaac W. and Sarah (Daniel) Waddell, a granddaughter of Rev. Moses Waddell, one of the most eminent divines of the Presbyterian church, and president of the university of Georgia (then Franklin college) from 1819 to 1829. Sarah Daniel was the daughter of James K. Daniel, of Greene county, Ga. Mr. Lester had the benefit of a good education, which was completed at the university of Georgia. At the age of seventeen he began teaching school, and taught three years, in the meantime reading law under his uncle, George N. Lester, and after being admitted to the bar located at Covington. He practiced for several years, and although he met with satisfactory success he abandoned it to go into the banking business. He is one of the incorporators of the Clark Banking company, a member of the board of directors, and the cashier of the bank. He is one of the foremost of the live young business men of Covington, and in integrity of character, intellectual endowment, advanced thought and progressiveness worthily represents his distinguished lineage. He has been the secretary and treasurer of the Covington & Oxford Street Railway company since 1888, and no citizen is more highly esteemed, or has more implicitly the confidence of his fellow citizens than he. Mr. Lester was married in 1882 to Miss Hennie—born and raised in Newton county—daughter of Thomas M. and Hennie (Andrew) Meriwether, by whom he has had three children: Paul W., Anna Mary, and Eugene. He is a member of the Knights of Damon, and the I. O. O. F. He is also a master Mason, and a past master of the local masonic lodge; and is now a member of the auditing committee of the grand lodge of Georgia. Himself and wife are active and prominent members of the Methodist church.

R. M. M'INTOSH, professor of music, Emory college, Oxford, Newton Co., Ga., son of Hector and Nancy (Wiggs) McIntosh, was born in Tennessee in 1836. His paternal grandparents, John and Barbara (McKenzie) McIntosh, were natives of Scotland who emigrated to the United States the latter part of the last century and settled in North Carolina. He was a farmer and did not long survive his arrival at his new home. Prof. McIntosh's father was born in Scotland and was quite young when his parents came to the United States. He grew to manhood in North Carolina, where, considering the period, he received an unusually good country school education. He served in the Creek Indian war under Gen. Jackson, who, when president, appointed him Indian agent for the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians. He held the office six years and devoted his entire time to its duties. His principal office was in Tennessee, near which he bought a farm; but he had temporary headquarters at other points, one of which was at what is still known as "McIntosh's bluff" on the Tombigbee river, in Washington county, Ala. Prof. McIntosh grew to manhood on the farm, and after receiving a good preparatory education entered the college at Jackson, Tenn., in 1852. When half advanced in 1854 he left college and engaged in teaching, following it many years. He spent about two years during this time reading law. In 1855 he was adjunct professor of English and mathematics in Triana High school, Madison county, Ala. The following year he went to Virginia, and adopted music teaching as a profession. He enlisted at Richmond May 7, 1861, in Company H, Eighteenth Virginia regiment, and was soon at the front. For conspicuous gallantry he was soon made second lieutenant, and not long afterward was promoted to the first lieutenantcy. He was transferred from this company to Company C, Twenty-fifth Virginia battalion, of which he was commissioned captain, and held the rank until the surrender. With his command he was a participant in many of the hardest fought battles of the war, maintaining his reputation for courage and military skill. On one occasion he was surprised and taken prisoner. Deciding not to "accept the situation" he determined to get out of it if he could, so one night while under guard he saw a chance—but really a desperate chance—to make his escape. He made the attempt, was so fortunate as to succeed, and soon afterward reported at headquarters. Capt. McIntosh relates the following incident connected with his army life: In his company was a private named Joel Fore—nicknamed "Beauregard." On one occasion he came to the captain's headquarters and asked for a pair of shoes. In a jocular way—just for fun—he told him to "go to Jeff Davis for shoes." Sure enough, Joel went the next day, and being ushered into the presence of the Confederate president, said to him: "Capt. McIntosh told me to come to you for a pair of shoes." Mr. Davis sent his valet for some extra pairs of shoes he had, and when they were brought in told "Beauregard" to pick out the pair he wanted. He did so and went his way rejoicing. The captain was dumbfounded when on meeting the soldier a day or two afterward with the shoes on the latter told him how he got them. In 1868 Prof. McIntosh returned to Tennessee, and was for several years professor of vocal music and musical composition in Vanderbilt university. In 1876 he accepted the chair of music in Emory college—teaching vocal music and musical composition—which he has filled for nineteen years acceptably to the college and its patrons, and with distinction to himself.

During this time he has probably been the most numerous and voluminous composer, compiler and publisher of musical books—especially of those adapted to Sunday-schools—of any person in the Union. His musical compositions have attained remarkable popularity and are in use throughout the United States—probably wherever there is a Methodist church or mission. He has edited no less than twenty musical publications, the sales of two of which have exceeded a million each—a success attained by no other composer—and their circulation now is larger than those of any other. In 1882, 1886 and 1890 he was a lay delegate from the north Georgia conference to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church south. The value of his services to the church, especially to Sunday-schools, in preparing music for use in them, cannot be over-estimated; and it is no marvel that he is held, in social circles and wherever his publications have been used, in the very highest esteem. For many years he has held the office of town recorder. Prof. McIntosh was married Feb. 23, 1860, to Miss Sarah C.—born in Charlotte county, Va.—daughter of Marcus I. and Phoebe (Martin) McGleson. He was a native of Virginia, well known, quite wealthy and very influential; but the war ruined him financially. He moved to Texas, where he died. Prof. and Mrs. McIntosh have been blessed with two daughters: Lulu, wife of E. P. Burns; and Nannie S., wife of Rev. H. W. Joiner. He is a member of the Phi Delta Theta fraternity, also of the masonic fraternity; and himself and wife are working and very influential members of the Methodist church.

REV. JOHN S. MOORE, professor, Emory college, Oxford, Newton Co., Ga., son of Robert and Elizabeth (Simmons) Moore, was born in Mecklenburg county, Va., Dec. 3, 1829. His parents on both sides belonged to the best families of Virginia. His father, son of Warner Moore, was always a farmer, in easy circumstances. Prof. Moore, after receiving a good primary education, entered Randolph-Macon college, from which he was graduated with the degree of A. B. He next attended the university of Virginia, graduating in 1854 with the degree of Master of Arts. He then accepted a position at Randolph-Macon college as professor of natural philosophy, where he remained until January, 1856, when he was received into the Alabama conference as an itinerant preacher, and for many years performed valuable ministerial work. He was also a professor in the Centenary institute, Alabama, six years. In 1871 he was elected professor of mathematics of the Southern university, Greensboro, Ala., where the degree of doctor of divinity was conferred on him in 1879. He remained at this institution until 1883, when he was elected professor of Latin in Emory college, Oxford, Ga., where he has been doing faithful and valuable work ever since. He is a member of the North Georgia conference of the M. E. church, south, and in addition to his confining and arduous college duties he preaches every Sunday in the year at churches in and around Oxford. Early in life he consecrated himself to the work of the Master, and it has been his effort always faithfully to perform his vow. Preaching and teaching have been the work of his life, with the rich fruits of which Alabama and Georgia abound. Prof. Moore was married in 1859 to Miss Mary S., daughter of John L. and Susan (Buxton) Porter, natives of Virginia, whose families were among the first as to time and social rank. When he was married his bride's father was acting as naval constructor at Pensacola, Fla. When Virginia seceded Mr. Porter resigned and cast his lot with the Confederacy. By the Confederate government he was appointed chief of naval construction, and continued in the service as such until the surrender. Under his supervision the famous ram "Merrimac," which played such havoc with the Federal warships, was built. Prof. and Mrs. Moore have been blessed with three sons and three daughters. The sons, John W., Robert and George P., are all successfully engaged in business in Birmingham, Ala. Of the daughters, M. Alice has been a missionary in Brazil, South America, since 1892, under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary society of the Methodist church, south, and she is now engaged in teaching music and art in the missionary college in Piracicaba; Mattie B. is the wife of Rev. R. F. Eakes, of the North Georgia conference, who is now stationed at Thomson, Ga., and Margaret S., is at home, the principal of Palmer institute, a children's primary school, Oxford. Prof. Moore is a member of the masonic fraternity.

W. S. NEEL, a leading citizen of Newton county, is a native of Georgia, born in 1841, and was the son of Thomas and Nancy (Veasey) Neel. The father is a native of South Carolina, having been born in 1795; was a son of Thomas Neel, and served in the war of 1812. In 1826 he came to Richmond county, Ga., and a few years later moved to Hancock county. He was married to Jane Rabun, a native of North Carolina, who came here an infant in arms with her parents about 1800. Mr. Neel began life as a poor boy, but possessing pluck, energy and perseverance, he succeeded in amassing a fortune before his death. He was a justice of the peace, high in the order of Masons, and with his wife belonged to the Baptist church. Mr. W. S. Neel was reared in Hancock county, Ga., where his father lived, received special educational instruction under Prof. Beman of state fame and was graduated at Mercer college in 1860. In 1861 he enlisted in Company K, Fifteenth Georgia regiment volunteers, under Capt. Linton Stevens and Col. Thomas W. Thomas. He served throughout the war and saw active service from the first, being in several hard-fought battles. He was captured and held a prisoner during the last year of the war. When hostilities ceased he returned home and took care of his widowed mother. He then began teaching school, and in this profession achieved a high reputation, a peculiar mode adopted by him proving very successful. In December, 1866, he married Miss Bettie Pelham, a native of Alabama, and daughter of Atkinson and Martha (McGehee) Pelham, natives of Kentucky. Mr. Pelham was a leading physician in his state, and was the son of Charles and Isabell (Atkinson) Pelham, the father being a major in the revolutionary war. To Mr. and Mrs. Neel were born six children, five of whom are living: Thomas, Mattie, William, Robert and Rabun. Mr. Neel and wife are members of the Baptist church.

OLIVER S. PORTER. Sometimes some of the most progressive and useful citizens of a community are found among those who, never self-seeking, recoil from notoriety; they not only do not sound their own praises or merits, but would if they could prevent others from doing so. Of this class is the estimable subject of this sketch. Oliver S. Porter, manufacturer, Covington, Newton Co., Ga., son of James and Athline (Cox) Porter, was born in Greene county, Ga., in 1836. His paternal grandparents were Oliver and Margaret (Watson) Porter. His grandfather was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, and was present at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. Immediately after the war he came to Georgia and settled in Wilkes (now Greene) county. Mr. Porter's father was born in Greene county in 1808, and followed farming all his life. He was a volunteer soldier in the Creek war of 1836, and was adjutant of his regiment. His mother was a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Hyde) Cox, whose families were among the early settlers of Greene county. Mr. Porter was reared on the farm in Greene county, and "graduated" from the "old-field" school of his boyhood period, taught in a log house, his first teacher being John Malone.

He afterward taught school himself three years in Covington. In 1861 he enlisted in the Panola guards, Capt. G. B. Knight, which became a part of Cobb's legion, and he was made adjutant of his regiment. The following are some of the battles in which he bore an honorable part: Malvern Hill, Boonesboro Gap, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Salem Church, Gettysburg, Spottsylvania Courthouse, Knoxville (where he was wounded), South Mountain, Chickamauga and Cold Harbor, and was captured at Front Royal, Va. He was detained a prisoner ten months and released June 18, 1865. Since the war he has been engaged principally in cotton manufacturing. In 1871, in company with D. W. Spence, he bought the place now known as the Porterdale mills, and in 1877 he bought his partner's interest and organized a company which now owns and operates the mills, which are situated on a fine power, advantageously located, and contain about 5,000 spindles, and the output averages about 4,500 pounds of manufactured goods per day. They make fish lines, seine twine, cable cord, and all kinds of small rope. He is a well-informed, broad-minded man, very progressive, and yet very conservative. He is a developer, one of the solidest and most useful of Newton county's citizens, and none is held in higher esteem. Mr. Porter was married in 1869 to Mrs. Julia (nee McCracken) Camp, daughter of William and Olivia (Hayden) McCracken, and to them four children have been born: John, James, William and Mary, who died in 1891 in her fifteenth year. He is a member of the masonic fraternity, and his wife is an exemplary member of the Methodist church.

SILAS H. STARR, Jr., merchant, Starrsville, Newton Co., Ga., son of Silas H. and Ann J. (Dabney) Starr, was born Aug. 25, 1838, and reared in Newton county, and received a collegiate education, graduating from Emory college, Oxford, Ga., in the class of 1859. In 1861 he enlisted in Company H, Capt. A. A. Lee, Third Georgia regiment, Col. A. R. Wright. He was in the army throughout the war, saw much arduous service, and was in numerous skirmishes as well as some of the most important and bloodiest of the battles, among them Chicasma, South Mills (where he was made second lieutenant), seven days' fight around Richmond, Malvern Hill, Second Manassas, Sharpsburg (where he had command of the company), Chancellorsville (capturing a whole regiment), Gettysburg, Wilderness, etc., and in October, 1863, was promoted to first lieutenant of artillery and assigned to duty as ordnance officer in Wright's old brigade. He was present in every skirmish and engagement in which his regiment bore a part, and responded to his name at every roll call during the war. He was in the hospital but once and then for only three days. He was acting division ordnance officer of Anderson's division at the time Gen. Mahone was in command, and for his efficiency was promoted to the rank of captain in 1864. After the surrender he returned home and commenced farming. Later he went to Texas, where he remained five years, and then returned to Newton county and taught school for four years. In 1879 he engaged in a general merchandise business, in which he has continued, established a large trade and been very prosperous. He is a prominent and useful citizen, and is much esteemed. Mr. Starr was married in 1868 to Miss Fannie A. Tarver, by whom he has had two children, one of whom only—Alice K., wife of W. T. Corley—is living. Mrs. Starr died Sept. 27, 1873, and Jan. 8, 1880, he married Miss Fannie M. Butler, of Powder Springs, Ga., who bore him four children, only one of whom, Rena Maude, is living. This wife died in June, 1887, and April 4, 1888, he married Miss Nannie Childs. Mr. Starr is a master Mason, and himself and wife are members of the Primitive Baptist church.

T. A. STARR, merchant, Starrsville, Newton Co., Ga., son of Silas H. and Ann J. (Dabney) Starr, was born in Newton county, Ga., Dec. 19, 1840. His paternal grandparents were Silas and Mrs. Elizabeth Pinkston (nee Lawson) Starr, natives respectively of Maryland and Virginia. They came to Georgia in 1805 and settled in Wilkes county, making the journey in ox-carts held together with wooden pins and hickory withes, on block wheels. In 1821 they moved to Newton county, and when nearing their new home, there being no roads, they had to cut a roadway through the woods, then settled in the woods near where Starrsville now stands, and cleared a farm. He lived to be quite old. Mr. Starr's father was born in Wilkes county and came with the family to Newton county, in which he attained great prominence and became a leading citizen. He was a staunch and enthusiastic temperance man and a royal arch Mason. His mother was a daughter of a Mr. Tyra G. Dabney, who came from the state of Virginia about 1800. He was one of the first settlers in Newton county, and cleared the land on which Starrsville stands. Mr. Starr was reared on the farm and had the benefit of a collegiate education, graduating at Emory college, class of 1862, and when a young man taught school a short time himself. In March, 1862, he enlisted in Company F, Capt. James Summers, Forty-second Georgia regiment, Col. R. J. Henderson. Among others he was in the following battles: Tazewell, Cumberland Gap, Chickasaw Bayou, Baker's Creek, Vicksburg (where he was captured, but soon afterward exchanged), Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face, Resaca, New Hope, Pumpkin Vine, Kennesaw Mountain, Atlanta (fighting July 20, 22, 28), Jonesboro, Franklin, Nashville, Edisto river, Orangeburg and Kinston, where he was wounded and sent to the hospital. Before he was able to return to his command the war was over. He entered the service as a private, but was soon made second lieutenant, later first lieutenant. Returning from the war he engaged in farming, but after a while he went to Texas, where he remained three months, and then came back to Starrsville and commenced a general merchandising business on a capital of $425. He has been phenomenally successful. By giving his undivided attention to his business, keeping abreast of the times as to supply and demand, and liberal and honest dealing, he has built up a large and very profitable business, his trade coming from miles around. He is one of the solid and progressive men of the county, and stands high as a business man, a citizen and as a gentleman. Starrsville was re-established as a post-office in 1889, and he has been the postmaster during its existence, but for many years previously it had been a sort of distributing point for the surrounding country.

T. C. SWANN, merchant, Covington, Newton Co., Ga., son of Thomas D. and Olive (Huson) Swann, was born in Newton county in 1849. His father, son of Thomas Swann, was born in North Carolina, whence he came to Georgia about 1828 and settled in Henry county. After a year's residence there he moved to Newton county and permanently settled, and for many years served as a justice of the peace. In 1863 he enlisted in the state troops, and after serving three months enlisted in Company B (of which he was made first lieutenant), Capt. Aaron K. Richardson, Fourth Georgia militia, serving with marked gallantry. His mother was born in South Carolina, daughter of Stephen and Mary (Reagan) Huson, who early in life migrated from that state to Georgia. Mr. Swann was raised on the farm and had the advantage of a good common school education, his first teacher being Rev. John W. Baker. In 1869 he went to Texas, where he taught school one year and then returned to Georgia. In 1872 he commenced merchandising in Conyers, Rockdale Co., Ga., where he remained seven years, and then removed to Covington, which has since been his home, and where he has established the largest business in the city. Enterprising and public-spirited, he takes an active part in every movement promising to advance the interests of the city and county. He is a director of the street railway company, was on the board of county commissioners six years and chairman of the board four years, and has been a member of the city council almost ever since he came to Covington. Mr. Swann was married in 1873 to Miss Elizabeth, born and reared at Oxford, Miss., where her father located when she was an infant. She is a daughter of Robert and Nancy (McCollum) Stowers, natives of De Kalb county. Two of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Swann, Olive and Thomas, are living. Mrs. Swann is a devoted member of the Methodist church.

R. H. THOMPSON, merchant, Covington, Newton Co., Ga., son of Robert and Anna (Underwood) Thompson, was born in Newton county in 1834. His paternal grandparents were John and Jane Thompson. He was of Scotch-Irish descent, and born in Virginia, and when a young man migrated to North Carolina. He was a farmer and a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. In the early years of this century he came from North Carolina to Georgia and settled in the woods on land now included in Newton county, and cleared a small farm. He made the journey with an ox-cart, held together with wooden pins and hickory withes, on block wheels. Although a farmer, he did job woodwork and repairing for the settlement. He died in 1824. Mr. Thompson's father was born in North Carolina, and was about seven years old when his parents came to Georgia. Farming was his life pursuit, and his success was equal to that of his brother farmers—Newton being a backwoods county until about 1845. He was a justice of the peace many years, a master Mason, and an earnest, devoted member of the Methodist church. His mother was the daughter of Lemuel and Anna Underwood, whose families were among the pioneer settlers of the county. Mr. Thompson was reared on the farm and received only the meager education obtainable at that time at the "old field" schools. In 1862 he enlisted in Company B, Capt. T. W. Simms, Fifty-third Georgia regiment. He was in many very important battles, among them those of Seven Pines, seven days' fight around Richmond, Wilderness, etc. He continued in the service until the surrender and then walked home. Besides farming he was engaged somewhat extensively in the manufacture of buggies and wagons for sixteen years, and of late years carried on the undertaking business and dealt in furniture. Possessing good business qualifications and the confidence of the people, he has prospered and is looked upon as one of the leading citizens of Newton county. Mr. Thompson was married in 1851 to Miss Octavia, born and reared in Covington, daughter of Pressly and Eleanor (Whitten) Jones. He was killed during the war in Covington, though not in the army. A troop of Federal cavalry on a small raid entered Covington, and he, being one of the few who attempted to repel the invasion, was killed. Of seven children born to Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, six survive: Horace, William, Heard, Algie, Eva and Ida. He is a master Mason, and himself and wife are active and useful members of the Methodist church.

PLEASANT WILLSON, physician and surgeon, Newborn, Newton Co., Ga., son of Leroy M. and Tabitha (Shaw) Willson, was born in Shady Dale, Jasper Co., Ga., Sept. 5, 1838. His paternal grandfather, John Willson, was an early settler in Jasper county and for many years was clerk of the superior court. Dr. Willson's father was born in Jasper county and was well-educated. At the age of eighteen he commenced teaching school, and taught eighteen years, and was justice of the peace many years. Subsequently he moved to Morgan county, Ga., of which he was treasurer for about twenty years. He was a master Mason and a member of the Missionary Baptist church. His mother was a daughter of a Mr. Gilbert Shaw. He was a native of the state of Virginia, and was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, being wounded while in the service. After the war he migrated to South Carolina, and subsequently moved to Georgia. Dr. Willson received his primary education at the old-time log schoolhouse. In 1858 he commenced the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Drs. Knight and Crawford, after which he attended lectures at the Atlanta Medical college, from which he was graduated in 1861. That same year he enlisted as a private in the Panola guards, which afterward became Company G, Cobb's legion, and went to the front. His first service was in the Peninsula, and being taken sick, he was placed in the room at Yorktown in which Washington and Cornwallis arranged the terms of capitulation at the close of the war for independence. As soon as he was able he came home, where he remained until 1862, when he reported for duty. He was made assistant surgeon and assigned to duty in the gangrene ward, where he was so efficient and so successful in the treatment of his patients as to be the subject of very complimentary notices in the local papers. Returning from the war he located in Morgan county, where he successfully and profitably practiced until about ten years ago, when he came to Newborn, where he has established a large and very remunerative practice and a local reputation for skill and ability equal to that of any practitioner in the state. He is also engaged in farming, in which he is a progressionist and exhibits the same good judgment that he does in the practice of his profession. Dr. Willson was married in 1873 to Miss Lou, born in Morgan county, daughter of John F. and Margaret (Matthews) Johnson. He was a soldier in the Florida (or Seminole) war, for which he is now drawing a pension, and as one of "Joe Brown's pets" served in the late unpleasantness, and as a participant in the defense of Atlanta was in the battle of July 22, 1864. Five children blessed this marriage, of whom three survive: Maggie, John T. and Pleasant, Jr. A devoted member of the Missionary Baptist church, the mother of these children died early in 1883. Toward the close of the same year he married Miss Mollie, daughter of J. M. and Martha (Webb) Robinson. She died a consistent and pious member of the Methodist church in 1884. Subsequently he married Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Josiah and Laura (Heard) Perry, old settlers of Newton county, by whom he has had two children: Laura and Watson Hines. The doctor is a master Mason and Mrs. Willson is a member of the Primitive Baptist church.

WILLIAM J. WRIGHT, farmer, Starrsville, Newton Co., Ga., son of William and Susannah (Herring) Wright, was born in Morgan county, Ga., in 1822. His family on both sides were among the worthy hardy pioneers who settled this part of the state. His paternal grandfather, William Wright, was a native of Virginia, who migrated to Georgia and settled in Baldwin (now Morgan) county, about 1805. He was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Mr. Wright's father was born in Virginia, and came to Georgia about 1805, and settled in Clarke county. His mother's parents were of old Virginia families, who moved to Georgia about 1805, and settled in what is now Morgan county. His mother made the trip on horseback, riding behind her father, and at one point, the horse swam a wide, deep stream with both of them on his back. Mr. Wright was raised on the farm, and what education he received was obtained at the historic dirt-floor log school-house, with puncheon seats, stick-and-mud chimney, and square holes in the sides for windows. Farming has been his life occupation, and he has taken only such interest in public affairs as any good citizen should. During the unpleasantness he served with what is known as "Joe Brown's pets." He was, however, a justice of the peace at the time, in which capacity he served his fellow-citizens fourteen years—and carries his old commission in his pocket. Satisfied with the enjoyments of home, he stays there, is a good and prosperous farmer and model citizen. Mr. Wright was married in 1851 to Miss Amanda—born in Newton county—daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Trammell) Shawlcomb, of old well-known Georgia families. Twelve children were the fruit of this union, of whom six survive: Legrand S., Henry, Ida, Edward H., William J., and Gordon. Mr. Wright and his wife are exemplary members of the Methodist church.

OCONEE COUNTY.

JOHN W. JOHNSON, one of Oconee county's leading citizens, was born in Watkinsville in 1837, and is the son of John Calvin and Elizabeth (Martin) Johnson. His father was born in North Carolina, near Greensborough, in 1808. He was educated in the public schools, but acquired much information and learning by reading, and was conversant with all subjects of general interest, and a most entertaining conversationalist. He came to Georgia in 1824 and settled in that part of Clarke county now Oconee. He was then only sixteen years old, and had come to the state with a strange family. He was given employment as deputy clerk of the county, a position which he held until he was of age, when he was elected clerk, and continuously elected during the long period of forty years—until he declined re-election. In 1872 he was made treasurer and secretary of the Northeastern railroad, and served about four years, when he was made librarian of the university of Georgia, a position he held until his death, which occurred when he was 79 years of age. He was a member of the Methodist church and a Mason—was W. M. of his lodge for years. He was a son of James Johnson, who was born in Ireland, and came to America in the early days of this century. The mother of Mr. John W. Johnson was the daughter of Jasper and Martha (Manley) Morton, both of whom were natives of Georgia. Mr. Johnson was given a good education, attending Henry and Emory college, of Virginia, in 1855. In August, 1861, he enlisted in Company C, known as the Echo company, Fifth Texas regiment, Hood's old brigade, and served through the entire war in this regiment. He was in all its engagements, except the second battle of Manassas, he then being home on a furlough, suffering from wounds received at Sharpsburg. He rejoined his command, under Gen. Longstreet, at Richmond, and was at Appomattox. In 1865 he married Martha M. Ellis, daughter of John Ellis, and they have six living children, viz.: John C., Mary E., Albert S., James W., Leonard T., and Maggie E. The mother was born in Oglethorpe county in 1849. Himself and wife are members of the M. E. church, and Mr. Johnson is a Mason, having become a member just after the war. He served as tax collector of Clarke and Oconee counties for twenty-eight years, and was elected clerk of the superior court till the county was divided, and Oconee county organized. He was in the mercantile business for years, and is now interested in farming. The Johnson family is one of the leading families in this section of the state, and Mr. Johnson is probably the most popular man in the county.

B. E. THRASHER, ordinary of Oconee county, Watkinsville, Oconee Co., Ga., was born on Feb. 22, 1850, is of Welsh descent, and from a family long and prominently known in (then Clarke) Oconee county. The founder of this branch of the Thrasher family was Thomas Thrasher, who, with his wife Mary, came from Wales to America long before the revolutionary war. He had a son, John, who was a soldier in the army of the patriots, and who came to Georgia, and settled in what is now Oconee county. He was a distinguished-appearing man, and one of a firm will, as was exemplified in a story his descendants tell of him: When, on one occasion, he became angry at whisky drinking, he took a vow not to touch liquor for fifty years, and fulfilled his oath. He married Susan Barton, and to them was born, in 1793, Isaac Thrasher. When three years old he was taken to what is now Oconee, where he grew to manhood. He married Elizabeth Hester, and to them was born Barton C. Thrasher, father of the subject of this sketch. Barton C. Thrasher was a man renowned for his piety and Christian teachings, and was a liberal contributor to the cause of religion and humanity. He was opposed to secession when it was first talked of, but when Georgia seceded, he stood by his native state and offered to enlist, but the people knew he could better serve his country at home, and there for three years did this noble man prove the mainstay of scores of soldiers' families. His meat house and his granary, his pocket-book, and his every possession, was as free to the suffering and distressed, as to his own family. After the war, when soldiers were returning to find their homes desolate, with broken health and shattered courage, it was Barton C. Thrasher who fed and clothed them, and started them on in life with words of cheer. He married a woman—good like himself—Mary Elder, a daughter of Edmond and Nancy (Tigner) Elder. Edmond Elder was a son of David and Nancy (Reed) Elder, and Nancy Reed was a blood relative of George Washington. Nancy Tigner's father was Philip Tigner, who was a soldier in the revolutionary army, and owned the first corn mill in this part of the state. He built a church, which bore his name, the materials all being contributed by him, even to the nails which he made in the blacksmith shop. The family on both sides were pioneers of Georgia. Pope Tigner, son of Philip, was one of the first graduates from the university of Georgia. The wife of Philip Tigner was a Miss Hall, a near relative of John Hall, one of the signers of the declaration of independence. Mr. B. E. Thrasher was given a good education, and taught school for two years. He then entered the university of Georgia and was graduated from the law department in 1876. He has practiced his profession since, and in 1885 was elected ordinary of Oconee county. After the war the Thrashers were left almost ruined in fortune, and Mr. Thrasher found it necessary to seek hard labor to earn enough money to go through college. He persevered, however, and his present honorable position is the result of his personal efforts to help himself. In 1872 he married Sarah T., daughter of J. B. and Ann W. (Moore) Hathaway. They have five children living: John B., Anna, B. E., Jr., Roy, and Grady. The mother was born and reared in Oconee county, and is a granddaughter of Susan Benning, who was a sister of Gen. Benning. Mr. Thrasher and wife are members of the Methodist church, and he is a Mason of many years' standing. He has some farming interests, but gives his time to his office, the duties of which he discharges satisfactorily to his constituency.

OGLETHORPE COUNTY.

JOSEPH M'WHORTON, one of the largest farmers of Oglethorpe county, was born in this county in 1832 and is the son of James H. and Eliza (Penn) McWhorton. The father was born in the same county in 1816 and was one of the most eminent men of the county in his day. He was justice of the peace for many years, served as judge of the inferior court, and was then elected to represent the county in the legislature, serving about fifteen years in that capacity. He was an extensive farmer and a prominent Mason, and a member of the Baptist church. He was a son of Hugh and Helen (Ligeon) McWhorton. Hugh McWhorton was a native of Ireland, and came to America, settling in Virginia. In 1796 he moved to Georgia, dying shortly after his arrival. The mother of Joseph McWhorton was the daughter of John Penn. Joseph McWhorton had few chances for obtaining an education in his boyhood days, but he was an untiring reader and by the time he had reached manhood his mind was stored with useful information, which helped him in the successful life that followed. In 1854 he married Emily Key, daughter of an old planter of the county. By this union six children were born, five of whom are living: Lauren, Hamilton, Dr. Thomas, Mary E., and Joseph. Mrs. McWhorton, an excellent Christian woman, died in 1887, and in 1890 Mr. McWhorton married Mary Young, daughter of M. H. Young. She is an active member of the M. E. church. In 1863 Mr. McWhorton raised a company and went out into the Confederate service as its captain. He started first in the cavalry under Gen. Toombs and after one year the company was reorganized into an infantry company. Then Mr. McWhorton was promoted to lieutenant-colonel, previously serving as major, and was in front of Sherman on his march to the sea. After the war he returned to Georgia and began farming and merchandising. He has served for twelve years on the board of county commissioners, and was president of the board much of the time. He has several times represented the county in the legislature, and is one of its leading citizens. Mr. McWhorton lives on a fine estate near Stephens.

ISHAM H. PITTARD, farmer, Winterville, was born in Clark county, Ga., in 1837, and is the son of Humphrey and Sarah (Hart) Pittard. His paternal grandparents, Samuel and Rebecca (Meridy) Pittard, were natives of Scotland, who came to America and first settled in Virginia, afterward removing to North Carolina, where they died. He was a man of education and taught school about forty years in Virginia and North Carolina. Mr. Pittard's father was born in Virginia in 1780, came to Georgia in 1796, when he started out for himself, his experiences being those of all self-made men. He encountered privations and hardships, but with an indomitable will he pushed on to success and competence. He married Sarah, a daughter of Archibald and Mary (Berry) Hart, her father being a relative of Nancy Hart of revolutionary fame. Isham Pittard was brought up on the farm, and his mother being a widow and his brothers gone to homes of their own, he early felt the responsibilities of domestic cares; and so much was dependent upon him that it was not until after he was twenty-two years old that he found time to school himself. In 1861 he enlisted in Company H, Capt. J. E. Ritch (T. R. R.) Cobb's Legion cavalry. He was first lieutenant and had charge of the company for two years, while the captain was in prison, giving four years of his young manhood to the cause. He was captured and held sixteen months, but never was wounded. After the war he returned to Clarke county and remained there until 1869, when he came to Winterville and began a merchandising business. This was continued until about two years ago, when Mr. Pittard retired from business and is looking after his extensive farming interests. He was married in 1877 to Susan R. Pittard—born and reared in Coweta county, Ga.—daughter of Davis Pittard, and they have one living child, Myrick B. Mr. and Mrs. Pittard are members of the M. E. church, south, and he has been a Mason for nearly a quarter of a century. He has served as justice of the peace, and in 1894 was elected to the legislature from Oglethorpe county, and is now the incumbent. He was nominated without his consent or knowledge—and received 900 out of 1,600 votes. After the war he commenced life as a laborer on a salary of $6 a month; but he soon found employment in a store as a clerk, and his quick mind and industrious habits won him promotion from the start. He has been successful, and his position in life has been reached without putting anybody down. He is a man of strict integrity, whose word is as good as his bond.

PAULDING COUNTY.

E. W. Y. ALLGOOD, ordinary, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of William and Eliza (Christian) Allgood, was born in 1838. His grandfather, William A. Allgood, was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, and shortly after independence was achieved came to Georgia in an oxcart, and settled in Elbert county. He afterward enlisted as a soldier in the war of 1812, and fought under Gen. Jackson at the battle of Mobile. He moved to what is now Walton county in 1814, where he lived until he died. Mr. Allgood's father was born in 1814, in what is now Walton county, was raised a farmer and remained one all his life. While yet a mere lad he went to Campbell county, Ga., whence in 1833 he moved to Paulding county, where he farmed and lived until his death in 1870. Mr. Allgood's mother, daughter of Obadiah and Joanna (Barney) Christian, was born in Madison county in 1814, was married in 1837, and now, eighty-one years old, is still living. Of the nine children born to this couple there are yet living: James; J. Wesley; Thomas; E. W. Y., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Mary Lyle, Florida; and Eliza P. Two sons, William O. and Charles D., died while in the army. Mr. Allgood obtained the usual limited education allotted to boys at the time he was growing up at the dirt-floor log school house, with split log benches, and windowless. He was trained a farmer, and farming has been the principal employment of his life. In 1862 he enlisted in Company D, First Georgia cavalry, and with his command was in the first and second battles of Murfreesboro, and at Nashville, Tenn., Chickamauga, Kennesaw mountain, Pace's ferry near Atlanta, around Atlanta, and other engagements of more or less importance. His command bore a conspicuous part in the capture of Gen. Stoneman near Clinton, Ga. Mr. Allgood was hit twice with a ball, but not disabled nor seriously hurt. He served as a scout and guide for Gen. Johnston during the battle at New Hope and the defense of Atlanta. July 22, 1864, he was honored with a lieutenant's commission for bravery and meritorious service, and remained with Gen. Johnston until his surrender. Immediately after that he returned to his farm and set about the work of domestic reconstruction, and his labors have been followed by very satisfactory results—reunion of the parts has been perfected and the utmost harmony prevails. In 1878 he was made a member of the board of education; and in 1888 he was elected to represent his senatorial district in the general assembly. He served in that body with distinction; among other matters introduced a bill granting a new charter to Tallapoosa, Haralson Co., and another making a separate school district of Tallapoosa, both of which became laws; and another bill to amend the constitution, which was lost. In 1893 he was elected ordinary of the county, the term being four years. Such are his integrity of character, his superior capabilities and popularity, the probabilities are that he will hold it at his own option. Mr. Allgood is a master Mason, and a prominent member of the Methodist church.

WILLIAM J. AUSTIN, farmer, Nebo, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Michael and Edith (Austin) Austin, was born in Paulding county (near his present home) in 1841. His father was born in South Carolina and when he was quite small his parents came to Georgia—making the journey in an ox-cart—and settling in Campbell county. In 1836 the family moved to Paulding county. He was raised on the farm and received such education as was afforded by the common schools of the county. When he began farming for himself he built his first wagons of wood cut from his land. He was a successful farmer and died in 1883. Mr. Austin's mother was a daughter of Dred and Candors (Lake) Austin, and was born in Walton county, Ga., in 1822. When a child her parents moved to Cobb county, Ga., where she was reared, and was married about 1825. She is still living, the mother of five children, one only of whom is living. Mr. Austin was raised on the farm and was schooled in the small and uncomfortable log house of that day and of course his education was very limited; but after his marriage he improved it much by studying by a pine-knot light. When fourteen years old he was seriously crippled by the crushing of his right leg—an injury which exempted him from service during the civil war. In 1864 he was taken prisoner by the Federal army and sent to Chattanooga, then to Nashville, and afterward to Louisville, Ky. There he with several of his comrades took the oath of allegiance to the United States and were sent to Indiana. That same year he returned south, and on the way was intercepted and detained by Gen. Forrest. Three weeks afterward Gen. Forrest arrived at Florence, Ala., where he joined Gen. Hood, and Mr. Austin and his companions were pressed into the Confederate service, and placed in Company F, Fortieth Georgia regiment. His command was with Gen. Hood in his Kentucky campaign, and until he reached Franklin, Tenn., when Mr. Austin left the army and walked home. He went to work manfully on his farm, and by hard work and good management his prosperity has quite equaled his most sanguine expectations. Mr. Austin was married in 1860 to Miss Sallie, daughter of William and Bethsena (Poole) Bingham. To them twelve children have been born: Isaac, William A., Jefferson L., deceased; Charles L., John H., James G., Oliver C., Mrs. Nancy Simmons, Mrs. Sarah F. Alexander, Larinia L., Metta L., and Ida M. Mr. Austin is an exemplary member of the Methodist church, with which he united in 1860.

HENRY BONE, farmer, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Bailey and Nancy (Evans) Bone, was born in Madison county, Ga., in 1834. His grandfather, George Bone, was a native of Ireland, and migrated to this country about 1770. He was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, and after peace was proclaimed settled in South Carolina, but soon afterward migrated to Georgia and settled in what is now Madison county, where Mr. Bone's father was born in 1800. He was reared on the farm there, received a limited education at the "old field" schools common at the time, and remained in the county until 1835, when he moved to Carroll county to engage in gold-mining, in which he was quite successful. Ten years later he moved to Paulding county, where he farmed until his death, 1859. Mr. Bone's mother was a daughter of William and Celia Evans, and born in what is now Madison county in 1802. In 1822 she was married to Mr. Bone, and in 1889 died, aged eighty-seven years, the mother of eight children: William, John, Henry, Mrs. Celia Abliss, Mrs. Mary Owens, Atlanta, Mrs. Nancy Owens, Mrs. Elizabeth Collins and Mrs. Addie Drake. Mr. Bone was reared a farmer, received a very limited education and worked on his farm until Georgia seceded. Enlisting in Company K, Sixtieth Georgia regiment, he went to the front, and with it participated in the important battles of Gettysburg, second Manassas, Wilderness and minor engagements. At Staunton, Va., he was prostrated by measles, with which he suffered some time very severely. He was captured at Winchester, Va., but escaped within an hour afterward. He was never wounded, but on one occasion a ball struck his canteen and passing through one side glanced from the other. He was sent home a few days before the surrender, and never returned to the army. Returning to his farm he re-habilitated it, and has enjoyed the prosperity due to hard work and good management. He owns and operates a fine, well-stocked farm just outside the corporate limits of Dallas, and is regarded as one of the best farmers in the county. Mr. Bone was married in 1869 to Miss Ella, daughter of Adam and Maria (Martin) Summers, formerly of South Carolina, and of the children born to them six are living: Katie M., Bertie, Mattie, Warner, Clyde and Raymond. Since 1866 Mr. Bone has been a member of the masonic fraternity.

JAMES T. CARTER, JR., farmer, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of James T. and Lucinda (Harris) Carter, was born in Paulding county in 1849. His paternal grandfather, Robert Carter, was a native of South Carolina, was a farmer, served as a soldier through the war of 1812, and in 1835 migrated to Georgia, where he lived to the extreme age of 104 years. Mr. Carter's father was born in South Carolina in 1814, and was educated in the common schools of the locality. He came to Georgia by ox-cart conveyance in 1835 and settled in Gwinnett county, where he remained until 1840, when he moved to Cobb (now Paulding) county, where he accumulated a comfortable fortune as a farmer. His mother was born in South Carolina in 1816, and was a daughter of Charles and Jane (Cannon) Harris. Her parents, when she was a girl, moved to Georgia, where she grew to womanhood and was married in 1834. To them were born four children: Joseph A., James T., the subject of this sketch, Mrs. Emeline Bates and Mrs. Elizabeth Adair. She died in 1859, and three years later Mr. Carter married Miss Betsey Jones, and hand in hand this worthy old couple are still "keeping step together" on life's rough roadway. Mr. Carter was reared on the farm and received a common school education. He enlisted Sept. 15, 1864, in Company D, First Alabama Federal cavalry, and served on the advance of Gen. Sherman's army as scout and guide, rendering valuable service. After the war he returned home and began farming, which he has followed successfully and prosperously since. In 1880 he attended school in Dallas, and afterward taught school six years, at the same time managing his farm profitably. He is progressive and eminently practical in all he does—solid and unostentatious. Mr. Carter was married Dec. 23, 1867, to Miss Martha, daughter of Henry and Ann McGill, of Cherokee county, Ala., by whom he has had six children: Mary, Amanda, Elizabeth, Savannah, Josephine and Ula. Himself and wife are prominent and influential members of the Baptist church.

JASPER L. CLAY, farmer, Nebo, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Thomas and Rosanna (Molroise) Clay, was born in Cobb county, Ga., in 1837. His grandfather, John Clay, was a North Carolinian, was a soldier in the war of 1812, and lived to the extreme age of ninety-three. Mr. Clay's father was born in North Carolina in 1816, was reared on a farm, came to Georgia in an ox-cart in 1830, and settled in Newton county, living in a tent until a house could be built. Subsequently he moved to Campbell county, and thence to Cobb county, where he still lives. His mother was a daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth (Love) Molroise, and was born in what is now Troup county, Ga., in 1818, was married to Mr. Clay in 1836, and is still living. Of the children born to this worthy aged couple eight survive: Jasper L., the subject of this sketch; James N., William P., Jesse T., Henry H., Horace G., Mrs. Melissa Adams and Mrs. Casseldra Barnes. Mr. Clay was reared on a farm, his school advantages being very meager—what education he has was mostly acquired at night and on Sundays. In 1861 he enlisted for a year in Company D, Seventh Georgia regiment. When the term of his enlistment expired he was pressed into the Confederate service for the war, and was made orderly sergeant. His command was engaged in the battle at Yorktown, in which he was slightly wounded. He afterward participated in the battles of Seven Pines, Malvern Hill, Wilderness, Rappahannock, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Knoxville and Sharpsburg. At this last-named battle he was captured and kept a prisoner twenty days. Besides having been engaged in these many hard-fought battles, he was in thirty-eight minor engagements; was wounded twice, but not seriously, and never obtained a furlough. In October, 1864, he left the service to care for his aged parents, who were in destitute circumstances. In 1868 he moved to Paulding county, where he bought 100 acres of land on a credit; he has since increased his holding to 745 acres. He farms on scientific principles, has his farm under improved cultivation, and besides general farming has been a very successful fruit-grower. Progressive and public-spirited, he is considered one of the foremost citizens of the county. In 1890 he was elected to represent Paulding county in the general assembly. Mr. Clay was married in July, 1866, to Miss Martha, daughter of Russell and Mary (Hill) Pace, and their union has been blessed with ten children: Mrs. Ella Knox, Mrs. Alice Barber, Warner, Bessie, Henry, Thomas, Rosa, Minnie, Beulah and Margaret Q. Mr. Clay is a Methodist and has been a member of the church twelve years.

LEVI COOPER, farmer, New Hope, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Jesse and Rebecca (Darby) Cooper, was born in Union district, S. C., in 1837. His paternal grandfather, Stacey Cooper, was a soldier in the war of 1812-14, and died in 1821. Mr. Cooper's father was born in South Carolina in 1800, was reared on a farm and educated in the common schools of the country. About 1822 he was married to Miss Rebecca, daughter of Benjamin and Mary (Reynolds) Darby, by whom he had eight children: William D., deceased; Levi, the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Rachel Brown, deceased; Mrs. Anna Harris, deceased; Mrs. Mary Babb, Mrs. Barbara L. Dunn, Delila and Lucy. In 1847 he moved from South Carolina to Cobb (now Paulding) county, Ga., where he died twenty years later. His wife was born in South Carolina in 1800 and died in Paulding county in 1872. Mr. Cooper was reared on a farm, and educated in the common schools of South Carolina and Georgia. When he was ten years old he came with his father to Georgia, the family traveling the distance in wagons. In March, 1862, he enlisted in Company D, First Georgia cavalry, and served with it in the Kentucky and east Tennessee campaigns, his command participating in the battles of Somerset and Danville, Ky., Rocky Ridge, both battles of Murfreesboro and numerous minor engagements. Sept. 23, 1863, he was sent from Camp Cumberland, Tenn., to the hospital at Knoxville, and remained on the sick list there until 1865, when he returned to the army as second sergeant and remained until the close of the war. When he returned home he found his farm a desolate waste and his family scattered. For six weeks he lived on corn bread and sorghum syrup. He went resolutely to work to restore his home, which, by well-directed efforts and the blessing of a kind Providence, he has succeeded in doing. He struggled hard to make a crop that year, but has never wanted for one since. From 1871 to 1876 he exercised his ingenuity and mechanical talent as wagon-repairer and wagon-maker for neighboring farmers, to their satisfaction and his profit. Mr. Cooper was married in 1855 to Miss Emily, daughter of Joseph and Lucinda (Carter) Ragsdale. To them nine children were born, of whom seven are living: A. J., physician, Brownsville, Ga.; J. J., physician, Dallas, Ga.; Thomas F., Joseph, Ella J., Alice Miller and Henry L. Mr. Cooper has been a master Mason thirty years, and is a devoted and active member of the Missionary Baptist church.

ELIJAH W. DEAN, physician and surgeon, Hiram, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Elijah and Eliza (Fowler) Dean, was born in Cherokee county, Ga., in 1861. His grandfather Dean was born in Virginia, and came to Georgia soon after the revolutionary war. His father was born in Gwinnett county, Ga., in 1819, and being left an orphan at the age of ten, was reared by an uncle. In 1830 the family moved to what is now Cherokee county, where he was reared and educated, and spent the greater part of his life. He was bred a farmer, but he supplemented his farming by engaging in the tannery business. He served for many years as a justice of the peace. In 1893 he moved to Paulding county, where he is now living. Being exempt by age he did not enlist in the regular service during the late civil war, but he served several months with the state troops. Dr. Dean's mother was born in South Carolina in 1825, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Fowler. When she was twelve years old her parents moved to Cherokee county, where she received a common school education and was married in 1842. To Elijah and Eliza Dean nine children were born: Thompson, killed in battle during the war; John, died in 1863; Elijah W., the subject of this sketch; Susannah, Mrs. Abbott; Jennie, Mrs. Saye; Lavinia, Mrs. Hill; Mary, Mrs. Spears; Hattie, Mrs. Brasselton; Dialphia, Mrs. Benson, all living. Dr. Dean was reared on the farm, educated in the common schools of the county of his birth with a short course at the military school of Dahlonga. He began the study of medicine under Drs. W. H. and W. L. Dean, Woodstock, Ga., and then attended a course of lectures at the Southern Medical college, Atlanta. He next entered the medical college of Georgia, Augusta, from which he graduated in 1883. He immediately located at Hiram, and entered upon the practice of his profession, and was successful from the start. In 1888 he took a post-graduate course at Atlanta Medical college, thus thoroughly equipping himself for every emergency in his practice. He has built up a good and extensive practice, which is still increasing as a consequence of the enivable reputation he has established. Dr. Dean was married in May, 1886, to Miss Carrie, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Denton) Gray, of Paulding county. They have no children. He is a master Mason, and himself and wife are members of the Baptist church.

CALVIN S. ELLIS, farmer-mechanic, Oval, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Isaac C. and Elizabeth (Smith) Ellis, was born in Cass (now Bartow) county, in 1841. His grandfather, Calvin Ellis, was a North Carolinian, a soldier in the early Indian wars, and the son of a soldier in the revolutionary army. Mr. Ellis' father was born in North Carolina in 1812, raised on a farm and educated in the common schools of North Carolina and Georgia. His parents migrated from North Carolina to Georgia when he was lad, and settled in Cass (now Bartow) county, and soon afterward apprenticed him to a blacksmith to learn the trade. Some time after this he went to Carroll county, but in 1845, moved to Marion county, Ala., where he lived until he died, Feb. 5, 1892. His mother, daughter of Simeon and Eleanor Smith, was born in North Carolina in 1814, and came to Georgia when a child, with her parents, who settled in Gwinnett county, and afterward moved to Cass county, where, in 1832, she married Mr. Ellis. She died in 1855. Mr. Ellis was raised on the farm, and educated in the "old-field" school, common to that locality and period. In 1861 he enlisted for twelve months in Company C, Seventh Georgia regiment, and the next year re-enlisted in Company I, Nineteenth Georgia regiment, with which he was in the seven-days' fight around Richmond, and the battles at Gaines' mills, Cold Harbor and Chancellorsville. May 3, 1863, Mr. Ellis was shot entirely through the body and sent to the hospital at Richmond, from there to Atlanta, and afterward to his home. He so far recovered by February, 1864, as to be able to rejoin his command at Charleston, S. C., which he did, and was with it in the famous charge on Fort Fisher. Soon after this his wound broke out afresh, and he was again sent to the hospital. After remaining there four months, he rejoined his regiment, then in North Carolina, having had the ball extracted from his back only six days before the surrender of Gen. Johnston. The wound troubles him now at times; and he still has in his possession the ball which came so near ending his life. Returning from the war, his first work was splitting 1,000 rails for a pair of trousers. He next went into a shop and made spinning wheels and chairs, which he sold to pay for making his first crop. The next year he worked on the telegraph line and worked his farm. In 1868 he resumed blacksmithing, in connection with his farming, and has conducted both successfully since. A good farmer and mechanic, industrious and thoroughly practical, his precept and example make him a useful citizen, and one highly esteemed. Mr. Ellis was married April 11, 1869, to Mrs. Lydia (Clinton) Roberts, daughter of John and Elizabeth Clinton—a union unblessed by children; two children of Mrs. Ellis, however, by her first marriage, are members of the household.

THOMAS J. FOSTER, physician and surgeon, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Joel and Anna B. (Bomar) Foster, was born in Spartanburg, S. C., in 1833. His grandfather, John Foster, was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. His father was born in 1802, was raised a farmer, and was educated in the common schools of his time and state. He was married in 1822, and in 1835 he moved into Georgia—coming in wagons—and settled in the virgin forest of Campbell county. There he felled the timber, built a house, opened a farm, and became one of the most successful planters in the county—dying in 1846. His mother was a daughter of William and Barbara (Powell) Bomar, was born in South Carolina in 1807, and received her education in the common school. She married at the age of fifteen, was the mother of eleven children, and lived to be eighty-one years' old. Dr. Foster was raised on the farm, and was educated in the common schools of Campbell county, and at the academy of Fairburn, same county. In 1858 he read medicine under Dr. P. M. Tidwell, Fairburn, and in 1859 entered Atlanta Medical college. So thorough had been his preparation that he graduated in September, 1860. He located at Buchanan, Haralson county, and commenced practice under the most promising auspices—to be dispelled by the war. In 1861 Dr. Foster enlisted in Company A, Capt. W. J. Head—of which he was made surgeon—Thirty-fifth Georgia regiment, with which he served in the campaign about Richmond. In 1862 he returned home and raised Company G, Fortieth Georgia regiment, of which he was elected captain. With this command he served with distinction in some of the most trying campaigns, and was engaged in some of the bloodiest battles of the war—having been with Gen. Bragg, in Tennessee, and with Gen. Kirby Smith, in Kentucky. June 19, 1863, while defending Vicksburg, he was severely wounded by a minie ball piercing his left side—where it remains to this day. After this he was assigned to provost marshal duty, and sent to the salt works, McIntosh county, Ga., where he remained until driven away by Gen. Sherman, on his march to the sea. Returning home, he devoted his attention and labors to the alleviation of the distresses of his impoverished neighbors, in which, it is but just to him to say, he did more than any other person in the immediate section. In 1866 he moved to Paulding county, where he resumed the practice of his profession, soon establishing a large and profitable patronage, and achieving a distinction which has resulted in the accumulation of a well-earned and well-merited supply of this world's goods. He visited Nashville, Louisville, and St. Louis, and obtained from the generous citizens of those cities car-loads of meat and flour, and other provisions, which he assisted in distribution of in his neighborhood. In addition to his professional duties, Dr. Foster conducts large farming interests and a general merchandise store. In 1867-8 he was a member of the constitutional convention from Paulding county, and was mayor of Dallas one term. Dr. Foster's life has been an active and useful one, governed by noble and humane impulses and purposes. His manifold deeds of charity and philanthropy make a monument to his memory grander and more enduring than marble or brass. Dr. Foster was married in 1857 to Miss Missouri, daughter of Carey S. and Ann (Sharp) Lesueur, of Monroe county, who died Aug. 28, 1884, having borne him ten children, of whom only four—Mrs. Carey Ann Sanders, William A., James B., and Imogene, are now living. In January, 1887, Dr. Foster married Miss Florence A., daughter of William and Mary Jordan, of Tunnell Hill, Ga., by whom he had three children, two of whom—Irma May and Thomas J.—are living. Dr. Foster has been a member of the masonic fraternity forty years, and is an influential and exemplary Baptist, having been a life-long member of that church.

JAMES B. FOOTE, hotel-man and merchant-farmer, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of George W. and Amanda (Greenwood) Foote, was born at Powder Springs, Cobb Co., Ga., Jan. 5, 1843. His father, James Foote, of English descent, was born in Union district, S. C., in 1814, came to Georgia with the family when a boy, in an ox-cart, and settled near Powder Springs. His father was educated in the schools at that place, and while yet a young man began his career as a merchant there, and was very successful. In 1853 he moved to Dallas, where he continued his merchandising with even greater success, and built the Foote hotel. Mr. Foote's exceeding geniality, good humor, and large-hearted hospitality made his hostelry one of the best-known and best-patronized of any in this part of the state. He died March 22, 1892, sincerely mourned by a wide circle of appreciative friends who had been cared for and entertained by him. Mr. Foote's mother was born in 1816, in Lawrenceville, Gwinnett Co., Ga., where she was raised and educated. She was married to Mr. Foote in 1834, and died in her seventy-seventh year. Mr. Foote was raised and educated at Powder Springs and Dallas, and received an excellent business training in his father's store. In his eighteenth year he enlisted in Company C, Seventh Georgia regiment, served faithfully and suffered bravely to the end. He was in the battles of Yorktown, Fort McClellan, and Knoxville, Tenn. At this last-named battle, Nov. 23, 1863, he was shot through the thigh, and was soon afterward captured and sent to Fort Delaware, was kept a prisoner sixteen months, suffering untold hardships. He was exchanged in 1865; but such a short time before the surrender that he could not re-enter the army. He walked much of the way home from Richmond, and when he reached home he found himself impoverished by the combined ravages of the Confederate and Union armies. With the $4 of available capital he had, he engaged in the liquor business, which he followed one year, and then began farming. In 1870 he embarked in a general merchandise business, and prospered, as he had done in his other undertakings. In 1877 he assumed the management of the Foote hotel, and has fully sustained the wide-spread reputation and popularity gained for it by his lamented father. Mr. Foote's uniform success in all his enterprises marks him as a man of more than usual business sagacity and financial ability; while his high standing socially, commercially, and as a citizen, indicates that he possesses to the fullest extent the confidence of his fellow-citizens. Mr. Foote was married in 1866 to Miss Rebecca J., daughter of Simeon J. and Matilda (Mayo) Tidwell, of Coweta county, Ga., formerly of South Carolina, who bore him five children: Lelia, Homer, James, Hattie, and Harry. Their mother died Nov. 20, 1890. Mr. Foote was made a master Mason in 1865. He has been a leading citizen of Dallas for years, and is favorably known throughout Paulding and adjoining counties.

MISS SARAH JANE FOOTE, educator, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., daughter of Reuben T. and Sarah E. (Daniel) Foote, was born in Powder Springs, Cobb Co., Ga., in 1846. Her father, son of James Foote, was born in Union district, S. C., in 1826. The family migrated to Georgia, making the journey in an ox-wagon, and settled near Powder Springs, in what is now Cobb county, in 1830. There Miss Foote's father studied medicine under Dr. J. K. Cotton, and, in 1844, entered the medical college of Georgia, Augusta. He did not graduate until some years later. In 1850 Dr. Foote moved to Macon county, Ala., where he practiced his profession, building up a large and profitable patronage, conducted a general merchandising business and an extensive plantation, and traded in live stock, and accumulated a quite large fortune, which in 1860 he died and left. Miss Foote's mother was a daughter of John and Sarah E. (Durden) Daniel, a North Carolina family of Dutch ancestry, and was born in Madison, Morgan Co., Ga., in 1828. While she was quite young her parents moved to Powder Springs. At the schools there and at Salem, N. C., she received an excellent education, and when only fourteen years of age was married to Joseph Coleman, who died within a year. By him she had one child, a daughter, Mrs. Josephine Sistrunk, deceased. In 1845 she was married to Dr. Foote, by whom she had six children: Miss Sarah Jane, the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Georgie B. Sistrunk; Mrs. Beatrice V. Nelins, deceased; Alexander M.; William R., and Reuben T. She died in 1873. Miss Foote was educated in the common schools of Macon County, Ala. Left an orphan by the death of her father when fourteen, she undertook the education of her younger sister and brothers, and how well she performed her self-imposed duty is attested by their success and social standing to-day. Adopting teaching as a profession, Miss Foote taught school in Macon county, Ala., until 1867, since which time she has alternated between that county and Dallas. Excellently well equipped by superior intellectual endowment and literary attainment, a mild yet firm disciplinarian, and a sympathetic nature which draws children to her as to a loving sister, and possessing with all this eminent practicality of mind, she has established an enviable reputation as an educator, and is loved by hundreds who have passed from under her instruction to household duties and the business affairs of the outer world. In 1881 she organized the Methodist Sabbath school in Dallas, with which she has since been usefully and influentially identified, and made it a potent power for good.

WILLIAM J. GRAY, farmer and miller, Hiram, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Garrett and Jane (Jenkins) Gray, was born in Franklin county, Ga., in 1829. His paternal grandfather, Isaac Gray, was born in South Carolina in 1750; was a soldier in the patriot army through the revolutionary war, and after the war came to Georgia and settled in Franklin county, where he died, aged eighty-one years. Mr. Gray's father was born in South Carolina Sept. 23, 1802, where he was reared on the farm and educated in the common country schools. In 1828 he came to Georgia and settled in Franklin county, where he successfully farmed until 1835, when he moved to Cobb county, whence, in 1841, he moved to Paulding county. He represented Cobb county and afterward Paulding county in the general assembly. Later he was elected to represent his senatorial district in the general assembly. During the unpleasantness he enlisted in the state service, but was discharged on account of age. Mr. Gray's mother was born in South Carolina in 1802, was left an orphan when a small child, and was reared and provided for by her brother, with whom she came to Georgia in 1825. In 1828 she was married to Mr. Gray, and of the children born to them five are living: William J., the subject of this sketch; Thomas F.; Isaac N.; Charles M., and Sarah, Mrs. Denson. The mother died in 1879, and the father in 1886. Mr. Gray was reared on the farm and was educated at the common schools of the locality and period. In 1849 he began farming in Paulding county, and was prosperous from the start; in 1854 he added milling to his farming, and has successfully conducted both since. From 1858 to 1868 he served as a justice of the peace, and again from 1878 to 1882. In 1876 he was elected to represent Paulding county in the general assembly, and was elected again in 1894 as a populist. Mr. Gray, besides being a good farmer, is a stirring man of business, enterprising and persevering, and his election to important public positions indicates unusual popularity. Mr. Gray was married in 1849 to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel and Jane (Carter) Denton, of a family of early settlers from South Carolina to Georgia. Of ten children born to them five are living: Demeris, Mrs. Mack; Katharine, Mrs. Moon; Margaret, Mrs. Vaughn; Carrie, Mrs. Dean, and Bird. He is a master Mason, and a member of the Missionary Baptist church.

SAMUEL D. HOLLAND, SR., farmer, Huntsville, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Archibald and Elizabeth (Harding) Holland, was born in what is now Fulton county, Ga., in 1829. His father, son of William Holland, who was of Irish descent, was born in Virginia in 1800, was reared on the farm, and educated in the common schools of the county. When he was twelve years of age he came with the family to Georgia and settled in Clarke county, where he grew to manhood, and married in 1824 or 1825. Soon after his marriage he moved to what is now Fulton county and took up government land, on which some of the principal business houses of Atlanta now stand. In 1833 Mr. Holland's father moved to Cobb county, whence in February, 1836, he moved to Paulding county, two years before the removal of the Indians. Farming was the business of his life; he died in 1868. Mr. Holland's mother was of English ancestry, and was born in Clarke county about 1809. Her grandfather came from England about 1770, and was a soldier in the revolutionary war under the immediate command of Washington. She gave birth to seven children, and died Dec. 22, 1840. Mr. Holland was reared on the farm, enjoying only the limited educational facilities incident to pioneer life, three months in common county schools. He was only seven years old when his father located where he now lives, which was then a vast unbroken forest. For fifty-eight years—nearly all his life—he has lived in his present home, where he has reared his family and acquired a competency, following no other pursuit than farming. His experience as a Confederate soldier was limited to fourteen days' service. Mr. Holland was married in 1850 to Miss Ann, daughter of Hartwell and Elizabeth (Anderson) Lee, by whom he has had nine children, of whom five survive: Mrs. Pauline A. Elberry, Mrs. Lucinda Finch, Mrs. Emiline Matthews, Mrs. Sarah Gann and Thomas W. As a successful farmer, a good neighbor, and upright and honorable citizen, Mr. Holland is held in high esteem.

THOMAS C. HOWELL, SR., farmer, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Greene W. and Elizabeth (Clayton) Howell, was born in Cabarrus county, N. C., in 1833. His father, who was the son of Joseph Howell, a revolutionary soldier, was born in North Carolina in 1807. In 1836 he migrated from that state to Georgia, traveling all the distance by wagon, and settled in Cobb county, living in a tent until he could clear land and build a house. In 1846 he moved to Carroll county, Ga., whence, after living there two years, he moved to Paulding county, where he died in 1852. Mr. Howell's mother was a daughter of Thomas and Sallie (Raysor) Clayton, and was born in North Carolina in 1799, was married about 1827, and became the mother of seven children: Joseph; Mrs. Mary Hardeman; Thomas C., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Sarah Walton; Mrs. Bede R. Hester; John A., and James J. His mother died in 1878. Mr. Howell was reared on the farm, and educated at the "old-field" school, taught in a dirt-floor log house without windows. In April, 1862, he enlisted in Company A, Fortieth Georgia regiment, saw much hard service, and was engaged in many hard-fought battles, among them: Baker's Creek, Vicksburg, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, and from there to, and including, Atlanta (where he was slightly wounded), and many less important engagements. Aug. 16, 1864, he was made a prisoner at East Point, near Atlanta, and sent to Camp Chase, Ohio, where he was confined ten months. After the surrender he was sent home to find it a mass of ruins 'mid a scene of desolation. Nothing daunted he went to work manfully to recuperate and rehabilitate himself. How well he has succeeded is told by his comfortable home, his broad productive acres and present pleasant surroundings. Popular, progressive and prosperous, his declining years will pass untroubled by anxious cares. Mr. Howell was married in 1854 to Miss Sarah A., daughter of Sidney and Nancy (Hull) Robertson, and to them six children were born: John H., Joseph B., Green W., Thomas C., Benjamin F. and Mrs. Mollie J. Rogers. Within one year he had two sons killed on the East Tenn., Va. & Ga. railway. His second son, a conductor, was killed in a wreck in 1891, and his fourth son, a flagman, was also killed that same year in a wreck; and the next year his son-in-law, Patrick Rogers, a fireman, was killed in another wreck on the same road. His wife died May 12, 1892. On June 22, 1892, Mr. Howell was married to Miss Lucinda Bradbury. Mr. Howell is a prominent member of the Missionary Baptist church, of which he has been a deacon for thirty-four years, and possesses the entire confidence of all who know him.

JAMES M. LARD, farmer, Hiram, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Archibald and Mary (Eddleman) Lard, was born in Newton county, Ga., in 1824. His father was of South Carolina parentage, and was born in 1790. He was reared and educated in Gwinnett county, Ga., to which his parents moved when quite young. He afterward moved to Newton county, being one of its earliest settlers, prospered as a farmer, and died in 1866. His mother was a daughter of David and Elizabeth Eddleman, and was born in 1797, was married in 1820, and died in 1864, having become the mother of and reared eight children: Mrs. Nancy Swan; James M., the subject of this sketch; Appling; Richard; Franklin; Thomas; John; Dawson, and George. Mr. Lard was reared a farmer, and educated in Newton county. In 1853 he moved to Paulding county, which has since been his home. In 1863 he enlisted in the state service, but a few days afterward entered the Confederate service, and was a member of Companies I and D, Seventh Georgia cavalry. His command served on the Georgia coast and in the Virginia campaign until the surrender, doing its part to sustain the prowess and reputation of the Georgia troops. Returning to his home he found it stripped of everything movable, and he had to begin life anew; so he set about the work of restoration. He has been successful, and has placed himself in condition to comfortably and peacefully pass his declining years. Mr. Lard was married in 1850 to Miss Martha M., daughter of Alexander and Eliza (Colbert) Lester, which union has been blessed with seven children: Mrs. Augusta Florence, Mrs. Tallulah Dorrisa, Mrs. Mattie Gunnall, Mrs. Eva Chance, Thomas, James and Joseph D. He is a revered and exemplary member of the Methodist church, which he joined fifty-five years ago.

GEORGE WASHINGTON LAWRENCE, farmer, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of George and Sarah (Moseley) Lawrence, was born in what is now Campbell county, Ga., Aug. 3, 1827. His grandfather, John Lawrence, was born in 1760, and served eight years in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. He was captured and spent a part of the time in an English prison. When set at liberty he returned to America, and soon afterward married Miss Bertheland Smith. He died about 1840, leaving quite a collection of interesting relics of "the times that tried men's souls," which are still a cherished possession of the family. The father of Mr. Lawrence was born in North Carolina in 1789, and when a boy worked on the farm; but when of suitable age he was apprenticed to a blacksmith. About the time he reached manhood he migrated to Georgia, and settled in Jasper county, where, for many years he served as a justice of the peace. In 1837 he moved to Paulding county, where he farmed and worked at his trade. He died in 1850. Mr. Lawrence's mother was born in North Carolina in 1797, and died Sept. 28, 1869. Mr. Lawrence was raised on the farm, and all the schooling he obtained was in a dirt-floor, windowless log house, and was limited to three months. When he was nine years old his parents moved to Paulding county, where he was raised a farmer—which has been the pursuit of his life. In 1862 he entered the Confederate service as a member of Company K, Sixtieth Georgia regiment, and, besides other less important engagements, participated in the battles of Bristow, second Manassas, Fairfax, Sharpsburg and Fredericksburg. At Fredericksburg he was captured and sent to Camp Lee, where he remained until 1863, when he was exchanged and sent home. Resuming his farm work he has industriously and successfully pursued it since. He has a good home, a fine property, and is highly esteemed by his friends and fellow-citizens. Mr. Lawrence was married March 25, 1847, to Miss Eliza, daughter of Oliver and Sarah (Brown) Brintle, of Paulding county. To them three children—still living—have been born: George M., Mrs. Sarah E. Shelton and Mrs. Ida Graham. Since 1863 Mr. Lawrence has been a member of the masonic fraternity.

JAMES M'BRAYER, farmer, Oval, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Andrew and Nancy (Leathers) McBrayer, was born in Paulding county in 1835. Mr. McBrayer's father—son of John McBrayer, who was a revolutionary soldier—was born in Buncombe county, N. C., in 1807, whence the family migrated to Georgia in 1817, making the journey in an ox-cart, and settled in what is now Campbell and Douglas counties—living in a tent until land could be cleared and a house built. Three months' schooling, under serious disadvantages, was all he received, but by reading and studying by a pine-knot light he acquired a fair practical education at home. In 1831 he moved to what is now Paulding county, where he accumulated a fortune, and died in 1891. Mr. McBrayer's mother, who is still living, was born in 1813, in South Carolina. Her parents were Samuel and Mary (Swanford) Leathers, an old family of revolutionary war times, who came to Georgia and settled in what is now Paulding county. In 1831 she was married to Mr. McBrayer, and of the children which blessed their union, nine are now living: James M., the subject of this sketch; Peter T.; Samuel M.; Andrew J.; George W.; Wm. C.; Joseph C.; Mrs. Mary A. Walker, and Mrs. Susannah Waldrop. Mr. McBrayer was raised a farmer, and received such education as could be obtained in the country common schools at the time. In 1857 he began life as a farmer, and had gotten a good start when the unpleasantness occurred. In 1862 he enlisted in Company I, Nineteenth Georgia regiment, with which he was engaged in the battles of the Wilderness, Fredericksburg, and others. In 1862 he was taken prisoner, but was soon exchanged, rejoined his command, and remained with it until the surrender of Gen. Johnston, April 26, 1865. Like thousands of his comrades, he returned to his home to find it a desolate waste. By well-directed labor and close management he has restored it, and has now as good a farm and is as prosperous as the most favored of his fellow-citizens. Mr. McBrayer was married in 1857 to Miss Martha, daughter of Henry and Matilda (Jackson) Cleckler, who has borne him seven children: Joseph B., Mrs. Nancy V. McLarty, Andrew E., Mrs. Elizabeth Cornet, James, Robert L., and Etta E.

PETER M'BRAYER, farmer, Oval, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Andrew and Nancy (Leathers) McBrayer, was born in Paulding county in 1837. Like his brother, James, a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere, he was raised on the farm, and was educated in the old-time log school-house. In 1862 he enlisted in Company I, Fifth Georgia regiment, Col. Wadkins commanding. With his command, he participated in the battles of Baker's Creek, Missionary Ridge, Dalton, Resaca, and numerous less important engagements. In April, 1864, he was captured and sent to Indianapolis, Ind., where he was detained as a prisoner nine months. While there he suffered for want of food, from insufficiency of clothing, and frozen feet. From Indianapolis he was sent to Baltimore, Md., and thence to Richmond, where he was paroled. On his return home he walked all the distance from North Carolina, and reached home three weeks before the surrender. He went to work at once to restore his farm to its antebellum condition, which he has accomplished, and by adopting improved machinery and methods, increased its productiveness and his resources. No neighboring farmer excels him in management or harvest. Mr. McBrayer was married Dec. 5, 1866, to Miss Mary F., daughter of Bennett and Jane (Ingram) Cooper, who has borne him nine children: William A., Mrs. Vilula Ellis, Andrew E., Ida D., Mary E., Peter I., Warner J., Fannie F., and Robert L.

WILLIAM F. MEADOWS, farmer, Hiram, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Jacob and Sarah (Cawthorn) Meadows, was born in Oglethorpe county, Ga., in 1830. His paternal grandfather was a North Carolinian—of English parentage—and migrated from North Carolina to Georgia in 1808—making the trip in a large wooden wagon drawn by three horses, camping at night by the roadside. He settled in Oglethorpe county, and lived under a tent until timber could be felled and a house built. Mr. Meadows' father was born in Carteret county, N. C., in 1803, came with the family to Georgia in 1808, and was raised and educated in Oglethorpe county. In 1830 he married Miss Sarah Cawthorn—born in 1812—daughter of Samuel H. and Sarah (Green) Cawthorn—who bore him fifteen children and died in 1857. She was the first wife of Mr. Meadows, who died in Cobb county in 1891. Mr. W. F. Meadows was the oldest of twenty-five children born to his father, was raised on the farm, and educated in the dirt-floor log school-house of that day. He was four years old when his parents moved to Cobb county (now Paulding), and is the only man now living in the county who lived in it at that time. He began life for himself as a farmer, which has been his life occupation, in 1849. In 1861 he enlisted in Company D, Seventh Georgia regiment, and with his command was in the first battle at Manassas—where he was shot through the left foot, inflicting a wound from which he has never recovered—and served in the Virginia campaign. He was sent to the hospital, and was discharged, and came home in 1862. The following January he re-enlisted in Company I, Twenty-eighth Georgia regiment (known as Boinaws), with which he served in the Florida campaign—participating in the battle at Ocean Pond. The command was ordered to Charleston, S. C., was there six months, including the siege, and the every-day bombardment; and participated in the battle on John's island. In obedience to orders, the command joined Gen. Johnston in North Carolina, and was with him when he surrendered. Since the war he has devoted his time and attention to the improvement of his farm, and is comfortably situated and enjoying life, the good-will of his neighbors, and the companionship of his family. Mr. Meadows was married in 1849 to Miss Sarah, daughter of David and Sarah (Autry) Moore—a union which has been blessed by ten children: William L., Sarah Caroline, Jacob D., Allison W., Benjamin F., Mrs. Mary House, Homer, Leetroy, Leonidas, and Mrs. Emma L. Varner. Mr. Meadows is a master Mason and an influential member of the Missionary Baptist church.

J. ROBERT MOON, postmaster, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of James K. and Mary J. (Butner) Moon, was born near Hiram, Paulding county, in 1853. His paternal grandfather, John W. Moon, was born in the latter part of the last century in Lincoln county, Ga., in which he was raised, and was a justice of the peace many years. In 1837 he moved to Paulding county, where he died forty years later. Mr. Moon's father was born in Lincoln county in 1820, and was raised a farmer. In 1853 he moved to Powder Springs, Cobb Co., Ga., where he engaged in merchandising, and soon established a prosperous business. In 1861 he enlisted in Company D, Seventh Georgia regiment, and was elected third lieutenant. He participated in the first and second Manassas battles, soon after which he was discharged on account of sickness. In 1863 he re-enlisted in Company I, Seventh Georgia cavalry, and was commissioned third lieutenant. He served through all the Virginia campaigns to the close of hostilities, steadily refusing a higher commission. He lost fifteen slaves and much other valuable property by the war. On his return home he resumed farming and continued it until his death, in 1870. His mother, daughter of Thomas and Marina (Chandler) Butner, was born in Walton county, Ga., in 1832. Her parents were of old North Carolina families. She was married when sixteen years old, and died in October, 1883. Of the children born to them, six are living: Zadoe B., Charles C., J. Robert, the subject of this sketch, Mrs. Harriet M. Sorrels, Mrs. Josephine L. S. Morris, and Mrs. Maggie F. Welch. Mr. Moon was raised on the farm, and educated partly in the country schools, and partly at Powder Springs. At the age of twenty-one he commenced an apprenticeship as carpenter and builder, and in 1879 moved to Dallas, where he followed his trade. In 1885 he was made deputy sheriff, and, after serving four years, was elected sheriff of the county. In 1891 he was elected a member of the town council, and appointed notary public and ex-officio justice of the peace. In 1893 he was appointed postmaster at Dallas. In every position to which he has been advanced Mr. Moon has proven equal to its duties, all of which he has fully and faithfully discharged—the best evidence of which is his steady, continuous promotion. Mr. Moon was married in 1882 to Miss Sarah J., daughter of Henry N. and Elizabeth (Stewart) Hagin, who has borne him four children: Jessie M., deceased; Bessie L.; Clara L., and Robert R. Mr. Moon is a master Mason, and an influential member of the Baptist church.

OLIVER T. MORRIS, farmer, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Thompson and Ellen (Morgan) Morris, was born in Cobb county, Ga., in 1842. His paternal grandfather, Joseph Morris, was born in what is now Franklin county, Ga., in 1776. He was a school teacher, a man of note and influence, and represented Cobb county in the general assembly. He moved to Cobb county in 1832. Mr. Morris' father was born in Gwinnett county in 1815, was raised on the farm, lived a quiet, successful farmer's life, cultivating peace and good will toward all, and died Jan. 15, 1887. Mr. Morris' mother was the daughter of Hardy and Nancy (Odom) Morgan, and was born in Sumter county, Ga., Feb. 22, 1822. Ten years later her parents moved to Cobb county, where she was reared on the farm and received a common school education. In January, 1841, she was married to Thompson Morris and became the mother of eight children: Oliver T., the subject of this sketch; Nancy A., Mrs. Elizabeth Helton, Alfred C., Thompson M., Joseph L., John W., and Ephraim U. His mother died Aug. 7, 1895, at the age of seventy-three. Mr. Morris was reared on a farm, and was educated at the "old field" school, taught in the old-time loghouse. In his twentieth year he enlisted in Company A, Fortieth Georgia regiment. He was with his command and participated in every battle in which it was engaged—in the campaigns in Kentucky and Tennessee, and in the defense of Vicksburg. Here he was captured, and being prostrated soon afterward by fever, was sent home. On his restoration to health he rejoined the army at Dalton, Ga., and remained with it until the surrender. Returning to his farm, laid waste by the ravages of war, he resolutely set to work to restore it to its former condition and rebuild his fortune. Since then, except when called to serve his fellow-citizens in the councils of the state, he has devoted his time and energies to the improvement of his farm, in which he has been abundantly successful. In 1888 he was elected by the alliance democrats to represent Paulding county in the general assembly. His service and record were so satisfactory that he was re-elected in 1892 by the populists. His faithfulness and ability will undoubtedly commend him to his fellow-citizens for further service in the future. Mr. Morris was married in 1861 to Miss Martha J., daughter of James and Lucinda (Harris) Carter. To them ten children have been born, seven of whom are living: Joseph L., James T., William O., Alfred A., Virginia, Homer M. and Parks H. He has lived where he now resides since he was thirteen years old; has been blessed with prosperity, respected as a law-maker, and has the entire confidence of all who know him.

GEORGE A. OWEN, farmer and miller, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Arnold and Polly (Brown) Owen, was born near Providence, R. I., in 1822. His paternal grandfather, Thomas Owen, was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Mr. Owen's father was born in Rhode Island in 1797, was a successful farmer, and died in his native state in 1878. His mother was born in 1802, daughter of Esic Brown, her father also being a revolutionary soldier. She died in her seventy-sixth year. Mr. Owen was reared on his father's farm and received a good English education in the common schools of the state. After leaving school he served a four years' apprenticeship with a millwright, and in 1848 came to Georgia to work at his trade. He finally permanently established himself in Paulding county, and engaged in farming and milling, succeeding at both. Being a miller he was exempt from military service during the war, but was compelled to grind the tithes exacted from the farmers for the support of the soldiers in the Confederate army. During the war his house was made headquarters for Gen. Veach, of Illinois, of the Union army, and his houses and mills were spared, but his five slaves, his stock and crops were run off or destroyed. He has been a successful farmer and miller and has placed himself in comfortable circumstances. In 1882 he was elected judge of the probate court of the county, and served one term. Mr. Owen was married in 1862 to Miss Nancy, daughter of Bailey and Nancy (Evans) Bone. Of six children, the fruit of this union, four are living: Mrs. Mollie Williams; Nellie G., single; Felton and Benjamin A.

JOHN F. RAGSDALE, farmer, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of S. W. and Sarah (Haygood) Ragsdale, was born in Newton county, Ga., Feb. 15, 1834. His paternal grandfather, Elijah Ragsdale, was a Virginian, a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, and also during the last war with Great Britain—1812-14. He migrated from Virginia to South Carolina, and thence to Georgia, settling first in Franklin county, but moving soon afterward to Newton county, among its earliest settlers. Mr. Ragsdale's father was born in Franklin county Feb. 9, 1809, was reared and continued to be a farmer and was educated in the common schools of the country. He moved to Paulding county about the time it was organized—a pioneer—and is still living at the age of eighty-five years. Mr. Ragsdale's mother was a daughter of John and Polly (Moss) Haygood, and was born in Clarke county, Ga., in 1815; was married about 1832, and reared a large family of children. She is still living, eighty years of age. Mr. Ragsdale received a farmer's training in early life, and was educated at the first schools in Paulding county, of which he has been a citizen for more than sixty years. In October, 1861, he enlisted in Company B, Fourth Georgia regiment, and served six months as coast guard. He then joined Company I, Second Georgia cavalry, and was with Gen. Bragg in the Kentucky campaign, participating in the battles of Perryville and Murfreesboro, and many minor engagements. May 17, 1864, at Rome, Ga., his right arm was shot off at the shoulder, by which he was disabled from further military service. After some months' treatment in the hospitals at Rome, Marietta and Atlanta he returned home and secured transportation for his wife and babe to Columbus, Ga., on a wagon-load of hides, himself walking the entire distance. From there he took his family to Eufaula, Ala., where, establishing them in a small house, he engaged as overseer on the plantation of John N. Webb. He remained there until emancipation was proclaimed, when he returned by wagon to his farm in Paulding county. His labors since have been directed to its restoration, and with such success that he has now one of the best improved and arranged, as well as one of the best equipped farms in the county. In 1866 he was elected tax collector of the county and held it by re-election nine years. Mr. Ragsdale was married Feb. 17, 1858, to Miss Lucinda, daughter of Daniel and Narcissus White, who bore him six children, of whom three are living: Daniel A., William F. and Charles F. Their mother died July 26, 1882. Subsequently Mr. Ragsdale married Mrs. Fanny (nee Jones) Biggers. He is progressive and enterprising, a model farmer and citizen, and no man in Paulding county stands higher in the estimation of its people.

WILLIAM A. RAGSDALE, educator and farmer, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of S. W. and Sarah (Haygood) Ragsdale, was born in De Kalb county in 1835. He was reared in the country, and was educated in the old-time dirt-floor log schoolhouse—the term being three or four weeks after the laying-by of the crops. In his twentieth year he attended Hogan Roberts' select school three months, after which he began his career as a teacher, and has taught at intervals from then until now. He also commenced reading law, inclining to that profession and did some practice, but the war intervening, his purpose was defeated. In October, 1861, he raised a company, which became Company B, Fourth Georgia state troops, of which he was made captain—the youngest in the regiment. After being six months in the state service he enlisted as a private in Company I, Second Georgia cavalry regiment, and was with the famous Gen. Forrest in the campaigns in east Tennessee and Kentucky, participating in the first and second battles of Murfreesboro, and that at Lebanon, Tenn. In response to his solicitation the secretary of war granted him permission to return home and raise a second company, which became Company I, Sixty-fourth regiment, Col. Evans. This command served in the Florida campaign, and was engaged in the battle of Ocean Pond, in which he lost seven out of fifty-three men led into battle. Capt. Ragsdale was then placed in command of two companies to reconnoiter near Fort Mason, in western Florida. Following this he was ordered to the defense of Charleston, S. C. In the battle on John's island, July 9, 1864, when charging the Federal works, he was wounded by a shot passing through his right arm, shattering the bone, disabling him from further military service. He was sent to the hospital at Branchville, S. C., where he remained four weeks, and then returned to his home and resumed farming and teaching. After the passage of the public school law he was made a member of the first board of education of Paulding county. In 1858 he was a candidate for sheriff and was defeated by ninety votes. In 1868 he was the democratic candidate for representative to the general assembly and was again defeated. In 1876 he was a candidate for senator from his district, and was elected. While in the senate he introduced a bill consolidating the offices of clerk of the superior court and tax receiver, which became a law and remained in force a number of years. He also introduced a bill fixing the pay of grand jurors and bailiffs at one dollar per day, and no more. In 1882 he was elected county school commissioner and served four years. Capt. Ragsdale was married in 1860 to Miss Mary C., daughter of Robin and Julia (Gann) Gann, who has borne him five children: George T., of Arkansas; Robert E. L., Leonora, Mrs. Alice Harris and John A. G. He has been an almost lifelong member of the Missionary Baptist church, and in 1885 was ordained a minister, since which time he has been preaching. Soon after he began preaching he was elected moderator of the Tallapoosa association, which place he held for several years. In all the walks of life, citizen, farmer, teacher, soldier, legislator and as a minister of the gospel he has been true and faithful, and won universal respect and confidence.

SNOWDEN ROBERTSON, physician and surgeon, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Charles and Mary (Wilkes) Robertson, was born in LaGrange, Troup Co., Ga., in 1840. His paternal grandfather, Pleasant Robertson, of English parentage, was born in Petersburg, Va., in 1770, whence the family migrated to Georgia about 1808, traveling in an ox-cart and settled in the woods in Oglethorpe county. A plantation was cleared and in a few years he became one of the largest and most substantial planters in the county. Dr. Robertson's father was born in Lexington, Oglethorpe Co., Ga., in 1812, raised on the farm, and educated in the common country schools. In addition to superintending his extensive planting interests he was widely known as a contractor and builder. In 1838 he moved to LaGrange, where he continued his planting and other business until his death in 1891. The doctor's mother was a daughter of Moses Wilkes, and was born in Oglethorpe county in 1820. Her father was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, and migrated from Virginia to Georgia about 1810. She was married to Mr. Robertson in 1839, and Dr. Robertson is the only living child—the other son having died on the Manassas battlefield in the eighteenth year of his age. She died in 1842. Dr. Robertson, after the death of his mother, was taken to the home of his grandparents in Oglethorpe county, who raised and educated him, and with whom he remained until 1857. During this time he attended the celebrated Meson academy at Lexington, and began the study of medicine under Dr. Wadkins. He then moved to Powder Springs, Cobb Co., Ga., where he attended school one year, and continued the study of medicine under Dr. J. F. Cotton. In October, 1860, he entered the Atlanta Medical college, and the May following enlisted in Company D, Seventh Georgia regiment. After ten months' faithful service in this command he was transferred to the medical department at Lynchburg, where he did valuable hospital service until the close of the war. He then returned to Powder Springs, where he practiced medicine under a license until October, 1872, when he re-entered Atlanta Medical college, and graduated the following March. Immediately afterward he located in Dallas, where he soon secured a large and remunerative practice, which has constantly increased in extent and value. Dr. Robertson's reputation as a successful physician and skillful surgeon extends afar, and in that part of the state he stands at the head of his profession. In July, 1890, he established a drug store in Dallas, which he has conducted in connection with his practice, in which he has been exceptionally successful. Dr. Robertson was married in 1864 to Miss Lou C., daughter of Adam and Maria (Martin) Summers. Four children, all living, have blessed this union: Mrs. Frances M. Mason, Mrs. Nettie V. Davis, Dr. Emmett H. Robertson, and Charles H. Robertson. Dr. Robertson has been a master Mason since 1864, and has been for a long time identified with the Methodist church. Dr. E. H. Robertson, a son, graduated at Memphis, Tenn., with honor, and is loved by all who know him.

WILLIAM L. ROLLINS, farmer-mechanic and county commissioner, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Williamson and Martha (Price) Rollins, was born in Campbell county, Ga., in 1832. His grandfather, John Rollins, migrated from North Carolina to Georgia in 1818, coming in an oxcart, and settled in what is now Campbell county. From there he moved to what is now Paulding county, whence two years afterward he moved to Murray county, Ga., where he died in 1850. He was a successful farmer and a minister of the Primitive Baptist church. Mr. Rollins' father was born in North Carolina in 1812, came to Georgia with the family in 1818, and in 1828 married Miss Price. She was the daughter of John and Mary A. Price, was born in Oglethorpe county, Ga., in 1813, and died Jan. 28, 1886. To them ten children were born. Mr. Rollins was raised a farmer, and received some education at the common country schools, but chiefly he educated himself at home. In 1848 he engaged in gold mining, and followed it two years. Possessing mechanical talent and ambition he came to Dallas in 1856, and embarked in the manufacture of wagons and buggies. Two years afterward he entered the railway shops at Chattanooga, and worked there and in Nashville, Tenn., a number of years. In 1862 he was pressed into the Confederate service, joined Company C, First Georgia cavalry, and accompanied it in the Tennessee and Kentucky campaigns. In December, 1863, he was captured at Nashville, and took the oath of allegiance to the United States. From then until the close of the war he was employed by the United States government, first as teamster for supply wagon, and then in railway repair shops. Since the war Mr. Rollins has been engaged principally in farming, in which he has prospered. He has been a justice of the peace eight years, and county commissioner since 1890. Mr. Rollins was married in September, 1857, to Miss Caroline, daughter of Joseph and Lucinda (Carter) Ragsdale, a union which was blessed with three children: Mrs. Mary E. McAdams, Mrs. Martha L. Worthen, and Joseph W. Their mother died in Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 21, 1864, and on Jan. 21, 1866, Mr. Rollins was married to Mrs. Elizabeth (nee Gordon) Duff, daughter of Joseph and Mahala (Lard) Gordon. Of the children born to them only one, Walter C., is living. Mr. Rollins is a much respected and honored citizen of the city and county.

HASTINGS C. SCOGGINS, educator and farmer, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Gillim and Oretta (Chandler) Scoggins, was born in Carroll county, Ga., in 1844. His father was born in Virginia in 1780, where he grew to manhood and then came to Georgia and settled in Oglethorpe county—one of its earliest settlers. He afterward moved to Coweta county, and thence to Carroll county, where he died—about 1860. He was a commissioned officer in the war of 1812. His mother was born in Virginia in 1800, and was married to his father in 1836—each being the other's second conjugal companion. To them three children were born: Mrs. Elizabeth Nixon, Seaborn S., and Hastings C., the subject of this sketch. She died in 1874. Mr. Scoggins was educated in the common schools of the county—meantime working on the farm, until he was eighteen years of age, when he began teaching. Alternately teaching and going to school, he finally acquired a good classical education and adopted the profession of a teacher. Having had the misfortune to be born with but one foot, he was exempt from military service. In 1867 he moved to Chattooga county, where he prospered; but in 1870 returned to Carroll county. Two years later he moved to his present home. In 1874 he was elected justice of the peace and served three years; in 1879 he was elected tax receiver and served one term; and in 1881 he was elected school commissioner, which office he held four years. In 1885 he was elected ordinary of the county and held the office eight years, during which time he superintended the erection of the new court house. Since 1880 he has been engaged in farming, in which he has been very successful. The public offices to which he has been successively and continuously elected, and each new office a promotion, shows that he is very popular and that his official faithfulness and ability have been appreciated. Mr. Scoggins was married Aug. 27, 1868, to Miss Sarah, daughter of Andrew and Katie (Woods) Millican, of Chattooga county, who has borne him seven children, all sons: Charles A., Gillim A., Jesse E., O'Connor, Claudius, Alphonso C., and Robert B. It may safely be assumed that Mr. Scoggins will be continued in the public service.

WILLIAM J. SHEFFIELD, merchant, Huntsville, Paulding Co., Ga., was born in Paulding county Aug. 11, 1840. He was raised on the farm, and received only such limited education as could be obtained at the common schools in the country at that time. June 18, 1861, he enlisted in Company H, Nineteenth Georgia regiment, went immediately to the front, and was in very many of the most obstinately contested and important battles of the war, among them Seven Pines, second Manassas, seven days' fight around Richmond, Cold Harbor, Gaines' Mill, Bermuda Hundred, Charleston, Fort Sumter, in the Florida campaigned at the battle of Ocean Pond, in the North Carolina and Virginia campaigns. During the fights around Richmond he carried his brother-in-law, who had been dangerously wounded, from the battlefield. At the battle of Petersburg he was shot through the right leg, and in June, 1864, it was amputated above the knee. He remained in the hospital four months, and suffered excessively from gangrene and inattention. As soon as he was able he returned home and taught school for many months. In 1866 he was elected tax receiver of the county, and held the office six years. The next two years, 1872-73, he engaged in farming, and then he commenced merchandising—a business which he has continued in since with great success. He has built up a large and profitable trade, and stands well in the commercial world. Mr. Sheffield was married in 1869 to Miss Martha A., daughter of Stephen D. and Emeline (Thompson) Roberts, by whom he has had five children, all living: Ison, Effie M., Snowdon, Lester, and Lizzie. It is an interesting fact that three Sheffield brothers married three Roberts sisters. He has been an exemplary member of the Baptist church since 1886, and is much respected by all who know him.

JOHN G. WOOD, farmer, Dallas, Paulding Co., Ga., son of Elias and Jane (Oliver) Wood, was born in what is now Fulton county, Ga., in 1839. His father was born in South Carolina in 1812, was reared in the country and educated at the neighboring schools. In 1836 he was married, and in 1839 migrated to Georgia, making the journey in ox-carts, and living in a tent until ground could be cleared and a house built. He was accompanied by five brothers and three sisters, all of whom settled in Georgia. He died in 1874. Mr. Woods' mother was born in Ireland in 1808, and was the daughter of Andrew and Mary (Gibson) Oliver, who came to America in 1810. Mr. Wood was raised on the farm and educated in the common schools of the time and locality. He enlisted in May, 1861, in Company B, Seventh Georgia regiment, went immediately to the front and served through the war. With his command he was in many of the really important battles of the war, including first and second Manassas, Malvern hill (where he was wounded and lost a finger from his left hand and had a ball pass through fourteen folds of his blanket and flatten against the skin), Yorktown, Fort McClellan, Gettysburg, Wilderness, Seven Pines, Boonsboro gap, Knoxville, Charleston, Tenn., Lookout mountain, etc. After the surrender he resumed his farm life, and in 1874 moved to and settled in Paulding county, where he has come to be recognized as one of its most thorough and progressive farmers. Mr. Wood was married in August, 1866, to Miss Rhoda, daughter of Wesley and Elizabeth (Landers) Hudson, an old South Carolina family, by whom he has had nine children: John F., David L., Mrs. Loduska Scoggins, Elias W., Charles W., William G., Thomas J., James A., and Robert V. He is an exemplary and valued member of the Missionary Baptist church. His fellow citizens repose the fullest confidence in him as a neighbor and citizen.

PICKENS COUNTY.

WILLIAM STEPHEN CLAYTON, a leading citizen of Pickens county, was born on a farm at Cartecay in Gilmer county, July 28, 1858, where he lived until his twenty-second year. He was educated at the Ellijay seminary and at

Oakland academy. After finishing his education he was for three years the representative of various mercantile houses, and in that capacity traveled through the southern states. During the administration of President Harrison he served as storekeeper and gauger in the internal revenue service in the state of Georgia. At the expiration of his term of service he became general manager and one of the proprietors of the "Republican," a weekly newspaper published at Jasper, and the organ of the republican party in Pickens county, and has continued the publication of that paper successfully and profitably to the present time. The "Republican" is a bright and progressive weekly, and has the distinction of being the only republican paper edited and published in Georgia by a white man. It has an extensive and well-merited circulation in northern Georgia and throughout the state. Connected with Mr. Clayton in the publication of the "Republican" is Mr. Freeman W. Padgett, an affable and promising young newspaper man and a native of Pickens county. Messrs. Clayton and Padgett are members of the Georgia Weekly Press association. Both of these gentlemen are active and consistent republicans, and have been prominent in the councils of that party in this state. The proprietors conduct a job office in connection with the publishing department of the "Republican," and in this line have succeeded in establishing a successful and lucrative business. Mr. Clayton's father is still living in Gilmer county. He is a native of North Carolina, where he was born near Asheville, Buncombe Co., in 1822. In 1843 he married Elizabeth Osborn, daughter of Newman Osborn, of Buncombe county, N. C. He moved to Gilmer county about sixty years ago, and he still lives on the same farm on which he settled fifty years since. At the time he settled in Gilmer county the Cherokee Indians were in possession of the country and he was reared among them. Before the war he filled several county offices, and during that struggle he was a prominent Union man and served with his son, Jeremiah, in the Tenth Tennessee Union regiment. The mother of Mr. Clayton is still living with his father in Gilmer county.

HON. SION ARRINGTON DARNELL, of Jasper, Pickens Co., one of the best-known men in the state of Georgia, is a true representative of the new south, and of its best interests. This scholarly gentleman and brilliant lawyer was born in Pickens county Dec. 28, 1845. His early opportunities for securing an education and the cultivation of his mind were extremely limited, and yet were sufficient, with so much of contrast in the surroundings of his earlier years, to inspire and develop in him great ambition to learn. He attended his first school in Pickens county in the fall of 1855, but at that time by his own exertions he had been able to read for three years, and was possessed of considerable elementary knowledge. His first teacher had no difficulty with him. It was his ambition to stand at the head of his classes, and he read all the books he could find, thus early laying the foundation for the mature thought and comprehensive knowledge of later years. Until he was sixteen years of age he attended such schools as his section of the state afforded, usually about three months in each year, meantime doing work incident to the early life of a farmer's son. In every situation in which he was placed he was industrious and reliable. Fond of athletic sports, he was yet free from the many errors incident to their indulgence and to the character of youth. When he was seventeen years of age he taught a large and flourishing school a few miles from his home, where, by his example and steady purpose, he imbued the minds of the youth he taught with the same high ambition that guided him; and it has been to him a source of pride that in this school he found and encouraged some of the brightest young intellects of Georgia—gems of the mountains—in whose shadows they lived. The vicissitudes of war broke up this school, and Mr. Darnell was confronted with the question as to whether it was his duty to fight for or against the integrity of the union of states. He had while yet a boy read the speeches of Henry Clay and Daniel Webster, and was thoroughly in sympathy with the national views of these great statesmen. He never for a moment believed in the doctrine of state sovereignty in the sense in which it was sought to be applied, and, therefore, when the crisis came, he with his father and a younger brother escaped from the Confederacy, and after being captured by Confederate scouts, condemned to be shot, taken to the place of execution, and released by Union soldiers, he became a private soldier in the Union army, and was honorably discharged at the termination of hostilities. Returning to the wrecked home of his father he resumed the work of aiding him in the maintenance of a large family. In the county of Mr. Darnell's birth the Union sentiment at the outbreak of the war was very strong, and a great majority of its people voted against secession. After the ordinance of secession was passed on Jan. 19, 1861, the Union men, of whom Mr. Darnell's father was one, placed the flag of the United States on a staff in front of the courthouse at Jasper, and kept it there, sometimes guarding it with guns, until it was beaten to pieces by the winds. In January, 1866, when a little more than twenty years of age, Mr. Darnell was elected to the office of tax collector and served out his term, at the end of which he was elected from the county of Pickens to the lower house of the legislature of Georgia as a republican. He was an advocate of a general system of education throughout the state, and devoted much of his time in the preparation of a bill to establish that system. He has always believed in the education of all the children of the state at public expense as one of the best safeguards of the public welfare. He also advocated the construction of the Marietta & North Georgia railway, now in operation through north Georgia. While a member of the legislature he served on the committees on banks, railways, elections and judiciary, although not then a member of the legal profession. In September, 1872, he was admitted to the bar, and has been in active practice ever since. In March, 1873, he was appointed special commissioner of claims for Georgia, under the act of congress of March 3, 1871, and held this appointment until January, 1879, when he resigned to accept the appointment of assistant United States attorney for the district of Georgia, which he held until March, 1882, and in the meantime represented the United States in cases from Georgia before the French and American claims commission, then in session in Washington. In July, 1882, he was appointed United States attorney for the southern district of Georgia, serving the entire term of four years, to the satisfaction of the government. Since the age of twenty-two he has been a member of the republican state committee of Georgia, and in 1880, 1888 and 1892 he was a delegate to the national republican conventions at Chicago and Minneapolis. In all the political campaigns in Georgia during the past twenty-five years he has addressed the people throughout the state. He is an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and past commander of two posts in the state; he was also a delegate to the national encampment at Milwaukee in 1889. In March, 1889, he was appointed by President Harrison United States attorney for the northern district of Georgia, and served the full term of four years. He has been a member of the Baptist church since 1866. On Feb. 22, 1871, Mr. Darnell was married to Miss Susie Hotchkiss, at Marietta, Ga., and now resides, with his wife and two children, a son and a daughter, at Jasper. Mr. Darnell comes from a long line of ancestry, having its origin in the first family of his name in Maryland in the time of the first Lord Baltimore. The wife of Charles Carroll of Carrollton was a Miss Mary Darnell, whose father was prominent in the history of that state. His immediate ancestors were descended from revolutionary soldiers, and bore a prominent and heroic part in the war for independence of the colonies. Notwithstanding this, Mr. Darnell does not claim what others have been or may have done. He has always believed in the maxim, "Career open to merit and talent without regard to the accident of birth," and that he has as much right to patent his own nobility as to claim it from others.

WILLIAM T. DAY, of Jasper, one of the leaders of the Pickens county bar, was born in Walton county, in this state, on Sept. 30, 1828. He resided in that county until he arrived at the age of fourteen, when he moved with his parents to Cherokee county. He received a common school education. At the age of twenty-six he commenced the study of law with Daniel H. Byrd, and was admitted to the bar in October, 1854. Immediately thereafter he located at Jasper. Mr. Day has enjoyed an active practice during many years in both the state and Federal courts. During the late war, while opposed to the principle of secession, he nevertheless felt in duty bound to protect his state and the lives of its people, and he accordingly entered the service of the state of Georgia as captain of Company D, Eighth regiment, commanded by Col. E. W. Chastain. He afterward served under Gov. Brown, his entire term of service extending upward of three years. In 1860 Mr. Day was elected one of the delegates from Pickens county to the celebrated secession convention to be held at Milledgeville in January, 1861. In that convention he became conspicuous as an opponent of secession, and voted against the resolution dissolving the relation between the Federal Union and the state of Georgia. In 1877 Mr. Day was elected a delegate to the state convention that adopted the present state constitution. In 1880-81 he was a member of the house of representatives of the state of Georgia, representing Pickens county. In 1884-85 he served in the state senate of Georgia, representing the forty-first senatorial district, which included the counties of Pickens, Gilmer and Fannin. Mr. Day was married in 1866 to Miss Teresa P. Craig, of Harris county. Six children, three girls and three boys, were born of this marriage, all of whom survive. The wife of Mr. Day died in February, 1894. His father, Lewis Day, was a native of South Carolina, who settled in Georgia about 1824, and died in Cherokee county in 1876. The mother of Mr. Day was Alpha Dixon, daughter of Thomas Dixon, of Walton county. She died in Cherokee county in 1885. His grandfather on his father's side was William Day, a native of Virginia, who lived to a ripe old age and died in South Carolina. William Day was a soldier in the war of the revolution, having rendered active service throughout that struggle. He was afterward rewarded with a pension for his services in the war, which he continued to receive up to the time of his death.

ISAAC GRANT, of Jasper, Pickens Co., was born in Hall county, in this state, Oct. 24, 1854, where he was raised on a farm, and where he lived until his thirty-first year. He was educated at Grange academy, Hall county, and at the Jasper institute. At the age of thirty-four he commenced the study of law under W. H. Simmons, a prominent lawyer at Jasper. In 1882 he was admitted to the bar by Hon. James R. Brown, presiding judge of the superior court of Pickens county. Immediately thereafter he commenced the practice of his profession at Jasper, and has since continued his practice throughout the Blue Ridge and north-eastern circuits. On May 12, 1885, Mr. Grant was married to Miss Lula Mauldin, daughter of Allen Mauldin, of Easley, S. C. Three children have been born of this marriage, all of whom survive: Leland Stanford, born June 13, 1888; Inice Gertrude, born Feb. 13, 1891, and Imer, born March 4, 1893. The father of Mr. Grant was Radford Grant, born in Spartanburg county, S. C., April 23, 1823, who came to Georgia in 1844, and settled in Hall county, near Gainesville, on a farm, where he resided until his death, Oct. 24, 1871. The mother of Mr. Grant is Mary, daughter of John G. Williams, of Hall county. She is still living in that county. Mr. Grant is a member of the masonic fraternity at Jasper, and is a prominent citizen of that town, and of Pickens county.

JOHNS WILLIS HENLEY, of Jasper, Pickens Co., was born at Dahlonega, Lumpkin Co., Ga., March 28, 1852. When a baby, his parents removed to Banks county, this state, where, left fatherless at a tender age, his early childhood was spent. The character of this boy may be illustrated by the fact that, older than his brothers and sisters, he was looked to for advice and pecuniary assistance in the place of his deceased father. A good son, and, recognizing the responsibility left to him, he devoted his entire time and energies to the supporting of his mother, brothers and sisters, and by so doing, was entirely deprived of any opportunities for acquiring a schooling. Notwithstanding these disadvantages, Mr. Henley availed himself, through all these years, of every chance to gain such knowledge by self-study and research as lay in his power. In 1874 he attended the Fort Mountain institute for a short period, and his studious habits, quickness of learning, and natural ability are attested to by the fact of his being competent to take charge of a school in Gordon and Murray counties soon after this. This venture was not a success, financially, however, as his salary in the latter county was not sufficient to defray living expenses. A year later, desiring to take advantage of the chance presented to gain further knowledge, he entered the North Georgia Agricultural college, at Dahlonega, taking the classical course, and graduating from that institution with the degree of bachelor of arts in 1879. He entered college with but $15 to defray expenses, and supported himself while there entirely by devoting his spare time to teaching vacations. But the remuneration derived from this was not sufficient to pay his college dues, and he left it $100 in debt. Prof. M. G. Bates, now president of a college in Atlanta, Texas, was his classmate, and, also, his roommate during his term at college. Remembering his early struggles and limited opportunities for instruction, he conceived, during his last year at college, the idea of establishing an educational institute, at Jasper, for the benefit of the youths of Pickens county, and even before graduation, Jasper institute was in the course of construction. This well-known and popular school was established at his own instance, and first threw open its doors in 1879 to its patrons, as a select private school. Being an indefatigable worker, this institution flourished under his care and superintendence, until 1884, when, its reputation safe, and an everlasting source of pride to him, he sold it. It has since become a public school. His next venture was to commence, in 1884, the study of law under the supervision of Hon. George R. Brown, of Canton. His success in this undertaking is shown by the fact that he was admitted to the bar, after standing a very rigid examination, in September of that year. Subsequently he commenced the practice of law at Jasper, where he still resides and follows his profession. A man of strict integrity, he won for himself many warm and loyal friends, and justly earned the reputation of being an able lawyer. His practice extends throughout northern Georgia, and in the supreme court of the state. Mr. Henley is a prudent and safe counselor, and an honorable and conscientious gentleman, possessed of great tact and wisdom. He stands high in the estimation of the people of Pickens county. His present position of school commissioner, to which he was chosen in 1891, demonstrates that he was a successful educator. Since 1868 he has been a regular member of the Missionary Baptist church, and is active in promoting the cause of religion, and the moral standard of the community in which he resides. In 1879 he was married at Spring Place, Murray Co., Ga., to Katie, daughter of Henry C. Nethelon, deceased. Five children, all boys, were born to them—Weldon, John Ralph, James Bates, Clay, and Stanton, all of whom survive. The father of Mr. Henley was Jesse Clark Henley, formerly of the state of Tennessee. His mother was Jane Eveline, daughter of Mathew B. Hooper, of Banks county. She died in Murray county in 1881. Mr. Henley is a staunch democrat, active and prominent in councils of his party, and in recognition of his talents, he is frequently chosen representative of Pickens county at state conventions. Mr. Henley is a royal arch Mason, and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Since December, 1891, he has been worshipful master of Pickens Star lodge, No. 220.

HARDY RHYNE, a prominent business man of Jasper, Pickens Co., was born at Walesca, Cherokee Co., March 13, 1861. He received a common school education in Cherokee county, and in 1884 established the first newspaper published in Pickens county, "The Mountain Boys." In September, 1886, he was admitted to the bar at Canton, Cherokee Co. During the year 1887 he resided at Dallas, Tex. In February, 1888, he located permanently in Jasper, and is at present engaged in constructing and building, and in manufacturing building supplies. In January, 1889, Mr. Rhyne was elected mayor of Jasper, and was again elected to that office in 1891. In 1892 he was chosen a member of the board of education, and still continues to discharge the duties of that position. For three years he served as justice of the peace, during which term of service, he rendered efficient aid to the state, in enforcing the law against a band of outlaws engaged in committing the crime of arson, and kindred offenses in Pickens county. Mr. Rhyne is an active member of the Universalist church. He also belongs to the order of Odd Fellows, and he is one of the stockholders in the Columbus Building and Loan association. During the late war his father served as lieutenant in the Forty-third Georgia regiment. The father of Mr. Rhyne is James A. Rhyne, who was born in Habersham county, Ga., Nov. 27, 1834. His mother is Mary E., daughter of James Hardy, of Virginia. She was born in Lincoln county, N. C., Oct. 25, 1840. Her grandfather served in the New York volunteer service in the war of 1812, and died while in the service. The parents of Mr. Rhyne are still living, and reside at Jasper. He is the oldest of six living children: Dr. Lester A. Rhyne, a practicing physician at Atlanta; William Walter, a mechanic, residing at Jasper; Eugene, Cecil Guy, and Carl Hoyle, all of Jasper. Mr. Rhyne belongs to a family noted for longevity. He has seen eight of his grandmothers, representing the paternal and maternal branches of his family. Mr. Rhyne is one of the leading citizens of Jasper, active, energetic, and enterprising. His character for integrity and fair dealing in all of his business transactions stands high among his townsmen, and he has done much to promote the material welfare of Jasper and its people.

JOHN FREDERICK SIMMONS, of Jasper, Pickens Co., was born at Jasper Aug. 1, 1857, where he was reared and received his primary education. At the age of eighteen he entered the agricultural college, at Dahlonega, Ga., where he pursued a course of study. After leaving college he taught school in Pickens county for two terms. He next engaged in mercantile business in Ludville, which he conducted for three years; and for a time he represented mercantile houses in Georgia, as a traveling salesman. In 1887 he was chosen a member of the board of education of Pickens county, in which capacity he served for upwards of one year, when he resigned. In January, 1889, Mr. Simmons was elected clerk of the superior court, and county treasurer of Pickens county, as a democrat—the two offices, by a special act of the legislature having been united in one. After a warm and spirited contest he was chosen by a majority of 110 votes over E. J. Coffey, republican, in a county usually controlled by that party. For two years he continued to discharge the duties of his office with skill and fidelity, and to the entire satisfaction of the public. In January, 1891, he was again elected to discharge the duties of his office with skill and fidelity, and to the entire satisfaction of the public. In January, 1891, he was again elected by a majority of 800 votes, being the largest vote ever polled in Pickens county by any candidate, and the largest majority ever received by a candidate in that county, showing fully that his popularity as a factor in Pickens county politics is unsurpassed. At the end of his second term he was appointed to the office of United States commissioner for the northern district of Georgia, by Hon. W. T. Neuman, district judge, which office he still continues to hold, and the duties of which he discharges with marked ability, and universal satisfaction. He has many times represented his party as a delegate to state and congressional conventions, and is an ardent friend and supporter of Hon. F. C. Tate, representative in congress from the ninth district, who was the schoolmate and playmate of his boyhood. Since early youth, Mr. Simmons has been an active and conscientious member of the Methodist church, south. He is a man of temperate habits and domestic tastes, has never tasted intoxicating liquors, and has been for many years a zealous worker in the cause of temperance, and in endeavoring to promote the moral welfare of the community in which he resides. On Nov. 20, 1879, Mr. Simmons was united in marriage to Miss Ella Forrester, of Pickens county, daughter of Francis and Ann H. Forrester. Eight children have been born of this marriage—four boys and four girls—seven of whom survive. Mr. Simmons' father was W. H. Simmons, born in Pike county, Ga., in April, 1824, and who settled at Jasper in 1856. He was a well-known member of the Georgia bar, and served as ordinary of Pickens county for sixteen years. During the years 1878 and 1879, he represented the forty-first senatorial district in the general assembly. He was also school commissioner of Pickens county for several years. For many years he was a prominent member of the masonic fraternity, and for twenty-five years he was superintendent of the M. E. Sunday-school, at Jasper. He died at Jasper Jan. 31, 1891, at the age of sixty-seven. Pickens county has had but few officials whose public acts and private life merited and received stronger indorsement and commendation than the record of W. H. Simmons has received. The mother of Mr. Simmons is the daughter of Beverly Allen, of Forsyth county, where she was born May 26, 1820. She is still living in her old age at Jasper, a devoted member of the Methodist church, in which communion she has been a zealous worker during the chief portion of her life. She lives among her children at Jasper, who have grown up to honor and bless her. Mr. Simmons lives surrounded by his family, and in perfect harmony with his neighbors and numerous friends. By careful management and business tact, he has acquired a reasonable competence, and lives in the full enjoyment of the independence which that secures to him.

SAMUEL TATE, deceased, farmer and trader, formerly of Pickens county. Ga., was a son of John I. Tate, and was born in Franklin county, Ga., May 25, 1797. His father was born in county of Londonderry, Ireland, May 4, 1758, whence, when a child seven or eight years old, he came to this country with his parents, who settled first in Virginia, but afterward came to Georgia and settled in Franklin county. He moved to Cherokee county January, 1835, and was one of the first settlers of the county. Later, he moved to Gilmer county, Ga., and died in Ellijay Dec. 28, 1838. Samuel Tate grew to manhood on the farm in Franklin county, and then went to the gold fields, in what is now Lumpkin, Gilmer Co., and contiguous counties, but he made farming his leading pursuit. However, being in the line of travel between the west and the south Atlantic coast, and the country being sparsely settled, his home became a general stopping-place for stock drovers, prospectors, and travelers generally, and he naturally drifted into trading in stock and land. During the war of 1812, when a boy fifteen years of age, he drove a team; and during the late civil war he was captain of a company in the Twenty-third Georgia regiment. He served but a short time, however, as he was taken sick, resigned and came home. In 1857 he represented Pickens county in the general assembly. Mr. Tate was married March 26, 1822, to Miss Mary, daughter of Caleb and Julia Griffith, of Habersham county, in which she was born—March 20, 1804. Mr. Griffith, who was of English extraction, was born in Maryland, and came to Georgia when a young man. Mr. and Mrs. Tate were the parents of seven children—four sons and three daughters—of whom three survive: Stephen C. and William, now living in Pickens county, and sketches of whom appear in these Memoirs, and Mrs. Jane S. Davis, born Aug. 13, 1830, living in Walker county, Ga. Mr. Tate died Sept. 20, 1866, and Mrs. Tate, who was a member of the Baptist church, died June 16, 1886.

STEPHEN C. TATE, an old and esteemed resident of Pickens county, and a well-known business man, was born in Lumpkin county, Ga., June 9, 1832, and moved with his parents to Cherokee county, in January, 1835. At the age of twenty he visited California, where for a brief period he was engaged in mining. After an absence of eighteen months he returned to his home in Pickens county, where he remained until 1855, when he moved to Cartersville, at which place he conducted a flourishing and prosperous mercantile business, and erected a mill on the Etowah river. During the war he entered the state troops of Georgia. In 1863 he was appointed agent at Etowah station, on the Western & Atlantic railroad, in which capacity he served for a short time. He next moved to Taylor county, Ga., where he refuged during the remainder of the war; he then returned to his old homestead in Pickens county, and engaged in farming. Mr. Tate is one of the owners of the plant of the Georgia Marble company, located near the station of Tate, on the Marietta & North Georgia railroad. He is also a stockholder and director in that company, and a director in, and vice-president of the Kennesaw Marble company. These quarries were opened in 1884, and the capital invested in their development has yielded liberal profits to the stockholders. The product of the quarries near Tate is of three varieties—a dark-colored stone, known as Creole marble; the Etowah marble, which is of a pink shade, and the Cherokee, a white marble. The Kennesaw marble is a white marble of excellent quality. The companies have an active market for the product of these quarries throughout the United States. Mr. Tate was married in 1857 to Eliza D. Buffington, of Griffin, Ga. Nineteen children were born of this marriage, of whom ten survive. Mrs. Tate died in 1889. Mr. Tate is a royal arch Mason, and a charter member of the Canton lodge, Knights of Honor; and he has been post-master at Tate since 1883. He is a man of very high character, and among his numerous acquaintances and friends, he is respected and admired for his many fine qualities of both head and heart. In the various business transactions in which he is daily engaged, his word is considered equivalent to his bond.

MAJ. WILLIAM TATE, of Tate, in the county of Pickens, was born in Lumpkin county July 15, 1827. In 1835 he moved, with his parents, to Pickens county, where he now resides, then known as Cherokee county. On the organization of Pickens county, in March, 1854, he was elected the first clerk of the superior court of that county, in which capacity he served during eight consecutive years. In 1863 he entered the Confederate service, as captain of Company K, First Georgia state troops, and later was transferred to Stovall's brigade. In 1864 he was promoted to rank of major. He was present and engaged at the siege of Atlanta, and fought in the battle of Jonesborough. At the close of the war he returned to his home and engaged in farming. Maj. Tate is one of the leasers of the land on which is located the Georgia Marble company. The extent of this marble bed is about two miles in length by one-half in width. In 1854 Maj. Tate was married to Miss Mary Bird, daughter of Thomas Bird, of Gordon county, and formerly of Hall county. Six children survive as the fruit of this marriage. Hon. Farish Carter Tate, of Jasper, at present a member of congress from the ninth congressional district of Georgia, who was born in November, 1858. He served three successive terms in the house of representatives of the legislature of Georgia, and in the fall of 1892 he was elected to the fifty-third congress, as a democrat. Dr. William Bird Tate, born Jan. 25, 1859, is now a practicing physician at Tate. Dr. W. B. Tate is a graduate of the Augusta Medical college. Philip May Tate, born Aug. 31, 1865, is at present engaged in mercantile business at Tate. A daughter, Mary (Mrs. R. M. Holland, mayor of Marietta), was born June 3, 1868. Mattie (Mrs. Edward M. Cole, Noonan, Coweta Co.), was born June 22, 1871, and Stella, at present a student at the Wesleyan Female college, Macon, was born June 14, 1876. The father of Maj. Tate was Col. Samuel Tate, born in 1797, near Curahee mountain, Franklin county, Ga., where he was raised. He married Mary Griffith, daughter of Caleb Griffith, of Banks county. After his marriage he moved to Lumpkin county, and later to what is now Pickens county, where he located on the land now occupied by the Georgia Marble company, and engaged in farming during the remainder of his life. He was an active, upright and conscientious man, highly esteemed by a large circle of acquaintances. Before the war he served one term in the senate of Georgia, representing Pickens county. At the commencement of the war he organized a company, of which he was made captain. His company was assigned to the Forty-third Georgia, in Colquitt's brigade. Owing to old age and ill health, he was honorably discharged from the service at Yorktown, Va. Returning to his home, he died in 1866, surrounded by his family, and mourned by all who knew him. The mother of Maj. Tate, survived her husband, and died at the family homestead. His grandfather was a native of Ireland.

ALBERT LEE TURNER, of Jasper, Pickens Co., was born May 10, 1871, near Cumming, Forsyth Co., Ga. He received his early education at the common schools in Forsyth county. At the age of sixteen he removed with his parents to Jasper, where he attended the Kirby institute for a period of three years, during a portion of which time he was employed in the office of the "Pickens County Herald." In January, 1892, at the age of nineteen, Mr. Turner became editor and publisher of the paper and has successfully continued the publication of that journal. The "Herald" is a weekly newspaper and is the organ of the democratic party in Pickens county. The active and aggressive policy which is a marked feature of this publication, has secured for it an extensive circulation in northern Georgia. Mr. Turner is one of the youngest members of the Georgia Weekly Press association, to which he has belonged for three years. In April, 1893, his services as an active and enthusiastic member of the democratic party received just recognition in his appointment to the office of postmaster at Jasper, the duties of which he continues to discharge conscientiously and successfully and to the satisfaction of the people of Jasper and the surrounding country. The father of Mr. Turner is James Madison Turner, and his mother is Sarah M. Turner, daughter of Beverly Allen, of Forsyth county. Both his father and mother are natives of Georgia and reside at Jasper. Mr. Turner is a young man of agreeable manners, and for whom there is every evidence of a bright and promising future in store. Few men of his age possess the confidence of the people of Pickens county to a greater extent than Mr. Turner. He is a nephew of the late W. H. Simmons, who was ordinary of Pickens for fourteen years.

PIERCE COUNTY.

ADMIRAL LA COUNT RAVENAL AVANT, physician, Patterson, Pierce Co., Ga., son of Dr. Don R. W. and Moselle (Donaldson) Avant, was born in Bullock county, Ga., Jan. 7, 1857. He is of French ancestry, his grandfather having come from France to this country about the beginning of this century. His father was a physician of considerable prominence and influence. Dr. Avant was educated at the common schools of the county and grew to manhood on the "home place." His father having died when he was thirteen years old, he remained with his mother until he was nineteen years of age, when he engaged in saw-milling, which he continued until 1881, when he moved to Patterson and engaged in a general merchandise business, which he continued until 1889. That year he began the study of medicine, and in 1890-91 attended lectures in Baltimore, Md. He completed his medical studies at the Atlanta Medical college, from which he was graduated in March, 1893. He located soon afterward in Patterson, and has established a good practice, which is steadily increasing, as well as an enviable reputation for skill in his profession. He is the leading physician in the county, with exceptionally brilliant prospects for the future. He is a member of the Georgia Medical association and for many years was post-master and express agent, and was the first mayor of Patterson, refusing reelection. Dr. Avant was married Jan. 6, 1881, to Miss America, daughter of Rev. John and Eliza (Aspenwall) Donaldson, the fifth born of thirteen children. Mr. Donaldson was the first sheriff of Pierce county, and was also the first senator elected from the county to the general assembly after its organization as a county in 1857. Two daughters, aged respectively nine and eleven years, have been born to them: Maud M. and Carrie Irene. He is a devoted member of the Primitive Baptist church, of which he is an ordained minister, and has served as pastor of several churches in the Allapaha River association.

JESSE CONE BREWER, D. D. S., Blackshear, Pierce Co., Ga., second son of Jesse and Georgia (Cone) Brewer, was born in Hinesville, Liberty Co., Ga., Feb. 17, 1859. His paternal grandfather was a native of South Carolina, who migrated to Georgia and settled in Liberty county. His father was reared on the farm and followed farming all his life. He served the county as clerk of the superior court many years, filled the office of tax collector and in 1882 was elected to represent the county in the general assembly. He enlisted in the Confederate service and served as a lieutenant during the entire war. Dr. Brewer was educated in Hinesville and graduated from the Bradwell institute there in July, 1879. He then attended the Baltimore Dental college, from which he graduated in March, 1883, and soon afterward located in his native place. Early in 1885 he removed to Blackshear, which has since been his home. He has enjoyed an excellent and extensive practice, ranks among the foremost in his profession for learning and skill, and has been remarkably successful financially, particularly by judicious investments in real estate. Besides his own elegant residence and office

he owns a half-score or more tenement houses in Blackshear, and an interest in a large and valuable tract of land in Liberty county. He has been a member of the city council a number of years, and is at present mayor pro tem. Dr. Brewer was married May 31, 1883, to Miss Ida, daughter of Henry J. and Louisa (English) Blitch, of Ellabell, Bryan Co., Ga., who was a farmer and served as a private through the late civil war. This union has been blessed with four children—one daughter and three sons: Jennie, Lawton, Jesse and Remer. The doctor is a prominent member of the Georgia Dental society, a stanch and ardent democrat, though not a politician; a Knight of Pythias, and a member of the Methodist church, of which he is a trustee.

EDWARD B. CHAMBERS, telegraph operator, Patterson, Pierce Co., Ga., was born in Florida, Oct. 3, 1867, and was the youngest son of C. C. and Mary E. (Thomas) Chambers. At an early age he located in Patterson, where he attended the common schools and secured an education. He was married June 25, 1891, to Miss A. Boggs. Two children have been born to bless this union. Mr. and Mrs. Chambers are consistent and exemplary members of the Methodist church, in whose affairs and advancement they take an active part. Mr. Chambers is connected with the Savannah, Florida & Western R. R., and is one of the leading citizens of Patterson. In politics he is a strong democrat. He is one of the progressive young men of the south, and has a bright future before him. The family home is a nice residence in Patterson, and in addition Mr. Chambers owns valuable property in Florida.

HENRY HYERS, merchant, Patterson, Pierce Co., Ga., son of Joseph and Hester (Howard) Hyers, was born in Ware (now Pierce) county, March 19, 1850. His father was a well-to-do farmer, for many years a justice of the inferior court and also served as a private soldier in the civil war. Mr. Hyers remained on the home farm until he was twenty-three years of age, when he went on a farm and commenced farming on his own account. He continued this until about 1885, when he moved to Patterson and engaged in general merchandising, in which he has continued with success and prosperity. He is now preparing to enlarge and extend his business by receiving as a partner Mr. A. P. Brantley, a bright and enterprising business man of varied experience—merchandising, cotton and cotton-seed manipulating, grist-milling, rice-cleaning, etc., etc. Both members of the proposed firm are popular, clear-headed, far-sighted and enterprising, and have the confidence of the people. Mr. Hyers has been a justice of the peace, a member of the board of education for a number of years, and has represented Pierce county in the general assembly. Mr. Hyers was married in 1873 to Miss Nancy, daughter of Isaac and Nellie (Touchstone) Carter. He is a democrat and a member of the masonic fraternity.

HENRY AUGUSTINE M'DONOUGH, merchant, Patterson, Pierce Co., Ga., son of John and Mary (Brown) McDonough, was born in Augusta, Ga., Aug. 6, 1847. His father was born in Ireland, but when he was three months old his parents emigrated to this country and settled in Philadelphia. After receiving his education he entered a machine shop, where he remained until he became a skilled machinist. Some years later he came south and settled in Augusta, and embarked in the saw-milling business. In the early fifties he made several visits to Atlanta, and later in life went to Florida for his health, where he died in 1884. He was a man of fine business judgment and capacity, enterprising, and possessed marked mechanical ingenuity. He built the Bijou theater on Eighth street, Philadelphia, which is still owned by the estate. The first locomotive built in Georgia, the "Native," was built by him; it was some years since consigned to the scrap pile. During the unpleasantness he sawed timber for the Confederate government. Mr. McDonough was educated in Atlanta, and remained at home until the spring of 1863. April 19 of that year he left Atlanta and started for Philadelphia, walking when he could. At Shelbyville, Tenn., himself and a young companion went to Mrs. Gen. Bragg, and pretending that they had a sick mother within the Union lines so wrought upon her womanly sympathies that she prevailed on a teamster to take them through the lines; and they went through, secreted among sacks of grain—Mrs. Bragg bestowing a parting kiss when she bade them "good-bye." He spent two days in Shelbyville, four in Franklin, one each in Nashville and Louisville, and three in Cincinnati, reaching Philadelphia on May 4. He remained in that city about two years, working where he could get employment—first in a steam bakery, then with dealers and manufacturers of lamps and chandeliers, then bone carving and sawing, etc. In 1864 he left Philadelphia on a vessel for home but was shipwrecked. After being in the water five hours with the cook and a sick man, the party was rescued by the United States pilot-boat Bermuda, which conveyed them to the receiving ship Vermont, on board which they remained two weeks. The commander was anxious to educate him, but he declined and returned to Philadelphia, and from there he went to City Point, Va., where he engaged as a mule driver and remained until after the surrender, when he marched to Washington and was in the ranks at the last general review. He afterward went to Philadelphia, where he staid about three months, and then took steamer via Savannah to Augusta, where his father then was. He there entered a machine shop as an apprentice; and later went to Savannah and worked at his trade in connection with a man named Ballentine under the firm name of McDonough & Ballentine. Subsequently he went to what is now old Waycross, and engaged in saw-milling. He continued this four or five years, and then moved to the line of the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia railway. In 1873 he commenced merchandising on the Brunswick & Albany railway just below Waycross, and finally built the third store in the town and moved into it. Receiving a stroke of paralysis he closed out, and went to Hot Springs, Ark., thence to the Centennial at Philadelphia, after which he returned home and re-engaged in saw-milling in connection with general merchandising. He then for about seven years ran a locomotive, after which he again re-embarked in merchandising—this time at Patterson, where he conducts the leading store, and is doing a large business; also conducting a hotel and livery stable and very extensive farming operations, all with the usual profitable results. He has profitably employed his leisure time in dealing in real estate. Mr. McDonough has been twice married. He was first married to Miss Catharine Meyer, Dec. 1, 1871, by whom he had two children. His second marriage, March 1, 1880, was to Miss Mary E., daughter of Kinchen and Helen Hilliard, of Coffee county, Ga., who has borne him five children—three sons and two daughters: Frank H., Mary E., Edward B., Ella E., George W. He is a democrat, and a member of the Missionary Baptist church.

EBENEZER STARNES M'GEE, farmer, Patterson, Pierce Co., Ga., was born in Screven county, Ga., April 16, 1849. His parents were born in North Carolina—the father on the Pedee river, near the South Carolina line, and the mother above Wilmington. They came to Georgia and settled in Screven county, where his father served the public as blacksmith, wheelwright and buggy-builder; and, because of his marked practical ability and judgment, became a prominent citizen, and was called to responsible positions. He was a good farmer, served as a justice of the inferior court, was administrator of a large number of estates; and in a quiet way, without special reading or preparation, practiced medicine and surgery. He died about the beginning of the late war, in April, 1861. Mr. McGee remained at home until he attained his majority, when he engaged as sawyer at a saw-mill, and afterward was in the employ of the Savannah, Florida & Western railway as a locomotive engineer. His family moved to Patterson in 1880, and four years later he settled there permanently, embarked in a general merchandise business in connection with a farm and grist-mill and cotton-ginnyery on a large basis. He is a progressive farmer, enterprising, and stands well with the community. His farming operations are restricted mostly to food products. He has been a member of the council, and notary public, and a member of the county board. Mr. McGee was married Dec. 20, 1872, to Miss Susan Anna, daughter of Rev. John and Eliza (Aspinwall) Donaldson, by whom he has had nine children, of whom one son and four daughters survive: Minnie M., Mary E., Ida, Ivy, and John S. His wife's father was a prominent farmer; a private soldier in the Confederate army; represented the county in the general assembly; and was a revered and influential minister of the Primitive Baptist church. Mr. McGee is a staunch member of the democratic party.

JAMES EDWARD OVERSTREET, physician, Overman, Pierce Co., Ga., son of George Martin Troup and Caroline (Surrency) Overstreet, was born in Appling county, Ga., March 29, 1871. His father is a large landowner and a prominent and extensive turpentine distiller, and producer of naval stores; and conducts very large planting interests. During the late civil war he commanded a company in the Confederate army. Dr. Overstreet received his primary and preparatory education at the common and other schools of the county, and after studying medicine attended lectures at the Southern Medical college, Atlanta, from which he was graduated in March, 1893. He located at Overman, and has already gained a large and remunerative practice in Pierce, Wayne, and Appling counties. Few young physicians have done better for the short time he has been practicing—few have brighter prospects. Dr. Overstreet is public spirited and takes great interest in everything calculated to promote the advancement of the community, with which he is thoroughly identified.

DANIEL J. WALKER, merchant-farmer, Patterson, Pierce Co., Ga., son of John and Mary (Underhill) Walker, was born in Ware (now Pierce) county, May 11, 1847. His father was a farmer, enlisted as a private during the war between the states, was captured in Virginia, and died while a prisoner at Elmira, N. Y. Mr. Walker was raised on the farm and received a common school education. When twenty years of age he commenced farming for himself, and still makes that his principal life-pursuit. In January, 1891, he engaged with Mr. Henry Hyers in the mercantile business, whom he bought out in 1894, and now conducts his store, in connection with a fine 60-acre farm, managing all with tact, good judgment and success, and is regarded as one of the leading farmers of the community. He has been a road commissioner, a school trustee, and a member of the board of education, and is now an alderman of the town. Mr. Walker was married Oct. 4, 1866, to Miss Ollie, daughter of John R. and Evaline (Hyers) Davis, of Pierce county, by whom he has had eleven children—six sons and five daughters—all of whom, except three, are at home: Lawton, Omar W., Eva S., John R., Mary E., Mittie L., Daniel R., James E., Marie G., Freddie L., and Anna E. He is a firm and consistent democrat, but not a politician.

PIKE COUNTY.

COL. J. H. BAKER, of Zebulon, was born in Warren county, Ga., Aug. 7, 1824, and is the son of Jonathan and Nancy (Wynn) Baker. Jonathan Baker was a member of the state legislature from 1830 to 1836, and was colonel in the state militia up to 1836. Col. J. H. Baker was educated in Pike county and has devoted his life to farming, now residing on his plantation three miles north-west of Zebulon. Col. Baker did good service in the Mexican war, enlisting with Capt. Sargent, Company I, First regiment of Georgia volunteers, commanded by Col. Henry R. Jackson, of Savannah. At the breaking out of the civil war Col. Baker was one of the first to offer his services and helped organize the first company that was sent to the war from Pike county. He was elected captain of the company, Company A, Thirteenth Georgia volunteer regiment. He entered the service July 8, 1861, and received promotion to major, then lieutenant-colonel, and was afterward made colonel of the regiment in 1863. He was a brave officer and loved by his command. He was in many engagements, the most severe of all being the battle of the Wilderness, or the seven days' fight before Richmond. He was wounded six times during the war and severely wounded the last day of the fight before Petersburg. He was captured at Gettysburg and was carried to Johnson's island after being in close confinement for two weeks at Fort Delaware. He was exchanged in 1864 and joined his command the same month, May 12. Since the war Col. Baker has been actively engaged in farming. He was elected to the legislature in 1870 and was chairman of the committee on military. He was elected to the senate in 1880. He is a member of the Baptist church, and was married Jan. 29, 1848, to Miss Louisa A. Trice, daughter of Rev. T. C. Trice, by whom he has nine children: Martha V., Jonathan T., Wm. H., Edgar E., Laura, Fannie, J. Davis, Maud and Lillie. The two youngest are living in Atlanta, one, Wm. H., in Griffin and the others are residents of this county.

DR. J. C. BEAUCHAMP. Prominent in state and county politics and skilled in the science of medicine and surgery, is Dr. J. C. Beauchamp, of Williamson, Pike county. He was born in Troup county, Ga., Oct. 23, 1851, and is the son of W. W. and Sarah E. (Davis) Beauchamp, the father being a well-known citizen and farmer, and for years was justice of the peace. Dr. J. C. Beauchamp was educated in the common schools of Meriwether county and came to Pike county in 1861. He was a prominent teacher in the county for many years and then was graduated from the Southern Medical college, Atlanta, winning the gold medal in clinical and operative surgery in a class of thirty-seven. The doctor is active in politics, being an influential democrat; has been chairman of the democratic county committee, and represented the county in the general assembly in 1883-84. In the latter capacity he exhibited excellent qualifications for a law-maker and did valuable work on several important committees. Dr. Beauchamp is an enthusiast in the cause of education, and believes in liberal provision for the intellectual training of the country's youth. His zeal led the people of his county to elect him to the board of education of his county, of which he is now president. Dr. Beauchamp was too young to enter the Confederate service, yet when the Veterans' association of Pike county was organized his well-known sentiments of honor and reverence for those who wore the gray caused him to be placed on the committee on history. He is also interested in mercantile business in Williamson, which he has conducted with good business judgment. He is a member of the Methodist church and is one of Williamson's citizens who is respected by everybody. Dr. Beauchamp was married in 1871 to Ella Gregg, of Pike county, by whom he had seven children: Myntie, Choghan, Eula, Walter, Rosa, Ruby and Paul. The oldest two daughters are graduates of the La Grange Female college and are now teachers in the Williamson high school.

REV. J. W. BECK. One of the most distinguished educators in the state and a learned and brilliant gentleman, is the Rev. James W. Beck, of Concord, Pike Co., Ga. He was born in Wilkes county, Ga., Oct. 23, 1831, and is the son of Rev. T. J. Beck, a native of Ashland, N. C., and one of the most noted Baptist ministers in the south. Rev. T. J. Beck was born in 1805, and deprived of the advantages of an early education, succeeded by indefatigable efforts in surmounting all obstacles and preparing his talented mind for a work which has not been surpassed in the history of the church. He preached his last sermon at Richmond, Va., in 1862, and died that year. Rev. J. W. Beck, who in his youth accompanied his father when on the round of his ministerial duties, was educated up and down the valleys of Georgia, and attended Mercer university in 1857-8-9. His life has been identified with the cause of education and devoted to the service of the church. He was president of the Bowdon college from 1878 to 1883, and president of Jackson, Butts Co., Ga., institute from 1884 to 1890. He entered the service of the Confederacy at the opening of the war, enlisting in Company B, Second regiment, Georgia volunteers, as a private soldier. He was afterward elected captain of Company K, Forty-fourth Georgia regiment, and was made major of the regiment for meritorious service on the field. He was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel for bravery at the battle of Gettysburg. He then commanded the Forty-fourth Georgia regiment till the end of the war, and was in all the battles around Richmond, at Fredericksburg with the Second Army corps and at Chancellorsville with Jackson. He with 400 men, having 360 muskets, marched 5,641 Union prisoners taken at the battle of Chancellorsville, to Richmond, Va., in one week. Rev. Beck is a royal arch Mason and for three years was state lecturer for the Farmers' alliance. He was married in 1853 to Margaret Willis, of Meriwether county, by whom he has three children: Marcus W., the present judge of the Flint circuit court; Lenore Beck, president of the Capital Female college at Atlanta and also president of the Woman's Press association of Georgia, and Walter L., business manager of the Griffin Wheel company, of Chicago. All are graduates of colleges and bright in mental accomplishments.

THOMAS J. BLASINGAME, ordinary of Pike county, was born in Monroe county, April 5, 1840, and is the son of Wyatt and Susan (Adams) Blasingame, both natives of South Carolina. Thomas J. came with his parents to Upson county in 1852, and his father lived to the remarkable age of ninety years. The son was educated in the private schools and began teaching school in Talbot county in 1860, and taught in Pike county in 1861. In October, 1861, he entered the Confederate service and served until the war closed in 1865, during which time he lost an arm. From 1867 till 1873 he was a teacher in the public schools of Pike county. In 1873 he was elected ordinary to fill the unexpired term of Robert S. Eppenger, and was elected for the succeeding full term. In 1885-86 he was receiver of tax returns. In July, 1889, he was elected clerk of the superior court to fill the unexpired term of D. C. Hightower, and was elected for two consecutive terms, serving till January, 1895. In January, 1895, he was again elected ordinary of Pike county to fill the unexpired term of Rev. Harry Wells. Mr. Blasingame was married Aug. 28, 1864, to Miss Celia Ann Adams, by whom he has five children, the eldest, James C. Blasingame, being president of the Jackson institute at Jackson, Ga. The other children are Jessie M., Sallie, Thomas R. and Dudley. Mr. Blasingame is a member of the Missionary Baptist church and belongs to the fraternal order of Knights of Honor. He is one of the most popular citizens of Pike county.

JOHN N. BROOKS, of Molena, was born in Monroe county in June, 1844, and is the son of Ivy and Harriet Brooks. Mr. Ivy Brooks was a native of South Carolina and a relative of Preston S. Brooks, the Palmetto state's eminent statesman. The elder Brooks died in 1854, and the son of John N. received his education at Bowdon and Mercer colleges; the former located in Carroll county and the latter then located at Pennfield. He devoted his time to teaching until 1887, since when he has been railroad agent at Molena and a farmer of extensive lands near the town. He is a member of and deacon in the Baptist church, and has been superintendent of the Sabbath school for a number of years. He is a Mason and belongs to Zebulon lodge No. 13. He was married in 1868 to Rosa L. Park, and after her death was again married to Ella F. Willis, daughter of Rev. C. C. Willis, of Muscogee county, one of the oldest Baptist ministers in the state, and who was pastor of one church for fifty-two years. By Mr. Brooks' first marriage the following children were born: W. P., Jessie L., Rosa Belle, Hattie and Annie. The second set of children are: Mattie May and John Willis. Mr. W. P. Brooks is married and is railroad agent at Helena, Ga. Jessie L. is the wife of R. S. Fuller and lives at Shiloh, Harris Co.

ZACH. LAWRENCE, farmer, Molena, Pike Co., Ga., son of James H. and Amelia (Smith) Lawrence, was born in Upson county, Ga., in 1854. His grandparents on his father's side, Zachariah and Frances (Wicker) Lawrence, were North Carolinians, and came to Georgia and settled in Pike county about the time it was organized. He was a colonel of volunteers in the Mexican war. His father was born in Pike county, is a large and prosperous farmer, was in the army during the war between the states, and is now the popular postmaster at Molena. His mother was a daughter of Elam and Sarah (Stevens) Smith, whose family was among the early settlers of Sumter county. Mr. Lawrence was reared and worked on a farm. He began life for himself with nothing, but has worked, and with success, for pecuniary independence. In 1877 he was united by marriage with Miss Ellen Hardy, born in Upson county in 1860, daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Chappel) Hardy. Mr. Hardy was a native of Upson county, enlisted in the Confederate army, and was killed during the war. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence has been blessed with six children, all living: Jeppie, Daisy, Clara, Carrie, Zach., Jesse A. Mrs. Lawrence is a member of the Baptist church. Mr. Lawrence is an ardent democrat and a much-esteemed citizen.

J. J. LEE, farmer, Concord, Pike Co., was born in Monroe county, Ga., in March, 1827. His parents were Bryan and Sarah (Davis) Lee, who were devout Christian people and members of the Baptist church. Bryan Lee was an old resident of Monroe county, and died in 1880, aged ninety-three years. Mr. J. J. Lee received his schooling in the old log school house of half a century ago, and adopted farming as his life occupation. For several years he was engaged in the mercantile business, but now resides on his farm, where in the closing days of his well-spent life he finds ease and contentment in the company of his loving family. Mr. Lee is an unassuming old gentleman who can look back upon a long career without a pang of regret or a tremor in his conscience. Of a sunny disposition, a kind and sympathetic heart, liberal in purse, and of a broad and considerate mind, he has the love of everyone, and if he has an enemy in the world nobody knows it. Mr. Lee has been a member of the Baptist church for more than forty years, and is, by a noble example as well as by theory, a strict temperance man. Mr. Lee was married Jan. 3, 1850, to Elizabeth McClendon, by whom he had two children, J. H. and J. B. Lee. She also was a faithful member of the Baptist church. Mr. John H. Lee is living in Concord, and is proprietor of the Lee hotel, and is also extensively engaged in farming.

J. F. MADDEN, farmer and merchant, Concord, Pike Co., was born in this county in June, 1841, and is the son of James M. and Eliza B. (Mann) Madden. The elder Madden in his younger days was a merchant in Columbus, and afterward was a justice of the peace in Pike county for twenty years, and tax collector for one term. He was a successful farmer and merchant. He died in 1891 aged eighty-three years, leaving his property to his three children. J. F. Madden was educated in Pike county, and at the breaking out of the war enlisted at Spalding in Company A, Twenty-second battalion, Georgia volunteers, and served through the war as a non-commissioned officer. He was in Savannah until the evacuation, and was severely wounded at the battle of Bentonville. After the close of the conflict he commenced teaching school in Pike county, and taught in the same neighborhood where his father and grandfather had taught before him. Without any effort on his part he was elected to the legislature from Pike for the term 1886-87, and served with distinction on the committees on agriculture and education. In 1867 Mr. Madison was married to Miss L. J. Irvin, by whom he has five children: William F., J. B., L. O., M. I., and Benjamin Hill. All live in Pike county. Two daughters are at college in Rome and J. B. Madden is teaching school of Jenkensburgh, Butts Co.

DR. J. B. MATHEWS, clerk of the superior court, Zebulon, Pike Co., was born in Oglethorpe county, Oct. 9, 1839. He is the son of Uel and Martha E. (Chandler) Mathews. He was educated in Green and Heard counties, and attended the Oglethorpe Medical college at Savannah. In 1861 he entered the Confederate service, enlisting as a private in Company A, Thirteenth regiment, Georgia volunteers, and served until the close of the war, 1865. He was made captain of the company in 1864, and served in five general engagements, namely: Gaines Mills, second battle of Manassas, Sharpsburg, Fredericksburg and Gettysburg. He was wounded five times in these bloody battles. Since the close of the war he has been engaged most of the time in teaching in the schools of Pike county. In January, 1895, he was elected clerk of the superior court, which position he now fills. He represented Pike county in the legislature in 1877, and was a member of the county board of education for several years. He has been a member of the Missionary Baptist church for forty-three years and has belonged to the masonic lodge since the age of twenty-one. Dr. Mathews was married in 1865 to Mary E. Brooks, by whom he has had eight children. The eldest, Dr. W. J. Mathews, is a prominent young physician at Zetella, Spalding Co., Ga. The names of the other children are: Martha H. Carreker, Emma U., Charles B., Robert C., John M., Mary E. and Sallie Lou, who is dead.

J. A. STAFFORD, Barnesville, Pike Co., Ga., was born in Upson county, Ga., in January, 1848, and is a son of Alvis and Fannie (Gardner) Stafford. Alvis Stafford was a prominent merchant in Barnesville for forty years before his death, which occurred in July, 1888. Mr. J. A. Stafford was educated in the schools of Pike county and has made a success in merchandising; but has devoted most of his time to agriculture and fruit growing. He has large landed interests in both Upson and Pike counties, including a large tract of land near the Rock, in the former county, which is a very eligible location for a town site. It was formerly owned by Dr. Anderson, and with its natural advantages and natural facilities probably has no superior in the state. These railroads cross at this point, affording railroad transportation in any direction. There is a fine rock quarry near at hand for building, and plenty of water for manufacturing purposes. Mr. Stafford's intention is to sell this land in small tracts and build up a manufacturing town there. He is a member of the Methodist church and a member of several beneficial orders. He was married first in 1867, and after the death of his first wife he again married in 1882. He has three children: Frank A., Mary Ellen and Sam Stafford, all living in this county.

S. T. WHITAKER, physician and surgeon, Molena, was born May 16, 1857, and is a son of Dr. William and Elizabeth (Harper) Whitaker, natives of Georgia. Dr. William Whitaker still practices medicine at Brooks station, Fayette Co. He distinguished himself during the war by his deeds of charity and his efficient professional service to soldiers' families. The grandfather of Dr. S. T. Whitaker was in the legislature for many terms and was a prominent man in the state's history. His maternal grandfather, Gov. Irwin, made his name famous while occupying the gubernatorial chair in 1796, by causing an investigation of the Yazoo fraud. Dr. Whitaker is a graduate of the Georgia Eclectic school at Atlanta, in the class of 1884, and practiced his profession for two years in that city, afterward moving to Molena. He is a member of the Baptist church, of the school board and town council, and is one of the leading citizens of the community. In 1883 he was married to Mary L. Green, daughter of Dr. H. H. Green of Atlanta, by whom he has had four children: W. H., Thomas S., Elijah and Vassa Lenora. Dr. Whitaker stands high in his profession and in social circles, and enjoys the confidence of the people of Molena. He is a member of the National Eclectic Medical and the Georgia Eclectic Medical associations, and an honorary member of the Arkansas Eclectic Medical association.

POLK COUNTY.

JOSEPH A. BLANCE, lawyer, Cedartown, Polk Co., Ga., son of Joseph G. and Mary (Williams) Blance, was born in Savannah, Ga., June 20, 1838. Mr. Blance's father was a merchant in Savannah at the time he was born, and late in life moved and settled on a farm in Paulding county, where he lived until his death, which occurred in 1854. Mr. Blance enjoyed excellent educational advantages during his boyhood; after which he entered Emory college, Oxford, Ga., where he remained until 1857. He then read law under Fielder & Broyles, Cedartown, and afterward attended the Lebanon law school at Lebanon, Tenn., from which he graduated in 1859. On his return from college he formed a partnership with Col. James D. Waddell, Cedartown, Ga. March 4, 1861, he enlisted in the First Georgia regiment, and was commissioned as first lieutenant by Gov.

Joseph E. Brown. He was in all the battles around Richmond, and served in the army of northern Virginia under Gen. Lee. At the battle of Second Manassas he had the misfortune to lose his left arm. In 1865 he was appointed solicitor-general of the Tallapoosa circuit by Gov. Brown, and in 1872 was elected to represent the Thirty-eighth senatorial district in the general assembly. He has been very successful as a lawyer, stands high with the members of his profession, and has a large and valuable clientage. He is acknowledged to be one of the ablest lawyers, and one among the best business men in northwest Georgia. Mr. Blance was married June 12, 1866, to Miss Josephine, daughter of Maj. George W. and Matilda West of Polk county, Ga. Mr. Blance is a prominent member of the Missionary Baptist church, progressive in his views on all public questions, a leader in thought and action, and exercises a wide and beneficial influence.

SILAS I. COX, farmer, Rockmart, Polk Co., Ga., son of Zachariah and Grizzy Cox, was born in Upson county, Ga., June 10, 1831. His parents were natives of North Carolina, whence they came to Georgia by wagon early in the present century and settled in Upson county. They remained there until 1837, when they removed to Cass (now Bartow) county and settled on a farm. Mr. Cox was raised and educated in Cass county, attending the common schools then taught in dirt floor log houses, with seats made of slabs, and the chimney of sticks and mud. He farmed and worked at the carpenter's trade until November, 1861, when he enlisted in Company I, Fortieth Georgia regiment, and gallantly served through the entire war. With his command he was present at the protracted defense of Vicksburg, and participated in the battles at Franklin, Tenn.; at Resaca, Kennesaw Mountain, Ga. and other great battles, where he was conspicuous for his bravery and dash. He prides himself on having always led his command regardless of danger. In 1867 he moved to Rockmart, where he engaged in the hotel business, and in connection with it kept a livery and feed and sale stable. Afterward he conducted a general merchandise store in Rockmart, which he continued until 1891, when he turned his attention to farming. He is now one of the wealthiest citizens of Polk county—prominent and influential. Mr. Cox has been married three times: In 1856 he was married to Miss Lizzie, daughter of Robert and Mary Griffin of Hart county, Ga., by whom he had one child, Jackson. His second marriage was in 1867 to Miss Fanny McCrary, who died childless. His third wife was Miss Missouri Jones, daughter of Isaac Jones, who has borne him four children: Istalena, Nellie, Vena, and Ivanhoe. Mr. Cox is a valued and influential member of the Methodist church.

GILES WINFIELD FEATHERSTON, merchant, Cedartown, Polk Co., Ga., son of L. H. and Mary Ann Featherston, was born in Heard county, Ga., June 10, 1842. His father was a lawyer, and early in life came from Maury county, Tenn., to Georgia, and settled in Heard county. In 1867 he removed to Newnan, Coweta Co., Ga., where he continued the practice of his profession. In 1866 he was appointed judge of the Blue Ridge circuit, and held the office four years. He was a prominent member of the constitutional convention of 1877. Mr. Featherston enjoyed excellent educational advantages—having attended good schools when a boy and youth, and subsequently graduating himself. In 1861 he enlisted in Company G, Capt. Joseph Brown, Heard county, Seventh Georgia regiment. This company was mostly composed of school boys connected with Franklin institute, Heard county. He was a participant in the first battle of Manassas, where he was shot through the left shoulder, which disabled him for service, and he was discharged. Before the war closed, however, he served with the state troops, and participated in the battles around Atlanta, and was finally assigned to duty in the ordnance department. In 1867 he left Heard county and came to Cedartown and engaged in merchandising, in which he was very successful, and which he continued until 1884, when he embarked in the wholesale lumber and manufacturing business and a ginnery. Beginning life with nothing after the war he has by cautious enterprise and judicious investments accumulated quite a large and valuable property. He is governed by an intelligently progressive spirit on all lines, a promoter of all movements promising development, and is a useful and much esteemed citizen. Mr. Featherston was married Jan. 16, 1868 to Miss Rosaline, daughter of E. H. and Mary C. (Jones) Richardson of Putnam county, Ga., who has borne him three children: Annie Estelle, Lucius Ernest, and Rosa May. Mr. Featherston is a master Mason, and a prominent member of the Presbyterian church.

WILLIAM T. GIBSON, merchant-capitalist, Cedartown, Polk Co., Ga., son of Henry and Jane T. (Ellington) Gibson, was born in Polk county, May 6, 1844. His father moved to Polk from Harris county, Ga., in 1843. Mr. Gibson received a very good education, but the occurrence of the civil war prevented its completion as contemplated. In 1862 he enlisted in Winley's company, and with it participated in the battles of Second Manassas and Sharpsburg. In the last named battle he was shot through the right lung, by which he was disabled for six months; but immediately on his recovery he rejoined his command, and was transferred to the Western cavalry, and was with it until the surrender, participating in the battles of Resaca, New Hope church, in front of Atlanta, and numerous skirmishes. He started after the war with but little capital; but by enterprise, energy and industry, and judicious investments, he has accumulated quite a large property. He is now extensively and profitably engaged in farming, merchandising and the real estate business, and is one of the most financially solid men in Polk county. Mr. Gibson was married Sept. 24, 1867, to Miss Anna E., daughter of Jesse and Mary Crook of Jacksonville, Ala. They have two children by adoption: Jennie May, and William Ellington. Mr. Gibson is a consistent and prominent member of the Missionary Baptist church.

WILLIAM HENRY HINES, merchant, Rockmart, Polk Co., Ga., a son of James and Winiford Hines, was born in Meriwether county, Ga., Sept. 8, 1829. His father was born in Greene county, Ga., where he was reared a farmer and as such lived and died. Mr. Hines was reared on the farm in Meriwether county, and was educated in the common schools of the county, taught in log cabins; but when he was eighteen years old he attended school at Longstreet, Ga., and obtained a good education. Returning home he farmed until the war occurred. After the war he went to Jamestown, Texas, where he merchandised for fifteen months, and then returned to Meriwether county. He left that county and came to Rockmart, in 1871, where he established a large and profitable general merchandise business in which he is still engaged. He had but little to begin life with, and has attempted nothing extraordinary; but he has been satisfactorily successful, has accumulated a good property, and has an enviable reputation as a business man and citizen. Mr. Hines was married Nov. 1, 1855, to Miss Sarah E. Mitchell, who bore him two children: Carrie and Etta. Their mother having died in 1857, in 1872 he married Miss Nannie L. Battle, daughter of Lazarus Battle, by whom he has had one child, William L. Mr. Hines is a master Mason, and a member of the Missionary Baptist church.

ISAAC N. JONES, county school commissioner, Rockmart, Polk Co., Ga., son of Jesse P. and Temperance (Farrington) Jones, was born in Rockingham county, N. C., Jan. 22, 1818. His father was born in Maryland, whence when a young man he went to North Carolina, where he married his wife, who was North Carolina born. His parents migrated to Georgia and settled on a farm in De Kalb county in 1835. Mr. Jones had the advantage of but little schooling, and that little was obtained under circumstances of great discomfort—dirt floor, log house, puncheon seats and badly lighted. He worked on the farm and started in life very poor—penniless. He was a soldier in the Florida war, going from De Kalb county. He moved to Polk county Dec. 31, 1838, where he settled on a farm, and has lived there since. He served four years as a justice of the peace, also as justice of the inferior court, as tax collector of Polk county, and is at present county school commissioner. Although Mr. Jones commenced life so poor, he has by hard work and economy acquired a fine property, and as one of the oldest and most reliable and most responsible citizens, commands the unre-served respect and confidence of his fellow citizens. Mr. Jones has been married twice. In 1839 he was married to Miss Mary, daughter of Ephraim and Naomi Thompson, of what is now Polk county, who bore him eleven children: Isaac N., Francis P., Augustus W., Ivy Franklin, Jessie E., Georgia Virginia, Caroline M., Martha, Western, Naomi and James A. By his second marriage, in 1867, he had eight children: John, Cora A., Walter Phillips, Eugene R., Edgar M., Phantom Hill, Clifton Reese and Robert Lee. Polk county does not contain a more useful citizen or one more honored.

JOSEPH MANSELL, farmer, Cedartown, Polk Co., Ga., son of James and Sarah (Johnson) Mansell, was born in South Carolina, Nov. 8, 1821. His father was born and raised in Columbia, and his mother was born and raised in Greenville, S. C., and they remained all their lives in their native state. Mr. Mansell received only such indifferent schooling as was to be obtained at the rude and uncomfortable log school houses of the times and locality. He began life as a farmer with but little, came to Georgia and settled in Milton county when a young man, and afterward moved to Polk county, is now well-to-do, has a nice farm and home, and is regarded as one of the very best farmers in Polk county—having made a life-pursuit of the vocation. No citizen is more respected—none held in higher esteem. Mr. Mansell was married in December, 1847, to Miss Vashti, daughter of Sargent and Aurelia Griffin, Pickens district, S. C., by whom he has had six children: William Henry, Lavinia, Sarah, Alice, Annis and Joseph E. Mr. Mansell is a consistent and revered member of the Baptist church.

RICHARD PHILPOT, farmer, Cedartown, Polk Co., Ga., son of William and Elizabeth (York) Philpot, was born in Carroll county, Ga., Nov. 15, 1827. His parents, who had some means, not large, migrated from Tennessee to Georgia and settled in Paulding county, making the trip in wagons drawn by oxen. His father died in Paulding county in 1844, and his mother in 1850. Mr. Philpot's educational advantages were very limited, and what schooling he had was obtained in the old-time dirt floor log school house, with puncheon seats, etc. When the late war was precipitated he enlisted in the Confederate service, but after a few months' experience provided a substitute and was released. Starting with nothing after the war, he has acquired a fine estate, a competency, is a progressive and prosperous farmer, and is a most highly esteemed citizen. Mr. Philpot was married in 1859 to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of John and Sarah Blackburn, of Haralson county, Ga., and to them fourteen children have been born: Alexander B., Charles C., Mary, William, Joseph H., Augustus Y., Minerva, Elizabeth, Fannie, Annie, David, Thomas, Seaborn and Jasper. His wife, born in 1844, died in 1888. He is an exemplary member of the Baptist church.

W L. B. POWELL, farmer, Cedartown, Polk Co., Ga., son of William R. and Sallie (Franklin) Powell, was born in Elbert county, Ga., Dec. 9, 1830. His father and family migrated from Virginia to Georgia and settled on a farm in Elbert county early in this century. Mr. Powell received but little schooling, and that little in the uncomfortable dirt floor log school house with slab seats. He moved from Elbert to Haralson county, Ga., in 1861, where he remained seven years—until 1868—when he left there and settled on the farm in Polk county he now owns and cultivates. From nothing he has become a prominent and influential farmer. On account of physical disability he was exempt from military service during the late war between the states. Mr. Powell was married in 1850 to Miss Patience, daughter of Joel and Rachel Dyer, Elbert county, who has borne him ten children: Vinie E., Mary J., William J., Lindsay M., Sallie, Martha H., Jonathan P., Young E., Georgia M. and Anna. Mr. Powell is a zealous member of the Missionary Baptist church.

W ILLIAM T. SIMPSON, farmer, Rockmart, Polk Co., Ga., son of Rev. W. W. and Allie (York) Simpson, was born in Polk county, Aug. 17, 1849. His father was born in North Carolina, and while a young man came to Georgia and settled at Van Wert, Polk Co., where for many years he carried on a general merchandise business. He was a zealous Methodist, of which church he was a local preacher. His mother was a native of Tennessee. Mr. Simpson was raised in Van Wert, Polk Co., but the war intervening he was deprived of the education which, but for that, he would have received. He started in life with but little, but has so managed as to place himself in easy and comfortable circumstances. During a part of his life he has profitably engaged in mercantile business, but for some years past has devoted himself to agriculture. He is now a well-to-do, prosperous farmer, highly esteemed by a wide circle of friends and by all who know him. Mr. Simpson has been twice married, first April 8, 1869, to Miss Ophelia, daughter of Judge W. C. and Sarah Barber, of Polk county, who died leaving no issue. His second marriage was Feb. 2, 1875, to Miss Elna E., daughter of Judge W. D. and Marguerite Heslap, of Polk county. Four children have blessed this union: Maggie, Nannie, Cornelia and William Wyley. He is a prominent member of the Methodist church.

AUGUSTUS G. TOMLINSON, postmaster, Cedartown, Polk Co., Ga., son of E. S. and Ollie (Jackson) Tomlinson, was born in Walton county, Ga., Jan. 26, 1840. His father was a native of North Carolina, migrated to Georgia in 1830, and settled in Wilkes county, whence he subsequently moved to Walton county. Mr. Tomlinson received a very good education when growing up, afterward attended the college at Bowdon, and when leaving there started out to fight life's battle with no capital but a stout heart, industry and strict integrity of character. When the civil war commenced he enlisted in Company D, Phillips' legion, and was in all the battles in West Virginia, Second Manassas and in the Gettysburg campaign. He was in Gen. Longstreet's corps, and was captured at Knoxville, Tenn., and held as a prisoner until the close of the war. When released he went to New York and took the steamer for Savannah, and thence to Augusta, and from there he walked to his home in Polk county. He has been exceptionally successful in all his undertakings, and is one of the solidest and most prominent of Polk county's citizens. In 1893 he was appointed by President Cleveland postmaster at Cedartown. Mr. Tomlinson was married in 1866 to Miss Sarah, daughter of Mack and Adeline McIver, of Polk county, by whom he has had nine children: Addie O., James F., Jessie M., Flora, E. S., Octavia, R. A., S. E. and Annie. Mr. Tomlinson is a member of the Knights of Honor.

BENJAMIN WRIGHT, physician, Young's, Polk Co., Ga., son of Daniel and Mollie (Young) Wright, was born in Franklin county, Ga., Jan. 10, 1846. His father came from Edgefield district, S. C., to Georgia, and settled in Franklin county in 1840. In 1850 he moved thence to Paulding county, and in 1864 moved to Polk county and settled on a farm. Dr. Wright had very meager educational advantages during his boyhood and youth. In 1861 he became a member of Phillips' legion, as a substitute, and did good service during the war. Soon after entering the service he was transferred to Gen. Wheeler's cavalry and the western army. Among other battles engaged in were Lookout Mountain, New Hope church, Resaca, Adairsville, Cassville and Kennesaw Mountain, and in almost every skirmish during the siege of Atlanta. He began life with nothing after the war excepting a spirit of determination, industrious habits and correct principles. He improved his leisure time studying medicine, and in 1882 was graduated from Atlanta Medical college. He located immediately at Young's, where he has lived ever since, established an enviable reputation as a physician and has a very remunerative practice. No physician in the county stands higher than he, and no citizen is more popular. In 1886 he was elected to represent the Thirty-eighth senatorial district in the general assembly, and in 1888 he was elected to represent Polk county in the general assembly. In 1892 he was again elected to represent the senatorial district—his fellow-citizens thus bearing testimony to his faithfulness and efficiency. Dr. Wright was married in April, 1887, to Miss Ella, daughter of Thomas J. and Jane Peck, of Polk county, by whom he had four children: William Benjamin, John, James and Ella. The mother of these children died Feb. 6, 1891, and Feb. 7, 1892, Dr. Wright married Miss Mary, daughter of Thomas Lasseter, of Haralson county, who has borne him one child: Crissie. Dr. Wright has been very successful as a practitioner of his profession, and an excellent manager of his property.

JAMES YOUNG, Young's, Polk Co., Ga., son of Augustus and Katharine Young, was born in De Kalb county, Ga., Dec. 22, 1832. His father was a son of Robert and Celia (Strickland) Young, of what is now De Kalb county, a farmer, and was a member of the escort or guard which accompanied the Indians when they were removed from Georgia. Late in life his parents moved to and settled a farm in Polk county. Mr. Young received a very limited education, only such as could be afforded at that time and locality. He enlisted in 1862 in the First Georgia cavalry under Col. James Morrison, but after eight months' service he was discharged. Subsequently he enlisted and was commissioned a lieutenant in Yeiser's legion, state troops, and served to the end of the war. Since the war he has given his time and attention principally to his farm, though for some years at one period he conducted a general merchandise store at Young's. He started in life with some property, which by his superior management he has largely increased, until now he has a magnificent estate. He is regarded as one of the richest men and one of the best financiers in Polk county. He is popular and wields a wide and powerful influence. Mr. Young was married Aug. 3, 1854, to Miss Emiline, daughter of Jesse and Adeline Ammons, of Polk county, a union which has been blessed with six children: Sterling, Ida, Katie, Mollie, Augustus and Lucy.

PULASKI COUNTY.

CAPT. R. W. ANDERSON, a gentleman prominent in agricultural pursuits in Pulaski county, and a leading warehouseman of Hawkinsville, was born Oct. 6, 1837, three miles from that city on what is known as the "old-shell road." He was reared in the county to a plantation life, acquiring his education at the academy in Perry, Ga. He found a wife in Miss Agnes Merritt, a daughter of Simon Merritt, one of the earliest settlers of the county, and became the father of eight children: Ada, Mrs. Brown, Hawkinsville; Elizabeth; Robert S.; Simon S.; Rowell; Frank; Lucy, and Dudley. Capt. Anderson was one of the first to join the "gathering of the clans" in 1861, enlisting for twelve months in the First Georgia volunteer infantry. When his period of enlistment expired he returned home and organized a company of artillery, which he commanded through the remainder of the war in the army of the west. The company did valiant service at New Hope church, Chickamauga, and in the Atlanta campaign, and in many other bloody engagements. The captain was wounded three different times, though not seriously. Capt. Anderson's family history dates back to Jordan Anderson, his grandfather, who passed the earlier years of his life in North Carolina. He removed to Georgia with a small family about 1815, settling on the shell road, in Pulaski county, where he continued to reside until his death. Robert Sanders, Capt. Anderson's father, was born in North Carolina in 1809. He was reared in the pine woods on the banks of the Ocmulgee river, a thorough knowledge of woodcraft being the principal item of his education. When yet a boy he cleared for himself a small plantation on the banks of the river, where he began life with but a single female slave. He prospered as the years passed, and accumulated during his life a handsome property. He was a man of deep religious convictions, and was a prominent member of the Baptist church for over forty years. He married Miss Sarah Elizabeth Wooten, of Monroe county, Ga., and reared thirteen children, six of whom are now living: Mrs. Nancy S. Hardin; R. W., and Joseph J., of Hawkinsville; John L., land commissioner in New Mexico; Mrs. Roberta Moreland, Atlanta, and Mrs. Fannie Murphy, Barnesville. The father and mother of this family died in 1882 and 1867 respectively. Capt. Anderson conducts a successful warehouse business in Hawkinsville, and farms a plantation of 1,000 acres in the county. He also has 1,200 acres of wild timber. He has always been a worker in the development of Hawkinsville, and none stands higher in the estimation of her citizens. He has three times represented Pulaski county in the state legislature, and has been a member of the county board of commissioners since 1877. He and his family are members of the Baptist church, in which he has been a deacon since his seventeenth year. Pulaski is honored by such men.

JAMES POPE BROWN is the eldest son of Stephen W. Brown, who was the son of Stephen, a native of North Carolina, who migrated to Georgia about 1830 and settled in Houston county, where he spent the balance of his life. He married Miss Hannah Leary, and to them were born the following children: J. Marshall, John D., and Stephen W., all deceased; Robert H., Macon, Ga., and Calvin P., Hawkinsville, Ga. Stephen W., father of James P., was born about 1830. He was reared on a plantation, his father's vocation being that of a planter. He married Miss Martha Pope, a daughter of James Pope, of North Carolina, and later of Twiggs county, Ga., where he settled early in life. To this union were born the following children: James Pope; Stephen W., died at eight years of age, and

Robert D., of Hawkinsville. Mr. Brown was of humble parentage and had his own way to make. He located in Pulaski county in 1856 and resided there the balance of his life. His wife was a graduate of La Grange, Ga., college, was a good cook, tolerated no servants and assisted largely in the success which attended her husband. He was a democrat and represented his county in the state legislature for one term, but would accept no further political favors, though frequently tendered. He devoted his entire attention to farming, and was considered the best farmer in this section of the state. He did not make a fortune, but always lived in comfortable style. He died March 1, 1891, and his wife in the fall of 1890. James Pope Brown was born May 4, 1855, in Houston county, and was but an infant when his parents removed to Pulaski county, where he was reared. He received his preparatory education at Mt. Zion, and then entered Mercer university, graduating from the latter when he was but eighteen years of age. After school days were over he began working on his father's farm. In 1873 he became connected with a warehouse in Hawkinsville, where he remained until 1876, when he rented a small farm, upon which he remained for three years. He then purchased a tract of land nine miles from Hawkinsville, upon which he now resides. He married Miss Anna Wrighton Miller, a daughter of Jonathan Miller, of Beach Island, N. C. (See sketch of A. L. Miller, Macon.) To them five children were born: Stephen W.; Emily, deceased; Martha; Jonathan M., deceased, and J. Pope, Jr., deceased. Col. Brown is a man who honors the occupation of agriculture by his connection with it; and with the same qualities displayed in that field could succeed in any other he should care to enter. His plantation of 4,000 acres of land is one of the largest and best in south Georgia. He is president of the Pulaski County Fair association, which every year holds one of the best meetings in Georgia. He also serves on the board of county commissioners, is a Baptist in faith and votes with the democrats.

E. A. BURCH. The advent of Lord Baltimore brought to America two emigrants, Joseph and Charles Burch, and from these are descended the large and prominent family of that name. Joseph settled in Georgia and married a Miss Edith Hargrove, a lady of German parentage but of Georgia rearing, and to them were born: Charles, an early settler of Laurens county, Ga., where he died; Ruben, who lived and died in Richmond county, Ga.; Benjamin, who died in Laurens county soon after the close of the late war; Littleton, who was scalped by Indians, though he lived for some years afterward; Michael, killed by the Indians in Irwin county (see sketch of M. L. Burch, Dodge county); Edward Allen, the youngest. Upon the death of the mother of these children, Joseph married again, the lady being a Miss Wilcox, and they reared John, Henry and Alfred, who were prominent in Laurens and Montgomery counties, though all now deceased. After the death of his mother, Edward Allen Burch was adopted by a cousin, Edward Burch, of Richmond county, when he was but five months old, having been born April 6, 1796. He was reared upon a plantation and in meager circumstances. When but a youth he possessed a horse, saddle and bridle, and with these he became a member of the colony of one Isom Cowart and traveled westward to Mississippi. After a year's residence there he married Elizabeth, the second daughter of Isom and Susanna (Miller) Cowart. Isom Cowart was a native of South Carolina and settled in Georgia in 1812. Later he went to Mississippi, and was killed by a run-away horse. In the 20's Mr. Burch, with his young wife and child, returned to Georgia, making the trip by wagon through unbroken country, and finally located three miles west of Hawkinsville. He built a cabin in the woods, and turning his attention to carpentering, built and repaired many of the old-fashioned cotton gins. In 1836 he died of diphtheria. His children are: Edward Allen, the gentleman first named; Martha Womble, deceased; Joseph, died in 1855; Susan, married Jacob Shiver, and died in Florida; Michael B., resides in Texas, a very prominent citizen and justice of the peace; Mary Caroline, married Isom Shiver, and died in Florida; Mary Catherine, who was born exactly two years after the first Mary, resides in Texas. The mother of these is extremely aged and resides with her son, M. B., in Texas. Edward A. Burch was born in Mississippi, July 19, 1821, and as before related, came later with his parents by wagon to Georgia, and remembers incidents occurring en route. His early life was that of the usual backwoods boy, though he was the recipient of a good education for the period. March 10, 1842, he married Mary A., daughter of Ulysses and Mary Ann (Simpson) Crutchfield, who bore him three children, viz.: Joseph Allen, who resides in Texas; Caroline Susan Handley, also in Texas; Mary E., died in infancy. The wife died Dec. 25, 1851, and Mr. Burch married again in October, 1852, Miss Mary Ann, daughter of William and Lucinda Beard. Their children are: Martha, wife of Barney Manheim of Hawkinsville; Mary J., wife of J. W. Bowyer of Virginia; Edward L., died in infancy; Sarah Ellen, wife of J. W. Reynolds of Pulaski county; Lucinda, died in infancy; William E., postmaster, Hawkinsville; Emma, Mrs. De Lamar of Hawkinsville; Henry M., died in infancy, and Eugene A., assistant postmaster of Hawkinsville. Mr. Burch began his career as a clerk in a mercantile establishment. Then engaged in farming and after some success he engaged for himself in the mercantile business in Hawkinsville. Unluckily for him he formed a partnership with a man of small scruples and after a short existence the firm was dissolved. He again tried farming, but with poor success, and in the fall of 1852 removed to Floyd county, Ga., where he taught school and employed himself in any capacity honorable. In 1860 was in Rome, Ga., teaching school, and a local Methodist preacher, frequently walking eighteen miles to fill country pulpits. In 1861 he was employed in ship building, and then in the furniture business. At about this time grave fears of a negro uprising were entertained by the citizens of Rome, and he was requested to occupy the office of chief of police of that city. In accepting he assumed command of a company of militia known as the Rome Light Guards, who did police duty. His position was a perilous one and he encountered many dangers. In 1863 he returned to Pulaski county, where he has since resided. For sixteen years he held the office of clerk of the superior court, and for four years has been tax receiver of Pulaski county. Mr. Burch believes in the principles of the democratic party, and is a leading member of the Methodist church. He is a chancellor commander of the Knights of Pythias lodge, is an Odd Fellow and a Mason of the royal arch degree.

JAMES FRANKLIN CONEY, merchant, Hawkinsville, and a young man of fine ability, is the son of Ezekiel Coney. His grandfather, Jeremiah, came from Laurens to Pulaski county, where he passed the remainder of his days as a planter. His children were: Charles, Jerry, Ezekiel, James, Sarah, Mrs. Jos. Daniel, and Dudley, who died in infancy. Ezekiel was born in 1831, was reared on the plantation of his father, and married Sarah E. Riley of Houston county. Five children were the fruit of this union: James F.; Mollie, deceased; Cornelia, Mrs. R. A. Merritt, deceased; Emma, deceased; and Eva, Mrs. C. B. Adams of Macon. The father of these children died soon after his return from the war, of disease contracted in the service. The mother subsequently married C. M. Bozeman of Hawkinsville. John G. is the only child of this marriage, now merchandising with his half-brother, James F. The latter gentleman was born June 1, 1865, and received his literary education in the schools of his native city.

He later graduated from the Baltimore Commercial college, and clerked for M. D. Wilcox until 1885, then embarked in company with Robert Merritt of Macon in a venture of his own. In 1886 the firm name changed to Coney, Adams & Co., and took on its present style Coney, Lovejoy & Co. in 1888. For a young man Mr. Coney has proved himself possessed of excellent business capacities, and is one of the rising men of his section. He began business with naught but his meager earnings as clerk, and is now well advanced on the road to a competency. He is an active Methodist and a democrat. Mr. Coney married Miss Lula D. Wimberly of Houston county, a daughter of E. H. Wimberly, a sketch of whom appears among the prominent citizens of Houston county. Three beautiful and interesting children blessed this home: E. W., Julia F. and Lucy. With the energy characteristic of youth, Mr. Coney throws his whole soul into his business. To such a man there can be no failure, as success begets confidence, and the confidence of a community on the other hand begets success.

R. G. COOK is a prominent agriculturist of Pulaski county. He comes of Irish stock, having been born of parents who were both reared in the Green isle. His father, Patrick Cook, was united in marriage in 1848 to Catherine Malloy, and the following year they emigrated to the United States. Stopping for a time in New York, they later became residents of Savannah, where Mr. Cook passed his life-time as a contractor on public works and in railroading. There was a family of seven children born to them, four of whom were reared: Patrick, Donald, James, Mary, Catherine, Richard Giles and Robert Giles. Donald, Catherine and Richard G. died in infancy. The mother of these children died in 1867, and the father in 1892. Robert Giles Cook was born in Savannah, July 21, 1860, and passed his life in that city until his eighteenth year. At that age he resolved to try the west, and for the subsequent seven years he was engaged in handling cattle in Texas—a veritable cowboy. Returning to civilization, however, he has since been a resident of Pulaski county. He married Miss Sarah Le Grand, a French lady, in 1890, and to this union have been born five children. Mr. Cook is an unswerving democrat, and delights to be of service to that grand old party.

HENRY. The name of this family has been a familiar one in the wire grass country of southern Georgia for the past fifty years, and has been directly and intimately associated with the growth of Hawkinsville and Pulaski county since Judge John Henry established the firm of Henry & Son in 1870. The family is of Scotch-Irish descent. Beginning with George Henry, a native of Scotland, who moved over into Ireland, where he died at an advanced age, we have authentic information of but one son, Joseph. This son married and reared four boys and two girls, their names being Thomas, John, Joseph, James, Caroline and Jane, all of whom are now deceased but John, who forms the subject of this sketch. This gentleman was born in Ireland June 12, 1820. In early boyhood his parents emigrated to Pennsylvania, where they lived until death. John was given a good education for a boy of his opportunities, displaying a remarkable precociousness in the field of mathematics. His first connection with the business world was as a clerk in a mercantile establishment of Westfield, N. Y. Here he remained five years. He then came to Georgia and in 1845, using the savings of his clerkship as capital, he began his first business venture in Twiggs county. After two years he removed to Houston county, where for the next twelve years he conducted a mercantile business in Hayneville, then a trading point of some interest. Dooly county was then the scene of his labors until 1870, when he came to Hawkinsville and in company with his son, Edwin J., established the house of Henry & Son, which for many years carried on a most successful business. In 1891 the firm was dissolved, the father having been made vice-president and the son cashier of the Hawkinsville Bank & Trust company. Judge John Henry is a man of superior cast of mind in a financial sense. Experience has taught him many lessons, yet his mind was always clearer in mathematical operations than in the field of science. And notwithstanding his reverses during and following the war, he is to-day one of the wealthiest men of the wire-grass country. He never aspired to political preferment. In 1872, however, he was prevailed on by friends to allow his name to stand for county judge, and being appointed, he served the following four years. During his term of office the handsome court house now doing service was built, and largely through Judge Henry's influence. In 1850 John Henry and Civility, daughter of Jones Kendrick, of Putnam county, Ga., became man and wife, and to them were born four children, a daughter and son now living: Amanda, the wife of S. M. Caldwell, a merchant of Hawkinsville, and Edwin Jones, who has become one of the leading business men of his city. He was born in Hayneville, Ga., Dec. 24, 1852, and was educated at the Lawrenceville high school and at the Atlanta Business college, where he graduated in 1870. As before stated, he in that year became a member of the firm of Henry & Son, and is now cashier of the Hawkinsville Bank & Trust company. Inheriting the strong point of his father, Edwin J., he is regarded as a business man of decided merit. Aug. 25, 1847, Mr. Henry was happily married to Miss May, a daughter of Dr. William Russell, of Lawrenceville, Ga. He is a democrat in political belief, a member of the board of county commissioners, and of the city council.

MARK T. HODGE, representative of Pulaski county, and a lawyer of well-known ability at Hawkinsville, was born April 4, 1849, in Gordon county, Ga. His father, Duke H. Hodge, was a native of Georgia also, Newton county being the place of his birth. He married in Bartow county Miss Eliza Crawford, daughter of the president of Cherokee Baptist college. The children born to this union were Mattie L., John W., Mary S., Morgan H., Mrs. Dr. A. A. Smith, of Hawkinsville, and Mark T. Duke H. Hodge led a mercantile life during his time, but was cut off in middle age, dying in 1855, a short time prior to the birth of his youngest son, Mark T. The mother of the children fought the battle of life alone until they became of proper age to take up the burden, and died Sept. 18, 1893. Col. Mark T. Hodge was of that age to experience all the evil effects of the war, and none of the fun, so to speak. The unsettled condition of the country precluded successful school-going or school-teaching, but being naturally of a studious disposition, Mark T. was able at the tender age of sixteen to teach others what he knew. By the judicious use of his meager earnings he was enabled to continue his own studies, and in this way succeeded in getting a college education, graduating at Athens in 1876. The property of the family had all been destroyed by Sherman's vandals, and they had fled to Hawkinsville in consequence, where they continued to reside, and where Col. Hodge returned after graduation to take charge of the village school. He taught for three years a very full school, and having continued his studies with but a change of direction, was admitted to the bar in 1880. Of his legal career it need only be said that success followed application, and he has built up a very safe and remunerative practice. He is also interested in a financial way in farming and in various enterprises about Hawkinsville. He owns part of the stock of the Holmes & Co. barrel manufactory, an institution which is doing a good business, and is a paying investment. Col. Hodge has always been an outspoken democrat and a worker in the ranks of his party. In 1892 he was honored as the standard-bearer in the legislative fight, and again in 1894, serving both terms with credit. He has never married, being wedded hopelessly to his books and to his work.

JAMES OLIVER JELKS, of Hawkinsville, is a younger brother of Dr. E. A. Jelks, of Quitman, Ga., under whose sketch elsewhere in these memoirs will appear the facts relating to the family history. J. O. Jelks was born July 4, 1839, in Pulaski county, Ga. His early education was limited to the schools of that early period. He began his business career in Hawkinsville where, in 1865, he erected the first building devoted exclusively to store-keeping, mercantile business having been previously carried on in frame dwelling houses. For twenty-eight years Mr. Jelks continued in that business, and with a large measure of success. In 1843 he was united in marriage to Elizabeth C., a daughter of Mr. Joseph E. Phelps, of Pulaski county, who was one of its early settlers. The daughter was an accomplished lady, a graduate of the La Grange college in 1862, where she took honors in music. They became the parents of several children: Nathaniel, Mary, Thomas M., James O., Jr., and Oliver—the two last deceased. The wife and mother died in 1875. Mr. Jelks' present wife was Mary S. Way, a daughter of Dr. E. F. Way, one of Liberty county's most noted families, and later of Hawkinsville. To this union two children have been born: Leonora and Anna. Mr. Jelks is a sound money democrat and a member of the Baptist church. In addition to his large real estate holdings in Georgia he owns an extensive property at Lake Jesup, Fla., which he had planted in 1867 with orange trees, there being a grove of seventy-five acres. Mr. Jelks and his family have been accustomed since then to spend the winters at that point. Mr. Jelks inherits in a large degree the characteristics which made his father one of the chief citizens of Pulaski county, and is held in high regard among his large circle of friends and acquaintances. Being very public spirited and a writer of considerable note, he has written much on public questions, particularly on those bearing upon the development of his section.

NATHANIEL P. JELKS, one of the leading physicians of Hawkinsville, Ga., is a son of James O. Jelks, Sr. (See sketch of Dr. E. A. Jelks, of Quitman, Ga.) He was born at Hawkinsville, Ga., July 18, 1845, but reared in Florida, where he received his earlier education, his later school days being spent in Augusta, Ga. At the opening of the civil war he entered the Confederate service, enlisting in a regiment of Florida cavalry under Gen. Jones, and was wounded in battle at National Bridge, Florida. After the war closed he entered Bellevue Medical college at New York, and graduated from the same in 1868. He immediately began the practice of his profession at Hawkinsville, Ga., where he has since resided. In 1870 he took for his wife Miss Kathleen Lamkin, and to this union were born seven children: Kathleen, E. L., Lily, Needham, Mary, Maude and Ruth. The mother of these children died in 1891. In 1892 a second marriage was solemnized, the lady being Miss Catherine Pate, daughter of Judge A. C. Pate. To this union one son has been born—Antony Pate, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. Dr. Jelks enjoys a large and lucrative practice and is widely known both for his professional ability and his genial hospitality. He votes the democratic ticket and has an interest in the welfare of his party. The Baptist church of Hawkinsville numbers him among its most useful members, and the public school among its strongest supporters, he being on the board of trustees. Fraternally he affiliates with the Odd Fellows. Like his brother,

Dr. Jelks, he became interested in orange culture, and at present is the owner of a large orange grove in Florida. He is a member of both the Georgia Medical and South Georgia Medical associations.

DAVID CURTIS JOINER. This gentleman is the grandson of Curtis Joiner, who was a native of North Carolina, and an early resident of Pulaski county, Ga. He came to this county in 1819 when the county was occupied by Indians, with whom he had many adventures. His son Larkin, David C.'s father, was born in North Carolina, in 1809, and came with his parents to the then wilds of Pulaski county, Ga., when but nineteen years old. His educational advantages were as a matter of course very limited; but he had a brilliant mind, and by reading and observation he became quite well educated for the period. He married Miss Elizabeth Linsey, a daughter of David Linsey, of Washington county, Ga., and also one of Pulaski's early settlers. In 1840 he became a Baptist minister and filled the pulpits of various churches for forty miles around, and was regarded as the leading divine of this portion of the state. He died in October, 1880, and his wife followed him in 1885. His children are Eliza, widow of Rev. R. L. Bullington; David Curtis; Jane, now Mrs. P. G. McKinney; Martha, Mrs. J. T. Stephens (deceased); John J., a resident of Hawkinsville; and Wm. Larkin, also a resident of Hawkinsville. David C. was born in Pulaski county, June 12, 1842, and was reared seven miles east of Hawkinsville, in Dooly county. At eighteen he married Miss Mary E. Mims, a daughter of Elias Mims of Houston county. He was absolutely without resource, but began farming upon thirty acres of land belonging to his father. A few months later he left his wife and growing crops to respond to the call of arms by the Confederacy. He enlisted in July, 1862, Company G, Tenth Georgia cavalry, which was composed of both Georgia and Alabama patriots. He participated in no less than fifty-two engagements, many of which were hand-to-hand conflicts. Except for being hit by a nearly spent shell he was uninjured. He laid down his arms after a long service in the western army with Gen. Scott in Kentucky, at Hillsboro, N. C. For his gallantry he was promoted from private to first lieutenant and then to captain, having command of a company for the last two years. Upon his return from the war he bought a small plantation entirely upon credit. In 1871, after many "ups and downs," he was in possession of a good plantation of which he was sole owner. He then came to Hawkinsville, where his shrewd ability was at once recognized, and he became a partner in a mercantile establishment. After eighteen months he bought the business from his profits, and in another eighteen months had cleared nearly $4,000. He then took into partnership a brother, and this firm conducted a successful business for six years, at the end of which time Mr. Joiner again assumed sole charge, which he has since successfully conducted. His success is truly wonderful and he is, at the time of writing, worth $250,000. He is the largest real estate owner in Pulaski county. Not only in a financial way has his success been marked, but in every other respect. He is self-educated; and a more refined, courteous, and affable gentleman cannot be found. He owes his success to close attention to business, sterling honesty and fair dealing. His wife is a lady of fine intellect and no little credit is due her for her valuable assistance in Mr. Joiner's career. Both are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Joiner is a democrat, but of no political aspirations. His children are Mary Francis and David Wynn. David Curtis, the first born, died in youth, in 1873.

AUGUST M. JONES, farmer, of Pulaski county, Ga., is the son of John H. and Estelle A. (Bartlett) Jones. His father, now deceased, was born in 1831 near Sandersville, and at twenty-one engaged in mercantile business in that town. He married in 1860. Mrs. Jones having been the daughter of Ronald and Sarah (Lippman) Bartlett of Washington county, and continuing to reside in Sandersville for a short period the family removed to Dodge county, where he died March 18, 1888. He was a man of strong personality and successful in whatever he undertook. During the war he was a gallant soldier for Dixie's cause, being a private in the Forty-ninth Georgia, with whose members he endured many hardships and fought many battles. He was a member of the Methodist church, in political belief a democrat, and a member of the masonic fraternity. The names of his children were: Robert M.; Mary F. (deceased); Eugenia G. (deceased); Mallard C.; and August M. In 1890 they removed with their mother, who still survives, to Pulaski county, where they now reside, cultivating a farm of 450 acres. August M. Jones was born Feb. 3, 1864, in Dooly county, Ga. He had the distinction in his youth of having been one of Gov. Northen's pupils, though he did not receive a collegiate education. In 1874 he began his first business venture in Dooly county as a country merchant and conducted it successfully for a number of years, removing with the family to Pulaski in 1890. Mr. Jones is yet a bachelor, having never succumbed to the charms of southern womanhood. He is a democrat, a Methodist, a Mason and a pleasant, social gentleman.

JAMES J. KINCHEN. Wm. Kinchen, a native of North Carolina, and grandfather of James J., was a patriot of the revolutionary war, and lost an eye while doing service for his country. He died at the age of ninety-eight. James, his youngest son, the father of the gentleman whose name appears above, was a native of Washington county, Ga., and lived to be fifty-two years of age. He married Lucretia Coleman of Emanuel county, Ga., and they became the parents of nine children, three of whom are living: Hiram, Early county, Ga.; J. J.; and John, who resides in Thomas county. The father was a member of the Baptist church, a good planter and a man of some means. The husband and wife died about the same time in about 1830. J. J. Kinchen was born in Laurens county, Ga., Dec. 20, 1820. His boyhood days were spent upon his father's farm. Having acquired a good education, he spent a great part of his life (thirty-five years) as teacher, most of the time in Pulaski county. He married Mary, a daughter of Hardy Powers, of Pulaski county, and the following children have been born to them: Winnie; Sallie; Margaret; Laura; James P.; and Wm. H. The mother of these children died Oct. 6, 1887. While teaching school, Mr. Kinchen also devoted a part of his time to farming. He had no capital with which to start in life, even his education being self-acquired. He has been a most successful teacher, and his standing as an agriculturist is evidenced by the high state of cultivation under which he keeps his plantation. He has never desired political honors, though he is a good democrat and takes an interest in the affairs of his party.

COL. CHAS. TENNANT LATHROP. Hawkinsville has had many sons to fall by the wayside while in the full strength and vigor of manhood, while others have passed, their life work finished, and a successful career rounded out by a quiet and peaceful death. The above gentleman was one of the latter class. He died Sept. 8, 1893, at the ripe age of seventy-six years, with a business career of more than the usual success behind him, and a life whose benign influence was recognized by all. Col. Lathrop was of northern birth and family, having been the first white child to be born in Vincennes, Ind., that event occurring June 28, 1817. The Lathrops were a New England family of old and honorable descent and are still found in Connecticut, from which state Col. Lathrop's grandfather, Charles, had migrated to the new territory of Indiana in the early years of the present century. However, soon after the birth of Col. Lathrop the whole family including his father, also named Charles, went back to Connecticut, traveling the whole distance in wagons amid many perils. They settled in Colchester, where the colonel was reared and schooled. He was educated at Bacon academy of Colchester, and in 1845 came to Hawkinsville, Ga. An elder brother, James W., had preceded him to Georgia, and was engaged in mercantile pursuits in Savannah. In company with his brother, Col. Lathrop began a business in Hawkinsville, which continued the balance of his life with uninterrupted success. Later in life he became identified with the banking interests of Hawkinsville; also, and for many years prior to his death, he was one of the leading spirits of the wire grass region. Col. Lathrop was a man of the broadest culture, of decidedly poetical temperament, and a lover of nature who never tired of her beauties. He was modest and unassuming, and though his ability was such as to invite a public career, he resisted all efforts to draw him into a life of public preferment. He grew wealthy, but wealth to him meant increased opportunities to do good. He was liberal in his charities, but few knew the extent of his gifts, as he heeded the Bible injunction to secrecy in such matters. One of his most munificent gifts was never made public until after his death, consisting of a cash payment of $25,000 toward the building of a Y. M. C. A. mission building in Tokio, Japan. In politics he was a democrat, and was a veteran of the late war, serving his adopted state long and faithfully in her need. Col. Lathrop was twice married. His first wife was Margaret Rebecca Mikell, to whom he was wedded Nov. 21, 1854, and who died at Griffin, Ga., Dec. 3, 1855. His second wife was Mary Elizabeth Robinson, of Norfolk, Conn., whom he married Oct. 18, 1874, and who survives him. Col. Lathrop left no children.

COL. JOHN F. LEWIS. Died in Hawkinsville, Ga., on Dec. 29, 1879, of pneumonia, Col. John F. Lewis, in the forty-ninth year of his age. Thus read the notice that startled the friends of a man who was for many years a familiar figure in the business and commercial life of South Georgia. Col. Lewis was one of those self-made men who forged to the front by reason of superior financial acumen. His was a mind that was quick to perceive and ready to act upon the opportunities of life. And long before he had reached the zenith he had impressed his individuality upon the business world of all south Georgia. The following from the pen of a friend in the "Montezuma Weekly" will serve to show the estimation in which Col. Lewis was held at the time of his untimely demise: "His was, by far, more than an ordinary career. Early in life he laid deep the cornerstone of his coming success. With truth as his guide, with honesty as his anchor, with sobriety as his chart, with fidelity to principle as the star, who can wonder at his achievements in a life, that was alas, too brief? The days of youth had scarcely vanished; long before entering into the 'sere and yellow leaf,' we find him standing upon the threshold of life, master of his calling, with the trophies of victory enwreathing his brow, with success as his portion and wealth as his companion. He will be missed, not only in his immediate section, but in circles abroad; for his fame as a business man, for deep-seated sagacity and far-reaching views, ignoring local limits, found recognition, even in the nation's metropolis. He was doing a noble service in rebuilding the trade, the credit and the character of his own southland. His place will be hard to fill, for there are few men like him. Noble spectacle it was to behold him, while in life, surrounded by his young sons, like a chieftain upon the field among his lieutenants, teaching them to plan and succeed, carefully carrying out in every detail the operations of the largest business of the country, thus preparing them for future usefulness." Col. John F. Lewis was a native of Georgia and a son of John B., who died a few months after the birth of his son. He was reared by his paternal grandfather, who was a poor but respectable planter. Legal age found Col. Lewis with but an ordinary education and small capital to embark in a mercantile venture at Coney, Ga. Success, however, seemed inherent in him from the beginning. As his mercantile interests grew he removed to Montezuma and branched out in the banking business. He subsequently established banks at Hawkinsville, Valdosta and Albany, all of which were in fine financial condition, and have become leading institutions in their line in the state. Col. Lewis married, March 17, 1853, Lavinia Butts of Macon, daughter of Elijah and Ann (Thompson) Butts, who now survives him, the mother of the following children: E. B., state senator, Montezuma; Mrs. Eva Leonard; R. G., deceased in 1892; Sherry B., deceased in 1890; John F., president of the Citizens' bank, Valdosta; Mattie, Mrs. W. A. Dodson, Americus; Pearl L., Mrs. John C. Holmes, and William M., of Hawkinsville.

DAVID G. McCORMACK, one of the substantial business men of Hawkinsville, was born Jan. 29, 1839, in Pulaski county. His education was procured after the crops were laid by in an old log cabin field school; but such as it was there were staying qualities in it. The war between the states found Mr. McCormack just at manhood's estate, and of disposition and temperament to resist Yankee interference with southern institutions. He became a private in Company E, Third Georgia infantry, known as the Governor's Guards, and did service in Virginia and South Carolina for fifteen months. Returning home, he soon re-enlisted, joining the Forty-ninth Georgia under Maj. Pate. During his service in the field Mr. McCormack participated in many of the chief battles of the war and in hundreds of smaller skirmishes, yet escaped unhurt. He recalls with a thrill of horror the fall of Gen. Kerney at Harper's Ferry, of which he was a witness. During the progress of the war, Jan. 12, 1864, Mr. McCormack was joined in marriage to Emma Pollack of Houston county, a daughter of Moses Pollack, one of the wealthy planters of that county. She is the mother of four daughters and a son: Anna, Mrs. James McGriff, Hawkinsville; Emma; Eugenia; May, and David G., Jr. In 1866 Mr. McCormack embarked in the mercantile business in Hawkinsville, which he conducted with a measure of success for some twelve years. He then retired to his plantation, where he gave much attention to the development of the fruit industry, experimenting with various kinds. The cotton warehouse business next attracted his attention, and he has since conducted an institution of that kind at Hawkinsville. In 1892 he suffered the loss of his building by fire, but immediately built the commodious and safe brick structure in which he now operates. Mr. McCormack is a democrat, but with no aspirations for office. His religious belief is in conformity with the Baptist teaching, in which organization he is a deacon. David G. McCormack is a son of Mathias and Mary H. (Connor) McCormack. The former was a native of Burke county, born in 1794. He came to Pulaski county in 1818, locating on the east side of the Ocmulgee river. Indians were then plentiful. On one occasion he reached an Indian camp in south Georgia with a pack horse laden with goods, only to find them with their war paint on. Their greeting was most suspicious and filled him with alarm. But he found a friend in the chief, who came to him at night and offered to guide him safely home. Leaving his goods he traveled all night and at dawn heard the first words his guide had spoken on the trip, "pale face, safe." He reached home in safety, and in a few days his goods were returned without damage. Mr. McCormack was very kind to the Indians and they all respected him greatly. He reared a deaf and dumb child of an Indian. He became very intelligent and lived with Mr. McCormack's family until he was forty-five years old. He was known as "Indian Sam." Mr. McCormack prospered and became one of the old-time "southern princes." He was a rock-ribbed democrat and represented Pulaski in the legislature several terms. During the war he lost his entire fortune, and died in 1874. His wife was a native of Brooks county, Ga., and was the mother of Jas. C., deceased; Mrs. Eliza Fletcher, Telfair county; Mrs. Amanda Howell, deceased; William, Thomas, Sarah, Catherine, Araminda, Madison and Martha, all deceased; Nannie, Mrs. Woodward, Dooley, Ga., and David G.

PATRICK THOMAS M'GRIFF, for twenty-two years ordinary of Pulaski county, and one of the most genial, obliging and competent officials in Georgia, is of Irish lineage and Georgia birth. His paternal grandfather emigrated to America from Ireland about the middle of the eighteenth century. He was a man of superior education and professional ability, a civil engineer by vocation. He married Miss Mary Hall, of a family of distinction in Maryland both at that day and the present. He served in the revolutionary war, rising to the rank of colonel, and subsequently settled in Virginia, where he was employed by the government as an official surveyor. Later in life he removed to Montgomery county, Ga., where he died after a long and uncommonly useful life. He reared a family of ten children. Thomas, Judge McGriff's father, was born Jan. 22, 1774, in Virginia. His education was of a limited character, but by careful study and close observation he in later years became a man of superior mind and broad culture. Settling in Pulaski county in 1812, a date which marks him as one of the very earliest settlers, he married a Miss Mercer, and by her became the father of six children, all of whom are now deceased. The first wife died, and he was married to Mary, a daughter of Alexander Michael. Two children resulted from this marriage, James A., now deceased, and Judge P. T. The father was a man of great energy and a will to work which brooked no obstacle and which made him one of the wealthy men of his community. He believed in progressiveness, and was always foremost in every enterprise which looked to the upbuilding of the community. He was an old-line whig in politics, but not an aspirant. He died March 30, 1843, his wife outliving him by thirty-eight years. Judge P. T. McGriff was born July 20, 1833, and is a native of Pulaski county. The common schools which he attended were of a superior grade, and he therefore received a good academic education. When but sixteen years old he served three months in the Florida Indian war under Capt. Thomas Lankford. The civil war found Mr. McGriff ready and anxious to defend the principle of the free sovereignty of the states, and in 1862 he became a member of Company G, Tenth Confederate cavalry, subsequently being made its captain. He served in the army of the west and engaged in a large number of sanguinary battles. When peace was assured Capt. McGriff settled in the quiet vocation of agriculture in Pulaski county, which he prosecuted with success until his election in 1873 to his present important position. It is needless to speak of the conduct of this office. Twenty-two years of continuous service among an intelligent people simply means that no better man could be found for the office, or Judge McGriff would have been relegated to private life long ago. A thorough democrat, the judge takes delight in furthering the interests of his party. Fraternally he has for thirty-three years been a member of the grand lodge, F. and A. M., and is at present high priest of Pulaski chapter No. 20, R. A. M., at Hawkinsville, Ga., and a sir knight templar of St. Omar commandery No. 2, Macon, Ga. He is president of the board of education for the city of Hawkinsville, where he wields a powerful influence in advancing the interests of education. In religious faith he is a Baptist. The first marriage of Judge McGriff was solemnized in Pulaski county to Mary A., daughter of Judge B. B. Dykes, in 1857. She died in March, 1862, the mother of a son, Rufus J., now a resident of Hawkinsville. The second marriage occurred four years later, in December, 1866, to Frances Cowan, widow of Dr. Cowan, of Pulaski county. Three children have been born to her, two of whom are now living: James P. and Frances, the latter being an accomplished young lady of superior mental attainments, and a graduate of the Girls' Industrial Normal school of Milledgeville. Judge McGriff and his family have always held, and still retain, the love and respect of the citizens of Pulaski county. Mr. James P., son of Judge McGriff, is a successful merchant of Hawkinsville.

HENRY L. MANNIE is a native Austrian, and son of Moses Mannie, of Cracan, Austria, who died in 1876. Henry L. was born May 14, 1855, and was educated in the land of his birth. When but seventeen years of age he emigrated to the United States, landing in New York, Friday, Feb. 5, 1872. Here, among strangers, he started in business with the small capital obtained from the sale of a dozen razors. Investing in a small stock of notions, he took them upon his back and began to travel through the rural districts. Sept. 25, 1872, found him in Hawkinsville, Ga., where he secured employment as clerk in the mercantile establishment of Charles Schlang, now a merchant of New York city. In 1878 he became junior partner in the business, which was conducted under the firm name of Schlang & Mannie. The following year he purchased the interest of his partner and continued the business until 1880, when fire swept away his possessions. Starting anew at Scotland, Ga., from there he went to Mount Vernon, and in 1882 opened a branch store in Hawkinsville. He now conducts a very large business, carrying a stock averaging $12,000. He also owns several plantations in the counties of Pulaski and Dooly and has considerable real estate in Atlanta. On Dec. 26, 1880, Miss Mollie Waterman became his wife. Four children have blessed this union, three of whom are living: Moses, Birdie and Sarah. Mr. Mannie has two brothers residing in this country, Augustus M., of St. Louis, and Charles M., of Arkansas. Mr. Mannie quickly adapted himself to the ways and manners of his adopted country and in politics has become a good democrat.

HENRY B. MARR. The grandfather of the gentleman whose name heads this sketch was a native of Scotland. He was one of the early settlers of Kentucky and later of Virginia. In the last named state his son, Henry T. Marr, was born in 1806. The father being in very poor circumstances, Henry T. was reared to manhood on the farm. In later years he moved to Georgia. His wife was Miss Elizabeth T. Rogers, of Kentucky. She was born Feb. 27, 1804, and died in Mississippi, April 21, 1863. The husband died at Hawkinsville, Ga., at the advanced age of eighty-three years. They were both sincere Christians and members of the Methodist church. Henry B. Marr was born in Fayette county, Ky., Jan. 6, 1842, and was reared near Lexington. He took an active part in the civil war, during which time he was an artilleryman of Withers' battery. He was present at the siege of Vicksburg, and was with Gen. Hood in his retreat before Gen. Sherman. He remained in the service until the close of the war, participating in many skirmishes. After the surrender he engaged first as an overseer, then farmed for himself and was very successful from the start, and soon accumulated a fortune. However, by injudicious investments, he soon met severe reverses, and was compelled to start again at the very beginning. Success attended his efforts, he soon regained his fortune, and in 1887 he moved to Hawkinsville and retired from active business. He, however, manages his plantation, which consists of some two or three thousand acres. In politics he is an old-time democrat and in faith a Methodist. Married to Susan, daughter of Daniel Hutchins, of Kentucky, he has become the father of the following children: John, Mary, Lydia, died in infancy, and Ethel.

CAPT. JOHN H. MARTIN, one of the best lawyers in south Georgia and leader of the bar in Pulaski county, was born April 10, 1842, in Decatur county. He is the only son of Dr. M. H. Martin and Caroline W. Martin, the former a prominent physician and planter of Decatur county for years. He never held any political office except that of state senator from his district. He was born in Liberty county, Ga., Oct. 18, 1811, and was graduated from the state university, then known as Franklin college, and also from the medical college at Augusta, Ga. In July, 1841, he married Mrs. Caroline W. Stewart, nee Miss Caroline W. Bains, who was born near the town of Eatonton in North Carolina, July 21, 1818. At the time of their marriage both were residents of Quincy, Gadsden Co., Fla., but soon removed to Decatur county, Ga., near the village of Attapulugus, where both died, she on May 22, 1846, and he on Oct. 3, 1855, leaving surviving them two children, John H. and Mary L. Martin. Mary L. married Mr. R. T. Smith, of Dooly county, Ga., and died Nov. 14, 1881. John H. was educated in the academies at Attapulugus and Mineral Spring in Decatur county, and at Midway in Baldwin county, Ga., the last being conducted as a preparatory school for Oglethorpe university, and from attending which he acquired the name of "Ackie Martin," and by which he has ever been known and called by his classmates in college. He entered Oglethorpe university in 1858, where he stood at the head of his classes, as is evidenced by certificates given him by Dr. S. K. Talmage, Profs. R. C. Smith, C. W. Lane (the venerable Dr. Lane, now of Athens, Ga.), and the other professors under whom he studied until he left college, in May, 1861, to enter the war. He joined the Decatur guards, which left Bainbridge, Ga., on Aug. 13, 1861, and was mustered into the Confederate service at Lynchburg, Va., Aug. 31, 1861, as Company D, Seventeenth regiment of Georgia volunteers, Henry L. Benning, of Columbus, Ga., being colonel of the regiment. At that time Private Martin was elected as orderly sergeant of his company. On Jan. 20, 1863, he was elected first lieutenant, and on Aug. 15, 1863, he was unanimously elected as captain of his company, which position he held until the close of the war, refusing to run for any higher position. This company made a record second to none for gallantry in the campaigns of the army of northern Virginia, was with Longstreet at Chickamauga and through Tennessee back to Virginia. Capt. Martin was struck several times, and was seriously wounded three times in as many different battles. At the second battle of Manassas one of the bones of his left forearm was broken by a minie ball, which also gave him a slight wound in the right shoulder, he being in the act of firing at the time he was shot. At Chickamauga a minie ball broke his lower jawbone on both sides, and from the effects of which his under jaw became shortened and does not fit the upper. In this battle every member of his company was either killed or wounded. At the battle of the Wilderness he was severely wounded in the abdomen by a minie ball. He carried a rifle into the fights and fought with his men, and was with his company in all the fights in which it participated, except when disabled by wounds and during and just prior to the evacuation of Richmond. He was not with his company when Gen. Lee surrendered, being at that time on duty at Danville, Va., and commanded one of the companies that drove the Federal raiders from the railroad and guarded the removal of President Davis and cabinet from Danville to Greensboro, N. C. On April 14, 1865, upon his application for assignment to duty, he was under special order No. 86, issued by the secretary of war, ordered by John W. Riely, assistant adjutant-general, to "report to Maj.-Gen. A. R. Wright for duty in Georgia," and did so at Augusta. Remaining a few days in Augusta, he was ordered by Gen. Wright to report to Col. W. A. Barden at Albany, Ga., who was collecting troops to go west, but when he got to Albany, or near there, he found the Federals in possession of the town, Col. Barden had departed, and the cause was lost. These were the last official orders received by him, and have been preserved. Capt. Martin returned to Decatur county, his worldly possessions consisting of a horse that he had traded for in South Carolina, giving four horses and a wagon that he got from a recruiting camp for Confederate horses for this one horse, enough cloth for one suit obtained from the quartermaster's office in Greensboro, a lot of Confederate money and one pistol. His property, consisting of negroes and Confederate bonds, was swept away by the result of the war. He taught school in Decatur county in the fall of 1865, and made money enough to land him in Texas on April 1, 1866, where he remained teaching and engaged as a cowboy until the last of July, 1869, when he returned to Georgia, and on Aug. 12, 1869, married Miss S. E. Winn, of Liberty county, Ga., to whom he had been engaged for a number of years. He then taught school in Quincy, Fla., one year, and on Sept. 1, 1870, moved to Hawkinsville, Pulaski Co., Ga., and taught school for two years, and while teaching he studied law under Judge C. C. Kibbee, with whom he afterward formed a co-partnership, and which continued until Kibbee was elected judge of the circuit court. He was admitted to the bar in 1872, practiced by himself for a time, then was formed the firm of Martin & Jordan, then Kibbee & Martin, then Martin & Cochran, then Martin & Smith, which continued until his partner, C. C. Smith, was elected judge, then Martin & Mack, then by himself, except in Dooly county, where Judge U. V. Whipple is associated with him under the name of Martin & Whipple. While he has refused to seek any political office, he has been a most active and persistent worker for the democratic party, having been selected as the president of the Central Democratic club of his county in the several campaigns. He never held any public office, except mayor of Hawkinsville four terms, and was president of the public school board of his county. As a lawyer he ranks with the best in his profession, has a large and lucrative practice, and has written a little brochure on ejectment pleadings, which has been most favorably received by the bench and bar of the state, as an accurate, full and complete treatise on the subject. His first wife died on Dec. 31, 1881, by whom he had four children, all dead except one daughter, Eloise Winifred. On Jan. 31, 1883, he married Miss Amittie S. Curry, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin A. Curry, of Decatur county. Capt. Martin and his wife are both Presbyterians, in which church he has been an elder for a number of years.

GEORGE D. MASHBURN, proprietor of the largest general store in Hawkinsville, and a leading citizen of that thrifty wire-grass city, has attained signal business success, although he is still a young man, and had to be the architect of his own fortune. He is a native Georgian, the son of James W. Mashburn and Nancy R. Reid. The former was born in Washington county, Ga., in 1823. In early manhood he settled in Dooly county, where, though without capital of any kind but health and strength and a will to succeed, he began farming operations which eventually made him independent. In middle life he heeded a call to the ministry of the Baptist church, and for many years was a leading divine in that denomination. He also served a period of years covering the late war as county ordinary for Wilcox county. He was a man of large heart and generous impulses and died Nov. 3, 1892, mourned by a large circle of friends. Nancy R. Wilcox, whom he married in Irwin county in 1854, was the daughter of George R. Reid, and the widow of John Wilcox. She was born in Irwin county, and died April;

1895. Her children are as follows: Mrs. Mary C. Fitzgerald, Drury T., Mrs. Martha R. Hanly, Henry, and Mrs. Anna N. Oliver, of Wilcox county, and George D., John F. and David T., of Hawkinsville. George D. Mashburn was born April 11, 1857, in Irwin county, Ga. His education was limited to academic work, and at eighteen he began his business career as a clerk in the mercantile establishment of R. V. Bowen in House Creek. After three years he changed his occupation to that of a teacher, which he pursued successfully until 1880, when he embarked in the mercantile business in the town of Wolf Creek, in company with R. V. Bowen. Mr. Bowen retired soon, however, and Mr. Mashburn, continuing business until 1885, removed to Hawkinsville, and in company with H. W. Bozeman established the firm of Bozeman & Mashburn. The style of this firm changed in the latter part of the same year, Mr. Bozeman's interests being purchased by John F. Mashburn, a brother of George D., the firm being known as George D. Mashburn & Bro. The purchase of his brother's interest by John P. Doster in 1891 put George D., as manager of the new firm, since which time he has conducted the business in that capacity. The nuptials of Mr. Mashburn were celebrated in 1881, when he wedded Miss Bettie Doster, of Wilcox county. Three children brighten their home: Christina, Eugene and Lois. Mr. Mashburn has been rather too much of a business man to take great interest in politics. The sterling quality of his citizenship, however, and his practical grasp of public questions led the citizens of Wilcox county to insist on his serving them in the state legislature, which he did in 1880, much to his credit and their satisfaction. The tenets of the Baptist faith suit him religiously, and he, of course, votes the democratic ticket.

ASA C. PIPKIN. The gentleman here mentioned is an enterprising business man of Hawkinsville, and justice of the peace for that bailiwick. He has his father's name, and that gentleman was the son of Isaac Pipkin, a North Carolinian by birth. He settled in Laurens county when it was a wilderness, and became one of the prosperous planters and merchants of that community. Five children constituted his family: Kinchen, Isaac, Asa, Nancy and Florinda. Mr. Pipkin's father, Asa, was born on Rocky creek in 1800. Being orphaned at twelve years, he was bound out to a family by the name of Huff. Cruel treatment caused him to run away from them, and coming to Pulaski county he secured employment on a mail route from Hartford, Pulaski Co., to Jacksonville, Telfair Co., Ga. He prospered and became a planter in Pulaski county, and was a man of excellent influence. He was a democrat, politically, and is said to have been one of the founders of the Baptist church at Hawkinsville. His death occurred in 1856. His wife, Margaret Smith, a native of Hartford, was the mother of ten children, and died in February of 1868. Alexander, the eldest son, lieutenant Company G, Eighth Georgia regiment, died in Richmond during the war; William J. died in an epidemic of measles in 1856, together with four others; Franklin, deceased; Mrs. Margaret Smith, and Asa Cornelius. The last-named was born Dec. 13, 1840, in Houston county, Ga. He was reared in Hawkinsville. In March, 1862, his country found in him a willing defender, Company K, of the Forty-ninth Georgia, enlisting him as a private soldier. He did his duty nobly at second Manassas, Seven Pines, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Wilderness, Harper's Ferry, Gettysburg and Spottsylvania. Three times he was wounded, but not more serious than a broken arm. In March of 1865 he was captured and spent the next three months at Point Lookout prison. Returning home in July, the problem that faced him was the maintenance of a mother and sister, and nothing to start on. He tried farming, but was not successful, and in 1872 he started a small fruit stand on the sidewalk. He made some headway and three years later moved inside. Fortune still smiled, though his progress was slow.

In 1884 he had the misfortune to be burned out; no insurance. This necessitated a new start. In three years he was again doing well. Fire again destroyed his stock in 1892, but he is still doing business, and a large one. Besides conducting his store he cultivated a plantation. The foregoing evidences the pluck of A. C. Pipkin. Some men never give up. Put them on a desert island and it immediately begins to blossom. Mr. Pipkin is a stanch democrat, and a working member of the church his father founded. He has been justice of the peace for the past twenty years, and as a business man and gentleman none stand higher. He entered the matrimonial state in Houston county, Jan. 12, 1869, Eliza A., daughter of John Poole, becoming his wife. They have but one child living, Mrs. L. N. Anderson of Hawkinsville.

JUDGE A. C. PATE, an able and experienced jurist of Hawkinsville, and for thirteen years succeeding the establishment of Oconee circuit in 1872, its distinguished head is a native of Washington county, Ga., born near Sandersville, April 11, 1836. He is the son of Redding Pate and his mother was Elizabeth Miller. Both of their grandfathers were from North Carolina and soldiers in the continental army during the war of 1776 to 1781. Until eighteen years of age Judge Pate remained in Washington county, acquiring an academic education in the high school of Sandersville. He then went to Dooly county, where he sold goods for his brother a year, and then took up the study of the profession which he has so honored. He was admitted in 1857, before Judge Robert Hardeman of the Ocmulgee circuit, and began practice, which he continued uninterruptedly until the war. During this event he served his country as a member of a company of Georgia volunteer infantry, being under the leadership of Gen. Joe Johnston most of the time. In January of 1866 he came to Hawkinsville and opened an office, becoming associated later with Judge L. C. Ryan. On the establishment of Oconee circuit in 1872, Judge Pate's name was presented to Gov. Smith, and his standing in the profession occasioned such an array of supporters as to secure his appointment, though comparatively a young man. Four years later he was re-appointed, and in 1881 he was elected by the senate for the succeeding term of four years. After thirteen years of continuous service, Judge Pate declined to be a candidate for office, and has since devoted his attention to the practice in Hawkinsville. As a judge he was fearless and just, and prepared his opinions with such care and legal acumen as to secure the hearty endorsement of the entire bar. But very few of his decisions were reversed by the supreme court of the state. Judge Pate was married to Miss Martha J. Williamson, a daughter of Thully Williamson of Pulaski county. She died March 9, 1887, the mother of two children: Mrs. Dr. N. P. Jelks, and Mrs. F. S. Lewis, both of Hawkinsville.

A DOLPHUS W. PEURIFOY, M. D. This gentleman is one of Pulaski's excellent corps of physicians. He was born March 12, 1830, in Henry county, Ga. His medical education was secured at the university of Pennsylvania, and in 1852 he began the practice of medicine in Bibb county. After four years' practice there he removed to Crawford county, and in 1861, located at Perry Houston Co., Ga. He spent a year in the army as surgeon of the Eleventh Georgia, but on request of Gov. Brown, who had been petitioned by his patrons he returned to his practice. For fifteen years Dr. Peurifoy enjoyed a large and remunerative practice in Perry. In 1874 he came to Pulaski county, and has since built up a fine practice. The doctor's marriage was solemnized in Crawford county in 1854, his wife having been Mrs. Boone. Only one child, Ida, was born to the marriage, who resides with her parents. Dr. Peurifoy is a lover of home, and is never happier than when about his own fireside. He votes the democratic ticket, is a master Mason and a member of the Baptist church. Dr. Peurifoy is the son of Caswell, a native of Jasper county, Ga. He was a planter in that county, and in the later years of his life entered the Baptist ministry. He married Caroline Underwood of Putnam county, and reared four children, viz.: Mrs. Banks of Monroe county; John, Pike county; Mrs. Sarah Peters of Alabama, and Adolphus W. The father of this family died in 1872, at the age of seventy-five years, and the mother in 1891, at eighty-eight years of age.

ALEXANDER RAGAN. A volume which purports to mention the early families of Pulaski county must of necessity give space to the name which appears above, as those holding it have been prominent in the annals of the county since the days of "Old Hickory" Jackson. Robert A. Ragan was born in North Carolina in 1798, and there remained until 1835, when he came to Houston county, Ga. After a year's residence there he settled in Pulaski, where he married and reared his family. His wife was Mary Evans, a Scotch lady, who bore him a number of children, the following of whom are living: Alexander; Robert A.; Mrs. Mary Razor; Julia, Mrs. J. M. Lancaster; Jane, Mrs. W. M. Anderson; all living in Pulaski county. The father died in 1853, but the mother survived until 1893, furnishing, possibly, the best authenticated case of extreme longevity that was ever known in the county. She was born Jan. 1, 1792, and she lived to the extremely advanced age of one hundred and one years, two months and four days. Both parents were communicants of the Methodist church. Alexander Ragan was born in Robinson county, N. C., March 6, 1827, and was but eight years old when the family removed to Georgia. His education was limited to the country schools. The consort of his young manhood was Sophia, daughter of H. L. Davis of Pulaski county, prominent as a judge of the inferior court and a justice in the early days of the county. By this marriage there resulted ten children, eight of whom are living, as follows: T. B.; D. L.; Alexander, Jr.; L. H.; W. P.; N. R.; Elizabeth, who is Mrs. Lowry; and Eudora, who is Mrs. C. C. Atkinson. The wife died in 1890 and Mr. Ragan subsequently married Miss Frances E. Dunn, daughter of Martha Dunn of Dodge county. One son has been born to them, John James. Mr. Ragan is a democrat, and has been for thirty-five years a deacon in the Baptist church.

THOMAS BARTOW RAGAN was born Nov. 28, 1862, in Pulaski county, Ga., and is the son of Alexander Ragan. He was reared on the farm and in consequence thereof his opportunities for acquiring a book knowledge were very limited, but being of an inquiring turn of mind and possessed of a most tenacious memory, he succeeded largely in educating himself. At eighteen years of age he began clerking for J. F. Lewis & Co. of Hawkinsville. His success and usefulness in that capacity is indicated by his continuous service for the same firm for a period of five years. With the result of the savings of the preceding five years, added to some little borrowed capital, he united with a brother and they embarked in the mercantile business, under the name of R. T. Ragan & Co. In 1889, the senior member of the firm died, and Mr. T. B. Ragan purchased his interest in the business. As at the beginning of his career as a merchant, he continued the business with the greatest success. Oct. 9, 1889, he married Miss Bell, daughter of L. D. and Julia A. Wimberly of Jones county, Ga. Two children came to bless their union: Elsie and Mattie Grace. Mr. Ragan is a member of the Hawkinsville council, a democrat in politics and a Baptist in faith. Mr. Ragan having been reared on a farm has always had much love for the farm and for stock-raising, and from his accumulations he has bought and now owns several good plantations in Pulaski and adjoining counties.

LAWRENCE C. RYAN, the honored and efficient judge of the county court of Pulaski, is a native of that old historic town of Milledgeville, Ga. He comes of sturdy Irish stock, his paternal grandfather being a descendant of one of two brothers who emigrated from Ireland in early colonial days. He was a native of Baltimore, Md., and settled in Warren county, Ga. He located subsequently at Milledgeville, where he became a figure of some note in the early history of Georgia. By profession a lawyer, he was also editor and publisher of the "Georgia Argus," the first number of which appeared in 1810. His son, Chas. E., married Mary A., daughter of Samuel Buffington of Milledgeville, at whose board sat many an illustrious son of Georgia. The fruit of this union was three children, one of whom died in infancy. Mary O., is Mrs. J. B. Mitchell of Hawkinsville, and Lawrence C. is the subject of this mention. The father served the government in the postal department for many years, and as a Mason and member of the Episcopal church was much respected. Judge L. C. Ryan was born Sept. 13, 1845. He began his business life quite early at Madison, Ga., in a drug store, and from which town he came to Hawkinsville in 1860. Though but a mere boy in age and especially in stature, when the war broke out he enlisted in the service, joining the Thirty-first Georgia Volunteer infantry under Capt. Warren D. Wood. The fact that he was a youth of very slight build caused him to be dubbed "Little Georgia," a title which followed him clear through the war. The hardships of camp life proved too much for him, however, and after a severe illness at Lynchburg, Va., he returned to Hawkinsville. His recovery being complete, he again took the field, this time in the Twenty-second battery of Georgia artillery, where he served to the close of the war. Returning to Hawkinsville, he assisted Prof. J. L. Warren in teaching school, at the same time studying the higher branches and reading law. The spring of 1867 witnessed his admission to the bar of Pulaski county, in which year he formed a partnership with Judge A. C. Pate. This partnership was dissolved in 1884 on the election of Mr. Ryan to the present judgeship. Judge Ryan has conducted the affairs of this office to the entire satisfaction of the members of the bar and the public in general, and is regarded by all as a most efficient and conscientious official. Miss Eleanora Bozeman, daughter of C. M. Bozeman of Pulaski county, became the judge's wife in 1868, and to the marriage five children have been born: Frank B., Mary E., Anna W., Chas. B., and Lawrence C., Jr. Judge Ryan is a respected member of the Methodist church and is of course a democrat. Besides the duties of his office, he is interested in fruit-growing, having a large fruit farm in pears, peaches and grapes, which yield him a good return for the capital invested.

ANTON SCHNEIDER, a respected citizen of Hawkinsville, is a native of Prussia, and was born Oct. 1, 1825. In youth he was apprenticed to a cabinet-maker and four years were consumed in learning the trade. At that date, in that country it was necessary that a mechanic should travel throughout the various provinces before he became a master mechanic. Therefore at the conclusion of his time of service, Mr. Schneider traveled through Germany. When war broke out in Baden he joined the forces of the revolutionists known by the name of the forty-niners. After the defeat of his party, they were exiled from Germany. Mr. Schneider was given passage from Banma in Switzerland by way of Havre de Grace to New York on the ship "Statesman," which landed in New York, July 13, 1850, a stranger in a strange land and without a dollar. Through the assistance of the editor of a German periodical of that city, he and his companions obtained a gift from German citizens of a small amount and soon found lodgings. His worldly possessions at that time were contained in a small box which was carried under his arm. Being a skillful mechanic he soon secured employment and remained in New York for eight years. In the spring of 1858 he journeyed southward, and obtaining employment at Savannah, Ga., he located there. During the epidemic of yellow fever which followed, he moved to Macon, Ga., and afterward located at Hawkinsville, Ga. This was in the summer of 1860. Here he formed a partnership with Mr. Albert Starowski, which continued until 1883, when the latter met a violent accidental death. Much sorrow was felt at the death of his partner, unusual affection having existed between the two. In 1861 Mr. Schneider enlisted in Capt. O. C. Home's company, Tenth regiment, Georgia volunteers, and went to the front to do battle for his adopted country. Here his skill as master mechanic was employed in the Williamsburg hospital and about the headquarters of the officers. He was among the bravest at the battle of Seven Pines and at Second Manassas. He was taken prisoner at South Mountain and confined in Fort Delaware. After three weeks' close confinement he was paroled for three months. He then went to Richmond, where he did good service as a pattern-maker in the Confederate gun shops. Here he remained until the close of the war and the advent of the Federal troops found him an interested spectator. From Richmond he returned to Savannah on board the steamer "Clyde," which also contained the family of the Confederate President Davis, who were returning south from Fortress Monroe. He then came back to his adopted home at Hawkinsville and resumed business as cabinet-maker and dealer in furniture. In 1875 he became interested in grape culture, and with his partner, Starowski, established the Pine Level vineyard near Hawkinsville, employed a skillful wine-maker, sent to Europe for a cooper to prepare the necessary vessels and built up an industry of large proportions. Mr. Schneider was married on Sept. 16, 1885, to Miss Matilda Markert, an American lady of German descent. From this union, which proved to be a happy one, but one child, Miss Minnie May, is now living. Mr. Schneider has been successful in all his undertakings and is today worth about $50,000, all of which, as well as his enviable reputation, he has gained by industry, honesty and fair dealing. He is a liberal democrat and votes in accordance with the dictates of his own reason.

AUGUSTUS A. SMITH, M. D., an eminent physician of Hawkinsville, was born July 15, 1847, in Telfair county, Ga., and was there reared. He acquired a common school education and attended Savannah Medical college, receiving his diploma in 1875. He came to Hawkinsville, Ga., and at once commenced a large and lucrative practice. He married Miss Elizabeth Hodge, sister of M. T. Hodge (sketch of whom appears elsewhere), Nov. 25, 1879, at Henderson, Ga. Their family consists of eight daughters. Dr. Smith has filled the chair of president and vice-president of the Georgia Medical association, occupying the former in 1892-3. Although he has interests in many enterprises he devotes his personal attention to his profession. He is a member of the Baptist church and a democrat, but aspires to no political prominence. He was appointed by Gov. Atkinson a member of the state board of medical examiners, and at the organization of the board, at Atlanta, in January, 1895, was chosen chairman, which position he now holds.

EMMONS C. SMITH, fancy stockman and breeder, Hawkinsville, Ga., is one of the best known men in his line of business in the wire-grass region. His splendid and excellently situated stock farm is the resort for all lovers of fine animals, of which he owns a large number, well bred and well trained. Mr. Smith takes an active interest in the race track and has trained a number of the horses now making fine records on the eastern tracks. Mr. Smith comes honestly by his love of horses, having been reared in old Kentucky state, where he was born at Newcastle, Henry Co., Feb. 4, 1861, the son of Samuel and Maud (Emmons) Smith. His education was obtained in the common schools of the day and at the Lexington business college, where he graduated in 1880. Mr. Smith favors the democratic party in politics, and affiliates with the masonic fraternity, Eminence lodge, Eminence, Ky. The marriage of Mr. Smith occurred in Talmouth, Ky., where he wedded Miss Mamie Monroe, who is the mother of three bright boys: Harry Samuel, Emmons Carlisle, Jr., and Herbert Monroe.

JAMES LUCAS WALKER. The gentleman here mentioned is one of Pulaski's most experienced and extensive planters, and a gentleman of prominence in the public and social life of the county. He was born July 18, 1838, in Pulaski county, and at nineteen began his life as a planter. In 1861 he entered the army as a private of Company E of Phillips' legion, and was in all the leading battles fought by this celebrated detachment of the army. And though he had numerous close calls from Yankee bullets, which pierced his clothing in many instances, he returned unhurt. Dec. 13, 1873, Emma P. Lamkin became his wife. But one of the two children born to her lived to maturity, a daughter, Nellie, upon whom has been lavished the most devoted attention, and who is a most refined and educated young lady. Mr. Walker is one of the most prosperous planters of his section. He devotes much attention to the raising of fine stock and has been successful to a marked degree. He is a democrat, but courts no political distinction. The fact that Mrs. Walker is a member of a very old and honorable family of Georgia will excuse the mention of them in this sketch. The original family name is peculiar in construction, being of Welsh origin. Lewis Abb Lewis Lamkin was directly descended from the original Welsh emigrants, and was born in Westmoreland county, Va., within a few miles of the birthplace of Gen. George Washington, in 1751. His sons were Samuel, Lewis Abb Lewis, the founder of the Lamkin family in Texas; William, who died without issue, and John Lewis Lamkin. The father of these children passed his life in Nash county, N. C., and was a most distinguished citizen. John Lewis Lamkin was born in Nash county, N. C., Jan. 15, 1784. He married Penelope Cain, a native of the same county, and they became the parents of Emily, who married J. L. Wyche; Eliza, died in youth; James Lewis, Elmira and Charity. In 1817 the family removed to Georgia, where they settled in Telfair county. In 1857 they came to Pulaski. James Lewis Lamkin was born in Nash county, N. C., Dec. 8, 1817. He married Sarah Dillard, a daughter of Nicholas P., an early settler of Twiggs county, and bore him three children: Mrs. J. L. Walker, Mrs. O. A. Horne and Mrs. Dr. N. P. Jelks, the latter deceased. The father of these children was a man of very decided literary merit, and was a citizen of unusual usefulness and prominence in Pulaski county during his lifetime. He died in 1887 and his wife in 1890.

PUTNAM COUNTY.

ADAMS. This family is one of the most prominent and influential in Putnam county, and so intimately connected with its moral and social advancement that no history of the county would be complete which omitted to make mention of it. Honor and uprightness of character and purpose are the foundation on which its influence has been established, and by which its strong individuality has been impressed on its conspicuously intelligent population. In all the elements of exalted citizenship Putnam county takes a front position among her sister counties, and this is due to the precept and example of families like this. Unambitious of prominent political position, though sometimes reluctantly complying with urgent public demand, the Adamses have been content to exert their influence through irreproachable private life, and being useful in the personal cultivation and inculcation of Christian principles. Tradition connects the family with the two presidents, though this Putnam branch does not positively claim such connection. The first reliable knowledge of the family ancestry begins with John Adams, of Tar River, N. C., who migrated thence to Greene county, Ga., soon after the revolutionary war, where he married and raised three sons. Two of these, Robert and John, raised families in Greene county, while the third, William E., is the immediate progenitor of those in Putnam county. He was born in North Carolina in 1786, and at the age of twenty years married Mrs. Mary A. (nee Rosser) Harris. In 1808 they bought 200 acres of land on Oconee river, in the eastern part of Putnam county. There they raised the following family, all of whom are dead excepting Benson W. Adams, of Eatonton: Rebecca, wife of A. D. Gatewood, died at eighty-three years of age; John F. and David R., died at sixty-seven; Mary A., wife of James A. Wilson, died when thirty years of age; Martha W., wife of Dr. Green Johnson, died when sixty-nine years of age; William, died at twenty; James Monroe, died at twenty-eight; Thomas J., died at eight; Benjamin F., died at sixty-seven; Andrew J., died at three; Benson W., living, Eatonton, Ga., and Asbury A., who died at the age of sixty-two years. Of the father of this family it can be said that while he did not become wealthy nor distinguished in public life, he, beginning life in a dirt floor log cabin, raised and educated a large family, settled them about him as they reached maturity, and meanwhile increased his plantation to 1,400 acres. He was very well educated for the times, and at different periods of his life taught school. He was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain—carrying a wound in the hand he received while in the service, and for one term represented the county in the general assembly. In his home life he was a rigid disciplinarian and was a faithful and consistent member of the Methodist church, of which he was a local preacher. Benson W. Adams, only survivor of the family of William E. and Mary A. (Rosser) Adams, was born in Putnam county, April 27, 1825, and was first married in 1849 to Miss Ann, daughter of John Hudson, who bore him two children: John W., clerk of Putnam county superior court, and Ellis H., physician, Newborn, Newton Co., Ga. Their mother died in September, 1855. His second marriage was to Mrs. L. E. (nee Marshall) Leiter—still living—daughter of Rev. Jabez P. Marshall, also a prominent Baptist minister, and granddaughter of Rev. Daniel Marshall, also a Baptist minister, and said to have been the founder of the first Baptist church in Georgia. Four children blessed this marriage: Leonora, widow of Dr. Arthur Dean, Atlanta; Florence A., wife of Col. James A. Noyes, Atlanta; Eugene F., superintendent R. & D. R. R. shops, Atlanta, and Angelyn T., superintendent of Boulevard public school, Atlanta, was married June 27, 1895, to Rev. A. A. Marshall, of Atlanta. In March, 1862, when his oppressed south-land called her sons to her rescue, he enlisted in the Forty-second Georgia regiment and served in the western army to the close of the war, most of the time as quartermaster. He was with Pemberton at the never-to-be-forgotten siege of Vicksburg, after which he came east, and when Gen. Johnston surrendered he was at Washington, Ga., where by virtue of his office he had charge of affairs when the specie train and the late president of the Confederacy arrived. His management during those perilous and trying times received the unqualified commendation of his superiors. He is in every respect a worthy representative of the family whose honored name he bears, and is highly esteemed by a large circle of friends.

IRBY HUDSON ADAMS, insurance agent and planter, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of David Rosser and Eliza (Hudson) Adams, was born in Eatonton, March 31, 1843. His father, son of William Ellis and Mary A. (Rosser) Adams, was born in Putnam county in 1810, and passed most of his life in Eatonton as a planter and banker. He was a pupil, about 1823, of Hon. William H. Seward, who was afterward secretary of state under President Lincoln, when he was principal of Phoenix academy, Putnam county. He was elected a delegate to the secession convention of 1860-61 and voted with Stephens and Johnson against immediate secession, but when the ordinance of secession was passed he heartily supported the Confederate government. Being a director in a bank which was a state depository he was exempt from military service. After the war he was elected a delegate to the convention of 1866 to restore the state to the union. About 1833 he was married to Miss Eliza Hudson, daughter of Hon. Irby Hudson, a most prominent citizen of Putnam county, for eighteen years speaker of the Georgia house of representatives, for a brief sketch of whose life refer to the sketch of Hon. W. F. Jenkins. By this union ten children were born to him, of whom two are living. Those reared to maturity were John C., who graduated at Emory college and enlisted in the Putnam Light infantry, was wounded at McDowell, Va., and killed at the battle of Winchester, Va., in 1863; Irby Hudson, the subject of this sketch; Emma, deceased wife of John T. Dennis, Putnam county; William H. Capers, who died in Savannah in 1870; Jennie, wife of Edward B. Smith, Jasper county, and Anna, deceased wife of Tucker Calloway, now of Atlanta. The mother of these children died in 1853. Three years afterward he married her sister Sarah, widow of Robert Trippe, by whom he had seven children, four of them still living: D. R., Eatonton; George W., Eatonton; Carrie, wife of William G. Little, Putnam county; Laura, wife of J. R. Brannan, Jr., Atlanta. Mr. Adams died in 1876 in the sixty-seventh year of his age. He was a man of superior mental and moral worth, broad-minded and public-spirited; he had an excellent capacity for business, and was always foremost and ardent in every public movement calculated to benefit his county, his church or the state. He was a strong and exemplary member of the Methodist church. Bishop Pierce said his voice was as musical as that of an angel. Irby Hudson Adams has spent most of his lifetime in Eatonton, and had finished his preparatory studies and was just about ready to enter college when the war between the states occurred. May 1, 1862, he enlisted in the Putnam Light infantry, Company G, Twelfth Georgia regiment, which he joined near Staunton, Va. Eight days afterward he participated in the McDowell fight, one of the bloodiest little battles of the war. Of fifty-two of his company who went into battle twenty-eight were killed and wounded, and of the 580 in the regiment over one-half were killed and wounded, including eight captains. He was shortly after discharged on account of physical disability, but, impelled by irresistible patriotic impulses, he re-enlisted the following year, this time in the Twenty-seventh Georgia battalion, with which he gallantly remained until the close, and surrendered April 26, 1865, at Greensboro, N. C., under Gen. Joseph Johnston. On his last entrance into the service he was elected first lieutenant and when he surrendered was a captain. After he returned home he was appointed a clerk in the comptroller-general's office under Col. John T. Burns, at Milledgeville, a position he retained while the state was under military government, and until 1868, when the capital was removed to Atlanta. He then returned to Eatonton and entered into the banking business with his father, which he continued three years with success. Retiring from banking, he directed his energies and superior abilities to the life and fire insurance business with the splendid results which one would predict for one so popular, and so well capacitated every way to succeed. Energetic and enterprising, and always on the alert, he has established a large and valuable patronage. In addition to this he successfully conducts extensive planting interests. Capt. Adams was married in Eatonton in December, 1871, to Miss Florence Reid, of Eatonton, who bore him two children: Florence and David Rosser, both of whom are at home. Their mother died in 1881, and in 1884 he was married to Miss Julia Jordan, of Eatonton, a cousin of his first wife, who died in 1885, leaving a son, who also died in 1886. In 1887 he was married to Miss Eppie Elder, of Barnesville, Ga., who has borne him two children: Carrie Nell and Maude. In addition to his other honors Mr. Adams was captain of Company E, Second infantry, Georgia volunteers, for eighteen years, and now holds that position. Capt. Adams is a democrat, a master Mason and a Methodist, and in boyhood was an intimate companion of Joel Chandler Harris (Uncle Remus). On his paternal side he was related to the two presidents, John and John Quincy Adams, his ancestors moving from Massachusetts to North Carolina, and thence to Georgia; was also descended from the Ellises and Rossers, of North Carolina and Virginia. His grandfather, William Ellis Adams, was a captain in the revolutionary war, in which he was painfully wounded. He was a man of very marked mental and great moral worth. Capt. Adams' maternal ancestors were the Hudsons, of Dinwiddie county, Va.; the Featherstones, of Virginia, and the Flournoys, who were French Huguenots, who settled on the James river in Virginia, and subsequently came to Putnam county, where they were very prominent in the affairs of the county.

JOHN W. ADAMS, clerk superior court, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of Benson W. and Ann (Hudson) Adams, was born in Putnam county, May 31, 1850. He was raised on the plantation, where he remained until of age, and received a good common school education. He commenced his business life as a clerk for his uncle, B. F. Adams, a merchant of Eatonton, who was also clerk of the superior court. His uncle, after he had filled this office ten years, died, and, in 1880, the subject of this sketch was elected to succeed him. He has been elected three times since successively, though opposed by some of the best and strongest men in the county. Mr. Adams was married in Eatonton, Aug. 3, 1880, to Miss Ella C., daughter of Jefferson and Susan Adams. Her father was a prominent lawyer of Eatonton, and her mother a daughter of Hon. James A. Meriwether, one of Georgia's most distinguished citizens, of state and national reputation, having been elected repeatedly to the general assembly, presided as judge of Ocmulgee circuit superior court, and having been a congressman. Three children have blessed this union: Meriwether Flournoy, Julia Carlton and Ella Gertrude. His family connections by birth and marriage being of the most honorable and distinguished character, and himself being of the most genial nature, it is not strange he is almost invincible before the people. He is a staunch democrat, a master Mason—secretary of his lodge for years—and a member of the Presbyterian church.

THOMAS BUTLER COUPER, leading cotton factor, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of William A. and Hannah P. (King) Couper, was born on St. Simon's Island, Glynn Co., Ga., Nov. 4, 1858. His progenitors on both sides are among

Georgia's earliest settlers, and the most distinguished and highly connected families of Georgia. The following very interesting sketch of his paternal grandfather is copied from White's Historical Collections: "John Couper was born at Lochwinnoch, Renfrewshire, Scotland, on March 9, 1759, and was the third son of the Rev. John Couper, clergyman of that parish. His eldest brother was for more than a quarter of a century regius professor of astronomy in the university of Glasgow; and his second brother, Dr. William Couper, a distinguished surgeon of that city, was with Mr. Tennant, the inventor of chloride of lime, which as a bleaching material has exercised a most important effect on textile fabrics. Mr. Couper emigrated to Georgia at the early age of sixteen, and arrived in Savannah during the autumn of 1775, as a clerk in the house of Lundy & Co. On the breaking out of the revolutionary war he retired with his employers to Florida, where he remained until the peace of 1783, when he returned to Liberty county, Ga., where, in the year 1792, he married a daughter of Col. James Maxwell. The death of Mrs. Couper preceded his own only a short time, after a union of more than fifty years. The talents and integrity of Mr. Couper at once gave him a leading influence in society, and soon after his removal to Glynn county that influence was successfully exercised against the Yazoo fraud, of which he was an indignant opponent, and which, as one of the members of the legislature of 1796, he aided in defeating. In 1798 Mr. Couper represented Glynn county in the convention that framed the constitution of Georgia; and at the time of his death himself and his friend, Mr. Spalding, of Sapelo Island, were the only survivors of that body. Having embarked very extensively in the cultivation of Sea Island cotton, Mr. Couper at an early period withdrew himself from politics, and during the remainder of a long life devoted himself to the discharge of the duties of a private gentleman. In making this selection his talents and character were probably more valuable to the community than if he had adopted a career of more notoriety, but of less practical utility. Living in a style of refined and most liberal hospitality, generous and enlarged in all his views, his example exercised an elevating influence on all around him. For many years one of the largest proprietors in the state, his system of treatment of his slaves, which was in accordance with his humane and just feelings, produced a happy effect on those around him, and has continued to influence the condition of that class of persons throughout the seaboard. Mr. Couper possessed a conversational talent equaled by few; and having been endowed with a tenacious memory his reminiscences of the early history of Georgia are highly interesting. Mr. Couper died in March, 1850, having just completed his ninety-first year." In 1798 Mr. Couper bought large bodies of land—including St. Simon's Island—on the coast of Glynn county, living on the island until he died. Here he reared four children: James H., one of the largest planters on the coast, a profound scholar, and a cultured gentleman, one whose extensive and varied information was a marvel to all who came in contact with him; John, who died young; William A., father of the subject of this sketch, and Isabella. The father of our subject, William A. Couper, married Hannah P., eldest daughter of Hon. Thomas Butler King, himself one of Georgia's most distinguished citizens. He represented Georgia in congress in 1839-43, and again in 1845-49; and during a part of the time two other brothers—Andrew and Henry—were in congress with him as representatives of other states. Afterward, during the administration of President Taylor and Fillmore—1851-52-53—Mr. King was collector of the port of San Francisco, Cal. The other children of Mr. King were Thomas B., Jr., the eldest; Mallory, a distinguished officer in the late war; John Floyd, member of congress from Louisiana just after the war; Henry L., killed in Virginia during the war, and Capt. Richard C., now in Macon, Ga.; Mrs. James Wilder; Mrs. (Gen.) Henry R. Jackson, and

Mrs. John Nisbet, Savannah. Mrs. King's grandfather, Page, was an officer in the British army before the revolutionary war, lived in South Carolina during that conflict, and was the subject of much abuse. Her father, William Page, was a major in a South Carolina legion. Mr. Couper's parents reared the following children: William P., Washington, D. C., in charge of a department in the patent office; Butler K., cotton factor, Marietta, Ga.; John A., civil engineer Marietta & North Georgia railway, Marietta; Anna R., Mrs. Charles M. Marshall, Rome, Ga.; Rosalie, Mrs. Echarte Van Walder, Atlanta; and Thomas B., the subject of this sketch. Mr. Couper's boyhood and youth covered the war period, so that he received but a limited education, in Savannah. When sixteen years of age he accepted a clerkship in a furniture house in Rome, Ga., whence, after a year, he went to Savannah, where he engaged in the cotton business. In 1884 he moved to Eatonton, where he has since been engaged in cotton factorage business under the firm-name of T. B. Couper & Co., whose transactions are direct with the mills and with Europe. Popular, pushing and persistent, he is enjoying great business prosperity. Mr. Couper was married Feb. 3, 1887, to the only daughter of Dr. R. H. Nisbet. He is a democrat, a master Mason, and a member of the Protestant Episcopal church.

"ALF" DAVIS, druggist, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of W. C. and Elizabeth (Mason) Davis, was born in Eatonton, Dec. 14, 1834. His grandfather came from North Carolina to Georgia the latter part of the last century and settled in what is now Jackson county. He was related to ex-President Jefferson Davis, being descended from one, and the ex-president from another of four brothers, who came from England to America. His grandfather was a planter and lived in Jackson county until he died. He was of a vigorous constitution, raised two families of children, and lived to quite an advanced age. Mr. Davis' father was born in Jackson county in 1812. He was married in Eatonton in 1833, and came to Putnam county in 1840. He was a planter; but in 1850 he moved from the plantation to Eatonton and engaged in merchandising. Although of delicate frame and health, he was a man of untiring energy, enterprising and thrifty. In manners he was extremely retiring and modest, yet very popular. He was clerk of the superior court many years, and was treasurer of the county at the time of his death, which occurred in July, 1872. His widow died in 1879. They raised a family of seven children: "Alf," the subject of this sketch; Mary, deceased; John W., planter, Putnam county; James T., deceased, 1883; Edward S., enlisted in the war as sergeant of Putnam Light Infantry company, and was killed in battle at McDowell, Va., May 8, 1862; Clark M., merchant, Eatonton, Ga., and treasurer of the county; and Carrie D., wife of B. R. Paschal, planter, Putnam county. His maternal grandfather, John C. Mason, settled in the county the year succeeding its organization, in 1808. He was of Welsh descent, a planter, became quite wealthy, as well as prominent in county affairs, and died in 1846 at an advanced age. Mr. Davis was raised and educated in Eatonton; but at the age of twenty went to Tyler, Tex., where he engaged in merchandising, in which he prospered and continued until 1861, when he enlisted in Goode's battery. He was elected junior first lieutenant and remained with it twelve months in Arkansas and Mississippi, participating in the Elk Horn Tavern fight, and all the battles around Corinth, Miss. Just before the battle of Shiloh his twelve months expired and he returned to his old Eatonton home. In a short time he enlisted in Nelson's Rangers, a cavalry company, with which he served in the Kentucky and then in the Mississippi campaigns, as escort for Gen. Stephen D. Lee, whence the command was ordered to Georgia to reinforce Gen. Johnson.

Becoming tired of body-guard service he obtained a transfer to the First Texas legion, was appointed sergeant-major, and became a part of Ross' Texas brigade of cavalry, in which he served the entire Atlanta campaign. After the fall of Atlanta the command went with Gen. Hood to Kentucky. Mr. Davis, however, was taken sick at Florence, Ala., where he remained until Gen. Hood's return, when he went to Mississippi and remained until the surrender. Returning to Texas he re-established himself in business, and continued in it until 1885, when he sold out, came back to Georgia the year following, and went into general merchandising in Eatonton. In 1889 he bought out a drug store and has been successfully engaged in that business since. He has a beautiful home in Eatonton, and an intelligent and cultured family of the highest social standing. Genial and affable, he is very popular and does a good business. Mr. Davis was married Aug. 30, 1866, in Tyler, Tex., to Mrs. Julia H. (nee Harwick) Baxter, who has borne him five children: Fred J., railway manager, Temple, Tex.; Lallie F., at home; William H., Savannah, Ga.; George E., agent for Wanamaker & Brown, Eatonton; and Effie E., at home. He is a democrat, a member of the I. O. O. F., of several insurance fraternities, and of the Protestant Episcopal church.

J. T. de JARNETTE, planter, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of Reuben R. and Mary (Bass) de Jarnette, was born in Putnam county, Aug. 6, 1835. The family is of Huguenot ancestry, and on coming to America settled in the neighborhood of Danville, Va., where members of it are now prominent in the community. Reuben de Jarnette, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, saw service in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, afterward became a government surveyor, and near the close of the last century came to Georgia and settled in Hancock county. He was appointed by the governor to survey Putnam county, a duty he performed to the entire satisfaction of the state officials. In the land-drawing on the formation of the county, he drew land in what is now the suburbs of Eatonton, where he lived many years, finally moving to the eastern part of the county, where he built the first brick building erected in that county. He lived there till he died, about 1830. He had been liberally educated, and was very refined in his manners. He married a Miss Reid soon after coming to Hancock county, by whom he had four children: Reuben R., and three daughters. Mr. de Jarnette's father was born in Putnam county in 1811. In 1832 he married Miss Mary Bass, one of a family of twelve children, all of whom lived to be married. The six sons were men of great force of character, very successful, and became wealthy planters. Six children were born to Mr. de Jarnette by this marriage: Louisa, who died at eighteen; J. T., the subject of this sketch; Reuben R., planter, Putnam county; Ella, deceased wife of J. D. Norris, Cartersville, Ga.; Nathan H., planter, Greene county, Ga.; Emma Nashville, widow of J. W. Thomas, formerly state treasurer of Tennessee. Mr. de Jarnette's father, true to his Huguenot blood, was of a sanguine and very excitable temperament, enthusiastic and public spirited. All the family were democrats and ardent Methodists. He was a leading member of the church, and a great power for good in the community—energetic, thrifty, and a generous liver. His wife died in 1868, and himself in 1883. Mr. de Jarnette has made Putnam his life-long home. After receiving his preparatory education he entered Emory college, Oxford, Ga., whence he was graduated as a second honor man in 1855. He immediately began the study of medicine under Dr. L. D. Rogers, of Eatonton; then attended lectures at the Medical college of Georgia, Augusta, whence he graduated in 1857. Locating in Eatonton, he practiced with profit and eminent success until the close of the war, when his largely increased planting interests compelled him to abandon the practice and devote his entire attention to them. In 1873 he moved to his plantation, on the Oconee river, about twelve miles east of Eatonton, and is living in the house in which his mother was born. The plantation contains about 1,700 acres, and is said to be one of the finest in the county. On it is a famous mineral spring, which at one time was a favorite resort. In 1860 he was selected unsolicited as a delegate from the state at large to the national democratic convention at Baltimore, but declined on account of the pressure of his private affairs. In 1876 he was elected to represent the Twenty-eighth senatorial district in the general assembly. On the expiration of his two years' term of service he was widely and numerously petitioned by his fellow-citizens to allow himself to be nominated to represent the county in the general assembly, but he peremptorily declined. When the Alliance was organized he enthusiastically entered into it, took an absorbing interest in it, became a potentially influential power in its councils, and was elected president of the county organization. As president he never allowed a motion of a political nature to be entertained, but insisted on holding its legislation to its original policy. He attained to such prominence that he was brought forward as a candidate for president of the state alliance, but finding that a majority of the members favored going into politics, he withdrew his name. He next devoted his thought and energies to the establishment of a co-operative store at Eatonton, under Alliance auspices. Notwithstanding it encountered bitter opposition, the enterprise, with the active, intelligent assistance of Dr. N. S. Walker, Mr. J. T. Dennis and a few others, has been phenomenally successful. Based on a paid-up capital of $20,000, it has done a spot-cash business of $125,000 a year. For three years past its success has been such that it has been necessary to declare dividends, it not being desirable to increase the capital. It occupies five large rooms, handles all kinds of merchandise, and employs eight or ten clerks. In financial standing no store in the state outranks it. Mr. de Jarnette is president of the board of directors. A very gratifying outgrowth of this remarkable success has been, first, the establishment of the Putnam County Banking company, the directors of which are the same as those of the Alliance store, with Mr. de Jarnette as president; and, second, the organization and establishment of the Middle Georgia bank, as a competitor. Thus, as a direct result of the success of this strictly farmers' enterprise, two sound, well-managed banking institutions are in successful operation, to the incalculable benefit of the people, where there was none before. This experience inculcates, practically, a very important lesson. Mr. de Jarnette was married in Eatonton in 1858 to Miss Mary McGee Trippe, a member of the old and prominent family of that name, who bore him two children: Henry R., planter, Putnam county; and Mary, wife of William L. Turner, manager of the Alliance store. Their mother died in 1861. Subsequently he married Miss Addie Reid, by whom he had two sons: Sidney, who was graduated from Emory college, with third honor, in June, 1894, and who now, in his twentieth year, is principal of the male academy, Covington, Ga.; and John B., now a student in the sophomore class at Emory college. In 1884 their mother died, and Mr. de Jarnette married Miss Mary Bass, of Glennville, Ala., who has borne him no children. Mr. de Jarnette is an uncompromising democrat, and a working, exemplary member of the Methodist church, of which he is a prominent official.

H. R. de JARNETTE, planter-capitalist, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of J. T. and Miss Mary McGee (Trippe) de Jarnette, was born in Putnam county, April 12, 1859. He received his academic education in Eatonton, and then attended Emory college, Oxford, Ga., graduating in 1879. He settled immediately afterward on a magnificent 2,000-acre plantation adjoining his father, deciding to make agriculture the chief pursuit of his life. Intelligent and progressive, and devoted to agricultural development, he has been eminently successful and prosperous. Himself and father were actively instrumental in establishing the Farmers' alliance in Putnam county, he having been county lecturer and organizer. When it entered the field of politics they quietly withdrew. He is the largest stockholder in the Alliance store, which carries a stock of $20,000; a stockholder in the Putnam County Banking company, his father being president of both, and also in the Cotton Compress company. He has been on the county board of school commissioners since 1887—an enthusiastic and progressive member. Through his enlightened and energetic activity the Putnam county school system has attained great efficiency and an enviable reputation. The upbuilding of the schools, and a general advancement in all lines of intelligent progress, is an object near his heart. He was a delegate in 1893 to the National Farmers' congress, which met in Savannah. Mr. de Jarnette was married in Putnam county Nov. 17, 1880, to Miss Louisa de Jarnette, daughter of W. F. Little, who, prior to his death, was one of the wealthiest farmers in the county. She was born and reared in the county, and was graduated in 1879 at Lucy Cobb institute, Athens, Ga., with first honors. Four children have blessed their home: William L., May, Margie, and Louise. Mr. de Jarnette is a democrat, and a member of the county executive committee. He is a leading and exemplary member and a steward of the Methodist church; is superintendent of the Sunday school, and has been a lay delegate to the annual conference. It is such men as Mr. de Jarnette that are needed in public life; and the time cannot be distant when the people of his county and section will call for his services, and advance him to honor and distinction.

E. B. EZELL, merchant, banker and planter, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of John H. and Emma (Powell) Ezell, was born in Jasper county, Ga., Oct. 31, 1850. Of Huguenot ancestry, the family on migrating to America originally settled in Virginia, whence they moved to South Carolina. From there Mr. Ezell's great-grandfather, a Mr. Ezell, moved to Georgia and settled in Burke county. He afterward moved to Jasper county, where he died. He was a planter, and his family were raised to be planters, and continued their residence in Jasper county—where Mr. Ezell's father now lives at the age of seventy-one years. The family was progressive and thrifty, and became wealthy. Politically they were whigs and opposed to secession. Mr. Ezell's grandfather Powell married in Hancock county; and Powelton in that county was named in his honor. His parents raised four children: E. B., the subject of this sketch; Robert, planter, Jasper county; William, merchant, Hillsboro, Ga.; Mattie, wife of S. F. Malone, merchant-planter, Hillsboro, Ga. Mr. Ezell's mother died in 1867—his father served during the unpleasantness in the western army. Mr. Ezell was reared in Jasper county and received an ordinary education; because, as his father enlisted in the army he had to superintend the plantation. After the war he went to school six months. When eighteen years old he began his business life by engaging as a clerk in Monticello, Jasper county. A year afterward—Jan. 3, 1870—he came to Eatonton, and clerked a year for J. A. Champion, for which he received $200. He next engaged with Leverett & Graybill at $600, and the following year with Mr. Leverett at $750 a year. Accepting the offer of a partnership he entered into business under the firm name of Leverett & Ezell. Withdrawing at the end of a year he, in 1874, with $500 capital, became a partner in the firm of Etheridge & Ezell. In 1876 he bought out his partner, and continued the business alone one year. He then sold an interest to B. W. Hunt, and organized the firm of E. B. Ezell & Co., which has been phenomenally successful and prosperous, and still exists. They carry a stock of about $18,000, and have done a business amounting to $120,000 per annum. He is a prominent stockholder in the compress company; and in February, 1890, he was made president of the Middle Georgia bank. Besides his mercantile and the above important interests, he owns and conducts a plantation running forty-five plows and producing annually 300 bales of cotton. In addition to managing these large and varied interests, he has served the public as chairman of the board of county commissioners thirteen years. The accomplishment of these grand results demonstrate business talent and capacity of no ordinary character. Business courage and enterprise, directed by sagacity and tempered with caution—all governed by unbending financial integrity, was a prerequisite combination to work out such a creditable and astonishing business—non-speculative—success. Mr. Ezell was married in Eatonton, June 5, 1870, to Miss Anna Belle Pruden—born in Connecticut—daughter of Sidney C. Pruden, who, for fifty-four years, consecutively was postmaster at Eatonton; a significant compliment to his efficiency and official integrity. Two children have blessed this union: Marie Belle and Percy Powell. Mr. Ezell is a member of the Presbyterian church, in which he is an elder.

R. W. HUTCHINSON, merchant, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of T. S. and Sarah E. (Stevens) Hutchinson, was born in Greene county, Ga., April 2, 1856. Of Scotch origin, the family when it came to America in colonial days, settled in Virginia. There Mr. Hutchinson's grandfather, Ambrose Hutchinson, was born and reared. When a young man he migrated to Georgia, settled in Greene county, where he married Miss Rachel Robbins, a South Carolina lady, and commenced the life of a planter. He was prosperous, became a large slave owner, acquired a large property and reared a large family of children, who are scattered over the states to the west—notably in Texas. Mr. Hutchinson's father was born and reared in Greene county, where he was married in 1853, and where himself and wife still live. Like his father before him, he also is a planter. Politically he is a staunch democrat—religiously an ardent Methodist. To them four children have been born: Lula M., wife of W. G. Armor, merchant, Greenerboro, Ga.; R. W., the subject of this sketch; Taliaferro, planter, Greene county; and T. A., merchant, Monticello, Co. Mr. Hutchinson was given a fairly good education. Finding mercantile life—from a very brief experience—congenial to his taste, he determined to make a life pursuit of it. As a preparatory step he wisely determined to take a course at Moore's Business university, at Atlanta; finishing which he came to Eatonton and engaged as a clerk in the dry goods house of W. R. Respass. In 1878 he bought a half interest in the business which was conducted under the firm name of Hutchinson & Respass until the fall of 1880, when he sold out to his partner. The following year, with quite limited means, but plenty of pluck and energy, he began business on his own account. By strict economy, untiring industry, a determination to win popular favor and succeed, he has achieved a splendid success. He has now invested about $25,000—his stock consisting exclusively of dry goods and boots and shoes. Besides, he holds considerable choice city property, and owns a beautiful home. This has all been accomplished with small capital and in face of hot competition. His wide-awake business practice is shown by his going to New York twice a year to look through the market instead of buying by sample. Mr. Hutchinson was married in Eatonton, Oct. 20, 1878, to Miss Georgia Flournoy, youngest daughter of David and Amerillus Rosser, of an old and prominent family of the county, by whom he has had five children: Rolin W., Jr., Mamie E., Robert F., Georgia F., and Emma L. Mr. Hutchinson is a democrat, and a member of the Methodist church.

WILLIAM F. JENKINS, judge of Ocmulgee circuit, Georgia superior court, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of Robert C. and Caroline (Hudson) Jenkins, was born in Sumter county, Ga., March 26, 1845. His paternal grandfather, Robert Jenkins, came from North Carolina to Georgia when a young man, and was one among the early settlers of Putnam county. He married a Miss Sanders, and settled as a planter on Cedar creek, leaving, when he died, quite a large estate. He raised three sons and two daughters: One daughter married a William T. Young, and the other married a John Jackson—and both are now deceased. Of the sons, Augustus lived and died a bachelor, wealthy; Franklin S. lived and died in Putnam county, leaving two sons and a daughter. The father and sons were all planters. Judge Jenkins' father was born and raised and married in Putnam county. Soon after his marriage he moved to Sumter county, where he lived seventeen years and then returned to Putnam county. A pronounced whig, he took much interest in politics, and represented Sumter county one term in the general assembly. On his return to Putnam county he made his home in Eatonton, visiting his plantation as occasion required. He was bitterly opposed to secession, using his utmost influence against it; but when the ordinance was adopted he was as earnest in support of the lost cause, and sent four sons to do battle for it. He died in Eatonton—a long-time devoted Methodist—in 1890, at the age of seventy-one years. Judge Jenkins' maternal grandfather, Irby Hudson, was a native of Dinwiddie county, Va., where he married a Miss Frances Flournoy—a union of two families then and now prominent in Virginia politics and society. After his marriage he migrated to Georgia, and was one of the pioneers of Putnam county. He supplemented his large planting interests with an extensive general merchandise store in Eatonton, and became a prominent, and, probably the most influential politician in that part of the state—particularly in Putnam county. He was an ardent democrat—represented the county in one or the other branch of the general assembly thirty-one years—twenty-seven of which were consecutive; and was speaker of the house nineteen years. He reared a large family of children, all of whom were substantial citizens. Judge Jenkins' mother died in February, 1884, having given birth to eight children: Robert H., planter, Jones county, Ga.; William F., the subject of this sketch; B. W., planter, Baldwin county, Ga.; W. G. (deceased); Caroline V., died in girlhood; Georgia E., single; David H., planter, Sumter county; and H. A., lawyer, Eatonton, Ga. Judge Jenkins was twelve years old when his father returned to Eatonton from Sumter county. His education was interrupted by the unfortunate unpleasantness, he entering the Confederate service in 1861 as a private in the Putnam Light infantry, which became Company G, Twelfth Georgia regiment, and remaining in active service until the surrender, except when disabled by wounds. His first war experience was in the battle of Greenbrier river, W. Va. At Cedar Run he was twice slightly wounded; at Second Manassas he had his left hip and right ankle broken; these wounds still give him serious trouble. As soon as he was pronounced able he returned to his command and was appointed ordnance sergeant of Gen. Dole's (afterward Gen. Phil. Cook's) brigade—a position he held until the end of the war. Returning from the war he attended school at home a few months and then went to the university of Virginia, where he studied law two years, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws in the summer of 1868. A member of the faculty was Dr. John B. Minor, one of the best and most erudite law teachers in the Union. He is still connected with the school. At the succeeding September term of Putnam superior court, Judge Philip B. Robinson presiding, he was admitted to the bar, and at once entered upon a successful professional career. He continued alone until his brother was admitted

when the law firm of W. F. & H. A. Jenkins was founded, which continued until its senior was elected to the judgeship. In 1873 he was elected to represent Putnam county in the general assembly—defeating a colored opponent, and thus breaking the backbone and inflicting a death-blow upon carpet-baggism. In 1884 he was again elected, and was specially identified with the railway legislation which was then a leading topic. In the fall of 1886 he entered the race for the judgeship of Ocmulgee circuit against three other able aspirants, and was elected by an overwhelming majority—145 out of 212 votes—more than doubling all the votes cast for his three opponents. In 1890 he was re-elected without opposition. In 1893 he announced that he would not be a candidate for re-election, having in contemplation the resumption of the practice of the law. Judge Jenkins has been mayor of Eatonton, and chairman of the board of county commissioners; has held other minor local offices; and is now commander of R. T. Davis camp of Confederate veterans, Eatonton and Putnam county. Judge Jenkins was married in Webster county, Ga., near the Sumter line, May 11, 1870, to Miss Leila U. Head, born in Madison Parish, La., daughter of Joseph C. and Ulrica Steptoe (Damaron) Head. Miss Head, on the death of her mother in Louisiana, was reared by Col. and Mrs. Joseph Wood, Woodlawn, Webster Co. The Steptoe family made a fine record in Virginia during the revolutionry war. His wife's father is a descendant of Sir Walter Head, once governor-general of Canada; and two of her father's uncles, Benjamin and Elbert Head, and Samuel Davis, (a brother of ex-President Jefferson Davis) married three sisters Throckmorton, a near relative of whom has been governor of Texas. While in Louisiana his wife's father was president of the levee board, a responsible and very important office; afterward, in Alabama, was a member of the legislature. He now resides in Auburn, Ala. Mrs. Jenkins attended the celebrated Vassar college, New York, two years. Three children have blessed this marriage; Joseph W. R., graduated in 1894 at the university of Virginia, with degrees of A. B. and A. M.—preparing for the Baptist ministry; Carrie V., completed her education at Shorter college, Rome, Ga., then took a special course at the Art Students' league, New York city; W. F., Jr., a student at the university of Virginia. Judge Jenkins is an exemplary member of the Baptist church.

H. A. JENKINS is a brother of Judge William F. Jenkins, was the junior member of the former law firm of W. F. & H. A. Jenkins, and possesses in a marked degree the intellectual and business characteristics for which the family is distinguished. He was born in Americus, Sumter Co., Ga., March 21, 1855. He was two years old when his father moved back to Eatonton, where he grew to manhood and received his literary education. He then entered the law department of the university of Georgia, at Athens, and was graduated in 1876. He located in Eatonton, commenced the practice, and at once made an excellent reputation and secured a large and influential clientage. His rapid advancement in his profession and his financial prosperity give promise of a brilliant career professionally and the addition of higher political distinction whenever he gets ready to contest for it. In 1882 he was elected to represent the county in the general assembly, where business legislation received his especial attention; he, however, took great interest and was largely instrumental in strengthening the restrictions on the liquor traffic in the county. Closely following his legislative term was his election as mayor of Eatonton—serving one term with exceptional success. In the campaign of 1884 he did very efficient work as president of the Young Men's Democratic club of Putnam county. Through his tact and energy it was made a very strong and effective organization. The next eight years, classically speaking, he "sawed wood," but forged ahead wonderfully to a front position in his profession. In 1892 he was elected to represent the Twenty-eighth senatorial district in the general assembly, in which body he was made chairman of the committee on railroads and served on many other committees. He was also placed on a special committee to consider the matter of a reduction of pensions; the committee's report favorable to the same was adopted. In 1894 Mr. Jenkins was again elected to represent the county in the general assembly, was made chairman of the general judiciary committee, member of several other committees and chairman on the part of the house of the committee to review the work of the codifiers. He was also made chairman of the democratic joint caucus, and has been favorably mentioned by his friends and the press of the state as speaker of the next house of representatives. Mr. Jenkins was married in Eatonton, Feb. 5, 1879, to Miss Tallulah, only child of L. C. Dennis, for a long term of years in charge of the railway interests of the city. He was a son of Michael Dennis, mention of whom is made elsewhere in this volume. Six children have blessed this union: Roy H., Caroline H., Tallulah D., Georgia, Robert C. and Wilbur G. Mr. Jenkins is a trustee of the Eatonton Male and Female academy, a master Mason and a member of the Methodist church.

S. R. LAWRENCE, ex-sheriff, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of Dr. J. W. and Elizabeth (Mitchenell) Lawrence, was born in Cuthbert, Randolph Co., Ga., Oct. 27, 1842. His ancestors came from England and settled in New York, where some of the members of the family became prominent in public affairs—one having been governor and another a senator. His great-grandfather, John Lawrence, migrated from New York to Virginia, whence he came to Georgia in the latter part of the last century and settled in what is now Hancock county, and raised a large family and there died. There his grandfather, S. J. Lawrence, was born in 1791. He married a Miss Ward, became one of the wealthiest planters in the county, as well as one of the most influential politically. He was an "old-line" whig, represented the county several times in the general assembly, and was elected as a union man to the convention of 1860-61. He died in 1869, aged seventy-eight years. Mr. Lawrence's father was born in Hancock county, and was given a good education. He next attended lectures at and was graduated from Jefferson Medical college, Philadelphia, Pa. After practicing medicine in Hancock county two years he located in Cuthbert, Randolph Co., where he soon afterward married Miss Elizabeth Mitchenell, daughter of W. B. Mitchenell, who was of a South Carolina family. Dr. Lawrence had lived in Cuthbert about six years, had built up a fine practice, and had become so well known and so popular that, in 1845, he was elected to represent Randolph county in the general assembly. While in Milledgeville (then the state capital) in attendance on that body he contracted typhoid fever, of which he died. He was an exemplary member of the Methodist church and an ardent Mason. Mr. Lawrence now has his father's masonic apron, a valued souvenir, in his possession. His mother, after his father's death, married a gentleman named G. N. King, and is now living near Cuthbert. He lived with his mother until he was twelve years old, when he went to Hancock county to his grandfather Lawrence, who reared and educated him. In May, 1861, he enlisted in Company B, Fifth Georgia regiment, which was ordered to Pensacola, Fla., where it was stationed nine months. There he had an attack of typhoid fever, was discharged, and came home. He afterward enlisted in Company B, Forty-seventh Georgia regiment, and was made second sergeant. This regiment was sent to James island, near Charleston, S. C., where it remained six months. During this period the battle of Secessionville was fought, in which the junior first lieutenant was killed, and Mr. Lawrence was elected to fill the vacancy. The regiment was ordered to Vicksburg, Miss., but the city was surrendered before the regiment reached there. After a week's fighting around Jackson the command was ordered to East Tennessee. He was in the three days' battle at Chickamauga in which—the captain being absent and he having been promoted to the first lieutenantcy—he was in command. He was in Gen. Pope's corps, carried thirty-eight men into battle, and brought six out. He was in the battles of Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, was promoted to the captaincy of his company at Dalton, Ga., and was more or less engaged during the entire Atlanta campaign. On arriving at Atlanta the regiment was found to be so badly cut up it was sent to James island again—this time to recruit. That this command had "seen service" and fought desperately is demonstrated by the fact that of 1,300 men in the regiment when it left Vicksburg, only ninety-seven reached Atlanta, and of 107 in Capt. Lawrence's company only thirteen reached Atlanta. On the reorganization of the regiment on James island there was a very warmly contested competitive examination to determine which officers should be retained—in which Capt. Lawrence and his first lieutenant were successful. The new command became Company F, First Georgia regiment. Gen. Sherman was then at Savannah, and Capt. Lawrence's regiment participated in nearly all the engagements from there to Bentonville, N. C. He was paroled in Greensboro, N. C., and arrived home May 25, 1865, having been in the army four years, lacking five days. In January, 1877, he was elected sheriff of the county, and so entirely satisfactory was his service that he has been re-elected continuously since without opposition. During that time he has been in many tight places, having been shot at a number of times, and hit once by a negro, who shot him with a load of buckshot. He absolutely declines a re-election for another term in deference to the dying request of his wife that he should do so for the sake of the children. His geniality and suavity of disposition are remarkable, and these traits, in happy combination with good business qualities and an unquestioned courage, made him the efficient and popular sheriff that he has been. He has a pretty cottage-home in the suburbs of Eatonton, where, surrounded by his family, he is prepared to pleasantly pass his declining years. Mr. Lawrence was married in Putnam county, Sept. 15, 1864, to Miss Sadie E. Pearson, born and reared in the county, daughter of Judge Samuel Pearson, a member of one of Putnam county's pioneer families. This union was blessed with seven children: D. P., died at the age of twenty-seven years; S. R., Jr., school teacher, Sumter county, Ga.; L. G., Eatonton, Ga.; Elizabeth, graduate of Wesleyan Female college, Macon, Ga., 1894; W. S., at home; S. J., at home, and Sarah E., at home. The two oldest boys were graduates of Emory college, Oxford, Ga., and D. P., the first-born, is spoken of as a young man of unusual merit and promise, the shock of whose death the mother never recovered from. She died Oct. 23, 1893, a few months after the death of the son on whom both parents doted. Mr. Lawrence is a master Mason and a devoted member of the Methodist church.

THOMAS G. LAWSON. Among old Putnam's distinguished citizens is the present honorable representative in the national congress for the eighth congressional district, a man of marked individuality and a personality which attracts the best men in all parties. Thomas G. Lawson is the son of Reese and Elizabeth (Keaton) Lawson, and was born in the county where he has passed his lifetime in May of 1835. The Lawsons settled in Hancock county, Ga., from Virginia after the revolutionary war. Here the grandfather of the above gentleman, David Lawson, was born and reared to manhood. He married a Miss Reese, and setting in the northeastern portion of Putnam county, reared a family of five children, Reese Lawson being the eldest son. To the marriage of the latter were born but two sons, Thomas G. and Reese. The last named went to Texas before the war, and enlisting in one of the famous cavalry companies of that state, was killed while bravely doing his duty at the battle of Shiloh. Putnam county has always been noted for her wealthy and cultured people. This was particularly true of her for the two decades preceding the war, when there lived within her borders a people of the highest refinement and the broadest culture. Among this people Thomas G. Lawson came to manhood, receiving a good academic education, which was later supplemented by a course at Mercer university, where he was graduated in 1855. Choosing the law for a profession, he became a student in the office of ex-Judge of the Supreme Court Starnes, at Augusta, and was admitted to the bar there in 1856. Returning to his boyhood home, he began the practice in partnership with Capt. Richard T. Davis. Success attended his efforts, and as years added to his experience, he built up a reputation which refused to be compassed by the narrow bounds of his own judicial district, but passed to a state-wide significance, and for many years before his retirement from active practice in 1890 Judge Lawson was regarded as a power both as a counselor and before a jury. The public life of Judge Lawson has been both useful and varied. He represented his county in the legislature from 1861 to 1865 and again in 1888 and 1889. He was a delegate to the constitutional convention of 1877. In 1878 he was made judge of the superior court of Ocmulgee circuit and served for two terms of four years each. In 1890 he was the choice of his party to meet the rising tide of populism in his district, and after a spirited canvass was triumphantly elected. Again in 1892 and 1894 he defeated his populist opponent by a good round majority, though it was confidently predicted that every member of the Georgia delegation would be retired to private life. The brief limits of this sketch will not admit of a detailed account of the service of Judge Lawson in the halls of congress. Suffice it to say that his sound financial views and his devotion to the democratic party mark him as a safe man—a man to be trusted by the people. In November of 1860 Judge Lawson was married to Miss Mary F. Reid, a member of an old and prominent family, whose history will be given under the sketch of Capt. John S. Reid, found elsewhere in this volume.

K. D. LITTLE, planter, Spivey, Putnam Co., Ga., son of Kinchen and Christine (Stinson) Little, was born in Putnam county, Feb. 16, 1830. His paternal grandfather, Abram Little, was born and raised in North Carolina, and when a young man came to Georgia and settled in Burke county. He afterward moved to Baldwin county, followed the life of a planter and raised a family of two sons and two daughters, and there he died. Mr. Little's father was born and reared in Baldwin county, but married his wife in Putnam county, whose family (Stinson) came to the county in 1807, when it was organized. They lived and died on the plantation where Mr. Little now lives, and raised eleven children, all attaining to maturity: William F., deceased; L. L., deceased; Ann C., deceased; S. D., deceased; James, killed near Richmond, during the Seven Days' fight; K. D., the subject of this sketch; A. A., deceased; M. E., wife of J. J. Lawrence, Atlanta, Ga.; F. M., planter, Hancock county; S. H., deceased; A. F., killed in the battle of Kennesaw Mountain. He died in April, 1865, aged seventy-five, and his wife died in 1875, at about the same age. He was an industrious and energetic, and hard-working man, took no interest in politics and when the war began was one of the wealthiest men in the county. Mr. Little has lived all his life in Putnam county, and been engaged in planting; has never cared much for politics, or sought political position. He owns a plantation of 1,840 acres on the Oconee river, directly east of Eatonton. Mr. Little was married in 1864, in Columbus, Ga., to Miss Elizabeth J., daughter of Carlyle P. B. and Margaret (Little) Martin. Mr. Martin was a school teacher and moved about considerably; but his daughter was raised and has lived in Georgia. To them have been born six children: Charles E., a graduate and now one of the faculty of Peabody Normal school, Nashville, Tenn., a young man of brilliant promise in his chosen profession; M. C., wife of A. J. Avery, Sparta, Ga.; L. F., Putnam county, Ga.; G. B., machine draughtsman, Dayton, O.; Ada T., at home; and Forester B., at home. Mr. Little ranks high in his community as a successful planter, and as a man of probity of character; and he looks forward to a bright future for his young professor-son. He is a democrat and a Methodist—a steward of his local church.

JAMES A. MERIWETHER, deceased, ex-congressman, ex-judge of superior court, and ex-member of general assembly of Georgia, son of James and Susanna (Hatcher) Meriwether, was born in Louisville, Jefferson Co., Ga., in 1806. His father was a son of James and Mary (Weaver) Meriwether, and was a native of Wales, whence he, with two brothers, came to America just before the revolutionary war and settled in Virginia. After the war he came to Georgia and settled as a merchant in Louisville, where he raised two sons and several daughters. The following brief sketch is copied from an old publication: "James volunteered at the commencement of the revolutionary war when a youth of seventeen. He continued to serve to the end of the war with great distinction; first as a militiaman in what was called the 'silk stocking' company of Richmond, and afterward as captain in the Virginia continental line. At the close of the war he settled in Georgia, where he married Susanna Hatcher. He was secretary of the executive department, comptroller-general, and held other offices of high trust continuously for twenty years. He had two sons, one ordinary of Dooly county, and James A., a man of education, talent and integrity—judge of the superior court, a member of congress, frequently a member of the house of representatives." James A. Meriwether was liberally educated and graduated from the state university at Athens. He was married to Miss Rebecca McKigney, a lady of Scotch descent, by whom he had twelve children, most of whom reached maturity: Susan M., wife of William Young, Eatonton; Mary L., deceased wife of James Lawrence; William A., civil engineer, died in Louisiana during the war; Martha E., died in infancy; Clementina, died in childhood; James A., went to Texas; Robert, Una, Tenn.; Thomas, planter, Putnam county; Caroline, wife of James Hines, Macon, Ga.; Valeria, deceased wife of Capt. Thomas Henley, Hawkinsville, Ga.

REUBEN B. NISBET, physician and surgeon, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of Judge Eugenius A. Nisbet, formerly of Macon, Ga., was born in Madison, Morgan Co., Ga., Feb. 6, 1830. Dr. Nisbet will be recognized at once as a member of one of the most distinguished families in middle Georgia. His father, especially (Judge Nisbet, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in these Memoirs), was conspicuously prominent for a generation in the politics and jurisprudence of the state, in the general assembly of the state, in congress and on the supreme court bench. Dr. Nisbet was mostly raised in the city of Macon, and there he received his preparatory education; after which he entered and was graduated from Oglethorpe university. He next attended a course of lectures at Jefferson Medical college, Philadelphia, Penn., and afterward attended the medical college of Georgia, Augusta, from which he graduated. After practicing awhile at Macon he removed to Eatonton, where he permanently located. He has been twice married, and has raised a number of children, one of whom is his partner in his practice. In 1861 he entered the Confederate service as captain of the "Brown Rifles," which afterward became Company B, Third Georgia regiment. He was with that command in North Carolina and Virginia, and in all the battles when fit for duty, in which it participated. He was first wounded at the battle of Malvern Hill, and afterward when in command of the regiment—having been promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel—at Sharpsburg. In this battle he received several severe wounds and was captured. For ten months after he was exchanged he was a great sufferer from these wounds, but as soon as he was sufficiently recovered he returned to his command in Virginia, with which he remained until May, 1864. Having been elected to represent the Twenty-eighth senatorial district in the general assembly he returned home to assume its duties. He was thus serving when Gen. Sherman was on his "march to the sea." From the legislative halls he was transferred to the command of a force sent from Augusta to Savannah, during which he had several desperate encounters with the Federal forces on the line of the Charleston & Savannah railway; but was finally placed in the trenches around Savannah. When the Confederates evacuated Savannah Col. Nisbet crossed the river with his command, which had been ordered back to Augusta. There he received orders to join Gen. Lee's army at Richmond, but before he reached his destination Gen. Lee had surrendered. Like all citizens along the line of Sherman's devastating march, Col. Nisbet was a great sufferer; but, going to work with his characteristic energy, he regained his foothold and reinstated himself professionally, politically and financially. He has been too closely confined to his extensive practice to give much attention to politics, yet has sustained the reputation of the family in faithfully performing the duties of unsought positions. As an old soldier, and backed by that element, he was active and successful in ridding the county of the pestiferous carpet-bag domination which prevailed just after the war. Under his lead the race problem has given Putnam county no further trouble. He was elected a member of the constitutional convention of 1877, and was the author of that provision which gave the election of the state house officers and of the attorney-general to the people. He has been a member of numerous party conventions, and of the state democratic executive committee. He was a Hancock elector for the Sixth congressional district; and when, afterward, his county presented his name as a candidate for congressional honors, he declined. He is now serving as a member of the board of trustees of the insane asylum. His prominence in public affairs and his extensive acquaintance with public men, causes him to be consulted in regard to the policy and the plans to be pursued by his party. Dr. Nisbet has been twice married; first, March 15, 1853, to Miss Martha A. (nee Dennis) Grimes. Of the children born to him by this marriage, two are living: Dr. Dennis A. Nisbet, aged forty years; and Filiola, aged twenty-five years. His second marriage was to Miss Martha A. Dennis, by whom he has had one child, a son, Osborn Brevard, aged nineteen years.

JOHN S. REID, planter, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of Edmund and Elizabeth (Terrell) Reid, was born in Putnam count, Dec. 21, 1839. The Reids are of Scotch-Irish descent, and when they came to America settled in Pennsylvania, whence certain members of the family moved to Virginia and North Carolina. Mr. Reid's great-grandfather, Samuel Reid, lived in Iredell county, N. C., where he was a member of the historic committee of public safety, organized before the revolutionary war. The latter part of the last century he migrated to Georgia and settled in Hancock county, whence he moved to Putnam county when it was organized, where the family have mostly resided since. He reared three sons: Samuel, who died in Jasper county; William, who died in Macon; and Alexander, who was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch. Mr. Reid's father was the third son of Alexander and Elizabeth (Brewer) Reid, was born in Hancock county in 1802, and came to Putnam county with his father in 1808. The family settled on a plantation, still in possession of the family, three miles north of Eatonton. About 1828 he married Elizabeth Terrell, daughter of Richard and Kittie (Butler) Terrell, a Virginia family which came to Georgia early in this century, and which has attained to no inconsiderable political prominence. To them eight children were born: Richmond A., captain and quartermaster in the late war, since deceased; James S., planter, Morgan county, Ga., a lieutenant-colonel in the late war; Ann C., wife of Maj. W. A. Wilson, Sumter county, Ga.; Frances M., wife of Hon. Thomas G. Lawson, representative Eighth congressional district in congress; William T., farmer, Putnam county, captain in the late war; John S., the subject of this sketch; Edward B., a private in Company G, Twelfth Georgia regiment, killed at battle of McDowell, 1862; and Susan, wife of P. W. Walton, Madison, Ga. He was a plain, practical farmer, of excellent business judgment, was prosperous and accumulated a quite large estate. Though uncaring for political preferment, he was elected to represent the county in the general assembly one term. He was a democrat, but opposed to secession. However, when Georgia seceded he contributed largely of his substance to the Confederate cause. In religion he inclined to the Presbyterian faith. Himself and wife died in 1882—he eighty years of age, and she about the same. Capt. Reid was raised a planter, and has made that his life occupation. In 1861 he enlisted as second lieutenant, Company B, Third Georgia regiment, which was among the first troops that reached Virginia, and was stationed at the Norfolk navy yard and thereabout for a year. The regiment was then ordered to the army of northern Virginia, and participated in the seven days' fight. Being taken sick he was sent to the rear. In 1862 he was made a captain, and was with the army in the Maryland campaign; was wounded in the right leg at the battle of Sharpsburg, from which he was disabled until the following spring. When the campaign opened he went to his command, accompanied Gen. Lee in the Pennsylvania campaign, and was severely wounded in the foot on Cemetery Heights at the battle of Gettysburg. His brigade captured the same works, but not being properly supported had to retreat, where Gen. Pickett met with such a bloody repulse the following day. Capt. Reid was left on the field and taken a prisoner. He was sent to a hospital on David's island, remained there about three months, when he was transferred to Johnson's island. He was exchanged just before the close of the war and reached home the day Gen. Lee capitulated. Capt. Reid was also a gallant participant in the battles about Fredericksburg, the Wilderness, and others. In 1886 he was elected to represent Putnam county, and in 1888 was elected to represent the Twenty-eighth senatorial district in the general assembly. Beside his individual holdings, himself and sons own a splendid 1,000-acre plantation. Capt. Reid is a prosperous, progressive planter, is very popular, and is so highly esteemed that he could be elected to any office he would accept. Capt. Reid was married in November, 1866, to Miss Louisa, daughter of William and Sarah (Respass) Dennis, by whom he had two sons: Hunter, a practicing dentist in Eatonton, and William Dennis, engaged in teaching. Their mother died Oct. 4, 1879. On Dec. 21, 1880, he was married to Mary, daughter of William and Anna E. (Reese) Johnson, who has borne him no children. He is an active and uncompromising democrat, and a consistent and influential member of the Methodist church.

L. C. SLADE, "mine host" of the popular "Putnam," Eatonton, Ga., was the son of Daniel and Elizabeth (Trippe) Slade, and was born in Eatonton, June 1, 1842. His father, Daniel Slade, was born in Litchfield, Conn., and was a graduate of one of the New England colleges. In response to an invitation he came to Putnam county as a teacher, and followed that profession a number of years. He afterward engaged in merchandising at Slade's cross-roads with such profitable results that he removed to Eatonton, where he established a fine business, and prospered, and became the leading merchant of that old-time enterprising town. He successfully conducted his business until he died in 1873. In 1836 Mr. Slade married Miss Trippe, a daughter of John and Betsey (Hunt) Trippe, one of the oldest and best of the old Georgia families, one entirely worthy of all the honors the people of Georgia have delighted to confer upon its members as legislators and judges. To this marriage there were born: Hattie, wife of Stephen B. Marshall, proprietor of the Oconee house, Milledgeville, Ga.; William H., who died of yellow fever while serving in the C. S. A. navy, Oct. 11, 1864; and L. C., the subject of this sketch. Mr. Slade was raised and received a good education in Eatonton, where he has passed most of his life. When the war between the states began he was at that age when the blood is mantling, and the love of adventure strong. In April, 1861, he enlisted in Company B, Third Georgia infantry, and for the first twelve months was stationed at the Norfolk navy yard. From there the command was ordered to join the army of northern Virginia, with which it remained during the war. The record of the Third Georgia is a part of the glorious history, written in blood, of that gallant army. No recapitulation of the bloody battles fought need be made here; it is enough to say that that regiment bore an honorable part in nearly all, and that the subject of this sketch was with his command in its every engagement until it laid down its arms at Appomattox. He entered the service as a soldier in the ranks, he surrendered as first lieutenant. On returning from the war he entered his father's store as a clerk, and continued with him a number of years; and for most of the time since has been engaged in hotel-keeping in Eatonton. In 1888 he took charge of the splendid new Hotel Putnam, which he has conducted with eminent success, and gained for the hotel a wide-spread, enviable reputation. Mr. Slade was married in Eatonton Oct. 22, 1879, to Miss Joccora, daughter of Dr. Slack, a union which has been unblessed with children.

JOSEPH S. TURNER, lawyer, Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga., son of James S. and Louisa (Dennis) Turner, was born in Putnam county, Dec. 19, 1859. His grandfather, William Turner, was born in Virginia, and when a lad of seventeen came to Georgia with his family early in the century and settled in Putnam county, which has been the home of the family for five generations. His grandfather became a prosperous planter and a prominent politician, and represented the county at different times in both branches of the general assembly. He also served for several sessions as clerk of the house of representatives. Politically he was a democrat. Mr. Turner's father was educated at Emory college, Oxford, Ga., and after his graduation read law, was admitted to the bar, and soon rose to professional distinction. He also represented the county a number of terms in the general assembly, and for a number of years conducted with distinguished ability a paper entitled "The Countryman." It was in this office that Joel Chandler Harris, the popular author of the now famous Uncle Remus papers, learned to set type. Mr. Turner raised four children: William, merchant, Eatonton, manager Alliance store; Michael D., Methodist minister, deceased; Lucy B., deceased wife of I. Branham, and Joseph S., the subject of this sketch. He died in 1869, and his wife in 1877. Mr. Turner was educated in the schools at Eatonton, and attended the university of Georgia at Athens one year. Being without means to gratify his youthful ambition, he had a hard struggle, but thanks to his persistent courage and recognized solid qualities of character he overcame all obstacles and accomplished his object. He read law alone and in 1879, while still very young, was admitted to the bar. He then practiced a year with S. A. Reid, since which time he has practiced alone. The year he came of age (1880) he received the distinguished honor of being appointed county judge by Gov. Colquitt, a position he held until 1892. That year he was elected to represent Putnam county in the general assembly, in which body, besides being made chairman of the committee on penitentiary, he was placed on several other important committees. He also took a very great and active interest in the establishment of a state reformatory for children, for which he made an earnest and gallant fight. Judge Turner is a man of unflinching moral courage, of great persistency of character, conscientious in the extreme, and as modest as he is courageous and capable. He is one of the most popular citizens in the county, and, being a young man, may be expected to leave his impress on the legislation or judiciary of the state. Judge Turner was married Dec. 15, 1881, to Miss Leila H. Coombs, daughter of William Coombs, of Laurens county, by whom he has had two children: Joseph S., Jr., and Louis C. Judge Turner is a solid democrat, a master Mason and an exemplary member of the Baptist church.

N. S. WALKER, physician and surgeon, Willard, Putnam Co., Ga., son of D. F. and Sophia (Sadler) Walker, was born in Monroe county, Ga., Aug. 11, 1830. His paternal grandfather, John Walker, was a native of Virginia, and migrated to Georgia and settled in Greene county about the beginning of the present century. He reared the greater part of his children in that county, and late in life moved to Talbot county, where he died at the age of ninety-four years. He was a veteran of the war of 1812, a leading Methodist, but was never in public life. He was married three times, whereby he became connected with the Brown and Callier families. Dr. Walker's father was the youngest son by his first wife; was raised in Greene county and came to Putnam when a young man, where he married his wife, a daughter of Nathaniel Sadler, who was from North Carolina. He was one of the commissioners who laid off the town of Eatonton, and lived there a number of years. He then moved to Monroe county where he became a prominent and prosperous planter, and was for many years a justice of the inferior court. Late in life he moved into Forsyth county, where he died about 1865, aged 66 years. His wife died some years previously. They reared four children: Frances, who married a Mr. Bootey, and died young; Henrietta, widow of W. T. McDade, Putnam county; Mary, widow of John B. Davis, Dalton, Ga.; and N. S., the subject of this sketch. He was a man of excellent judgment, left a fine estate, and was an ardent working member of the Methodist church. Dr. Walker was reared in Monroe county and educated in Forsyth. When twenty years of age he begun the study of medicine under his uncle, Dr. C. W. Sadler; afterward attended lectures at the university of Kentucky, at Louisville, whence he graduated in 1852. After his graduation he located where he is now, between seven and eight miles west of Eatonton. He served one year during the war as surgeon of the Forty-fourth Georgia regiment. His arduous and exhaustive duties broke him down, and he was discharged for physical disability. He enjoys the distinction of having been the only surgeon to dress a wound for Gen. Robert E. Lee. Gen. Lee was never hurt by a ball, but the circumstances were these: While returning from the first Maryland campaign an admiring friend presented a very fine horse to the Confederate commander, but untrained to the bustle of army movements. Gen. Lee was standing holding him as some artillery wagons rattled by. Frightened, the animal made a sudden plunge by which the general was thrown violently to the ground and two fingers on his left hand were broken. Dr. Walker being near at hand was called in and dressed the wound. Returning home he resumed professional life and has practiced ever since in the neighborhood of Willard, where he has a fine 600-acre plantation and a delightful home. He is liberal, an ardent practical progressionist, and very public spirited. In 1880 he was elected to represent the county in the general assembly, and served one term. He was one of the organizers of the alliance, and in hearty co-operation with Dr. de Jarnette of the alliance store in Eatonton and the bank established in connection with it. He is a prominent and valued member of the board of directors both of the store and bank. Dr. Walker is also a member of the board of trustees of the Girls' Industrial and Normal college at Milledgeville. Dr. Walker, one of the financially solidest citizens of the county is justly proud of his connection with the alliance store and bank, which have been so successful, and with the Girls' college at Milledgeville. Dr. Walker was happily married in 1854 to Miss Maria E. Edwards—reared near their present home—daughter of J. H. Edwards. The following named children have blessed their union: Laura A., wife of W. B. Martin, Putnam county; E. Y., physician, near the old homestead; Ada, wife of J. F. Walker, Monticello, Ga.; A. Sidney, planter, Jasper county; Nannie E., wife of W. E. Rainey, nearby; W. H., at home; Charles W., at home; Hampton C., Eatonton; John F.; and Nathaniel P., at home. Dr. Walker possesses all the characteristics of model citizenship, and stands high professionally. Politically he is a democrat; he is also a master Mason, and is a pillar in the Methodist church.

QUITMAN COUNTY.

M. T. DUSKIN, merchant and farmer, was born in Stewart county, Ga., in 1839. His grandfather, Michael Duskin, was a native of North Carolina, where he married Elizabeth Atkins, the daughter of an old resident of that state. In 1830, with his wife and family of eight children, Michael Duskin came to Georgia and settled in Stewart county, where he lived until 1847, when he went to Florida with his wife and part of the children. He died there about two years later at the age of sixty years. His wife survived him many years and died at the age of eighty-four. The founder of the Georgia branch of the Duskin family was one of the original whigs and was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal church. The oldest of his sons was John L. B. Duskin, who was born in Edgefield district, near Raleigh, N. C., Sept. 30, 1813. He was about sixteen years old when his father came to Georgia, and long before manhood had commenced his successful career as a farmer. In 1838 he married Miss Mary Hardie of Stewart county. She was the daughter of Theophilus Hardie of Washington county, where she was born in 1820. Mr. Duskin was a soldier in the Indian war of 1835-36, and was a man of great influence in the community in which he lived. Like his father and mother, and in fact, all of the Duskin family, he belonged to the Methodist church. He died on his farm, where he had first settled, at the age of sixty-seven. His wife, and the mother of the subject of this sketch, survives him and resides with her children, seven of whom are living: M. T., the subject of this sketch; Sarah Elizabeth Parker; Mary L. Boyett, living near Lumpkin, Stewart Co.; Josie K. Kenyon of Webster county; M. L., living near Lumpkin; Martha E. Thornton, near Columbus, Ga.; John Emory, living in Montgomery, Ala. Those deceased are: W. J., died in the Confederate service in 1864, and Mrs. Argent K. Griffis. Mr. M. T. Duskin lived in Stewart county until 1885, and there received his early education. He now lives on the Lumpkin & Eufaula road, near Georgetown, Quitman Co. He was twenty-two years old when the "war between the states" began, and enlisted at the first call, in Company K, Second Georgia regiment, under command of Capt. J. I. Ball. His first active service was in the seven days' fight around Richmond, thence to Malvern Hill. He was in all the north Virginia campaign, and was wounded in the right leg at the second battle of Manassas. He was confined in the hospital and at home for ten months, but as soon as able, rejoined his command, and was in the battle of Chickamauga, where he received his second wound. He was in Longstreet's corps through the east Tennessee campaign, and was in the battles of the Wilderness and then in the campaign around Richmond. At the time of the surrender he was at home on a furlough. Mr. Duskin was married in 1865 to Mrs. Mariah J. Keith, the daughter of Williamson Perkins, a native of Talbot county, in which county she was born in 1841. Mr. and Mrs. Duskin have one child living: Lena T.; three daughters, Eula F., Ola B., and Mary Eliza, having died in childhood. Miss Lena, now at home with her parents, is a charming young lady with a talent for music that has been highly cultivated by a thorough training and instruction at the hands of eminent artists. She was educated in the public schools, by private tutors, and at Andrew Female college of Cuthbert, Ga. The family are members of the Methodist church, and Mr. Duskin is steward of the Rocky Mount congregation, and superintendent of the Sunday school. He is a liberal supporter of the church and a strong advocate of thorough education. Mr. Duskin is a thorough, progressive business man and his enterprise is felt by the whole section in which he lives. Beginning a poor boy, he has fought his way to a position in life where he can stop and look back with satisfaction at a most honorable and successful career, achieved by his own individual efforts. In politics he is a democrat.

J. E. HARRIS, state senator of the Twelfth district, Oak Grove, Quitman county, was born in Stewart county in 1839, and is the son of Thomas R. Harris and Caroline Brown. Thomas R. Harris was born in Virginia, moved with his parents when a boy to Oglethorpe county, Ga., and lived there until his marriage in Clarke county, about 1833, when he moved to Stewart county. He had two brothers, James, who settled in Walton county, Ga., where he died, and Lewis, who moved to Texas. Thomas R. continued to reside in Stewart county, engaged in farming, until his death in 1872, at the age of sixty-two. He was no politician, though he always voted the whig ticket. He was a faithful member of the Baptist church and was a quiet, unassuming Christian gentleman, respected by all. His wife survived him, dying Oct. 31, 1892, aged seventy-five years. She too was a devoted member of the church. They had four children: Mrs. Lucy McKemie of West Point, Ga.; J. E., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Florence Lewis of Thomaston, Upson Co., Ga., and Lewis of Texas. Mr. J. E. Harris was reared principally in Stewart county and attended the public schools there until he went to Mercer university. He was in the senior class when the war broke out, and with fellow-students enlisted at once, joining Company E, Thirty-first regiment, Georgia volunteers, Capt. L. R. Redding, commanding. His first service was at Savannah, where his company was attached to the Thirty-first regiment under Col. Phillips, Lieut.-Col. Crowder, Maj. Clem Evans. The first engagement of any note was the seven days' fight at Richmond. The next was the battle at Cedar Mountain, soon followed by Sharpsburg, then Fredericksburg. He was then detailed to the quartermaster's department, serving until the close of the war. He then returned home to Stewart county, and in 1865 married Miss Mary Roxanna Turner, born in Troup county. She was a daughter of Rev. Joseph T. Turner, a Methodist minister, and was educated at the Masonic Female college at Lumpkin. To Mr. and Mrs. Harris were born six children: Everard L., is a graduate of Atlanta Medical college and is a practicing physician in Clay county; Neta Olivia; Thomas Richard; Joseph Aubry; Carrie Cottie and Willie, all at home. Mr. Harris is a stanch democrat, and one of the manipulators of state politics. He has been a member of the board of education for six years, and also county commissioner for several years. He was county surveyor a number of terms, and in 1890 was elected to the general assembly, and in 1894 was chosen state senator from the Twelfth senatorial district. Mr. Harris is a member of the Baptist church, but his family are adherents of the Methodist faith. About a year after his marriage Mr. Harris moved from Stewart to Quitman county, where he has since been engaged in farming.

JASPER N. HILL, planter, Hatcher's station, Quitman Co., was born in Warren county, Ga., Sept. 9, 1823. He was the son of William C. Hill and Mary Dykes Hill, the father being a native of Richmond, Va., of Irish descent, and the mother a native of Georgia. William C. Hill was born in 1781, and lived in Virginia until about grown to manhood, working in the capacity of clerk in Richmond. From there he came to Warren county, Ga. He married and settled in that county, where he continued to reside until February, 1832, when he moved to Randolph county, now Quitman county, and took up his abode about 400 yards from the present home of the subject of this sketch. He owned quite a large tract of land, possessing seven lots in Quitman county and seven lots near Cuthbert. He built himself a house in the woods, and so sparse was the settlement of the country at that time that there was only one house between his place and Lumpkin. There were then a number of Creek Indians in the country, but this hardy pioneer faltered not but fearlessly set to work clearing ground and opening up a way for other settlers. He established a mill within five miles of where Cuthbert is now situated. He farmed, milled, operated a saw and grist mill and did blacksmithing. In the Indian war of 1836 he took a prominent part, and was in Roanoke on the Sunday the Indians burned it. William C. Hill and wife were strict Primitive Baptists, and he a whig in politics. The father died January, 1845, and the mother October, 1836. At the death of the mother there were thirteen children living. They were: Asaph A., at one time judge of Stewart county; Willoughby D., who was a merchant in Roanoke; Phoebe Ann, wife of William Brooks of Warren county; William C.; Mary C., wife of John Mainord of Cuthbert, Ga.; Allen W., a prominent man of Stewart county at one time, dying near Galveston, Tex., in 1862; Eliza Webb, wife of John Mangham of Talbot county, Ala.; Albert Madison; Jasper N., the subject of this sketch; Sarah C., wife of Ahas Grady; George T. B.; Julia, wife of Elihu Calloway; Hulda, wife of James Redding. All these children lived to be over twenty-one, but the only one surviving is Mr. Jasper N. Hill, the subject of this sketch. He was only nine years old when his father settled in the wilds of Randolph county, now Quitman, and he enjoys the distinction of being the oldest settler in this section of the state, having lived here for sixty-three years. Though at an advanced age, Mr. Hill has a keen memory, and his recollections of his boyhood days and the early history of the country in which he has lived nearly three-quarters of a century, is fresh and fervid. During the troublesome times of 1836, when he was a lad of thirteen years, took place the most thrilling experience of his younger days. It was a rapid ride with his family to escape the clutches of the murderous Creek Indians. Word reached the family of the approach of the savages while at dinner. They left the table, home and everything, and mounting horses hurried away to Houston county. They remained in Houston county until July 4, when they returned home. He lived with his parents until their death, and has since continued to reside upon the original home place. He was married May 25, 1854, to Miss Eliza N. Pittman, daughter of Jesse Pittman, who was born within three miles of where she now lives. During the late war Mr. Hill served in the Home Guards, being present when Atlanta was taken. Mr. and Mrs. Hill are the parents of eleven children, all living except one, who died in childhood. They are: William A., married and living near Georgetown, and present school commissioner of the county; Fannie, wife of J. J. Castillow; Jessie L., teaching school at Union; James P., living with parents; Jasper N. and Robert L., living at Providence, La.; Mattie E., wife of Walter Crumbley; Alexander S., Providence, La.; Charles C., teaching in Calhoun county; Julia May, at home. Mrs. Hill and most of the family are members of the Missionary Baptist church. Mr. Hill has devoted his life and time to duties on the farm, and is one of the largest farmers of the county. He lives nine miles east of Georgetown, in a handsome residence he built on the plan of convenience, just after the war.

JAMES FRANKLIN HOGAN, planter, Sanford, Quitman Co., was born in Wilkinson county, Ga., in 1835. He was one of a family of eight children, and left an orphan in childhood. He was cared for by his grandmother until twelve years old, when she died. Thrown on his own resources at an early age, he had little time even to accept the few chances of education offered, but with an iron will and untiring industry he was later able to educate himself and prepare for the success he has achieved in life. In 1856 he married Miss Martha Ann Ridley, daughter of Everett Ridley. Mr. Ridley, who was one of triplets, was one of the earliest settlers of Wilkinson county and was the son of Robert Ridley, who came to Georgia from Virginia. The latter lived to be quite an old man. In 1859 Mr. Hogan moved to Dale county, Ala., settling near Barnes Cross Roads, where he engaged in farming until the war broke out. Dec. 12, 1861, he enlisted in Capt. A. H. Johnson's company, First Alabama cavalry, Company F, with which he served fifteen months, when he was transferred to Robinson's battery, Light artillery, which afterward became the famous Wiggins' battery. He remained in this command the rest of the war, and at the time of his discharge he belonged to Diberal's division. At Greenville, N. C., this division was chosen as Jefferson Davis' guard and they followed the old leader to Wilkes county, Ga., where they were disbanded May 15, 1865. There were few men on either side in the late war who saw more active service and hard fighting than Mr. Hogan. He was in the battles of Shiloh, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, at the siege of Knoxville, in which he fired the first cannon, at Atlanta, July 22, 1864, and at the siege of Savannah near the end of the war. After the war Mr. Hogan took his family to Quitman county and purchased 600 acres of land, partially improved, where he now lives. He has resided there since and has added to his original purchase until he now owns about 1,900 acres, a large portion of which is under a high state of cultivation. His present residence, one of the finest in this section of the state, was completed in 1894. The home of Mr. Hogan has been blessed by the birth of ten children, six of whom are living: Everett C., married and residing near by; Letitia E., wife of J. T. Tye, living on an adjoining farm, and R. G., William G., A. C. and Margaret M., living at home. Those deceased are: John F., died in 1883, single; Joel D., died in 1894, leaving a family; Walter W., died in 1887, aged nineteen, and Martha A., died in 1894, aged seventeen years. Mr. Hogan has always shown a deep interest in the cause of education, being for a number of years a member of the board of education, and has taken much pains in the education of his children. He and his entire family are members of the Liberty Baptist church, of which Mr. Hogan is a deacon. He is the founder of the church near Sanford and has been its main support. He is also superintendent of the Sunday school. He is a strong democrat, though he takes no very active part in politics. At present he is a member of the board of commissioners of roads and revenues. Mr. Hogan's estate lies near the old locality known as Bumbleton. This place was the old court ground originally in Stewart county, where justice court was held, and received its name from the fact that the people would assemble there and drink whisky sweetened with molasses, which caused the bumblebees to swarm around. The whisky was purchased of Clem Climons, who established a grocery at this place. He was succeeded by Louis Lee, who established Bladen Creek postoffice, now extinct.

JOHN R. ELLIS, postmaster and justice of the peace, Oak Grove, Quitman Co., Ga., was born in 1847 in Randolph county, in that part which is now Quitman county. He was educated in the common schools and in 1864 enlisted in the army, joining Company E, Georgia reserves, Osborne's battalion of cavalry. He was in active service in the skirmishes around Atlanta, Jonesboro and Griswoldville. After the war he returned to the home place and picked up his school books again. In 1868 he was married to Miss Mollie Lewis, a native of Stewart county. They have no children, but have adopted a son, Joseph Hillman. Mr. Ellis is a democrat and has served as tax receiver for four years, county commissioner four years, and is at present clerk of the common pleas court. When Oak Grove postoffice was established he was made postmaster, and there has since been no change. He has been justice of the peace fourteen years and was also commissioned a United States commissioner. Oak Grove, near where the Ellis family live, was established as a postoffice in 1886, and derived its name from the fact that there were many big oak trees around. It is in the North Carolina district, so named on account of several families from that state who located here early in 1830. In Oak Grove is located the Union Methodist church, built in 1867-68, the congregation having been organized in 1838, and the first church erected in 1850. The Ellis family has always been closely identified with this church since its organization, and father, child, and grandchild have worshiped under its roof. Mr. J. E. Ellis has been a steward of the church for many years.

THOMAS J. ELLIS, farmer and miller, Oak Grove, Quitman Co., Ga., was born in Houston county, Ga., in 1834. He is of English descent, his great-grandfather being James Ellis, a sea captain, who was shipwrecked on the North Carolina coast about the middle of the last century. Out of a large crew on the vessel only Capt. Ellis and a mate were saved, and they only by swimming three miles, landing near Wilmington, N. C. He did not return to England, but adopted this country for his home, and marrying a Miss Elwell, of North Carolina, reared a family of four children. Of these Evan, the youngest, was married to Miss Locke, a native of North Carolina, and to them were born four children, George W., the third child, being the father of Thomas J. and J. R., whose sketches here appear. George W. grew to manhood in North Carolina, when he came to Georgia about 1827, a single man, and located in Houston county, where he married Miss Mary McLain in 1828. In 1834 he moved to Randolph county, originally Lee, now Quitman county, and located between the Odchodkee and Pataula creeks, in what is now the North Carolina district. He lived there till his death, May 4, 1875, aged sixty-seven years. His wife survived him, dying in 1882, aged seventy-five years. She was one of the original members of the Union Methodist church, located near the home of her sons. To Mr. Ellis and his wife were born six children: Thomas J., now living near the old homestead; J. R., of Oak Grove, and Martha are the living children, and Elizabeth, Evan and Lucy M. are the deceased. Thomas J. Ellis came to Quitman county with his parents at the age of two years and has lived there since. In 1859 he married Rebecca Gay of Quitman county. At the outbreak of the civil war he joined the Thirty-second Georgia infantry, Capt. Pruden commanding, and saw active service throughout the entire war. He was detailed by the secretary of war of the Confederacy as military conductor, serving in that capacity for a long time. He was discharged April 10, 1865, and returning home, has since engaged in farming and milling. To Mr. and Mrs. Ellis were born the following children: James, George, Thomas, Florence, Claudie, Robert, Glenn and Alva. The mother died in 1879 and Mr. Ellis was again married—his second wife being Ada Lewis, of Randolph county. They have one child, Flossie Lee. Mr. Ellis was tax collector of Quitman county four years, treasurer two years, and at present is one of the county commissioners. He is prominent as a democrat in both local and state politics.

RABUN COUNTY.

FRANKLIN A. BLECKLEY, ordinary, Clayton, Rabun Co., Ga., son of James and Catharine E. (Lootze) Bleckley, was born in Lincoln county, N. C., in 1824. His paternal grandfather, James Bleckley, was a native of Virginia, whence he migrated to and settled in North Carolina. Here, in Lincoln county, Judge Bleckley's father was born in 1803, and reared on the farm. He married Miss Catharine E. Lootze of Burke county, N. C., and, in 1826, moved to Georgia and settled in Rabun county, near Clayton. Eight children were born to them: Franklin A., the subject of this sketch; Logan E., the distinguished ex-chief justice of the supreme court of Georgia, Atlanta; John M., Rabun county; Sylvester, Anderson, S. C.; Mrs. Elizabeth A. Bell, Walhalla, S. C.; Henrietta, deceased; Mrs. Emily Wall, Clayton; James T., deceased. The father died on the old homestead near Clayton, in 1870, and the mother died in 1874. Judge Bleckley's father settled near Clayton when he was about two years old. He was raised on the farm and educated at the academy in Clayton. Mentally alert he was quick to avail himself of every advantage and every opportunity presented to add to his fund of knowledge, which, however, in a frontier country were neither many nor frequent. His principal life-occupation has been farming—any departure from it has been temporary and incidental. His superior intelligence and rare intellectual endowments and moral attributes attracted the attention of his fellow-citizens at an early period of his life, and they exacted service of him to such an extent as he would consent to. Soon after attaining his majority he was elected a justice of the peace, and was successively re-elected for many years. In 1861, and again in 1863, at a called session, he was elected to represent Rabun county in the general assembly; and his wise and conservative influence was felt in committee and on the floor. In 1893, although advanced in age, and no seeker of office, he was called by the people of Rabun county to the very important office of ordinary, defeating his opponent—a very popular and influential citizen—by a very large majority, a result testifying in the strongest possible manner to the estimation in which he is held. His own birth almost contemporaneous with that of the county, he grew with its growth, and watching its development, became an influential factor in promoting that development; and possessing characteristics that win and keep confidence and esteem, it is no wonder he has been and is yet a potential power in the county. In honoring such a man Rabun county honors itself. In 1864 he enlisted in Company F, Eleventh Georgia regiment of cavalry, in which he served, as lieutenant commanding, during the war. With his command he participated in the defense of Atlanta, and after its surrender was in front of the Union forces while "marching through Georgia" until he reached Savannah. From there he went, under Johnston, to Columbia, S. C., where he was when Johnston surrendered. After the war he returned home and resumed his farm-work, success in which has met all his wants and gratified his highest ambition. Judge Bleckley was happily married March 16, 1848, to Miss Sarah E., daughter of Col. Edward Coffee, one of the most distinguished and influential citizens of northeast Georgia, one of the earliest settlers of Rabun county, and during his life represented it many years in both branches of the general assembly. Of the children born to them seven survive: Henrietta C., wife of Russell E. Cannon, Rabun county; Mary E., wife of H. K. Cannon, Rabun county; James E. married Miss Savannah Cannon, Rabun county; Leila M., with "the old folks at home;" Ara V., unmarried; John N., and Benjamin B., both of Anderson, S. C.

REV. ALFRED FOSTER, minister, Dillard, Rabun Co., Ga., son of John and Clarenda (McClure) Foster, was born in Macon county, N. C., Sept. 8, 1873. His grandfather, Samuel Foster, was one of the earliest settlers in Rabun county, where he lived the life of a well-to-do farmer, and died at an advanced age. Mr. Foster's father was born in Rabun county in 1827, where he grew to man's estate, and has seen the region develop from an almost uninhabited wild to what it is to-day. He married his wife in what is now Towns county, and to them seven children were born: Julius; Andrew P.; Martha, wife of A. L. McClure, all living in Macon county, N. C.; Margaret, wife of J. M. Dillard, Grady, Tenn.; Alfred, the subject of this sketch; John, deceased, 1883, leaving a wife and one child, Mary; and Doctor, who also died in 1883. He served in the western (Confederate) army during the late unpleasantness and is now a prominent and popular citizen of Macon county, N. C. Mr. Foster received his primary education at the common schools in the county of his birth, afterward attended Rabun Gap institute, Rabun county, and Franklin high school, and completed his education at the university of North Carolina in 1893. Immediately after his graduation he began the study of theology, which he is now prosecuting earnestly and industriously. June 6, 1891, he was licensed to preach by the western North Carolina Methodist church, and is now discharging the duties of preacher and pastor acceptably and successfully. Pious, studious, self-sacrificing, consecrated and devoted to the work of the Master, he has before him a life of high honor and great usefulness. Rev. Foster was married Oct. 10, 1894, to Miss Fannie, daughter of R. V. and Mary E. Cobb of Gainesville, Ga., and granddaughter of Rev. Alexander Acker of Greenville, S. C., a lady of excellent qualities and an unusual amount of mental force. She received her early training at the Gainesville college and classical finish at the female seminary in the same city. She taught school six years in the public schools of Hall county, and is by nature adapted and destined to be a great and useful worker in all movements promotive of the well-being of children. Her father was first lieutenant in Company D, Twenty-seventh Georgia regiment, during the civil war.

ISAAC NEWTON FOSTER, educator, Burton, Rabun Co., Ga., son of Walton and Rebecca (Bowen) Foster, was born in Towns county, Ga., July 18, 1867. His great-grandfather on his father's side, of Irish-Welsh extraction, William Foster, was a native of North Carolina, and a gentleman of learning and culture. He married Miss Barbara Garner, also of North Carolina, beneath whose soil both rest. His grandfather, Isaac Foster, was born in North Carolina in 1809, was reared a farmer, and continued to be one all his life. He married Miss Lucinda Davis, of Buncombe county, N. C., and migrated to Georgia and settled in what is now Towns county in 1830. During his lifetime he served many years as a justice of the inferior court. He was a well-known and useful citizen, and himself and wife both died in Towns county in 1887. Mr. Foster's father was born in Towns county, where (at Visage) he now lives. He married Miss Rebecca, daughter of Joseph Bowen, also of Towns county, by whom he has had four children: Lucinda, wife of J. C. Swanson; India, wife of A. H. Hampton, Twine, Clay Co., N. C.; Isaac N., the subject of this sketch, and James F., teacher, Rabun county. Mr. Foster's maternal grandfather, Joseph Bowen, was a native of North Carolina, where he was reared and married Miss Mary Keener, and died when Mr. Foster's mother was a five-year-old child. His widow died at Burton in 1883, aged eighty-four years. Mr. Foster attended the common schools of the county when he was growing up, and afterward went to the Hiwassee high school, where in addition to a thorough English classical education, he took a course in the higher mathematics and in Latin and Greek. He next taught school in Towns and Habersham counties until 1889, when he was made principal of Tallulah academy in Rabun county. He has taught here ever since, growing in the public esteem and in reputation, with an increasing patronage every year. Studious and hard-working, and enthusiastically devoted to his vocation, he promises to achieve a brilliant success and attain to honorable distinction in his profession. Of fine natural mental endowments, of superior scholarly attainments—age and opportunities considered—ambitious, affable, and of prepossessing address, he will undoubtedly prove useful as a teacher, and leave his impress on the community and section. Mr. Foster was married Dec. 20, 1891, to Miss Edna, born Feb. 1, 1877, daughter of Martin Filley, of Rabun county.

RANDOLPH COUNTY.

ANDREWS. Among the able and skilled physicians of Cuthbert, Randolph Co., Dr. T. H. Andrews holds an honored and enviable position. He was born in 1846, in Gadsden county, Fla., and is the son of Frederick and Eliza (Odom) Andrews. Frederick Andrews was a native of and grew up in Pulaski county, Ga., and there married his wife. Soon after their marriage they moved to Lee county, where they remained about one year, thence to Randolph county, which was their home for several years. There he served as tax collector of the county, and for awhile taught school and engaged in a mercantile business in Cuthbert. In 1844 he moved his family to Florida, where he died in 1846. He was one of the foremost men of his day, and possessed an excellent education for his time; the result of a quick grasping mind, and wide reading and study. His schooling was meager, but he gained great learning through close application to books. He was a devotee to music and possessed remarkable skill in, and knowledge of this art. Of literary tastes, he was a frequent contributor to the early newspapers and periodicals of the state. He was a captain in the Indian war of 1835-36, and was a democrat of potent influence. After her husband's death Mrs. Andrews returned to Randolph county, Ga., where she resided until her demise at the age of seventy-four years. She was a woman of great intellectuality, and a happy disposition that accorded with her husband's character, and their domestic life was a beautiful example of love and devotion. Her father was James Odom, of Pulaski county, Ga. The Odoms were early settlers of Pulaski county, and her grandfather, James Odom, was a revolutionary soldier, who lived to the age of one hundred and ten years. The family was wealthy and eminent in political and social standing. Six of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Andrews lived to maturity, and of these five are now living: James F., of Early county; D. C., of Randolph county; W. P., of Early county; Mrs. Susan Morgan, of Early county, and Dr. T. H., the subject of this sketch. Warren Andrews, another son, was a member of the Fifty-fourth Georgia regiment, and as a brigade drummer was captured at the battle of the Wilderness and died of smallpox at Rock Island soon after. Dr. T. H. Andrews began the study of medicine in 1869 in the office of Dr. Rodgers, of Columbus, Ga. He attended lectures and was graduated from the university of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, March 12, 1875. His first year of practice was in Decatur county, then he moved to Randolph county, where he has since followed his profession. He located in the winter of 1876-77 on the farm he now owns. He possessed no more than his profession, but with a brave will and great energy he has succeeded so well in life that he can now look out over an estate of 2,500 acres of land, 400 of which is in a high state of cultivation, a large residence and fine out-buildings. Dr. Andrews was married April 27, 1876, to Addie B. Jordan, of Putnam county, a daughter of Wiley B. Jordan of that county. They have had ten children born to them, as follows: Eliza, Sallie B., Susan, Hull, Patti Lee, Birdie Lee, Percifer, Ida, Agnew and a babe. Dr. and Mrs. Andrews are members of the Missionary Baptist church. As a physician and planter he occupied a leading place among citizens of Randolph county, and professionally and socially his standing is first-class.

W. S. ARRINGTON, planter, of Randolph county, is a native of Georgia, and was born in Baldwin county in 1844. His grandfather was Frederick Arrington, of English ancestors, who lived and died in North Carolina. His demise was at an early age, and he left a widow and two children: Hardy and Laronia. Hardy Arrington, when sixteen years old, moved to Washington county, Ga., where he married Mary Smith, a native of that county. Soon afterward they changed to Baldwin county, then to Lee county, where they resided two years, thence to Randolph, and there they settled in the fourth district, where a year later (1845) Mr. Arrington died, in his thirty-third year. The widow was married again to Solomon Owens, who is yet living. By the first marriage she was the mother of James Arrington, who went west before the war and died in service; Lorinia, wife of Hardy Hay, living in Texas; Georgiana, wife of Thomas Newton, now deceased; Laronia, who died single, and Mr. W. S. Arrington, the subject of this sketch. By her marriage with Mr. Owens were born: Jessie Owens, and Mary, wife of Richard Stewart, living, and John, deceased. Mrs. Owens remained at the old homestead until her death in 1887, aged seventy years. She was a devoted wife, a kind mother and a sincere Christian. The subject of this sketch was but a small boy when his parents came to Randolph county, and there he grew to his majority. He farmed the two years immediately preceding the war, and when the tocsin of the civil strife was sounded he left the furrow to enlist with the army of the south. March 12, 1862, he joined the famed Company H, Fifty-first Georgia volunteers, under Capt. Balls, and served until wounded in the Shenadoah Valley campaign, at Cedar creek, September, 1864. His company was in Longstreet's corps, Lee's army of North Virginia, and was in the thickest of the fighting, at the second battle of Manassas, at South Mountain, Md., Sharpsburg, Fredericksburg, the Wilderness and Gettysburg. Then he was back to Funkstown, Md., Cold Harbor and Petersburg. The corps went to Knoxville, Tenn., then back to Lee's army. At the battle of Cedar Creek, when Mr. J. T. Bailey, member of Company H, and from Randolph county, was wounded while carrying the colors, it was Mr. Arrington who took them from his hands. A few minutes later he, in turn, was shot through the side and forced to give up the flag to a comrade. He was taken prisoner on the field of battle and sent to a hospital in Baltimore, and upon his recovery was released and sent home, in March, 1865. Mr. Arrington was married to Martha Lee, a native of Sumter county, and daughter of Jefferson Lee. The father died in Sumter county, leaving three daughters and one son. The latter was Thomas Lee, who was killed during the war. The daughters were: Caroline, wife of John Belcher, now living in Florida; Martha and Sylvania, now deceased, who was married to a Mr. Raegen. Mrs. Jefferson Lee died about 1879. Mrs. Arrington, as a girl, attended the schools of Sumter county and at Americus, and when her mother moved to Randolph county entered the schools of that county and finished her education. Mr. and Mrs. Arrington have had born to them two children: Alice, wife of A. E. Mazell, and Ionaci. The latter attended school at La Grange and spent three years at Eufaula, Ala., under the instruction of Miss Simmons. She is accomplished in the science of music and is now in the Shellman high school. The family are members of the Baptist church. After the war Mr. Arrington devoted himself to farming. He was interested in a merchandise business at Shellman for about eight years, the same being looked after by his son-in-law, Mr. Mazell. Mr. Arrington owns several fine farms in Randolph county and has 1,000 acres of land under cultivation. He is familiarly known to his friends as "General," a title given him in the army by his companions, who believed that his bravery was of a caliber commensurate with the appellation.

J. T. BAILEY, planter, Springvale, Randolph Co., Ga., was born in the county in which he now resides, in 1839. His father was Zachariah Bailey, a native of Virginia, born near Lynchburg, in 1793. He came to Georgia when grown and settled in Morgan county, where he married Berthia Grier. She was born in 1804 and was the daughter of James Grier. (His father was born in Ireland.) They resided in Morgan county until about 1831, when they moved to Randolph county, and lived for a time near Cuthbert, where he engaged in farming. He then moved to the place where his son, the subject of this sketch, now lives. There he purchased a tract of woodland and built a log house, where he lived a year, removing to a site on the opposite side, where he built a home, in which he died in 1845. He was a soldier in the Indian war of 1835-36, and was an active politician, being a whig. He served as sheriff and held other positions in his county. The wife, who was an excellent woman and a grand helpmate to her husband, died in 1864. She was a Christian lady and a strict member of the Methodist church. To this union were born six children: Mrs. Elizabeth Smith, who lives in Clayton, Ala.; Mrs. Mary Key, deceased; Mrs. Sarah Harris; J. T., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Mildred Sharp, of Dawson, Ga., and Zacharias, of Robinson county, Texas. Mr. J. T. Bailey was brought up on the farm where he now lives, and at the outbreak of the war he enlisted in Company H, Fifty-first Georgia regiment, volunteers, army of Virginia. He was in Longstreet's corps of Lee's army, and was in the battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Chickamauga, Knoxville, in 1863, and in 1864 was in the battles of the Wilderness and in all the engagements of his corps from Spottsylvania on to Petersburg and to Cedar Creek. At the last place he had his left arm shattered with a minie ball, and upon his recovery was discharged from the service. He returned home, where he has since been engaged in farming. He went out as a private, and was promoted to ensign (color-bearer), with the rank of first lieutenant. Mr. Bailey was married, in 1872, to Mary Jenkins, of Quitman county, a daughter of Leroy Jenkins, a native of Georgia and an early settler of Randolph county. Mrs. Bailey was born and raised in Randolph county. They have seven children, all at home: Mary, J. T., Annie, Charles, Sarah, Lillie, and Maud. Mrs. Bailey is an active member of the Methodist church. Mr. Bailey is a Democrat in politics, and takes quite an interest in county affairs. Mr. Bailey and family reside in a pleasant home about eight miles from Cuthbert. He is a practical and substantial farmer and is well informed on all practical subjects. He is an industrious and thrifty man and a good manager, and is very highly esteemed by all who know him, for his uprightness and purity of character.

DR. W. W. BINION, planter and physician, Benevolence, was born in Webster county in 1860, and is the son of Rev. M. B. L. and S. T. (Lasseter) Binion, natives of Hancock and Webster counties respectively. Rev. Binion was born in 1836, in Terrell county, and his wife died in August, 1881, aged thirty-five years. Rev. Binion entered the ministry of the Missionary Baptist church in early life, and has occupied the pulpits in southwestern Georgia for nearly forty years. He is a graduate of the Mercer university and a man of fine scholarly attainments. He is still actively engaged in the ministry, and his charge includes the churches of Benevolence, Bronwood, New Bethel, and Chickasawa. Rev. Binion has served the Bronwood church for over twenty years. He is a popular minister and man, and one of the ablest preachers in the state. He lives on a big farm near Parrott. To Rev. Binion and wife were born ten children: Dr. W. W., B. L., of Hancock county; Minnie L., Hancock county; Mrs. Anna May Gonn, of Cuthbert; Mrs. Nettie J. Keese, of Benevolence; S., of Terrell county; Robert B., of Hancock county, and three deceased. Rev. Binion was married, the second time, to Miss Susan Massie, of Marshallville, Ga. Dr. Binion was brought up on the farm and educated in the schools of Webster county. In 1882 he commenced reading medicine under Dr. A. K. Patterson, of Weston, Webster county. He attended lectures at Atlanta, from which place he was graduated in 1885, and began practice in the neighborhood in which he now lives. He has been remarkably successful from a professional as well as a financial standpoint, and enjoys a reputation ranking him in the front of the medical profession. In addition to a large practice, he has farming interests, all of which is the result of his ten years' labor in Benevolence. The doctor was married in January, 1886, to Ida L. Harris, of Marion county, daughter of a prominent planter, now deceased. Mrs. Binion was educated in the high schools of Marion county and at Weston. She died in 1890, aged twenty-two years, leaving one child, Clay. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Dr. Binion belongs to the Baptist church, and in politics is a democrat.

WILLIAM C. BYNUM. One of the most popular men connected with politics in Randolph county is William C. Bynum, sheriff. He is what is known as a born politician, that is, he has the happy faculty of always making and never losing friends. He is now serving his fourth term as occupant of one of the best offices in the county's gift, with a favorable outlook for a still further hold on it. William C. Bynum was born and reared in Randolph county and is the son of Reuben and Emma (Collins) Bynum. He was educated in the public schools, and at the age of twenty entered into business for himself at Shellman. He was first elected sheriff of Randolph county in 1889, and three times since then have the people voted him the man for the place. Outside of his official duties he has large farming interests and conducts a big livery stable in Shellman. Mr. Bynum was married to Fanny Kleckley, a daughter of Joseph Kleckley of Macon county, Feb. 25, 1876. They have one child—J. Carlton. Mr. Bynum is a Mason and belongs to the Knights of Pythias fraternity. He is a splendidly equipped business man and a citizen who is a credit to the county.

DEAN. The Dean family hold an honored place in Georgia's history, and in peace or war the name is always to be found. Thomas Dean was a native of Virginia and settled in North Carolina near Raleigh, where he raised a family. He was with the colonies in the struggle for independence, and served them by speech and sword. About 1820, when well up in years, he followed a brother, John, who were previously settled in Talbot county, Ga., and moving to this state located in Jasper county. He had the following children: Wiley, Henry, John, William, Jane, who married Warren Ambers; Nancy, married to William Alexander; Candis, wife of James Alexander; Mrs. Sarah Williamson; Mrs. Elizabeth Kendrick. All these had families and settled in Georgia but William, who migrated to Texas. Henry, the second son, born near Raleigh, N. C., in 1802, came with his parents to this state. When about reaching manhood he left home and took up life in Harris county. Here he married Melinda Richardson, a native of Jasper county, Ga., and a daughter of Robert Richardson, an old settler and farmer of that county. He served in the Indian wars, and for years was an influential citizen and big farmer of Harris county. He began life without capital or help, and through his own industry and habits accumulated much property. At the breaking out of the war he owned 100 slaves. He died in 1886, leaving a large estate in Harris county. Before the war he was an active whig, and afterward a democrat. Mrs. Henry Dean died, aged forty-five years. To them were born ten children, five of whom are living, as follows: T. E., living near Shellman; Mrs. Valonia Hewell, of Chattahoochee county; Robert P., of Talbotton, Talbot Co.; Mrs. Lizzie Miller, of Harris county; and O. Z. Dean. Mr. O. Z. Dean, the subject of this sketch, was the youngest child, and born in Harris county in 1850, where he attended the public schools. In 1868 his father purchased a large tract of land around Shellman and the son was sent there to look after it. In 1872 he came to Randolph county to live permanently, and took up his home on a fine tract of 600 acres. This land is almost entirely level, well cultivated and equal to any in this section of the state. Mr. Dean married Tallulah C. Phelps of Randolph county, but a native of Calhoun county. She is the daughter of Z. E. Phelps, a native of the Carolinas. They have six children: Birdie, wife of J. A. Martin, a merchant of Shellman; Estelle, Henry, Phelps, Pearl, and O. Z., all at home. Mr. and Mrs. Dean are conscientious members of the Baptist church and he is a democrat. They live in a fine home in Shellman and he is one of the prominent citizens of the town.

GEORGE W. DOZIER, mayor of Coleman, and a leading farmer of Randolph county, was born in Sumter county in 1838, and descends from a family well known throughout the state of Georgia. James and Nancy (Moore) Dozier were among the early settlers of Sumter county, coming from North Carolina, of which state they were natives. They located northwest of Americus and lived there until their death. James Dozier was a soldier in the war of 1812, and the wars with the Indians in Florida and Georgia in 1835-36. He was a well-to-do farmer, a democrat in politics, and a warm personal friend of Andrew Jackson. He died in the sixties, at the age of seventy-seven, his wife having died a few years before him. They were respected members of the Primitive Baptist church. To them were born the following named children, all of whom lived to maturity: Edmond, died at the age of sixty years, in Georgia; Nancy, wife of James M. N. Lowe, died aged sixty-one years, at the home of Mr. Geo. W. Dozier; L. R., who settled in Clay county late in life, and there died; and John B. John B., the third child, was born and attained his majority in Sumter county. His wife was Jane Ogletree, a native of Georgia. They had two children, who, upon the parents' death in 1847, went to live with an uncle, L. R. Dozier. The children were James L. and George W., the last-named the subject of this sketch. In 1853 they moved to Clay county, and both attended school there. James L., the elder, finally located in Dougherty county, while G. W. lived in both Clay and Dougherty until 1870, when he settled on the Bramlett place in Randolph county, where he resided until 1889, when he moved to Coleman, in order to educate his children. Mr. Dozier married Mary Jane Jones, the daughter of Willis Jones of Lee county. She was born in Louisiana on Bayou Bartholomew, and was but a child when her parents moved to Lee county. She was educated at Dover, Terrell county. To Mr. and Mrs. Dozier have been born seven children, as follows: James F., a graduate of the Agricultural college at Cuthbert; William Mercer, George W., Jr., Mary Eveline, Mabel Clarence, Raburn R., and Willis C., deceased. Mr. Dozier has taken pleasure in giving his children the benefit of good schools and possesses justifiable pride in their educational accomplishments. Mr. Dozier was a brave soldier in the ranks of the gray, and no private who entered either army has a better record. He enlisted in 1861 in Company H, Fifty-first Georgia volunteers, and served until the surrender. He was in the second battle of Manassas, at Chancellorsville and connecting engagements, and the great battle of Gettysburg, at Frenchtown, Knoxville, Tenn., the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, and Petersburg. On April 6, 1865, he was taken prisoner at Farmville, Va., and was held until July 26 at Point Lookout, Md. Mr. Dozier for two years was color-bearer of his regiment, with the rank of first lieutenant, and his war history is replete with narrow escapes and thrilling experiences. Since the war he has devoted himself to farming, and for awhile was engaged in merchandising at Coleman. He owns a fine farm ten miles south of Cuthbert, besides good residence and store property in Coleman. He is a democrat and a Mason, high in the honors of that fraternity. The family are all members of the Missionary Baptist church, and are highly esteemed by all who enjoy their acquaintance.

DR. W. S. DUDLEY, county school commissioner and retired physician of Cuthbert, Ga., was born in St. Matthew's parish, S. C., and is a great-grandson of John Adam Treutlen, the first elected governor of Georgia, and a hero in the great struggle for independence. John Adam Treutlen was first appointed governor and afterward elected by the people, serving until Jan. 8, 1778. He was a man of great personal courage and splendid executive ability. He and a brother, Capt. Frederick Treuitlen, came to America together in the early settlement of the colony. Their father started with them, but died and was buried at sea. The Treuitlens came from England to Georgia and located at a point on the river above Savannah, in the neighborhood of a place known as Sister's ferry. Unable to find a church of his denomination Mr. Treuitlen, soon after coming here, united with the German Lutheran church at Ebenezer. His death was most deplorable, he being assassinated by the British and their sympathizers, and his body drawn and quartered, in the presence of his family. This tragic event followed a systematic persecution he had been subjected to, on account of his loyalty to the cause of the patriots. Capt. Frederick Treuitlen and wife are buried at St. Simon's island, and have many descendants. Gov. Treuitlen had several children, John, Christian, and a daughter, Mary. The latter married Edward Dudley, who was a native of England, and a man of wealth and scholarly accomplishments. He was assassinated in St. Matthew's parish, S. C., just after the revolutionary war, during the period of lawlessness which then prevailed. The wife lived to an old age and died in St. Matthew's. They had born to them the following children: William John, who died without issue; Guilford, who married Miss Gilliland, of Savannah; Mary, wife of A. Amaker; Dorothea; and Edward. The last mentioned died at the early age of twenty-three years, leaving two sons: Walter Stafford and Rinaldo Pearce. The mother of these children was Elizabeth Kennedy, of Scotch-Irish descent. She was born in Effingham county, Ga., and there reared and educated. She was married the second time to John G. Morel, by whom she had a large family of children, eight of whom lived to be grown. She died in 1857, at a ripe old age. Walter Stafford Dudley, at ten years of age, was sent to live with his guardian, Adam Amaker, in South Carolina, while his mother returned to her parents in Georgia. He attended the public schools, then went to a literary school at Cokesbury, S. C., and next to Citadel academy, the military school of South Carolina. This thorough training of mind and body well prepared him for the active and useful life he has since followed. He studied medicine and was graduated from the Charleston Medical college in 1854. He began his professional practice in Orangeburgh, S. C., and continued it for five years, when ill health obliged him to remove to his plantation in the country. During the civil war he raised several companies for service, and a number of times went to Charleston to enter the service. After the war he engaged in teaching, and in 1867 he moved to Cuthbert. In 1880 he accepted the presidency of the Middle Georgia Agricultural and Military college at Milledgeville, which position he occupied until 1884, when he went to Jackson, Miss., where he taught for a short time in a female college. He lived in Tennessee and Florida for a while, and then returned to Cuthbert, where he holds the position of county school commissioner, and is engaged in the insurance business. Dr. Dudley was married to Miss Elliott, a native of South Carolina, by whom he had three daughters: Mrs. Mary Bailey, of Florida; Mrs. Annie Taylor, of South Carolina; and Mrs. Emma Thomas, of Tampa, Fla. His first wife died in 1868. Dr. Dudley's second wife was Sarah Miller, of Charleston, S. C. He was the third time wedded to Miss Mary Willson, of Tallahassee, Fla., and to them have been born two children: David, and Catharine Trueitlen. The family are communicants of the Presbyterian church. Dr. Dudley is one of the most widely known educators in the state, and his superior mental acquirements have given him a position in the front rank of his profession.

H. B. ELDER, planter, of Randolph county, is a son of William N. and Catharine (Jackson) Elder, and was born Feb. 9, 1822. His father was a native of Virginia, and his mother was from South Carolina, and both lived to a good old age. Mr. Elder was brought up on the farm and picked up his education in odd hours he found a chance to spend in the old log school house. When the war broke out he was conducting a tannery in Monroe county, and the Confederate government needing tanners as well as soldiers, he was exempted from service. He ran the tannery and a general merchandise store during the whole of the war, and for years afterward. He has for a number of years operated a large stone quarry on his farm, and the material there produced is in great demand all over the state. Mr. Elder was married to Susan Reading, a daughter of P. D. Reading, and they have had born to them eight children, of whom only three are living: W. C., Emma K., and Herbert P. Mr. Elder is a conscientious member of the Methodist church and a staunch democrat in politics. He owns a fine farm, to which he gives his attention, and where he lives in happy retirement from an active, busy life, amidst his family and grandchildren.

WILLIAM D. HAMMOCK. For many years identified with the Baptist church as a minister of the gospel and its teachings, Rev. William D. Hammock, is one of the prominent citizens of Randolph county. His father, William Hammock, was from Twiggs county, Ga., and was the son of Paschal Hammock, who descended from one of two brothers, who came from Ireland and settled in Georgia, probably in Savannah. Paschal followed farming and lived to be eighty-four years old, dying in Coleman in 1865, having come to Randolph county just before the war. He was twice married, William Hammock being by the first marriage, and there being two other sons and two daughters. By the second marriage there were three daughters and one son. Paschal Hammock was quite well educated, and at one time was wealthy. He was a democrat in politics and a devoted member of the Baptist church. William Hammock, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born in the spring of 1814, and was married to Barbara Woolley, a native of South Carolina, born Aug. 3, 1814. They were wedded in 1833, and in 1835 settled in Randolph county, near what is now known as Cotton hill. In 1836 he had to leave his family to go into the war against the Indians, and as a precaution against danger, they were sent to Twiggs county. In 1837 he returned near Coleman, and purchased a farm, where he continued to live until his death, in 1863. This was caused by exposure, while he was visiting his sons who were in the army and stationed at Cumberland gap. He was a self-made man, whose motto was: "Do right, and attend to your own business." He accumulated considerable property, and left a large estate at his death. He was a democrat, but paid little attention to politics, his farming interests and domestic duties occupying his time. He was a genius in some things, and while never learned as a carpenter, he was able to build with his own hands a big part of the old farm-place house, which is now occupied by Rev. Mr. Hammock. His wife died Feb. 2, 1894. Familiarly known to the present generation as "Aunt Hammock," her demise was the cause of much genuine regret. She was a devout member of the church, and the mother of nine children: Mrs. C. E. Garrett, Bluffton, Ga.; James Paschal, who died in 1862 at Knoxville, Tenn.; Zilpha E., the wife of S. E. Davis, a Primitive Baptist minister, of Early county, Ga.; William D., the subject of this sketch; John G., of Worth county, Ga.; Mrs. Anna Singleton, of Bluffton, Ga.; Daniel W., of the firm of Hammock & Rish, Coleman, Ga.; Mrs. Riley F. Moore, of Randolph county; Joseph J.; James, who died at Knoxville, in the war, and left a wife and one child—Lula. The latter died at an early age, and the mother now lives in Montezuma, Ga. The father belonged to Company G, Fifty-fifth Georgia regiment. Rev. William D. Hammock was born on the old home place, within a mile of where he now lives, April 13, 1842. He was educated in the local schools, and in April, 1862, responded to the call of the south for troops to repel invaders, and enlisted in Company G, which was later assigned to the Fifty-fifth Georgia regiment. They did service in Tennessee and Kentucky till the capture of the company at Cumberland gap. Rev. Hammock was in Knoxville, Tenn., sick, when his company was captured. He afterward returned to a place near Chickamauga, and after the battle was sent by Gen. Bragg to report to Col. A. W. Pierson, at Atlanta. In February, 1864, he went to Andersonville, and was connected with Capt. Wirtz, of the prison, till April 7, 1865. After the war he stayed at home with his mother, and on Nov. 10, 1870, he married Victoria J. Lanier, a native of Early county, and a daughter of John Lanier, planter, of Early county. Her father died when she was a babe, and her mother and children moved to a place adjoining Mrs. Hammock's, where she grew to womanhood. She died Feb. 4, 1887, a good Christian mother and a helpful, loving wife. The issue of this union was one child, Eva, now the wife of W. H. Jenkins, of Coleman. She has one son—William. In August, 1888, Rev. Hammock was married again, to Julia Jenkins, daughter of John H. Jenkins, of Clay county. Mr. Jenkins now lives in Coleman. Mrs. Hammock was born and reared in the house in which she was married, and was educated in the schools of Fort Gaines. They have one child, Willie D. Mr. and Mrs. Hammock belong to the Baptist church, of which Mr. Hammock is an elder. He was ordained June, 1886, to preach the gospel, and has since been actively engaged in the pulpit most of his time. His charge is at present the Mount Zion, Gilliard and Mount Vernon churches of Clay county, and the Friendship church of Randolph county. He has been a member of the Baptist church since he was sixteen years old. Rev. Hammond is a Mason, high in the degrees of the fraternity. He owns a fine farm two miles from Coleman, which he cultivates, and where he lives. In 1865 Mr. Hammock was summoned to Washington, D. C., in connection with the noted case of Capt. Wirtz, the officer in command of Andersonville prison during the war.

S. T. JENKINS, now of Denver, Colo., son of W. C. Jenkins and Penelope McLendon, was born at Indian Springs, Ga., June 14, 1838. When two years of age his father died, and his mother moved to Randolph county, Ga., where he was raised a country boy, and graduated at Graystown college, Kentucky, in 1860. He chose teaching as a profession, and in May, 1861, turned over a selected school of forty boys in Cuthbert, Ga., to the Presbyterian minister, and entered the army in the Fifth Georgia regiment. He was afterward an officer in the Forty-seventh Georgia until the last year of the war, when his health failing, he was placed in the secret service of the Confederacy in Florida, where he was engaged until the war closed. In a few days after the war closed he was merchandising in Cuthbert on a capital of less than $10, doing his own cooking (in a sardine box) and working night and day. In three months he had made $1,500, selling no whisky and no drugs. In two years he had an almost unlimited credit, established by buying and selling for cash only, and was worth $20,000. In 1867 he was forced into the credit business, and had plenty of it, but cotton dropped from thirty-seven cents to seven cents per pound, and he was overwhelmed with bankrupt notices. He compromised with his debtors, but refused to do so with his creditors at an offer of fifty cents on the dollar. But, instead, he paid all the principal and interest—the latter amounting to more than $10,000—for he was over twenty years in cancelling his indebtedness. Seeing that all cotton was destruction, he began the publication of "The Southern Enterprise," in Atlanta, Ga., "Diversified Industries" as his motto, and this was the first paper in the south to publish a regular immigration department. Four years of the best energies of his life were devoted to this work, during which time he was practicing what he preached, on Harvest Home, his celebrated fruit farm near Cuthbert, Ga.; and it is gratifying to his friends that he has lived to see Harvest Home peaches famous throughout the United States, and the palm yielded to his native section for growing the finest peaches in the world. Twelve years ago he moved to Baltimore and engaged in the law and collection business and in the manufacturing ripe fruit carriers, a novel invention of his own, in which ripe peaches can be shipped anywhere without ice, some having been successfully sent to Europe. Three years ago he was compelled to leave the south and make his home in the far northwest, among strangers, in search of health for a dear son. Mr. Jenkins was married to Miss Nannie T. Jackson, of Virginia, in 1866, and they have three children—Claude J., Pearl K., and Robbie. All of his family are members of the Baptist church, and he is a master Mason. Mr. Jenkins' fruit farm, Harvest Home, is all the business tie he has to his dear native south.

PETER E. KEESE, merchant, Benevolence, Randolph county, was born in this county, and was the son of E. H. and Henrietta (Kingston) Keese. Mr. E. H. Keese, a prominent planter of Randolph county, and honored citizen, was born Nov. 10, 1826, in South Carolina, near the Georgia line. His parents died when he was a small boy, and left him with an uncle, with whom he remained for a short time, when he came to Georgia and found a place in Randolph county, where he went to work for wages, laboring six months and going to school the other six. He also followed the business of a peddler, and sold tinware and domestic goods to the housewife and mother. He married Henrietta Kingston, a maiden of Randolph county, having been born near Benevolence about 1836. After his marriage he purchased 100 acres of land, two and one-half miles north of Benevolence, where he resided till his death, May 21, 1894, except one year, during which he sold his place and purchased one adjoining, upon which he resided a few months, only to buy back the home place. He was an ardent worker in his church—Baptist—and one of its most liberal supporters. He united with the church in 1852 and was a strict member up to the end of his life. As a husband and father he was a noble example. He was affectionate as well as genial, and possessed all those traits of character which go to make a home pleasant and attractive. He was a man who cherished only the kindest feelings toward his fellow-men, whatever their grade, condition or race. To do good was his aim in life. Place, position, power, honor or worldly glory never entered his mind. Only a few knew his true worth, and only his most intimate friends knew what a peerless character was covered by an exterior of unassuming simplicity. He was a beloved Christian gentleman. He took no part in politics, more than to exercise the right of suffrage, but was a staunch democrat. He served in the state militia for a while during the late war. He was quite successful in business, and at the time of his death left quite a large fortune. To Mr. and Mrs. Keese were-born eleven children, as follows: Rev. A. E., of Bowman, Ga., president of the Gibson institute; Mrs. Mollie E. Mitchiner, who lives near Dawson; Peter E., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Sarah E. Harris, Benevolence, Ga.; Mrs. Theodosia Graham, of Fort Gaines, Ga.; Mrs. Emma F. Ward, on the old home place; Mrs. Robert Ellen Crozier, living near Benevolence; H. L., Benevolence; W. S., teaching school at Bowman; Miss Alma E., at school at Bowman; Johnnie. Mrs. Keese was a devoted member of the Baptist church, a good Christian and a loving mother. She died in June, 1894, aged fifty-eight years. Mr. Peter E. Keese lived on the home place with his parents until after he reached his majority. His education was obtained in the schools in Benevolence and Fort Gaines. When twenty-four years old he moved to Benevolence and engaged in merchandising, at the same time farming. He has been twice married. His first wife was Susan Wade, daughter of John Wade, of Hancock county. She was born in Randolph county, but when a child her parents moved to Hancock county, where she grew up. She was an excellent woman and a conscientious Christian, and her death, but two months after her marriage, was deeply lamented. His second wife was Irene L. Wiggins, born in Fort Valley, Houston Co., Ga., and the daughter of William A. Wiggins, now deceased. They have one child—Lillian Keese. Mr. and Mrs. Keese are members of the Baptist church. In politics he is a democrat. Mr. Keese is now a partner in the firm of Perryman & Keese, general merchandise, Benevolence. He has a pleasant home in that promising little town, where he stands high as a citizen and business man.

J. J. McDONALD. The McDonald family, which has achieved much prominence in the annals of Georgia's history, descends from the McDonald who was born on the isle of Skye, Scotland, and coming to America, settled at Fayetteville, N. C. There a son, John, was born and grew to manhood. He married a Miss Shaw, a native of that state, and with his family came to Georgia and located in Screven county, from which he afterward removed to Randolph county. He was among its first settlers, was a farmer, an old-line whig and a strict member of the Presbyterian church. He died about five years after taking up his residence in Randolph county, leaving his wife, who survived him many years. They were blessed with five children: Edward, now deceased; Archie, who settled in Mississippi, where he died; Mrs. Dollie Smith, of Randolph county; Mrs. Abbie Cheshire, now deceased, and Mrs. Catherine Ivy, who lives in Randolph county. Edward McDonald, the eldest of these children, was born in 1812, and died in December, 1878. He came from North Carolina with his parents and commenced life as a clerk for a Mr. Buchanan, one of the first merchants of Cuthbert, and was at times employed by Jesse B. Key and John McKay Gunn. He continued in this capacity till the building of the railroad to Cuthbert, when he opened a cotton warehouse and engaged in buying and selling cotton. He was very successful in his business affairs and acquired much wealth. He was opposed to secession, but when the state withdrew from the Union he was quick to respond to duty in defense of home and property rights. He was very charitable and liberal with his means, and was a friend to nearly every one. He was often called on before the war for help in the way of indorsements of obligations. At the close of the war he found himself impoverished, and just where he had started many years before. With a new will he began business again, and opened his warehouse. He had much to contend with, and was frequently imposed on by friends, by whom he lost much money; still he persevered and regained a goodly portion of his previous accumulations. Mr. McDonald was a notary public for many years, at one time clerk of the superior court of Randolph county, and was also a justice of the inferior court. He was made a member of the masonic order early in life, and derived much pleasure from the associations he there formed. Like his parents, he was a regular attendant and a member of the Presbyterian church. Previous to the war he was active in behalf of the whig party, but in later years was a firm democrat. Mr. McDonald was a conspicuous figure in business circles in his day, and was a public-spirited citizen, who did much to rebuild his city and county. In private life he was the most companionable of men. He married Eliza Hannah Ross, who was born in Laurens county, Ga., and was the daughter of James L. Ross, a native of North Carolina, but whose progenitors came from Scotland. Some members of the family came to Georgia, and the name became well known throughout the state. Eliza Hannah McDonald was born in 1825, and died aged sixty-six years. She was a woman possessed of the most striking traits of Christian character, and was loved by all who enjoyed the privilege of her acquaintance. She was the mother of nine children: James J., the subject of this sketch; Edward, cashier of the Cuthbert national bank; Mrs. Mollie Baldwin, Mrs. Mattie K. Lumlin, Miss Nettie; George, president of Cuthbert bank; Ross, Floyd, and Lilah, who died in youth. Mr. James J. McDonald, the eldest son—the subject of this sketch—was born Feb. 12, 1845, in Randolph county, where he attended school till the breaking out of the late war, when he enlisted as a private in Company A of the Second Georgia cavalry, serving throughout the struggle. When his colonel, C. C. Crews, was made a brigade commander he acted as aide-de-camp until the war closed. His first battle was Murfreesboro, Tenn.; then Perryville, Ky., and then at Murfreesboro again. He was on Gen. Crews' staff when Stoneman was captured in Georgia. When peace was declared Mr. McDonald returned to his home, Cuthbert, and engaged in the drug business, which he conducted until about 1872. Since that time he has turned his attention to farming and banking and dealing in stocks, bonds, lands, etc. He is now one of the largest planters in southern Georgia, owning vast estates in Randolph and Calhoun counties, and is a large shareholder in the bank of Cuthbert. Mr. McDonald is a prosperous business man, and his career, crowned with rare success, has been achieved by fair and honorable methods. He has ever held his honor sacred, and every obligation he assumed was faithfully carried out. He possesses a remarkably clear and well poised judgment, and is seldom in error in any business project he has carefully investigated. Through every moment of his business and private life there has shone a rigid and unflinching integrity, which has never yielded to any stress of circumstances, and was never led by any plausible consideration of policy. He is a free giver to deserving charity, and a friend of the needy. The allurements of political life have no charm for him, and beyond the discharge of the duty every private citizen owes to public affairs, he takes but little part in politics, though a staunch democrat. With the exception of serving in the general assembly from Randolph county in 1877-78, he never held an office. Mr. McDonald was married, May 3, 1866, to Eudora L. daughter of John W. and Sarah B. (Bailey) Harris, of Randolph county. They have had born to them three children: John H., who died aged two years; Eva Gertrude, who died at Wesleyan Female college, at Macon, July 21, 1887, aged seventeen years, and Annie, who married John W. Drewry, and lives in Cuthbert, Ga. The family are members of the Methodist church, and Mr. McDonald, like his father, is an eminent member of the masonic order. They live in a beautiful home in Cuthbert, surrounded by all the comforts of life.

J. H. MANRY, merchant and planter, Bethel, Randolph Co., was born in Early county in 1841, and is the son of William and Ann (Collier) Manry. William Manry was a native of Georgia, born Dec. 17, 1820, and settled near Blakely, Early Co., when the county was infested by Indians. He moved his family to Calhoun county in 1849 and located near the Randolph county line, not far from the present residence of J. H. Manry. Here he lived until his death in 1886. In early life he was a mechanic, and worked at his trade in connection with farming. Later he gave his entire attention to farming with gratifying success. He was an open, whole-souled man, born to pour sunshine into the world and make others happy. Of a generous nature, liberal to a fault, kind and considerate, he was a friend of everybody. He was a hard worker; but always found time to enjoy the society of his large and happy family, to whom he was impressively devoted. Mrs. Manry was born May 10, 1818, and died Aug. 23, 1865. She and her husband were consistent members of the Missionary Baptist church. To them were born eight children, seven of whom were sons. Of the children five are living: J. H., the subject of this sketch; J. B., a farmer of Calhoun county; William, Jr., of Calhoun county; Simon W., Calhoun county; Penelope, of Calhoun county. All the deceased children were sons, and two of them were lost in the battle of Sharpsburg. Benjamin F., eighteen years old, was killed in this battle. He was a member of Company E, Fifty-first Georgia regiment, to which company his brother, John B., also belonged. The latter was known to enter into the conflict and was probably killed and his body buried among the unidentified dead, as nothing as ever been heard from him since. Joseph is the third dead son. Mr. Manry was the second time married to Mrs. Martha A. Culbrath, a native of Alabama. They had four children: B. Franklin, Easter, Belle and Sidar, all of whom live in Calhoun county. Mr. J. H. Manry, the eldest son of William Manry, was reared on the farm and educated in the common schools. At eighteen years of age he commenced life for himself as overseer for Benjamin Hodge, of Calhoun county. He had just settled on part of the old home place when the call for volunteers for the war was made. He enlisted in Company E, Fifty-first Georgia regiment, and was placed in Gen. Longstreet's corps. He was in the thickest of the battle of Sharpsburg, and at the Wilderness was disabled by a piece of shell which incapacitated him for duty for a few days. He refused to go to the hospital, however, and was soon back in the ranks. The shell which struck him killed seven of his comrades, including the color-bearer of the regiment. He was in many skirmishes, seeing active service all the time he was out. At Gettysburg he was taken prisoner and confined sixteen months at Point Lookout, Md., and four months at Fort Delaware. While in prison he waited upon one hundred of his sick comrades, and during the scourge of smallpox handled thirty-six cases. Mr. Manry says his stay in prison, compared with the experience of some others, was pleasant, and the greatest exception was when he was handcuffed, two hours of which was for laughing. During his confinement he helped provide for the comforts of his sick comrades by making finger rings of bone, which he found sale for at one dollar each. He was finally sent home on a parole for forty days, and when he started back the army had surrendered, so he returned to his parents' home and resumed farming. Mr. Manry was married in 1862 to Easter O. Saxon, a native of Randolph county. She was born Jan. 3, 1843, and was a daughter of Richmond and Jane (Martin) Saxon, early settlers of Randolph county, where she was reared and educated. They have had fourteen children, those living being John B., Albany, Ga.; Mrs. Nannie Bynum, living near Shelman, Randolph Co.; Mrs. Mary Webb, of Calhoun county; Mrs. Dosea Wiggins, Calhoun county; Miss Sarah, at home; Mrs. Etta Grubbs, living on the old home place with her parents; Richmond A.; Miss Lula; J. H., Jr.; Miss Lydia and Bessie. Those deceased are Mrs. Ida Taylor, Minnie and a baby boy. Mr. Manry settled in Randolph county in 1868, near where he now lives, at New Bethel. He conducts a general merchandising establishment there, and in connection with his farm has a gin and mill. He owns about 1,800 acres of land, 1,100 of which are improved, all the result of his own energy and industrious habits. When he returned from the war he had nothing to commence life with except his will. Mr. Manry, wife and family are members of the Baptist church, of which he is one of the deacons. He has belonged to this church since he was fifteen years of age. In politics he is a democrat, and while he has never aspired to office, he takes a very active interest in the welfare of his party. He is broad-minded and liberal and of sympathetic and generous disposition, characteristics that have made him justly popular and influential among his fellow-citizens. His success has been due not only to his natural fine ability as a business man, but to his integrity and fair dealing as well.

REV. JOHN MARTIN, minister of the gospel and planter, of Randolph county, is one of the oldest settlers now living in this county, having resided here continuously since 1831, except one year spent in Stewart county. Mr. Martin was born Jan. 3, 1821, in the Union district, S. C., and was the son of James and Hester (Bogan) Martin, natives of South Carolina and of Irish parentage. Robert Martin, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, and his wife, Polly, were born in Ireland, and came to this country before the revolutionary war, in which he served as a soldier. He had a brother, who also came over at the same time and settled in the palmetto state. He, too, was in the patriot army, and while making his escape from the British troops was forced to swim a river. In doing so he was shot in the arm, so crippling him that although the shore and safety were within a few yards he was obliged to succumb and was drowned. Robert Martin was a farmer, and died at an old age in South Carolina, leaving a large family of children. One of his sons, James, was born in 1788, and when a young man moved to Georgia and settled in Jasper county, where he married the mother of Rev. Martin. He, too, followed farming, and died in Randolph county on the tract of land his son now owns. He left South Carolina with his family in 1821, and coming overland to Georgia, settled in Jasper county, where they resided to 1831, when they moved to Randolph county, and located on a piece of land where he continued to live until his death in 1869. He was a man vigorous in physical development and of high mental attainments. Five of his sons became ministers of the gospel. His wife's death occurred just previous to her husband's demise. She was a good mother and wife, and a member of the Baptist church from childhood. This union was blessed with ten children, who are as follows: Rev. Isaac, who died in Texas; Rev. Robt. now in Texas; Rev. John, the subject of this sketch; Rev. Crawford, now of Texas; Rev. Charles C., of Randolph county; George, of Randolph; James C., of Cuthbert; Mrs. Eastor Houston, of Louisiana; Mrs. Jane Sapon, of Randolph county, and Nancy, who died in childhood. Rev. Mr. Martin grew to manhood on the place where he now lives, and was educated in the common schools of that time. He has been engaged in farming all his life, and in 1866 opened a store which he continued until a few years ago. He has been uniformly successful with everything he has been associated with in a business way, the result of his quick mind and industrious habits. He professed religion in his nineteenth year, and soon after was licensed to preach. In 1844 he was ordained as a minister of the Baptist church, and has since occupied the pulpit regularly, devoting most of his time to the poorer churches. His charge now embraces one church in Randolph county and one in Stewart. His has been an unusually active life, and one which has ever brought him the love and esteem of all who knew him. He was married in 1838 to Martha Truitt, born in Jasper county in 1821 and a daughter of Riley and Boneta (Smith) Truitt, natives of Wilkes county, Ga. Mrs. Martin was the youngest child, her father having died soon after her birth. She was reared and educated in the common schools. To Mr. and Mrs. Martin have been born thirteen children, eleven of whom are living: J. M., who lives with Rev. J. W.; Hester, wife of W. S. Curry, living on the old settlement place; Amanda, wife of C. F. Curry, of Randolph county; R. B.; Mrs. Sarah Watson; Mrs. Tyree Saxon; Mrs. Mattie Swan, and Miss Lillie Martin of Randolph county; J. A. and C. W. Martin, of Shellman. The two children deceased are Mrs. Mary Jones Pope, who died in Texas, and R. T., killed at Bainbridge, Ga. Rev. Mr. Martin is the grandfather of fifty-two children and the great-grandfather of twelve, and the immediate family connections number over 100 persons. Mr. Martin is a staunch supporter of the principles of democracy, and takes great interest in the welfare of the party. The family home is eleven and one half miles southeast of Cuthbert, and the neighborhood is known as the Martin settlement. Mr. Martin was appointed postmaster during Harrison's administration. The postoffice was established before the war and was known as Bedford, and J. C. Martin was the first postmaster. During President Harrison's administration the name of Bethel was given to the office. Mrs. Amanda Curry is now the post-mistress.

H. C. NEWTON. The present generation of Newtons, one of the oldest and most influential families of the palmetto state, is represented in Randolph county, Ga., by H. C. Newton, a successful merchant of Cuthbert. They are descendants of the Newtons of England. His great-grandfather, Giles Newton, was a resident of Henrico county, Va., and reared a family of two sons and four daughters, as follows: James Newton, Younger Newton, Martha Bullard, Elizabeth Summerall, Ann Herndon and Portwood. He and his two sons, James and Younger, served as patriots in the war of the revolution, at the close of which they moved, with their families, to Marlboro district, S. C., and entered and purchased large tracts of land on both sides of the North and South Carolina line. Having amassed quite a fortune in lands and chattels, he died Oct. 15, 1807, leaving to his wife, Bettie Newton, several plantations and quite a number of negroes and cattle. James Newton died a resident of Marlboro district, S. C., in 1836. He names in his will three sons and three daughters, as follows: James Newton, William Newton, Pleasant Newton, Martha Wright, Elizabeth Purnell and Sarah Adams. Of these, Pleasant died a resident of Marlboro district, S. C. James and William moved away, probably to North Carolina or Georgia. Younger Newton, son of the above-named Giles Newton, was born in Henrico county, Va., in 1761, spent his early manhood in defense of his country, and after the British yoke had been broken and independent, he took to himself a wife—Miss Curghill, of Roanoke, Va.—and moved with his father and brother, James, to Marlboro district, S. C., and reared a large and industrious family, consisting of five sons and five daughters, as follows: Giles Newton, moved to Georgia or Alabama; Benjamin Newton, moved to Indiana; Younger Newton, Cornelius Newton, Daniel Newton, Sallie, married Mose Parker and moved to Ohio; Nancy, married John Usher; Julia, married John P. Adams; Elizabeth, married Samuel Snead, and moved to North Carolina; Mary. Younger Newton, grandson of Giles Newton, and father of H. C. Newton, was born in Marlboro district, S. C., June 6, 1792, served in the war of 1812, at the close of which he married a Miss Smith, of North Carolina. To this union were born six sons and two daughters, as follows: Giles, Cornelius, Alexander, Anderson, William, Younger S., Ann and Elizabeth. Having lost his wife in the year 1840, he married Miss Harriet Covington, of North Carolina, daughter of Bexley Covington, and his first wife, who was a Miss Hunter. To this union were born thirteen children, five of whom died in infancy, the remaining eight are as follows: John C., killed at Drury's bluff, May, 1864; David D.; Martha, married A. B. Covington; Dudley C., died in Mississippi, Tallahatchie county, July, 1871; Nancy, married P. E. Odom; Peter S.; Frances, married H. C. Northam; H. C., subject of this sketch. H. C. Newton was born April 11, 1855, in Marlboro district, S. C., was the tenth child of his parents, and is the youngest son now living. He was given an excellent education, first going to private schools for his youthful instruction, then at Boykin and Pine Grove academies, in preparing for a course at Wofford college, South Carolina. He would have graduated from the latter institution, but left his studies four months before the completion of the term, to accept a position as bookkeeper at Rockingham, N. C. He then began his business career by opening a merchandise store near the old home-place of his family. He conducted this two years, then taught school for three years, after which he again turned his attention to mercantile life and opened a store at the same place, which was named after him—Newtonville. He was the first postmaster of the village, and served eight years. In 1892 he moved to Marion county, S. C., to accept the position of principal of Peedee academy. The following winter he came to Georgia and settled near Cuthbert, on the old Mattox homestead. This he afterward sold, and now resides in Cuthbert, where he is engaged in the mercantile business. Mr. Newton takes a prominent part in politics, and is a leader in the people's party. He was nominated on this ticket in 1894 for the general assembly, and with the energy, characteristic of the man, started in on a systematic campaign; but it was discovered that he could not legally hold the position to which he was nominated, as he had not been a resident of the state long enough. Mr. Newton accepted the situation gracefully, and, retiring from the ticket, gave his successor the same efforts he would have exerted for himself. Mr. Newton was married to Myrtle A. Newton, of the same county as his own. She was educated at Boykin academy. They have one child, Gertrude. The family belongs to the Methodist church. Mr. Newton is a master Mason, and a member of the Kappa Alpha society. Mrs. H. C. Newton is a daughter of Ira L. P. Newton, who was a son of the above-named Daniel Newton. She is the first born of a family of ten—five daughters and five sons. Her oldest brother, L. S. Newton, a bright and energetic youth, recently graduated from the Georgia-Alabama Business college, at Macon, Ga., and is now stenographer for H. H. Newton, at Bennettsville, S. C. Cornelius Newton, uncle of H. C. Newton, was born Dec. 25, 1797, was too young for service in the war of 1812, but defended the flock of his father from the wolves and panthers, while his older brothers were defending their country from British invasion. He married Miss Dorcas Purnell, in 1818, reared a family of seven sons and seven daughters, the youngest of which, H. H. Newton, at the age of sixteen, joined his brothers in defense of the Confederacy, where he served three years. He was badly wounded at Haw's shop, near Coal Harbor, Va., May 28, 1864. He graduated from Wofford college July, 1869; was admitted to the bar at Bennettsville, S. C., 1870. He was married to Miss Martha Johnson, May 28, 1872. Of that union, only one son was born—H. H. Newton, Jr.—who graduated from the same institution, June, 1895. Having lost his wife, he married Miss Mary Elizabeth McRae, of which union three daughters were born—Mary, Anna and Elizabeth. Anna died in 1887, and her mother in 1888. He then married Mrs. Kate McCall Monroe, to which union three daughters have been born—Katie M., Martha and Julia. He (H. H. Newton) has served as delegate to numerous conventions, both political and religious; was delegate to the straight-out convention that nominated Hampton in 1876, and was largely instrumental in liberating his state from carpet-bag rule of that period; represented his county in the state legislature, 1880-82, declining to permit his friends to run him for same a second time; served as solicitor of the fourth circuit six years; served as a delegate to numerous annual conferences of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, and twice made delegate to the general conference. He is correspondent for the "Commercial Law association," and has a large and lucrative practice in his section of his state. This branch of the Newton family are, with one or two exceptions, exclusively an agricultural people, and Methodist in religious belief.

W. J. OLIVER. One of Shellman's principal business men, banker, merchant, miller, and one of the largest planters in Randolph county is W. J. Oliver. He was born three miles from where he now lives, on the old home place of his family, property of which he now owns. It was in 1854, and his father was James W. Oliver, a native of South Carolina. The latter, when a young man, came to Georgia, and was employed on farms in Laurens and Wilkinson counties. Here he met and wedded Susan Greene, who was the beautiful daughter of an old settler and well-to-do planter. In 1836, with his wife, he moved to Randolph county and purchased the tract of land which became the homestead, and on which he lived until his death. His family was brought to their new home in a one-horse wagon, and lived in camp under the big hickory trees till the husband could fell trees and build a home of logs. All was a wilderness about them, but the axe of the woodsman soon opened up a clearing, and then followed the cultivation of the land and its improvement. James Oliver was among the first settlers in this section of the country, and his first few years here were full of privation, hardships and disappointments. He came from old Virginia stock, however, and knew how to conquer, and with a will and energy bound to succeed he achieved that end. When he died in 1856, aged fifty-eight years, he left an estate of about 2,000 acres on the home place, with about 500 acres cleared, 100 slaves, and 1,200 acres of land in the southern part of the county, all the result of a life of industry, good habits and wise judgment. His farm was in a high state of cultivation, with fine improvements and a big mansion thereon, erected just before he died. Mr. Oliver was a leading man of his day. He was a lover of humanity, and born without even a knowledge of the trait of selfishness, he took as much pleasure in the happiness of others as that of himself. He was liberal to schools and charities, and was a public benefactor in helping many of these institutions. In politics he voted with the whigs, and while he always was an active member of his party, it was not for the purpose of seeking office, but to promote the interests of the country, which he believed could be best done through the medium of legislation pledged by his party. It was in the masonic fraternity that he shone—where love and truth, friendship and charity were taught. A lodge was held for a long time at his residence, and for years he represented his lodge at the Grand lodge meetings. While he belonged to no church, he was a good man, whose example as a kind husband and father and patriotic citizen was worthy of the emulation of all. The wife continued to reside at the old homestead till her death in 1890, at a very old age. They had three children—all sons—of whom Mr. William J. Oliver, the youngest, is the only one now living. George W., deceased, was tax collector of the county for a good many years. He served as a soldier during the late war, in which, at the battle of Chancellorsville, he lost his left leg. He was furloughed, and came home, and upon his recovery, he acted as an enlisting officer at Fort Gaines, Ga. He was a man of traits of character like his father, and was popular with every one. After the war he took charge of his father's estate, and managed it until Mr. W. J. Oliver became of age in 1876. George W. Oliver left a wife and two children—a son and daughter. The mother lives in Shellman, and the daughter is the wife of Robert Powell, of the same place. The son is a conductor on the Central railroad. The estate of the father was equally divided between the children and mother, excepting the 1,200 acres of land in southern Georgia, which was bequeathed to the children. After the death of the mother and brothers, Mr. W. J. Oliver purchased from the heirs their interests, and now owns the whole of the old home place. William J. Oliver was raised on the old farm place and educated in the public schools, and at what is known as Reaboth institute, in North Shellman. In 1883 he moved to Shellman to run a ginney, and in 1884, started a merchandise business. In 1890, he established the Shellman Banking company, of which he is president. He now operates a large ginnery, with grist and planing mill in connection with it, which was built in 1894 at Shellman, and is one of the finest in the state. Mr. Oliver was married in 1877 to Mary Lee Taylor. The mother died, leaving four children: James Thaddeus, Leila Corrine, Dixie Alma, and Ross Layton. In 1892 he was married to Esther Bell, a daughter of John Bell, a leading farmer of Randolph county. Mr. Oliver is a member of the Knights of Pythias. He is a democrat, and though always active in political affairs, he has never sought political preferment. Mr. Oliver is endowed with a strong will power, great tenacity of purpose, and his life has been one of devoted industry and earnest practical results. He is a progressive man, and a hustler, and his efforts have largely contributed to the welfare of the people of Shellman, who entertain the highest regard for him.

PHILIP PEARCE, prominent planter of Springvale, Randolph Co., was born in Stewart county in 1839, and is the son of Everett E. and Rebecca (Cooper) Pierce. His father, Everett E. Pierce, was born in South Carolina and when a young man came to Georgia, and married his wife in Randolph county, where he afterward settled, about 1844. He had served his country in the war of 1812, and against the Cherokees in 1835-36, and was one of the leading farmers of his day. He was a self-made man and a carpenter by trade, and is said to have built the first frame house in Columbus, Ga. He was a strong democrat in politics, and wielded a salutary influence in his county in his earlier years. His death occurred in 1875, aged seventy-five years. His wife, and mother of the subject of this sketch, survived her husband, dying in 1890, aged seventy-eight. She was the daughter of John Cooper, who came from South Carolina with early settlers, locating in Randolph county and building on the place Mr. Pearce now owns. He died there in 1837 well up in years, and leaving a large family of children, all of whom are now deceased. To the parents of Mr. Pearce were born two children, the subject of this sketch, and Mrs. Sarah J. Shirley, now deceased. Mr. Philip Pearce was brought up on the old farm place in Randolph county, and was educated in the old log school house of the early day. He enlisted in the late war, joining Company E, Third Georgia regiment, Capt. Martin J. Crawford commanding. His regiment was in Bragg's army, and near Louisville, Ky., he was captured and taken to that city. About a month later, at Vicksburg, Miss., he was exchanged, and returning home he was remounted and joined his command in Tennessee. At the time of the surrender he was with Gen. Young in South Carolina, near Columbia. He was detailed at Aiken, S. C., as a courier to take important dispatches from there to Columbia, a commission which he successfully accomplished. When peace was declared he came home, riding the horse he started out with in the fall of 1862. He then went to Alabama, where he lived about three years, when he returned to the home farm in Randolph county, where he has since engaged in farming. Mr. Pearce was married in 1860 to Leah E., daughter of Everett J. Pearce. Though of the same name the families were not related. Mrs. Philip Pearce's parents were also old settlers of Randolph county, and they had a large family of children. She was the third child, and was reared and educated in Randolph county. To Mr. and Mrs. Pearce have been born nine children, as follows: Philip, residing in Stewart county; Lula, wife of J. G. Pinkston, of Lumpkin; Viola, wife of George Harris, of Texas; Florence, widow of B. W. Barfield; John T.; Jennie, married to Dr. Tims, of Texas; Edward, Scott, and Effie, at home. Mrs. Pearce is an active member of the Methodist church and well known for her kindness and charity. Mr. Pearce is a stanch democrat, and was sheriff of Randolph county from 1881 to 1885. He is still a prominent figure in the councils of the leaders of his party in county and state affairs. Mr. Pearce is widely known for his deeds of charity, and as the friend of the needy and struggling. Much interested in the cause of educational development, his generous heart has frequently prompted him to help poor and unfortunate children to an education. He is one of the largest planters in his section of the county, and has a fine farm, well stocked and improved.

JOSEPH NEWTON STANFORD was born Oct. 27, 1848, in Randolph county, Ga., and was the second son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Phillips) Stanford. He was reared in Cuthbert, and having determined when young in years upon the newspaper business for his avocation in life, he entered a printing office, where he learned all the details from the case to the editorial chair. He is the present owner and editor of the "Leader," which he founded April 16, 1891. His first work was done on the "Reporter," a journal owned by Mr. T. Bird, and his next was on the Cuthbert "Appeal." Mr. Stanford was employed there until 1881, when "The Enterprise" was established, and he took charge of that, continuing on it until the "Liberal Enterprise" was started. About this time he established the "Leader," a weekly newspaper which has secured a good circulation and enjoys popularity and a liberal patronage. Mr. Stanford is one of the oldest newspaper men in Randolph county, and is well known throughout the state. He married Catharine Dunaway of Stewart county, by whom he has a family of ten children: Clara Elizabeth, James Benton, Gertrude, Annie, Daisy, John T., Shelley, Tisna, Lena, and Harold. Mr. and Mrs. Stanford are members of the Baptist church, and he is prominent in the Knights of Pythias fraternity. They enjoy a pleasant home in the outskirts of Cuthbert.

J. W. STANFORD. From a family whose collateral branches extend into many states of the south, and whose name is not only historic but renowned and influential, was born Dr. James W. Stanford of Cuthbert. His immediate ancestry were noted, upon both maternal and paternal sides, among the pioneers of southwestern Georgia, for their intelligence, probity, and mental and physical vigor. This combination of character and constitution, and innate worth, manifest themselves in the career of members of the present generation. Thomas Stanford was born in what is now Morgan county, Ga., May 15, 1806, and was the son of Thomas and Keziah Stanford, early settlers of middle Georgia. The latter lived for many years there, and had born to them a large family of children. Later in life they removed to Newton county and settled near Yellow river about ten miles from Covington, where they resided until coming to Randolph county about 1828. They purchased a farm about seven miles from Cuthbert, where the senior Stanford died in August, 1839—well advanced in years. After his death his widow removed to Alabama, where her last days were spent. Mr. Stanford was very wealthy at one time, but always liberal in charity, and free with the use of his means to help friends in pecuniary distress, he suffered heavy losses while living in Newton county. He was a soldier in the Indian wars during the years 1835-36, and a man of unflinching integrity, patient and considerate in private as well as in business life; of a sunny nature and a heart filled in sympathy for his fellow-man. Thomas Stanford was a citizen not only honored but loved by those who knew him. His domestic life was a model in happiness, and to the family circle came ten children, five boys and five girls—all of whom lived to be men and women grown, but all now deceased. They were Mary, the eldest, who married and settled in Habersham county; Edward, settled in Newton county; William, settled in Henry county; Martha, married, lived in Alabama; Thomas, Jr.; Nancy, married George Hobbs and settled in Randolph county;

Elizabeth, married a Mr. Elliott and moved to Alabama; David, settled in Texas; John, settled in Arkansas; Keziah. Thomas Stanford, Jr., father of J. W. Stanford, was but a boy when his parents moved from Morgan to Newton county, where he grew to manhood. On Dec. 24, 1835, he was married to Elizabeth Phillips, a native of Morgan county. She was born April 24, 1819, and was the daughter of James and Mary (Phillips) Phillips, natives of the Carolinas. A coincident worthy of note in connection with this union of her parents is, that, though their families were entirely unknown to each other both started from their respective homes in North and South Carolina on the same day, and reached Morgan county, Ga., at the same time. Mrs. Stanford when a child moved with her parents to Newton county, where she was married. Her husband farmed until about two years before his death, when he moved to Cuthbert, where he was employed as a bookkeeper, and served as bailiff of the county. He was a man of fine business capacity, and was a high, noble-minded citizen. He died Feb. 3, 1859, leaving a wife and five children: Martha Ann, who married John R. Scott, of Stewart county, and is now living in Lockesburgh, Ark.; Mary S., single, and living with her mother; John Thaddeus, of Cuthbert; Joseph Newton, editor and proprietor of the "Leader" of Randolph county; and Dr. James W. Stanford. Mrs. Stanford, mother of the above children, is a devoted member of the Baptist church, having united with that denomination when a girl of fifteen years, and has been a member of the Cuthbert congregation for over half a century. Though beyond three-quarters of a century of years, Mrs. Stanford is hale and hearty, and remarkably well preserved. Dr. J. W. Stanford, the youngest child by the first marriage, was born Nov. 4, 1852, and received the benefit of the public schools in his youthful days. He was but a boy when he entered a printing office in Cuthbert to learn the trade, and continued there until 1873, when he accepted a position in a drug store and began the study of pharmacy, for which he had long had a predilection. In 1876 he commenced business for himself and now has a flourishing and extensive business and is one of the substantial citizens of Randolph county. His capital when he started in life was a superabundance of will and energy, supported by a fixed determination, which brought its sequence—success. Nov. 12, 1876, he was united in marriage to Sarah Burr, the daughter of Augustus P. and Catharine (Beasley) Burr, of Cuthbert. An interesting family of eight children followed this union: James W., Jr., William B., Edgar, Harry, Leland, Emmett, Frank, and Grover. Dr. Stanford is one of the leading members of the Baptist church, a denomination with which he united when fourteen years old. He is superintendent of the Sunday-school, one of the trustees of Bethel Male college, and also of Mercer university. He is an enthusiast on the subject of education, and has always taken an active lead in the cause of intellectual improvement. He has doubtless provided means to more young men who were needy and struggling to acquire learning than any other man in southwest Georgia. He is a royal arch Mason and H. P. of the local chapter, a Knight of Honor, and a member of the American Legion of Honor. He lives with his family in a handsome home in Cuthbert.

JOHN THOMAS STEVENS, planter, Cuthbert, Randolph county, was born in 1845, in this county. He is a grandson of Stephen Stevens, a native of South Carolina, born near Charleston, who, with his family, consisting of wife, four sons and two daughters, migrated overland to Georgia in 1826, and settled in Houston county, being among the first settlers of that county. He was a farmer, a democrat in politics, and a sincere member of the Primitive Baptist church, in which faith he triumphantly died. His wife survived him a few years. They raised six children: James, who moved to Mississippi just previous to the war; Luke, located in Mississippi; Thomas, who settled in Stewart county, where he died; Julia A., who married a Mr. Edward Smith and settled in Alabama, where she is yet living; Erliffa, who died single, in Georgia, and Burrell. The last named was the youngest child of Stephen Stevens, and was born in South Carolina, Jan. 23, 1814. He grew to manhood in Houston county and received a very good education. He married Sarah Shivers, who was born July 30, 1818, in Houston county. She was the daughter of Jack Shivers, a native of South Carolina, and one of the early settlers of Houston county, who lived to an old age. For a while he resided in Terrell county, but later moved back to Houston county, where he died. He had four children: Eli, Allie, Sarah, and Sadie, all deceased. Burrell Stevens and wife moved to Randolph county and settled on the Chickasawatchee creek, now in Terrell county, where he lived about fourteen years. He then moved to a farm eight miles south of Cuthbert, which place he owned at the time of his death, Aug. 3, 1878, while living in Cuthbert. He was deputy sheriff at the time of his demise, and served as a soldier in Gov. Joe Brown's state militia the latter part of the late war. He was a democrat, a member of the Missionary Baptist church, and a very successful farmer. Sarah Stevens, his wife, died Feb. 21, 1864. She was a member of the Primitive Baptist church. They had nine children, as follows: Celia J., born Jan. 19, 1840, died Oct. 14, 1841; Stephen, born Feb. 13, 1842, died Oct. 31, 1842; John Thomas, born Aug. 15, 1843; Julia Amanda, born Aug. 24, 1845, and married Alvard Wall, of Randolph county; Erliffa Ann, born March 25, 1847, married to James McMichael, died in February, 1894; James M., born Dec. 23, 1843, now living in Lumpkin, Ga.; William W., born March 11, 1851, living in Randolph county; Burrell A., born May 6, 1853, and Joseph L., born Sept. 15, 1857, living in Randolph county. Mr. Stevens was married, the second time, to Mrs. Sarah Britt, who died in 1893, in Terrell county. The subject of this sketch was the third child by his first marriage, and lived at home with his parents until 1862, when he enlisted for the war in Company H, Fifty-first Georgia regiment, under command of Gen. Sims. He saw a great deal of fighting from the first to the last of the war, and participated in the following battles: Seven Pines, second Manassas, Fredericksburg, Harper's Ferry, Gettysburg, Knoxville, the battle of the Wilderness, and all the fighting around Richmond. He then proceeded to Appomattox, and was there at the surrender. He was taken prisoner in the battle of Gettysburg and sent to Fort Delaware, where he was kept for thirty days and then exchanged. In the battle of the Wilderness he was shot through the foot, and at Chancellorsville a spent ball struck him under the right eye, severely injuring him. At the surrender Mr. Stevens was one of only three of Company H that was left of the company, the others having been killed, wounded or taken prisoner during the war. He returned to his home, walking over one hundred miles of the way, and commenced farming on the old place. In 1867 he was married to Miss Watson, born in February, 1842, in Stewart county. She was the daughter of Green Watson, a native of Georgia, who settled in Randolph county, where he died. He had a family of nine children, four of whom were sons. Mrs. Stevens was the fifth child, and the only one of the children now living. Mr. and Mrs. Stevens have had born to them two children: Sarah Lenia, wife of Mr. Mack Kenney, who lives on the home place, and Mary May, born Oct. 11, 1870, and died Oct. 21, 1879. Mrs. McKinney has three children. Mrs. Stevens and her daughter are members of the Baptist church. Mr. Stevens is a staunch democrat in politics. They live on a fine farm about nine miles south of Cuthbert.

DANIEL R. STEWART. The Stewart family, prominent in the annals of Randolph county history, from the time the county was cut out of Lee, is of Scotch descent, as the name plainly evidences. Daniel Stewart, who came from Scotland with his family about the year 1800, and settled in Buncombe county, North Carolina, was the founder. He served in the war of 1812, in the ranks of the United States army, and soon after it was over moved with his family to Georgia and settled near Macon. He had four sons and two daughters. He was a good type of the hardy Scotchman, whose blood is well mingled in the veins of Georgia's early residents. He was a whig in politics and a stanch Presbyterian. He died in Marion county, Ga., to which place he had moved, aged eighty-eight years. John Stewart, his son, was a small boy when the family settled in Georgia. He lived near Macon with his parents until manhood, and then located in Marion county, where he married Miss Giles, a native of that county. He was a farmer there for a few years, whence he moved to Sumter county, where he resided until 1854, when he purchased a farm in Randolph county, near what is now Coleman Station. He was a man who enjoyed the respect and confidence of all whom his business and social relations brought him in contact with. He was a good liver and fond of his family. In early life he was a whig, but after the war a democrat, and while taking a prominent part in politics, never aspired to office. His wife died in the summer of 1867, while on a visit in Sumter county. She was born in 1826, and was a good, Christian woman, belonging to the Baptist church. John Stewart, after the death of his wife and the marriage of his children, went to live with his son, Daniel R. Stewart, where he died, in October, 1882, his death resulting from injuries received by being thrown by a mule. To this union were born the following children: Mrs. Mary Colline, of Randolph county; William Henry Harrison, died during the late war, of typhoid-pneumonia, in Knoxville, Tenn., being a member of Company G, Fifty-fifth Georgia regiment; Daniel R., the subject of this sketch; John T., of Calhoun county; Noah, of Randolph county; Mrs. Margaret Johnston, and Mrs. Christian Johnston, of Sumter county; A. P., of Randolph county; Naomi, died in childhood. Mr. Daniel R. Stewart, the third child of John Stewart, was born in Marion county, and came with his parents to Randolph county at the age of twelve years. He attended the public schools of Randolph and Sumter counties, and was only sixteen years old when the call was made for volunteers for the war. Youth was no barrier to his enlistment, and he joined the First Georgia state troops, but upon his company being reorganized he became a member of the Fifty-fifth regiment, commanded by Col. C. B. Haskey. The regiment was captured at Cumberland gap in 1863, but, fortunately for Mr. Stewart, he was then confined to the hospital with a case of erysipelas. At the time of the surrender Mr. Stewart had charge of a wagon train at Augusta. After the war he returned to Randolph county, where he purchased a tract of land, which contained about sixty acres in cultivation. This little "garden spot" has been developed into a plantation of about 3,000 acres, which, with mills, gins and stores, represent the efforts of Mr. Stewart for the past thirty years. All this is the result of industry, economy, quick discernment and rare judgment. Mr. Stewart had no help but what his arms brought him, and he can justly feel proud when referred to as a self-made man. He is known as one of the most practical farmers of the county, and has about 1,000 acres under cultivation. In 1890 he commenced the business of general merchandising, his storeroom being located on the home place, and it has extended to very large proportions. Mr. Stewart was married to Nancy O. Pope, a native of Washington county, Ga., but principally reared in Randolph county. She is the daughter of Wiley M. Pope, who was a native of North Carolina, and was an early settler in Washington county. He was a well educated man and a minister of the Missionary church. He died at the age of eighty years, in Randolph county. Mrs. Stewart was educated in Washington county. They have one child, Theodosia E., the wife of Judge J. M. Griggs, of Dawson. The family are members of the Baptist church. Mr. Stewart is one of the leaders of the democratic party in Randolph county. He was elected to the house of representatives in 1891, and for a number of years was a member of the county school board. He is now a member of the jury commission. Mr. Stewart lives in a pleasant home about eleven miles southeast of Cuthbert.

COLUMBUS TAYLOR, one of the prominent and influential business men of Randolph county, of which he is a native, was born in 1844. His family came from South Carolina, his grandfather, Francis Taylor, being a native of the same district, that state, and coming to Georgia in the later years of his life, he died in Randolph county, where he had located. His youngest son was William Taylor, who was born in South Carolina, opposite Augusta, in 1816, and married to Matilda Bass, of North Carolina, took up a home in Randolph county, Ga., in the forties. He was the only one of his brothers and sisters to come to Georgia, and all of his life, save a few years spent in Early county, was passed on his farm in Randolph county. He was in the Indian wars of 1835-36, and in the early part of the civil war performed service in the state militia. He was a democrat in politics and a Baptist in his religious faith. He was a Mason high in its degrees, and in business a successful planter. He died in 1870. His wife was born in Sampson county, N. C., in 1822, and is yet living, residing with her daughter, Mrs. Grubbs, in Randolph county. She is a regular attendant of the Baptist church, and is hale and hearty for one of her many years. To this union were born seven children: Columbus, the subject of this sketch; Marion; Thomas B., who died in Calhoun county in 1875, leaving a wife and one child; Mrs. Martha E. Grubbs; Wiley L., Randolph county; Mitchell, and James M., of Randolph county. Columbus Taylor was educated in the local schools of Randolph county, and when eighteen years old joined the Confederate army, enlisting in Company B., Forty-seventh Georgia regiment, under Col. Williams. He served until the war was ended, and was most of this time in active campaigning. He was in the battles of Jackson, Miss., Resaca, New Hope, and Kennesaw Mountain, Ga., and in scores of skirmishes. When the war was over he returned home and resumed farming. He was married in 1872 to Lucretia H. Pruett, of Calhoun county, where she was born. She is the daughter of Jeffrey W. Pruett, a merchant planter of Calhoun county, whose parents were Virginians. Mrs. Taylor is graduate of Bethel Female college of Cuthbert, who, after teaching school eight years continuously in the neighborhood with splendid success and to the entire satisfaction of her patrons, was married to Mr. Taylor, and is the mother of four children: William O., Lillie May, Gertrude and Edgar. Lillie May was married to Mr. A. K. Martin of Cuthbert. Mr. Taylor is a democrat, and in 1886-87 represented his county in the legislature. He has also been a useful member of the county board of education. In 1884 Mr. Taylor commenced the general merchandise business on the home farm, and in 1888 he moved to Cuthbert, where a year later he opened a store. This was moved back to the old place in 1893. Mr. Taylor conducts his business, which is ten miles out in the country, but his family live in Cuthbert, where the children are being educated. Aug. 6, 1895, he was elected ordinary of Randolph county to fill the unexpired term of M. Gormley, deceased. He was elected as a democrat by a vote of three to one over his populist opponent. Mr. Taylor and wife are members of the Baptist church. His business career has been an honorable one, and his reputation among business men is first-class, while socially he enjoys the highest respect and esteem among his fellow citizens.

J. F. TRIPPE, planter, Shellman, is a native of Greene county, Ga. He was born in 1839, and is the son of James Madison and Rhoda H. (Rolland) Trippe, of Greene county, Ga. J. M. Trippe was born in Hancock county, Jan. 12, 1814, and his wife was born Feb. 1, 1818, in Greene county. In the last mentioned county they grew to maturity and were married, and there resided until their son, J. F. Trippe, was nine years of age, when they moved to Muscogee county and lived one year and thence to Stewart county. For seven years they lived twelve miles north of Lumpkin, then moving to Randolph county and settling in the tenth district, where they resided three years. The father died March 9, 1878. He was a brave soldier in the war and belonged to Company A, Second Georgia cavalry. The mother died Jan. 26, 1878, leaving one child, J. F. Trippe. He spent his boyhood days in Greene, Stewart and Randolph counties, and studied dentistry in Cuthbert under Dr. Hammel of that place, forming a co-partnership in 1859 with that gentleman. He practiced his profession at various points until the war, when he joined the regiment made up in Randolph county, the Cuthbert Rifles, which afterward became a part of the Fifth Georgia, under Col. M. K. Jackson, of Augusta. In about a year he was elected first lieutenant of the Second Georgia cavalry of Cuthbert, and then he finished the war serving under that intrepid officer, Gen. Forrest. He was in the battles of Corinth, Miss., at Murfreesboro, Tenn., under Forrest; at Perryville, Ky., under Bragg; Missionary Ridge, Resaca, Jonesboro, and Atlanta, Ga. Then he went to the Carolinas, engaging in skirmishes all along the way, till the surrender of Johnston. At Murfreesboro, Tenn., the escapes Mr. Trippe made were miraculous. He was in the thickest of the fight, and after the battle found where seventeen bullets had been shot through his clothes without him receiving a scratch or a wound. After the war Mr. Trippe found that dentistry was not in as much demand as products for the stomach, and he turned his attention to farming, which he has since pursued. While home on a furlough Feb. 26, 1863, he married May E. Mayo, a native of Marion county, Ga. She was born July 10, 1842, and is the daughter of Benjamin Mayo, of Marion county. To this union have been born seven children, as follows: James B. Trippe, living at home; William H., living near the home place; Mary T., deceased wife of John Freeman, of Worth county; Thomas T., living near the home place; Emma L., married to the husband of her deceased sister; John Lee, deceased, and Fletcher Milton. Mr. and Mrs. Trippe are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he is clerk and one of the trustees. In politics Mr. Trippe is a populist, and in the fall of 1893 was nominated by the people's party the day before the election to represent the county in the legislature. The regular nominee, Mr. Newton, was found to be ineligible, and Mr. Trippe at the twelfth hour made a hard fight, proving his popularity in the county. He lives on a large farm near Shellman.

REV. P. S. TWITTY. Andrew Female college, of Cuthbert, Ga., in its forty years of existence, has graduated some of the most noted women of the state, and has established a reputation known in every part of the country. It was founded in 1854, and the first president was Rev. John W. Caldwell, a member of the Methodist conference. He was succeeded by Capt. A. H. Flewellen, Dr. A. S. Hamilton, Rev. J. B. McGehee, Rev. H. W. Key and Rev. P. S. Twitty, who is now in charge. The building was destroyed by fire in April, 1892, and was rebuilt at a cost of $22,000. It contains sixty rooms, all elegantly furnished, and possesses all modern equipments. Rev. P. S. Twitty was born in Meriwether county, Ga., in February, 1842. He was educated in the schools of Americus, Ga., and taught school for several years after the war. He was just reaching manhood when the call for volunteers was heard in 1862, and he joined the Sumpter Light guards, of Americus, Capt. W. L. Johnson. The company was assigned to the Fourth Georgia regiment, and participated in some very hard campaigning and desperate battles. While fate spared his life, yet he seemed particularly unfortunate in receiving wounds, and was four times injured during the war. The first was at Malvern Hill, Va.; the second at Antietam, Md.; the third at Washington, D. C., while on Gen. Early's raid through Maryland, and the last at Winchester, Va. He was captured at Gettysburg, and taken to Point Lookout, Md., where he was a prisoner for eight months. He was exchanged and returned to his command, serving to the conclusion of the war. He attained the position of orderly-sergeant while in service. For awhile after the war he engaged in merchandising, and then taught school at Smithville. In 1872 he joined the Methodist conference, and until 1890, occupied the pulpit of their church. Part of this time he was presiding elder of the Waycross and Americus districts. In 1890 he was elected to the presidency of Andrew Female college. Rev. Mr. Twitty descends from one of two brothers who came from the northern part of Ireland to America in the eighteenth century. One brother joined Daniel Boone in the settlement of Kentucky, while the other located in North Carolina. From the latter springs the Georgia family, Peter Twitty coming to this state in 1800. John W. Twitty, the father of Rev. Mr. Twitty, was an itinerant preacher in the Methodist church and died in Americus in 1852 when he was thirty-three years of age. Mr. Twitty was married to Rebecca Smith of Americus, Ga., and to them have been born seven children: John, Lucy, Howard, Annie, Russel, Helen and Peter. He is a man of spotless integrity, and is conscious to all the affairs of life. He is amiable in disposition, courteous, and ever mindful of the feelings of others. Andrew Female college has enjoyed a prosperous career under his administration, and has been advanced in the standing of educational institutions of the land.

W. J. T. WHALEY, planter and ginner, Shellman, was born where he now lives in 1848. He was the son of Wilkins D. Whaley and Malinda (Lindsey) Whaley, natives of Troup county. They came to Randolph county in 1832 and there lived all their lives. James Adolphus Whaley, grandfather of the subject of this memoir, with his wife came to Randolph county about the same time and settled the town known as Cleveland, on the line between Terrell and Randolph. He built a great mill on Lunkey creek and was an important personage in the neighborhood. They had eight children, all of whom are deceased. Wilkins Whaley married in Troup county, and was a blacksmith and farmer. He served in the late war and died in July, 1880, aged sixty years. His wife died in 1877, aged fifty-five years. To this union were born nine children that lived to be grown, one of whom is now deceased. They are Mrs. Nancy E. Hart, Mrs. Susan Sappington, Mrs. Fredonia Hart, Armenta Ellen McMillan, James A., W. J. T., Mrs. Texas Anne Arnold, Ardella, deceased, Mrs. Valeria Victoria Bigby. Mr. W. J. T. Whaley attained his majority in the neighborhood in which he now lives, and when fifty-three years old was married to Fannie E. Wall, a native of Marion county. She came to Randolph county with her parents in 1860, and was educated at Brookville, Randolph Co., and Pineville, Marion Co. She was the daughter of Thomas A. and Eliza (Powell) Wall. Mrs. Whaley was an excellent Christian woman, and her death in September, 1883, was much lamented. She left the following children: William Wesley, Thomas Wall, Joe Davis, Homer Powell, Annie May. Thomas Wall is married and lives in Randolph. Mr. Whaley's second marriage was to Fannie V. T. Stewart, born in Ellerville, near Americus, Ga. She was the daughter of W. D. Stewart, a native of Georgia, now deceased, and her mother was Martha Ann Stovall, born in this state and still living in Randolph county. Mr. Whaley was about twelve years of age when his parents moved to Dawson, where Mrs. Whaley was reared and educated. She is the mother of two living children, Birdie, and Robert Roy. Mr. Whaley belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church and is a democrat in politics. He is considered one of the best farmers in the county and owns a magnificent farm, in a high state of cultivation.

RICHMOND COUNTY.

MAJ. JOSEPH V. H. ALLEN, was born in Augusta, Ga., May 22, 1830, and was the youngest child and son of Richard Allen, of that city. Like many citizens of that city, his early and only training was obtained at the Richmond academy. While he did not enjoy the benefits of a college course he was a man of fine ideas and culture. His purpose in life was to become a business man and to that end he faithfully and successfully strove. His first employment was as clerk with Thomas Richards, bookseller, of that city; his next was as bookkeeper for Warren, Lewis & Co., commission merchants and millers. By his industry, integrity, courtesy and ability he soon succeeded that firm by Lewis & Allen, of which he was a member. The commencement of the war found him in possession of a paying and promising business. When Company A, Oglethorpe light infantry volunteered, though exempt from military duty he enlisted therein with a commission as first lieutenant. At the expiration of twelve months' time of enlistment he returned home and organized an artillery company that became a part of the famous Sixty-third Georgia, when he was promoted to the rank of major. Those who knew him bear testimony to his bravery, to his devotion to the cause, and his untiring attention to his command and men. After the war he was elected secretary and treasurer of the National Express and Transportation company, with Gen. Jos. E. Johnston at its head. Later he organized and was made secretary of the Commercial Insurance company, which charter was amended and under it the Commercial bank was established. He was the senior member of the firm of J. V. H. Allen & Co., composed of himself and Mr. G. Henry Allen, which conducts a general insurance business and represents more companies than any other agency here. Indeed, as an insurance man Maj. Allen had wonderful special information. He was a director of the Commercial bank, Augusta & Knoxville Railroad company, Augusta, Chicago & Elberton Railroad company, and a trustee of the Augusta Free school and the Augusta Orphan asylum. Maj. Allen was a man of fine business qualities, of remarkable genial nature, of marked courtesy and manly bearing. His executive talents were observed by the people and by them pressed into their service; many times a member of the council, always giving satisfaction to his constituency. In 1870-71 he was elected mayor of Augusta; his term was distinguished by conservatism, ability and faithfulness. Besides suggesting many reforms in the administration of the city he was conspicuous in forming and maintaining to a high efficiency a police force that has not been excelled since or before his administration. In his inaugural address in December, 1869, he alluded to the improvement and enlargement of the Augusta canal, the first suggestions put forth on this important subject. April 1, 1870, he sent a message to the council, in which he urged the step to be taken and submitted a contract for enlargement. Said he: "The Augusta canal contains the germ of the future prosperity and growth of our community and that by increasing its capacity to the extent now known to be practicable we have within our reach the only means of adding to our personal wealth and population." When this scheme was finally executed, and he chanced to think of the past, he seemed happy in the recollection that during his official connection he had given this great measure his encouragement. He was a member of the national democratic convention that nominated Mr. Tilden, and a member of the state convention that nominated Gov. Colquitt, and at the time of his death was chairman of the county democratic executive committee.

RICHARD ELLIOTT ALLEN, leading underwriter, Augusta, Ga., was born in that city July 21, 1861. He was reared in the city of his birth, receiving his education at the old Richmond county academy, which seat of learning he left in 1879. For three years thereafter he was engaged as clerk for Garrett & Latimer, cotton factors of Augusta. Upon the death of his father, Joseph V. H. Allen, in 1883, he was taken into partnership in the insurance business of his brother, G. H. Allen, who had assumed charge of the business of his father. G. H. Allen having died in 1885 the business has since been carried on alone by the distinguished gentleman whose name entitles this sketch, though the original firm title of J. V. H. Allen & Co. is still retained. This house represents some of the strongest and stanchest insurance organizations in the world, and it may be said to the credit of the house that every honest claim has been promptly met, since it was founded in 1866. The companies here represented comprise such high-class concerns as the Royal of England, Liverpool and London and Globe of England, Imperial of England, Insurance Company of North America, Philadelphia, Aetna of Hartford, Conn., National of Hartford, Conn., New York Underwriters' agency, and the Georgia Home Insurance company, of Columbus, Ga. The clientage of this house, while largely local, also comes from the territory in South Carolina and eastern Georgia contiguous to the city of Augusta. Mr. Richard E. Allen, the present sole proprietor, is one of the best known residents of the "electric city." He is identified with a number of useful organizations, and is also a large real estate owner. He is president of the Augusta Real Estate and Building association. The agency he controls has long afforded great conveniences and advantages to the residents of Augusta and vicinity. During the years of 1892, 1893, 1894 and 1895 R. E. Allen was on the board of assessors of Augusta. In masonic circles he is especially prominent, being eminent commander of Georgia commandery No. 1, Knights Templar, and grand junior warden of the grand lodge, Knights Templar, of Georgia. Mr. Allen is also a demitted member of the Knights of Pythias.

DR. JOSEPH EVE ALLEN, professor of obstetrics and pediatrics of the medical department of the university of Georgia, was born in Augusta in 1857. He was brought up and educated in Augusta and was graduated from the medical department of the state university in 1877, and at once commenced practice. In 1880 Dr. Allen was appointed lecturer on clinical midwifery, and in 1884-5 he was adjunct to the chair of obstetrics, and in 1894 he was appointed to the chair he now holds. He is president of the Augusta Academy of Medicine, and has served some time on the Augusta board of health. He is consulting obstetrician to the city hospital and to the Freedman's hospital of Augusta. Dr.

Allen is past master of Social lodge No. 1, F. and A. M., and is a Knight Templar, being prelate of Georgia commandery, of Augusta. He also belongs to the I. O. O. F. and I. O. R. M. Joseph Eve Allen's maternal grandfather, Dr. Joseph Eve, was a native of South Carolina. He was one of the founders of the Augusta Medical society, and president of the State Medical association. He was, also, for more than fifty years professor of obstetrics in the Augusta Medical college, and honorary fellow of the American Gynecological society, and of the Boston Gynecological society, and of the American Medical association.

HON. GEORGE F. BARNES, president of the Augusta Gas-light company, of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city Aug. 14, 1833. He was reared in Augusta, receiving his education at the old Richmond academy, and in 1850, entered the university of Georgia, at Athens, from which institution he was graduated, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, three years later. Returning to Augusta, he was for a time acting correspondent at Milledgeville, the then capital of Georgia for the "Augusta Press." In 1854 he began the study of law under Judge William T. Gould, of Augusta, mastered it, and engaged in the practice in that city. In 1859-60, Mr. Barnes was elected a member of the general assembly of Georgia from Richmond county, and was re-elected for three successive terms thereafter. In April, 1861, he entered the Confederate service as first lieutenant of the Washington artillery, an old volunteer company, and served in that capacity one year, taking part in the engagements at Pensacola, Fla., and at Corinth and Shiloh, Miss. During the latter part of the war, Mr. Barnes was captain of artillery, subsequently being promoted to the rank of major, and served on the coasts of Georgia and South Carolina, participating in the bombardment of Fort Pickens and in the engagement at Savannah. After the close of hostilities, Maj. Barnes returned to Augusta and formed a partnership in the practice of law with Maj. Joseph B. Cumming, which partnership was continued for more than eighteen years. Maj. Barnes was a member of the national democratic executive committee in 1876 to 1884, a delegate-at-large to the national democratic conventions of 1868, 1876 and 1880, and was elected a national representative in the forty-ninth, fiftieth and fifty-first congresses (1885-91), and gained much prominence in the latter congress by his able service as a member of the committee on territories. From his entrance into political life, he has demonstrated that he is a successful, common-sense statesman, a remarkably practical man, with ardent convictions and an iron will, and he has exerted a strong and healthful force on legislation. Since 1884 he has not devoted his time and talents to the general practice of law, but has appeared occasionally in cases of special moment. In private life, Maj. Barnes is a model of rectitude.

WILLIAM H. BARRETT, city recorder of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city Sept. 10, 1866. He was raised in Augusta and educated at the old Richmond academy. In 1881 he went to Bellevue academy, Bedford county, Va., where he took first honors. Then he went to the university of Georgia, and graduated, in 1885, with first honors and the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. Then returning to Augusta, he was made principal of the Central Grammar school, of that city, studying law part of the time. On Nov. 10, 1887, he was admitted to the bar, and for one year was in the office with Maj. J. C. C. Black, present congressman. Since that time he has been alone. In December, 1893, Mr. Barrett was appointed city recorder by the mayor, to fill a vacancy occurring in that office, and in January, 1894, he was elected to fill the unexpired term by the city council. Mr. Barrett takes an active part in politics. He belongs to no secret order, and is a member of the Episcopal church.

COL. THOMAS GLASCOCK BARRETT, stock and bond broker, of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city July 5, 1838. His father, Thomas, was a native of Augusta, Ga. Prior to the civil war, he was president of the State bank of Augusta, and during that war, president of the City bank of Augusta. He was in the Confederate service, being a member of the "Silver Grays," Georgia reserves, a company from the city of Augusta. He died in April, 1865, at the age of fifty-eight years. His father, Thomas, grandfather of Thomas Glascock, was a native of England, and came to Georgia in early manhood. He established a commission business in the city of Augusta, soon after his arrival, which he successfully conducted until his death, in 1825. He was married to Miss Strong, a native of Oxford, England, and that union was blessed by the birth of seven children, of whom Thomas, the father of Thomas Glascock, was the third. The maternal great-grandfather of Thomas Glascock Barrett was Thomas Glascock. Both he and his father, William Glascock, served in the armies of the colonies during the war of the revolution, the former in active service, and the latter in the civil service, for a time. William, the father of Thomas, was the first speaker of the Georgia house of representatives. Thomas Glascock, at the close of the war of the revolution, had reached the rank of brigadier of militia, enlisting as a lieutenant. He was attached to the staff of Pulaski, and bore that general from the field when severely wounded by the British at the battle of Savannah, Ga. Thomas Glascock, maternal grandfather of Thomas Glascock Barrett, commanded a Georgia brigade in the Seminole war, and was a brigadier-general. He also served for several terms in the congress of the United States. Thomas Glascock Barrett was reared in the city of Augusta, Ga., and educated at the private school of Prof. Snowden and Richmond County academy, subsequently attending the Georgia Military college, from which he was graduated in 1858. Entering the wholesale drug business in Augusta, together with his father, Thomas Barrett, and his cousin, John B. Carter, under the firm-name of Barrett, Carter & Co., in 1859, he and his associates were very successful and continued in that business until the dissolution of the firm, ten years later. In 1869, he entered the wholesale produce and commission business, and carried it on successfully for eleven years. In 1882 Mr. Barrett was elected president of the Bath Paper mills, of Augusta, holding that position four years, and resigned, owning a large amount of the stock of the mills. In 1890 he established the stock and bond brokerage business in which he is now engaged. The war record of Mr. Barrett is a notable one. He entered the Confederate service as a member of the Irish volunteers, a company organized a great many years before the war, and of which he was elected lieutenant, in 1858. His company was assigned to the Fifth Georgia infantry, being known as Company C. After a service of nine months, he returned to Augusta, in order to organize another company; but just about the time he had completed that task he received a telegram from Gen. Bragg to report for duty as captain of Company C, Seventeenth Alabama infantry, at Corinth, Miss. Two months later he was transferred to Company B, of the same regiment, and was in command until ordered to Mobile, in 1862, where he was attached to the staff of Gen. John K. Jackson, serving on that staff until after the fall of Savannah, Ga., thence being ordered to establish an ordnance depot at Branchville, S. C., where he remained until the fall of Charleston, when he went to Kingstree on the same mission; but remained only a few days, as the army retreated. Under orders from the war department, he was supernumerary to the ordnance department until Fayetteville, N. C., was reached, when he relieved Maj. Huger as chief ordnance officer of Hardee's corps, and served in that capacity until the Confederates laid down their arms, at Greensboro, N. C., April 26, 1865. Mr. Barrett was an active participant in the battles of Santa Rosa island, Fla., Farmington, Miss., "Dog Trot," Ky., Murfreesboro, Chattanooga, Chickamauga, and Lookout mountain, Tenn., Dalton, Resaca, Peachtree creek, and Atlanta, Ga., the siege of Savannah, Averysborough and Bentonville, N. C. In 1869 Mr. Barrett was elected a member of the common council of Augusta and served one year. Two years later, he was again elected to the same position, and held it seven consecutive years, serving all the while as chairman of the finance committee, in which capacity he did much toward the building of the magnificent canal that furnishes the power for the numerous factories of Augusta. This canal has no equal in the southern states, and was erected at a cost of $1,000,000. Mr. Barrett is a master Mason and affiliates with the Presbyterian church. He was joined in the holy bonds of wedlock, in February, 1861, to Grace Arrington Ware, a daughter of Dr. Edward R. Ware, Athens, Ga., a native of the state of Georgia; and that union, which has proved an ideally happy one, has been blessed by the birth of five children, viz.: Thomas Barrett, Margaret E., wife of L. A. Dugas, Jr., of Augusta, Edward Ware Barrett, Harry Gould Barrett, Savannah G. Barrett. In January, 1893, Grace Arrington (Ware) Barrett departed this life. She was a noble, Christian woman, loved and respected by all who knew her; the idol of her husband and the confidant and comforter of her children.

PETER GROVE BURUM, merchant and financier, president of the Commercial bank, and ex-president of the Cotton exchange, of Augusta, Ga., was born in Blount county, near the city of Knoxville, Tenn., June 13, 1839. He is of German descent, his ancestors coming from the town of Bierum, Holland, to Long Island, N. Y., in 1636. His great-grandfather, Simon Boerum, was a member of the first continental congress. His grandfather, Henry Burum, a gallant revolutionary soldier, moved to Virginia in 1783, and to the county of Hawkins, Tennessee, in 1784, buying one of the finest plantations in that county, which farm still remains in the possession of the family. His father was Henry Burum, and his mother Miss Nancy, daughter of Burrell Baggett, the wealthiest citizen of Knox Co., Tenn. His education was academic, such as was afforded by the community in which he lived. At the age of fifteen he left school and served as clerk at a small store in east Tennessee for one year, thence coming to Augusta, Ga., as the representative of a Knoxville and Augusta shipping and produce concern. Soon after coming to Augusta he engaged as clerk for Jesse Turpin, wholesale crockery. In May, 1861, he enlisted as a private in the Fifth Georgia regiment, and served in that command until captured at Bentonville, N. C. He was an active participant in the battles of Cumberland gap, Santa Rosa island, Black Land, Miss.; Murfreesboro, Lookout mountain, Chickamauga, and the retreat to Atlanta. Later he was assigned to duty in Florida, in Charleston, S. C., and at Florence, Ala., being engaged at those places in several minor skirmishes. After the close of hostilities he returned to his home in Knox county, but not being allowed to remain, came immediately to Augusta, with but two and a half dollars in his pocket, which was paid out on his arrival at that city for a night's lodging. Learning of his destitution, his old brigadier-general, J. K. Jackson, kindly allowed him the use of his bed and board until he secured a position as purser on the "Christopher," plying between Augusta and Savannah, which boat was burned on the second trip. After being in water twelve hours, with no clothing save his under apparel, he was finally picked up and brought back to Augusta. Securing the position of purser soon thereafter on the "R. H. May," this boat, also, burned on the second trip out, and again he was fortunate enough to be rescued and returned to Augusta. Then he began to act as salesman for J. A. Amsley, tobacco manufacturer, one year later entering the employ of the Granite flour mill, of Augusta, for one year. In 1870 he formed a partnership with Josiah Miller in the grocery business, clearing about $7,000 on a joint capital of less than $5,000. Then the firm of Miller, Bissell & Burum was formed, which firm was eminently successful, making profits to the amount of about $40,000 in the one year of its existence. Continuing alone for several years in the grocery business, Mr. Burum then formed a partnership with B. O. Miller, which was continued until 1894, when the son of the senior partner, Mr. H. P. Burum, was associated in the business, under the style of Burum, Miller & Co. Mr. Peter G. Burum is one of the solid commercial pillars of the city of Augusta, and is of great modesty and the highest commercial qualities. He is ex-president of the Augusta Steamboat company, president of the Diamond Blue Granite company, ex-president of the Augusta Cotton exchange, and vice-president of the Augusta Ice company; also president of the Commercial bank, and warden of the (Episcopal) church of the Atonement. In commercial circles the name of Peter G. Burum is a synonym for integrity, fair dealing, promptness, energy and business capacity, and he is undoubtedly a most notable example of the class of men who are infusing new life into the "Electric city," and are upbuilding the new south. Mr. Burum was happily married, in 1866, to Miss Ellen, daughter of the late P. D. Boutet, of Augusta, and that union has been blessed by the birth of a son, Henry P., now in business with his father in Augusta, as before mentioned.

MICHAEL PHILIP CARROLL, ESQ., one of the most prominent attorneys of Augusta, Ga., was born in St. Mary's county, Md., March 2, 1841, and is the only child born to Henry and Lucretia L. (Briscoe) Carroll. Henry J. Carroll was born March 2, 1818, and was the son of Michael B. Carroll, who was captain in the United States navy, and resigned from the navy in 1817. He was a member of the Catholic church and died in 1824. He served at New Orleans, under Commodore David Porter, and was the executive officer under Commodore Decatur during the war with Tripoli. The father of Michael B. Carroll was David, the son of Charles. The Carroll family is prominently identified with the early history of the United States, and particularly with the history of the state of Maryland. Lucretia L. (Briscoe) Carroll was born in 1820, in St. Mary's county, Md., and was a daughter of Philip Briscoe, a noted teacher of Maryland, and the president for many years of Charlotte Hall academy, one of the oldest schools in the state. His sons are still connected with that institution. Dr. John H. Briscoe, the father of Philip Briscoe was a nephew of John Hanson, the first president of the continental congress of the American colonies. Michael P. Carroll was reared and resided in the county of his birth until his fourteenth year, at that time becoming a student at that venerable and renowned Catholic institution, Georgetown college, in the District of Columbia. Later he entered Mount St. Mary's college, at Emmetsburg, Md., graduating from that institution in 1859. Immediately after his graduation he began the study of the law under the tutorage of William Meade Addison, of Baltimore, who was then United States district attorney for Maryland, and Mr. Carroll was admitted to the bar in that city during the month of April, 1861. During the following month he went to Richmond, Va., and enlisted as a private in Company B of the Twenty-first Virginia infantry. He served as a private until January, 1863, when he was placed on the staff of Gen. John Gregg, of Texas, remaining on that staff until after the battle of Chickamauga, Tenn., in which battle he was severely wounded in the lower part of the right leg. On recovering from his wound, Mr. Carroll was assigned to the staff of Gen. A. R. Wright, of Georgia, and served in that capacity until the close of hostilities. As a soldier Mr. Carroll was brave and fearless, and demonstrated his courage in the hard-fought battles of Kernstown, Front Royal, Winchester, Turner's farm, Cross Keys, McDowell, seven days' around Richmond, Cedar mountain, second Manassas, Harper's Ferry, Antietam, Port Hudson, La.; Raymond, Miss.; Mississippi Springs, Jackson, Chickamauga, and Savannah, participating also in many minor skirmishes. When peace was declared and the Confederate soldiers returned to their homes, Mr. Carroll located in Burke county, Ga., and from 1866 to 1872 was engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1871 he was admitted to practice in the superior courts of Georgia, removing to the city of Augusta the next year, and has ever since been actively and successfully engaged there in the practice of his profession. Among the members of the bar of Augusta Mr. Carroll sustains a most desirable rank; as a lawyer he is noted for his conciseness of expression and the profundity of his research, and is also a thorough master of the principle of precedent. Socially, he is an ever-welcome guest in any assemblage of the wit and wisdom of Augusta, and in the pantheon of her genius the statue of the gentleman whose name entitles this sketch will stand on a pedestal not less high than those erected for his compeers. On July 19, 1864, Mr. Carroll was happily married, in Augusta, Ga., to Miss Jennie McNatt, a native of Burke county, Ga., and a daughter of A. and Emiline (Hart) McNatt. This union has been blessed by the birth of ten children, of whom two sons and four daughters survive, viz.: Emma Hart, William B., Jennie, Eleanor, Robert, and Helen. Mr. Carroll is an honored member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and has occupied the chair of exalted ruler of his lodge. Both he and his estimable wife are consistent members of the Catholic church.

MARSDEN ASBURY CLECKLEY, M. D. The most useful, the most worthy men are not always those who shine with the greatest brilliancy before the world, and astonish the senses with wonderful exploits. The life of a professional man affords but few incidents to excite the interest or attract attention, but it is none the less worthy of record. The subject of this sketch, as one of the most successful homeopathic physicians of Georgia, is justly entitled to a place in a work designed to perpetuate the memory of those who have achieved distinction. Dr. Cleckley was born Sept. 6, 1832, near Orangeburg, S. C., the son of John L. and Margaret (Treutlen) Cleckley, both natives of South Carolina. His paternal grandfather was a native of Germany and served as a soldier in the army of the colonies during the war of the revolution, achieving fame and distinction by capturing the notorious tory, Wolf. The maternal great-grandfather was John Treutlen, the first governor of Georgia under the new constitution, who, during the troublous period when South Carolina tried to usurp authority over her younger sister state, thus unifying the two, battled bravely for her integrity, and preserved her autonomy. He was afterward inhumanly murdered by the tories in South Carolina, thus becoming a noble martyr to the cause of right.

"The sweet remembrance of the just, true and brave,
Like a green root, revives and beats
A train of blessings for their heirs,
When dying nature sleeps in dust."

At the age of eight years Dr. Cleckley removed with his parents from South Carolina to Enon, Ala., receiving his education at that place. Thence he removed to Columbus, Ga., and began the study of medicine; in 1853, entering the Homeopathic college, Philadelphia, Pa., from which institution he was graduated three years later. Immediately after his graduation he entered actively upon the practice of his profession at Columbus, Ga., in 1857, removing to Nashville, Tenn., and coming to Augusta in September of the following year. In Augusta, Dr. Cleckley is ranked among the most successful members of the medical profession, and has accumulated quite a large share of this world's goods. During the war between the states he was appointed surgeon, in charge of the local troops of Augusta, and of those at the arsenal near that city, and he served in that capacity throughout the war. After the close of hostilities he resumed the practice of his profession in Augusta, and has continued uninterruptedly and successfully in the practice at that place up to the present time. In January, 1895, there was organized in the city of Atlanta the homeopathic board of medical examiners, of which he was appointed by the governor a member, the honor of president being conferred upon him by its members. On Sept. 22, 1864, he was married to Catharine Campbell, daughter of the late George and Margaret Cunningham Schley. Their lives were blessed by the birth of four children, two of whom survive, viz.: Mary Montford and Marsden Treutlen. Dr. Cleckley is a man of sterling worth, a true Christian gentleman, whose soul is the mirror of truthfulness and honor. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

C. HENRY COHEN, solicitor-general of the Augusta circuit, Georgia judiciary, was born in Charleston, S. C., in 1856. When a mere child his parents removed to Augusta, Ga., and his education was received at the Richmond County academy, located in Augusta, and at that venerable and renowned Catholic institution, Georgetown college, in the District of Columbia, receiving his diploma as a graduate from the literary department of the latter college in 1877. Returning to Augusta, he entered the law office of Barnes & Cumming, and was admitted to practice in the superior courts of Georgia in 1877. Mr. Cohen at once entered actively and successfully upon the practice of his profession, and so rapid was his rise at the bar that he was appointed solicitor-general by Gov. Henry D. McDaniel, and reappointed during the administration of Gov. William J. Northen. Mr. Cohen is very prominent in several fraternal, benevolent and protective orders, and is district deputy grand chancellor of the Knights of Pythias. He was happily joined in the holy bonds of matrimony, in 1882, to Miss Nora V., daughter of the late Col. J. R. Sneed, a very prominent citizen of Savannah, Ga., and this union has proved an ideally happy one.

DR. THOMAS D. COLEMAN, a prominent physician of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city in January, 1865. He was reared and received his primary education there, and in 1881, he entered the Kentucky university, at Lexington, and graduated there in June, 1885, with the degree of A. B. Dr. Coleman then studied medicine a year with his father, Dr. John S. Coleman, in Augusta, Ga., and then went to Johns Hopkins university, Baltimore, where he took a post-graduate course. He was made assistant physiologist in that university for a year, and then went to the university of the city of New York, where he remained two years, being made assistant physiologist the second year in that institution. In 1890 Dr. Coleman came to Augusta and commenced practice. In March, 1893, he was made professor of physiology, to which, in 1894, pathology was added, in the medical college of Georgia, at Augusta. Dr. Coleman belongs to the State Medical association, the American Climatological association, the association of American physicians and surgeons, the Augusta academy of medicine, and is a member of the Augusta board of health. He is a consistent member of the Christian church. Dr. Coleman was married in June, 1890, to Miss Annie Lee Adams, of Lexington, Ky.

JOSEPH BRYAN CUMMING, one of the leading lawyers of Georgia, was born in the city of Augusta, that state, on the second day of February, 1836. Here, and in the suburb of Summerville, where his grandfather, Mr. Thomas Cumming, and his father, Mr. Henry H. Cumming, always spent the summer season, and where the distinguished subject of this sketch now resides, he went to school in boyhood. At the age of eighteen he was graduated from the university of Georgia, Athens, sharing the first honor with two of his classmates, Gustavus Adolphus Bull and John Harvey Hull. Upon leaving the university, he made a tour of the continent of Europe, which lasted three years, spending most of his time in Paris. Upon his return home, he attended the law school of Harvard university, Cambridge, Mass., for one year. In 1859, he was admitted to the bar, at the superior court of Columbia county. Early in 1861, he entered the service of the Southern Confederacy as a private in the Clinch Rifles, which was Company A, of the Fifth Georgia regiment, commanded by Col. John K. Jackson, and which was first stationed at Pensacola, Fla. In September, 1861, he was made lieutenant in company I, from Columbus; in January, 1862, he was promoted to the captaincy, and served in that rank as assistant adjutant-general in Jackson's brigade, at the battle of Shiloh, in the Kentucky campaign, and at the battle of Murfreesboro. In the latter battle, he had his horse shot from under him, and suffered a slight wound at the battle of Shiloh. After the battle of Murfreesboro, he was ordered to report to Gen. William H. T. Walker, and being subsequently promoted to rank of major, he served in the adjutant-general's department of Walker's command. He was in the Johnston-Sherman campaign from Dalton to Atlanta, in 1864, and took part in the battle of July 22. Maj. Cumming was in every battle of that army from Shiloh until the surrender, excepting those only of Missionary ridge and Jonesborough; and among all the heroes who fought on these sanguinary fields, none has ever received from comrades in arms or superior officers higher meed of praise for gallantry than Maj. Joseph B. Cumming. After the lamented death of Gen. Walker, in that memorable battle of July 22, Maj. Cumming was ordered to report to Gen. Hardee, on whose staff he served until ordered to report to Gen. Hood, who was then commanding the army of Tennessee. He was with Hood in the Tennessee campaign, and was on his staff at the battles of Franklin and Nashville. Upon the removal of Hood and re-appointment of Gen. Johnston to the command of the army of Tennessee, Maj. Cumming was placed on Johnston's staff. Upon the re-organization of the army, in 1865, just before the surrender, he was appointed colonel of a regiment made up of Stephens' brigade; but the army being on the eve of surrender, he did not take command, but remained with Johnston until the disbanding of the army at Greensboro, N. C. After his return home, Maj. Cumming devoted himself to the practice of his profession, which he has sedulously pursued to the present time. He is ranked among the ablest members of the Georgia bar, both in his knowledge of the principles of law, in his familiarity with the code of practice, and as a pleader before the bench or jury. In the midst of his large practice, however, he has found time to devote a portion of his time and talents to the public service and has held many positions of responsibility and honor. In 1868 he was made an elector on the Seymour and Blair ticket. In 1870, Maj. Cumming was elected from Richmond county to the Georgia house of representatives, in the organization of which body he was a candidate for speaker, being defeated by Hon. James M. Smith, of Muscogee county, by but eleven votes. Upon Mr. Smith's accession to the gubernatorial chair, Maj. Cumming succeeded him as speaker of the house, which position he held during the winter and summer sessions of 1872. He was not a candidate again for political office until his nomination and election to the state senate in 1877. Though not a member of any church, Maj. Cumming affiliates with the Episcopalian. He was happily married in October, 1860, to Miss Hubbell, a native of Bridgeport, Conn., and a resident of New York city, a union that was blessed with the birth of two children, viz.: Bryan, a distinguished lawyer of the city of Augusta, Ga.,

and Jane, wife of James P. Verdery, a very prominent citizen of Augusta. Maj. Cumming's intimate acquaintance with literature, combined with his culture and grace of manner, makes his society much sought by the intellectual and refined. He is an effective public speaker, possessing an agreeable and finished style of oratory. His is one of those well-balanced minds which are never thrown from their poise by emergencies of danger and excitement, and his regular intellectual features, will impress an observer as reflecting reliable qualities of head and heart.

HON. JOHN SHELDON DAVIDSON, deceased, was a typical Georgian. Born in Augusta, Ga., and contravening the maxim that, "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country," he never lived anywhere else, but grew up and made his way in the world among the people of the city of his birth, who now delight to do honor to his memory, in appreciation of his efforts in their behalf. His mother was a Treat—a lineal descendant of Robert Treat, the "Charter Oak" governor of Connecticut, who was lieutenant-governor and governor of that state for twenty-five years, and of Robert Treat Paine, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and long attorney-general of Massachusetts. His father, William Dean Davidson, was a native of Newark, N. J. The education of John S. Davidson was obtained at the schools of Augusta and at the Aubury institute, in Twiggs county, Ga. He left school in the latter part of 1864, and some years after the war was associated with James R. Randall, author of Maryland, My Maryland, in the editorial department of the old "Augusta Constitutionalist." After that he studied law, mastered it, and was engaged in that profession, in which he achieved notable success, at the day of his death. In 1884 Mr. Davidson was elected from the floor grand master of the Masons of Georgia, one of the largest and most intelligent deliberative bodies of the state. Such an election, he never having held any other office in the grand lodge, had only occurred once prior to that time (United States Senator W. C. Dawson being elected in the same way) in the 150 years of the existence of the grand lodge. In 1884 he was unanimously elected to the state senate, and served as chairman of the finance committee of that body. His committee never lost a report during the session, something which has rarely if ever occurred before in the history of the Georgia legislature. In 1886 he was re-elected to the senate by a large majority, and was unanimously chosen president of that body, and was admittedly one of the finest presiding officers who had ever wielded the gavel in Georgia's legislative halls. He was president of the board of education of Richmond county, and city attorney of the city of Augusta. He never married, and departed this life March 11, 1894, his funeral being conducted according to the ancient rites of the masonic fraternity, and many prominent members of that order from every section of Georgia and other states participating in the solemn duty. The funeral services were in charge of the grand lodge, and no such concourse of people had been seen at a funeral in Augusta. The many public bodies of which he was a member attended, and over 4,000 children from the public schools joined the sorrowing throng.

WILLIAM TREAT DAVIDSON, a prominent attorney of Augusta, Ga., was born in Rome, Floyd Co., Ga., Sept. 26, 1848. Paternally he is descended from William Dean Davidson, a native of Newark, N. J., who came south and settled in the city of Augusta, Ga., about 1840, dying in that city in 1877. His mother was a Treat—a lineal descendant of Robert Treat, the "Charter Oak" governor of Connecticut, who was governor and lieutenant-governor of that state for twenty-five years. The father was a merchant throughout his long, active and honorable life. The son, whose name heads this sketch, removed from Rome with his parents to the city of Augusta when an infant six months of age, and received his education in the city schools of Augusta. At the age of nineteen he entered his father's store as bookkeeper and manager, serving in that capacity for two years. In the meantime he had studied law at night, frequently reading from the time he closed the store until midnight. His father rather opposed his entering the legal profession, because one member of the family was already an attorney. He was admitted to the bar at the spring term of Richmond superior court, Feb. 8, 1870, after a most rigid examination. He received from the judge presiding and the committee of examination many congratulations for the prompt manner in which every question was answered. During the time he was connected with the mercantile business of his father he had laid by enough money to support himself during the first year of his practice at the bar. In the fall of 1873 he formed a co-partnership in the practice of the law with his brother, John S. Davidson, and that co-partnership existed at the time of the death of the latter, on March 11, 1894. Since the death of his brother Mr. Davidson has continued uninterruptedly in the practice of his chosen profession, in which he has achieved notable success. In April, 1894, Mr. Davidson was elected city attorney of Augusta, to succeed his brother, deceased, and retains that position at the present time. Mr. Davidson saw service during the civil war as a member of Maj. George T. Jackson's brigade, Georgia state troops, serving as a private until the close of hostilities. He was an active participant in the battles of Jonesboro, Griswoldville, Grahamsville, S. C., and the siege of Savannah. Mr. Davidson is a consistent member of the Episcopal church, and is a vestryman of St. Paul's, Augusta. He was married Oct. 14, 1885, to Miss Caroline W., daughter of Judge Sidney A. Wetmore, of Warren, Penn. Mr. Davidson is an honored member of the masonic fraternity, of which his late lamented brother, John S., was grand master of the state of Georgia, and has been worthy master of Webb lodge, No. 166, of Augusta. He is, also, a prominent Knight Templar, being senior warden of Georgia commandery, Augusta. Mr. Davidson has never sought political preferment of any kind, preferring to devote his entire time to the arduous duties of his chosen profession.

AUGUST DORR, deceased. The late August Dorr, of Augusta, Ga., was one of the few men who have a clear title, according to our human estimate, of being called blameless. In every relation of life he was a model. If he had faults, as all of us have, they were eclipsed by his conspicuous virtues. He never wronged anyone, nor did he ever speak unkindly of anyone. He devoutly followed the precepts of his church, and supernatural grace shone in all of his actions. He carried his genuine piety into his business, his duties as a citizen, and his domestic relations. A blessing fell upon his whole existence. His worldly affairs prospered, and his home was such a one as every Christian husband and father would desire as a supreme benediction. August Dorr, grandson of Revier-forster P. Victor Eisen, resident of Aschaffenburg, Bavaria, and grandson of Postmaster John, and a son of Postmaster Adam Dorr, was born in the village of Dieburg, Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, July 9, 1831. From the age of six to fourteen he attended the local schools, and was then apprenticed to learn the tailoring trade, his mother paying his employer 150 guilders (about $60) for the training he received. At the age of seventeen he had so far mastered the tailoring trade as to become his own man. He passed through the revolution of 1848, was conscripted in 1850, and, according to the state law, was given the privilege of emigrating. His mother purchased for him a ticket to New York. A manuscript in the possession of the writer, written some time before the death of Mr. Dorr, describes his journey to America in detail. This manuscript says: "I left home in June. After stopping some time in Frankfort-on-the-Main, Coblenz, Colon, and Rotterdam, I crossed the North sea and landed at Hull, England. I then crossed England, boarded a ship at Liverpool and, after a long and tiresome voyage, arrived at the beautiful harbor of New York, on the morning of Aug. 12, 1850." Arriving at New York, Mr. Dorr secured work at his trade. A year later he came to Augusta, where he remained two months, and then returned to New York. Having been much impressed, however, by the thrift and enterprise of the city of Augusta, he returned there in September, 1852, and secured employment at the tailoring establishment of John Bridges, who in later years was made manager of the Jackson street store of Mr. Dorr. When the war between the states began he saw active service as a private in the Georgia reserves, and was very frequently detached as escort with prisoners of war. It is said of him that he never shirked a duty and was a most gallant soldier. After the close of hostilities Mr. Dorr in 1867 established the business in which he was engaged at the time of his death. He was enterprising, and from an humble beginning built up the best known clothing and haberdashery establishment in the southeastern section of the southern states. He associated with him, from time to time, his three sons, Frank, Victor J., and Lawrence, and they were practically brought up to the business. In 1857 August Dorr was happily married to Miss Catherine Magill, of Augusta; a union which was blessed by the birth of nine children, of whom three sons died in infancy. Those living are: Frank X., Victor J., and Lawrence, who have succeeded to the business of their father; Mrs. Edward Horne, of Macon, Ga.; and Misses Catherine and Madge Dorr, of Augusta. Mr. Dorr was a member of the Roman Catholic church. He departed this life at his home in the city of Augusta, on July 25, 1893, the funeral ceremonies being conducted by Bishop Becker, of Savannah, Ga.

JOSHUA J. DOUGHTY, a prominent cotton merchant of Augusta, was born in Belair, Richmond Co., Ga., July 21, 1841. He was reared in the county of his birth and educated at Richmond academy, leaving that seat of learning in September, 1861, to enlist for six months in the Oglethorpe infantry, which company was assigned to the Forty-eighth Georgia regiment. At the end of his term of enlistment he returned home and joined an infantry company, raised in Augusta by Capt. S. H. Crump, and attached to the Twelfth Georgia battalion, of which he was chosen first lieutenant. The virtual command of this company was in the hands of Lieut. Doughty for a great part of the time, and he commanded the battalion at the battle of Monocacy, July 12, 1864. Lieut. Doughty was also actively engaged in the battles of Cheat mountain, Fort Clift, siege of Savannah, battery Wagner, Fort Sumter, second Cold Harbor, the raid on Washington, Harper's ferry, Jackson's raid to the Ohio river, and Monocacy. While in command of the Twelfth Georgia battalion at the battle of Monocacy he was twice wounded by shot, once in the mouth and once in the shoulder, and from that date went out of the service. So severe were his wounds, he was conveyed to the home of J. W. Burch, about eight miles from the city of Washington, D. C., where he remained about thirty days, and was then confined in the old Capitol prison for about three months, thence being carried to Fort Delaware prison, where he was regularly exchanged about three months later and returned to his home. Joshua J. Doughty engaged in the cotton business in Augusta in 1867, and has given his attention to that business exclusively ever since. In 1878 he was married to Miss Alwin L. Allen, who died, leaving as the fruit of that union a son and two daughters. His second marriage was to Miss Terreece L. Anderson, a granddaughter of W. J. Owens, of Augusta, Ga., but she died without issue. Mr. Doughty's present wife was Mary Rosine Nixon, a daughter of J. W. Nixon, of the United States navy.

DR. WILLIAM H. DOUGHTY, JR., professor of anatomy and clinical surgery of the medical department of the university of Georgia, was born in Augusta, Ga., in 1856. He was reared and received his academical education in his native city, and graduated from the literary department of the university of Georgia with the degree of A. B., in the class of 1875. Immediately after his graduation he began the study of medicine at the State Medical college at Augusta, receiving his diploma in that department of the university of Georgia in 1878. He then went to New York city and attended lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, also attending various private lecture courses, after which he ventured to Augusta and at once entered actively upon the practice of his profession. In 1881 Dr. Doughty was made clinical assistant in the medical department of the university of Georgia; in 1886, demonstrator of anatomy and lecturer on diseases of the nervous system; in 1887, professor of obstetrics, to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Dr. Joseph A. Eve; in 1888, professor of materia medica and therapeutics; in 1893-4, general and surgical pathology; and at the close of the session of 1894 he was placed in the chair he now holds. Dr. Doughty is an honored member of the Georgia State Medical association and of the Augusta Academy of Medicine. He has a very large clientele, embracing the positions of surgeon in charge of the Freedman's hospital of Augusta; surgeon to the Oglethorpe light infantry; local surgeon to the Central railroad of Georgia, the Port Royal & Augusta railroad, the Port Royal & Western Carolina railroad, and the Augusta Electric Street Railroad company; also medical examiner at Augusta for the New York Life, the Equitable, the Manhattan, Mutual Benefit of New Jersey, the Kentucky Mutual, the Hartford Life and Annuity, and the Chicago Guarantee Fund, life insurance companies. Dr. Doughty rendered much valuable public service as chairman of the building committee of the Augusta city hospital, completed in 1894. He is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church south, is worshipful master of Webb lodge No. 166, F. and A. M., and is a Knight Templar. He was married in 1883 to Miss Eleanor, daughter of the late Roger Gamble, of Augusta, Ga., and this union has been blessed by the birth of a lovely daughter.

WILLIAM M. DUNBAR, postmaster of Augusta, Ga., was born in Barnwell district, S. C., April 6, 1846. His ancestors on both sides were soldiers in the armies of the colonies during the war of the revolution, and ancestors of both his paternal and maternal antecedents were colonial captains. Allen R. Dunbar, father of the gentleman whose name heads this sketch, was a native of South Carolina. He had five sons and a son-in-law in the Confederate armies during the war between the states. William M. Dunbar was reared and educated in the common schools of his native district. In January, 1863, he went to Augusta, Ga., to attend school, and the following May he enlisted as a private in Company A of Maj. George T. Jackson's battalion, and served until November, 1864, when he lost his right arm at the battle of Griswoldville, Ga., and returned from the service. After his recovery Mr. Dunbar attended school at Athens, Ga., six months, and then commenced to clerk in Augusta, for Winchester Graham, stock and bond brokerage, remaining two years. In November, 1866, he was married to Miss Rebecca C., daughter of the late Thomas Hopkins, of Augusta, Ga., and went to his old home in Barnwell district, S. C., and planted two years. Returning to Augusta, Mr. Dunbar became engaged as purser of a steamboat running between Augusta and Savannah, retaining that position two years. He then worked a year for R. H. May & Co., of Augusta, and in 1872 he was elected treasurer of Richmond county, Ga., in which capacity he served ten years, when he resigned.

In 1874 Mr. Dunbar engaged in the grain and commission business in Augusta, and retains an interest in that business at the present time. From 1885 to 1889 Mr. Dunbar served as city recorder of Augusta, and then resigned. In April, 1893, he was appointed by President Cleveland postmaster of Augusta, which position he now holds. Mr. Dunbar is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the St. John's M. E. Church south, of which he is a steward and trustee. Of his marriage to Miss Rebecca Hopkins, aforementioned, there have been born eight children, four of whom are now living, three boys and one girl.

WILLIAM F. EVE, judge of the city court of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city, March 8, 1851. His father was Joseph A., one of the founders of the medical department of the university of Georgia. William F. Eve received his earlier education in the city of Augusta. In 1869 he became a student at the university of Virginia, where he was engaged for two years in the study of literature and one year in the study of law. Returning to Augusta, he was admitted to the bar in 1872, and engaged actively in the practice of his profession. In 1875 he was made solicitor of the Richmond county court, and on Oct. 15, 1878, was appointed judge of the same court. On the abolition of the Richmond county court, in 1881, and the creation of the city court of Augusta, he was appointed judge of the latter court, which office he has held continuously ever since. Since 1878 Judge Eve has been ex-officio commissioner of roads and revenues for the county of Richmond, a most responsible position, which he has creditably filled. Under his administration the roads of Richmond county have become famous as splendid highways. Judge Eve is also identified with several extensive business enterprises of Augusta, being vice-president of the Augusta Real Estate and Improvement company, and a member of the board of directors of the Mutual Real Estate and Building association, of the Augusta and Summerville Land company, and the West Side Development company. He is also a director of the Young Men's Library association, and chairman of the board of trustees of St. John's Methodist Episcopal church south, and chairman of the Campground association. Since 1889 Judge Eve was president of the Richmond County Agricultural society, holding that office until 1894. The Richmond county court house was enlarged and beautified under the administration of Judge Eve. This building ranks among the most impressive public edifices of Georgia. Judge Eve was happily married, on May 16, 1876, to Ida Evans, eldest daughter of Gen. Clement A. Evans, of Georgia. Their marriage has been blessed by the birth of several children, four of whom are now living, viz.: Allie Walton, Sarah Garland, William Frederick, and Ida Evans.

WILLIAM H. FLEMING, a rising lawyer of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city Oct. 18, 1856, and is a son of Porter and Catherine B. (Moragne) Fleming. Porter Fleming was born in Lincoln county, Ga., Aug. 29, 1808, was a son of Robert Fleming, a native of Virginia, and of Scotch-Irish extraction. Porter Fleming settled in Augusta in 1830, where he was engaged in merchandising and dealing in cotton until his death, in 1891. His wife, Mrs. Catherine B. Fleming, is a native of Abbeville county, S. C., and is of French Huguenot origin. William H. Fleming is the third of a family of eight children born to his parents, viz.: John M., Frank E., William H., Catherine L., Minnie C., Lamar L., I. Moragne, and Porter, Jr. He has a fine education, having first attended the Summerville academy, on Sand Hill, and next the Richmond academy, at Augusta. He then went to Athens, where he attended the university of Georgia, from which institution he was graduated in 1875. While in the junior class of this institution

he took the medal for the best essay—competition being open to all students—and was elected anniversarian of the Phi Kappa society. In 1875 he also delivered the commencement address, and after graduating remained at the university one year as tutor. He was one among others that the great Alexander H. Stephens assisted financially to an education, but the funds advanced have long since been returned by Mr. Fleming, with interest. In January, 1877, Mr. Fleming was elected superintendent of public schools at Augusta, which position he held three and one-half years, when he resigned and prosecuted the study of law under John T. Shewmake. In November, 1880, he was admitted to the bar, entered upon practice, and at once became a leader of his profession. In 1883 he delivered the address at the centennial celebration of Richmond academy, and in 1885 he made the oration at Augusta on the Confederate memorial day, which was specially noticed and eulogized by many leading papers for its sound views and patriotic sentiments. He was also president of the Hayne Literary society two years, resigning in 1886. He was for many years one of the trustees of the Young Men's Library association, and is now president of the board of trustees of the medical college of Georgia, Augusta. He is also president of the Thomson-Houston Electric Light company, of Augusta. He was elected to the general assembly in 1888-89, and has been successively re-elected ever since. In 1892-93 he was made chairman of finance committee of the house of representatives, and is the author of some of the most important laws in the Georgia code. In 1888-89 he framed and had passed a law regulating the recovering of transfers and liens on property. In 1890-91 he introduced and secured the passage of a bill to provide for the more speedy determination of criminal trials. This was a very important measure. In 1892-93 he was the author of the act passed ordering the codifying of the laws of Georgia; also an act to systematize the finances of the public schools of Georgia, and to provide for the prompt payment of teachers. In that same year he was elected first vice-president of the Georgia Bar association, and at the annual meeting of that body read a paper entitled "How Should the Judiciary Be Chosen, and Why?" In 1894 he was chosen president of the Georgia Bar association. In 1894 Mr. Fleming was re-elected to the Georgia legislature, and upon the assembling of that body was chosen speaker, without opposition, and proved to be one of the ablest parliamentarians and one of the most equitable presiding officers who ever wielded the gavel over that body. Mr. Fleming is a gentleman of exceeding modesty, never failing to recognize as his equal every man who honestly labors to perform his entire duty. He is an enthusiastic Mason, a member of Webb lodge, No. 166, chapter No. 2, R. A. M., and Georgia commandery, No. 1, K. T., and is also a Knight of Pythias and a member of the college fraternity, Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

FRANK E. FLEMING, a prominent banker of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city, Jan. 12, 1854. He was reared and received his education at Richmond academy. In 1870 Mr. Fleming began to clerk for his father, Porter Fleming, cotton factor, and remained with him until 1877, when he retired to act as runner for the Georgia Railroad bank. When he left there he had reached the position of teller, which he held from 1881 to 1886. Mr. Fleming then formed the banking firm of Fleming, Thomas & Co., which now continues. The subject of this sketch is a director in the Langley Manufacturing company, and was president in 1890 of the Augusta and Summerville Railroad company, a horse-car line. Mr. Fleming then changed it from a horse-car to an electric line, and the road was then sold. He is still a director in the company. Mr. Fleming was married, in 1891, to Miss Lila Twiggs.

WILLIAM H. FOSTER, M. D., one of the leading physicians of eastern Georgia, was born in Augusta, Ga., March 3, 1841, and is the third of eight children now in life born to John and Jane E. M. (Zim) Foster. The maternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch was Henry Zim, who was a private soldier under "Light Horse Harry" Lee in the war of the revolution. He was severely wounded in the attack made by Lee on old Fort Augusta, which was then held by the British under Gen. Brown. He also saw service in the armies of the colonies at the battles of Kings Mountain, Monmouth, the Cowpens, and was at the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown. He lived a long and useful life and died at the ripe age of ninety-four years. William H. Foster received his education at the Richmond county academy, and at the Mount Zion high school, in Hancock county, Ga., which was then presided over by Gov. William J. Northen. He then read medicine under Dr. Richard D. Moore, of Athens, afterward attending lectures in Atlanta. In 1861 he enlisted in Company A, known as the Oglethorpe infantry, First Georgia volunteers. At the end of his term of enlistment he returned to Augusta and raised a battalion, which was subsequently transferred to the Sixty-third Georgia regiment, at Savannah, where it remained until just before the retreat of Johnston from Dalton. The doctor took part also in all the battles from Dalton to Atlanta, and in the battle of Jonesboro, Ga. He then went with Gen. Hood to Nashville. Dr. Foster was an active participant in the battles of Cheat Mountain Ford, Green Brier River, McDowell's, Kernstown, Winchester, Strasburg, Hanging Rock, Romney, Rich Mountain, Rock Face, Resaca, Dalton, Altoona, New Hope Church, Kennesaw Mountain, Peachtree Creek, Fair Grounds near Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin, Murfreesboro, Nashville, and Bentonville. At the close of the war he returned to Augusta and resumed his medical studies, graduating with honors, in March, 1867, from the medical college of Georgia, department of university of Georgia. He entered actively upon the practice of his profession at Lexington, Oglethorpe Co., Ga., where he remained nine years, and in 1877 returned to Augusta. He has served one term as a member of the city council of Augusta; was chairman of the board of health committee and ex-officio president of the board of health. In 1878 he was made city physician, and retains that position at this time. On Sept. 25, 1859, he was married to Miss Margaret V., daughter of Dr. Cosmo P. Richardson, of Savannah, and this union was blessed by the birth of eight children, of whom five are now in life, viz.: Maggie C., John H., Eva H., Henry C., and Eugenia. In 1888 he was called upon to mourn the death of his wife, who was a consistent member of the Episcopal church. His second marriage was to Mrs. Stella R. (Robinson) Oliver, daughter of Dr. Francis J. Robinson, of Lexington, Ga., and they have one child, a daughter. Dr. Foster is a consistent member of the Christian church, also of the benevolent order Royal Arcanum and order of the Golden Rule.

JAMES L. FLEMING, vice-president of the Augusta orphan asylum, was born in Lincoln county, Ga., Aug. 12, 1843. Left an orphan at the tender age of seven years, he was carried to the home of his uncle, Porter Fleming, in Augusta, Ga., and given the very best educational advantages. He first attended the old Richmond academy, then the school of the Rev. John W. Reed, in Oglethorpe county, leaving that school in September, 1860, to become a cadet at the Finley institute, Lenoir, N. C. In April, 1861, he ran away from school and enlisted as a private in Company G, First North Carolina regiment, which company was known as the Burke rifles. He served in that command until the spring of 1862, when having been made a sergeant, he joined the Oglethorpe artillery at Augusta, Ga., and served as a private in that command throughout Bragg's Kentucky campaign and the return, and was then transferred for duty in the defense of Savannah, the Oglethorpe artillery and George A. Gordon's battalion being merged into the Sixty-third Georgia regiment. Having been promoted to sergeant and then to ensign Mr. Fleming was detached from his regiment by order of the secretary of war and assigned to duty in the signal corps, serving in that department until after the evacuation of Savannah. He was then assigned to Gen. W. J. Hardee's headquarters at Charleston, S. C., and later to Fort Sumter, serving there until the evacuation, when he went with Johnston's army and was at the surrender at Greensboro, N. C. Mr. Fleming was an active participant in the battles of Big Bethel, Dams Nos. 1 and 2, Harrod's Mill, Williamsburg, Richmond, Ky., Perryville, the siege of Savannah, siege of Fort Sumter, Averbosboro and Bentonville. Throughout the bloody battles above mentioned he was never seriously wounded, receiving two slight scratches at the battle of Big Bethel, Va. After the close of hostilities Mr. Fleming walked from North Carolina to Augusta, having only a dollar and a quarter in his pocket, and began life anew as a farm hand, working for his board and clothing. In 1866 he secured a situation as clerk in Atlanta, Ga., and eight months later engaged as traveling salesman for the dry goods establishment of Samuel Bevan & Co., of Baltimore, which position he filled most acceptably for two years. Removing to Abbeville district, S. C., he was engaged for one season in agricultural affairs. Mr. Fleming then returned to Augusta and formed a co-partnership with his brother in the drug business, which was continued for eight years. At the same time, however, he and W. E. McCoy engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, which was abandoned one year later. In 1880 he entered the grocery business in Augusta, and carried it on for seven years, establishing the large furniture business he now operates in 1888. Since 1875, in addition to other extensive interests, he has devoted no inconsiderable part of his time to farming and planting. Mr. Fleming is vice-president of the Confederate Survivors' association of Richmond county, is a Knight Templar Mason, and the honored assistant superintendent of the Sunday school of the First Presbyterian church, of Augusta. He is also a member of the board of trustees of the masonic fraternity of Augusta. He has never embraced the matrimonial state. As the efficient vice-president of the Augusta Orphan asylum, Mr. Fleming is possibly best known to the public. In that great charity, made famous by the devotion to its interests of such names as William Royal Sibley, James C. C. Black, and hosts of others equally prominent, he has always evinced a most careful pride. His tenderness to the unfortunate little orphans has completely won their most ardent affection and his visits are hailed by the children with genuine delight. Here he dispenses a liberality as generous and open-hearted as it is beautiful, relying on the promise of the Master, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

FRANK L. FULLER, of the wholesale grocery firm of Fuller & Summerall, Augusta, Ga., was born in Columbia county, Ga., April 14, 1851. He was reared and educated in the county of his birth, and at twenty-one years of age he began to clerk for the firm of Stables & Read, Augusta, wholesale grocers, remaining in the employ of that house for six months, at the end of which time he entered the employ of Young & Hack, wholesale grocers, and remained with that firm ten years. He was then made a member of the firm, its name being changed to Young, Hack & Co. Six months later the name of Fuller, Hatcher & Co. was adopted and as such the business was continued for six years, when the present firm of Fuller & Summerall was formed. The present firm, from its inception in July, 1892, has been a leader in the trade, and is annually extending the scope of its operations. Mr. Fuller is a member of the Phoenix factory and of the Grocers' Manufacturing company, of Augusta. He was happily married in 1879 to Ella, daughter of the late Isaac Jones, of Augusta, and that union has been blessed by the birth of three children, viz.: Mary L., Ella J., and Thomas L. The father of Frank L. Fuller, Francis M., now retired, was sheriff of Columbia county, Ga., for many years. One of his sons, William T., was a soldier in the Confederate army and served during the latter part of the civil war.

WILLIAM A. GARRETT, of the firm of Garrett & Latimer, cotton factors, Augusta, Ga., was born in Edgefield district, S. C., in 1840, and was reared and educated there, coming to Georgia when about thirty years of age. He attended Mercer university, then located at Penfield, Ga., but was forced to give up his studies there one year before his graduation. In April, 1861, Mr. Garrett entered the Confederate service as a private in Company I, South Carolina troops, and was detailed for duty in the quartermaster's department for two years. In 1865 he was made a lieutenant in Company M of the Seventh South Carolina regiment, and served as such until the close of the war, being an active participant in the bloody battle of the first Manassas. After the close of hostilities Mr. Garrett returned to his home in Edgefield district, and was engaged in agricultural pursuits for one year. He then removed to Augusta, Ga., and went into the grocery and cotton business, and for more than twenty-five years he has been engaged in the cotton business exclusively, the present firm having been organized in 1874. Mr. Garrett is a director in the Sibley Manufacturing company, of Augusta, and served for one year as a member of the Augusta city council. He is a deacon in the First Presbyterian church of Augusta. He was married, in January, 1861, to Miss Alice, daughter of the late Alexander Houston, a native of Abbeville, S. C., and that union has been blessed by the birth of five children, all of whom survive, viz.: Cornelius B., Thomas C., Jenna H., Alice L., and Henry B. The ancestors of William A. Garrett came originally from Virginia. His father, Thomas Garrett, was a native of South Carolina, and died in 1874, at the age of sixty-six years.

MAJ. WILLIAM T. GARY, attorney at law, Augusta, Ga., is a native of Cokesbury, Abbeville district, S. C., and is a son of Thomas R. and Mary A. (Porter) Gary. Thomas R. Gary was born in Newberry district, S. C., in 1801, and was a son of Jesse Gary, a native of the same district and state, and was of English descent. Thomas R. represented his native county in the South Carolina legislature several terms, and was at one time treasurer of the Greenville & Columbia railroad, of which he was one of the projectors. He was also a planter on a large scale, and followed that vocation until his death, in 1851. Mrs. Mary A. (Porter) Gary is a native of Golden Grove, Greenville district, S. C., and is a daughter of Hugh Porter, a once famous Methodist preacher. It is related of the latter that one day, on his way to church, he was insulted by a rough man, and the more Mr. Porter reasoned the worse the man got to be, until finally Mr. Porter laid his overcoat on the ground and said: "Lay there, Methodism, until I give this man a whipping." And he did give him a good one. The quotation became a current expression throughout the neighborhood, and is still in vogue. The children born to his parents are as follows: Dr. F. F., Col. Smith G., Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Griffin, Gen. M. W., John H., Dr. Thomas P., Mrs. Ann V. Evans, William T., Mrs. Atlanta F. Hodges and Louella P. Maj. Gary graduated from the South Carolina college in 1861, and in the spring of the same year entered the Confederate army as first lieutenant of the South Carolina college cadets, and subsequently served on the staff of Gen. N. G. Evans, his brother-in-law, who was voted a testimonial by the South Carolina legislature for his successful management of his troops at Leesburgh, Va., being the only general so honored by the legislature named. John H. Gary, a brother of our subject, was the first captain of the South Carolina college cadets, and led that company to the field. He was killed at Battery Wagner in 1863, while commanding a company of regular Confederate artillery, and on account of his gallantry on that occasion Battery Gary was erected at Charleston harbor in his honor. Soon after the battle of Charleston harbor he was attached to the staff of Gen. N. G. Evans, and served in the Maryland campaign. Maj. William T. Gary served in the Virginia campaign until after the battle of Sharpsburg, when he was transferred to the staff of his brother, Gen. Martin W. Gary, promoted to the rank of major, and served as such until the close of the war. Maj. Gary was an active participant in a number of battles, among which were Rappahannock (near Warrenton), Va.; second Manassas, Antietam, and Boonesborough gap. On his return to South Carolina he read law with his brother, Gen. Martin W., was admitted to the bar in 1866, and formed a co-partnership with the general, which lasted until 1875, when he removed from Edgefield court house, S. C., to Augusta, Ga., where he has since been actively and successfully employed in the practice of his profession, and has built up a reputation co-extensive with the state. In all the cases of which he has had charge he has never permitted a white client to be sent to the penitentiary, and but two of his black clients have met that fate. He was the leading attorney in the defense of the Hamburg rioters, of whom more than fifty were under indictment for murder, and also leading attorney for the Ellenton rioters; he was likewise the principal attorney in defending the Edgefield lynchers, of whom thirty-three were indicted for murder, all of whom were acquitted; he also defended Jones, charged with killing three men in one fight, and has succeeded in clearing him of two of the charges, the third not yet having been decided. In 1882 and 1883 the major represented Richmond county in the general assembly, and his course while a member of that honorable body proved the wisdom of the people in selecting him. He was the author of several of the important bills introduced during the session, and was one of those who advocated the sale of the state road. He was one of the orators elected by the legislature to deliver a eulogy on the death of Hon. Ben Hill, and was appointed to present to the retiring speaker of the house a testimonial from its members. He is also attorney for the Augusta, Gibson & Sandersville railroad, in the building of which he was a prominent director, and of the prosperity of which he has been a prime promoter. Feb. 12, 1885, he married Miss Fanny H. Phinizy, daughter of Dr. Thomas B. and Fanny (Hamilton) Phinizy, of Augusta, Ga., and his home has been brightened by the birth of one son, William T. Gary, Jr. Mrs. Gary is a member of the Baptist church, and the major is a bright Mason, having risen to the degree of Knight Templar. He is also a member of the college fraternity, Phi Kappa Psi. William T. Gary attended the schools of his native district until preparation for the South Carolina college, now the university of South Carolina, whose president was Judge A. B. Longstreet, a noted, Southern author. Mr. Gary and his college classmates at the beginning of the civil war, were formed into a company called the South Carolina college cadets, and took an active part in the attack on Fort Sumter. In 1861 the cadets were reorganized, Mr. Gary being elected first lieutenant.

DR. EDWARD CONYERS GOODRICH of Augusta, president of the Georgia Society of Medical Examiners for Life Insurance, was born in that city April 1, 1852. He attended Emory college, Oxford, Ga., for three years, and in 1869 began the study of medicine at the medical department of the university of Georgia located at Augusta, graduating from that institution in March, 1873. During the following autumn he went to Europe and studied in the clinics of London, Berlin and Vienna for two years. Returning home, he began the practice of medicine in his native city, which he has continued to the present time. Dr. Goodrich is treasurer of the State Medical association of Georgia, is a member of the American Medical association, the American Public Health association and of the Augusta Academy of Medicine. He is also a member of the Augusta board of health, and examining surgeon for pensions in the United States pension department for eastern Georgia and a portion of South Carolina. For the past sixteen years he has given much of his time to life insurance examining. Beginning sixteen years ago as chief examiner for the Equitable, he is now not only nominator for eastern Georgia, but chief examiner at Augusta for twenty life insurance companies, notably of the Mutual Life Insurance company of New York, United States Life, Metropolitan Life, New York Life, Nederlands Insurance company, Aetna Life, Mutual Benefit of New Jersey, Penn Mutual Life, and the Mutual Life Insurance company of Kentucky. He has been treasurer of the medical association of Georgia for over ten years, and was for some years city physician of Augusta. He also enjoys a very lucrative private practice. In April, 1894, Dr. Goodrich conceived the idea of forming an association of medical examiners of life insurance for the state of Georgia, for the purpose of combining all examiners in the state for mutual benefit and protection. This association has already done incalculable good, and honored itself by honoring its founder, Dr. Goodrich, who was unanimously elected to serve as its first president.

HON. CHARLES A. HARPER, president of the board of education of Richmond county, Ga., was born in the city of Augusta, Ga., Feb. 22, 1845. His father, William, was a native of County Antrim, Ireland, came to the United States in 1810, to Georgia one year later, and located the following year in the city of Augusta, where for many years he was engaged in the cotton factorage business. He departed this life in Augusta in 1857. Charles A. Harper was reared in the city of Augusta and received his earlier education at Richmond county academy, went thence to the university of Georgia (Athens), but never graduated, as he, like the majority of the members of his class, left that institution in the senior year to enlist in the Confederate service as a private in the Twelfth Georgia battalion of artillery. After serving a year with that command he was transferred to the Sixty-third Georgia infantry, commanded by Col. (afterward Gen.) John B. Gordon, now United States senator from Georgia. In the latter part of the summer of 1863 he was again transferred—this time to the signal service—and stationed at Savannah, Ga., where he remained until the second bombardment of Fort Sumter, thence being transferred to Sumter, but escaped capture. Returning to Savannah, he remained there until that city was evacuated, when he followed the army of Gen. Hood in retreat and surrendered with him. During the civil war Mr. Harper was not a participant in any of the more important battles, though he was under fire many times and proved himself a most gallant soldier. After the close of hostilities he was engaged for three years in agricultural pursuits in Dougherty county, Ga. During that time he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in Burke county, Ga., in 1871, locating at Augusta, where he immediately entered actively and successfully upon the practice of his profession, which has been continued uninterruptedly since. Mr. Harper has been very active in the behalf of the democratic party and was elected chairman of the democratic executive committee of Richmond county. He was unanimously elected president of the board of education of Richmond county, he having been a member of that board for the past ten years. He was happily married in 1872 to Miss Mary E., daughter of Hamilton H. Hickman of Augusta, Ga., who is vice-president of the Georgia Banking company, and that union has been blessed by the birth of one daughter, Sarah Whatley Harper.

LINWOOD CLINTON HAYNE, president of the Planters' Loan and Savings bank, and of the National bank of Augusta, Ga., was born in the fine old county of Burke, Ga., April 23, 1858. He attended the schools of his native county for a number of years, and then, in 1881, took a commercial course of study in Atlanta. Returning to Augusta, he entered one of the great dry goods houses of that city, remaining therewith many years, and being successively promoted from subordinate clerk to the responsible position of credit man. In 1888, Mr. Hayne was elected president of the Planters' Loan and Savings bank, and in 1894 president of the National bank of Augusta. His career in the great world of business affords a striking illustration of what may be accomplished by strict attention to business and fair dealing; an object lesson well worthy of the attention of the youth of Georgia. Beginning thirteen years ago as a clerk, he has achieved wealth and reputation as a business man, and now occupies a most desirable place among the successful citizens of his section of the state. Mr. Hayne is an honored member of the Knights Templar, is past master of Webb lodge No. 166, F. and A. M., and past commander of Georgia commandery No. 1, K. T. He is a member of St. John's Methodist Episcopal church south, Augusta. He has never embraced the matrimonial tie.

DR. VIRGINIUS G. HITT was born in Augusta, Ga., June 14, 1840. He traces his ancestry back to Peter Hett, who emigrated from England in 1720, settling in Fauquier county, Va. John Hett, the great-grandfather of the gentleman whose name entitles this article, was born in Fauquier county, Va., and migrated to South Carolina after the war of the revolution, during which he was an officer in a Virginia regiment. His son, Martin, was a native of South Carolina, and was a planter all his long and useful life. The son of Martin Hitt and the father of Dr. Virginius G. Hitt, Charles B., was born in Edgefield district, South Carolina, in 1806. He was a merchant in the city of Augusta, Ga., for many years and later speculated in land. He died in Augusta, in 1888. Virginius G. Hitt was reared and educated in the city of Augusta. In April, 1861, he enlisted as a private in the Oglethorpe infantry, which company was assigned to the First Georgia regiment and known as Company I. After six months' service Mr Hitt was promoted to the rank of assistant surgeon and detailed for duty at the hospital at Staunton, Va., remaining there until March 2, 1862, when he resigned. He then enlisted as a private in the Twelfth Georgia battalion of infantry, and soon thereafter went to Richmond, Va., where he received his diploma from the Richmond Medical college. Dr. Hitt was next made assistant surgeon, and assigned to the Palmetto sharpshooters, Jenkins' brigade, and was thence sent first to Camp Winder, near Richmond; thence to southwestern Virginia, as assistant surgeon to the Batelourt artillery. He was finally assigned to the Georgia battalion as senior medical officer and remained with that command until the close of hostilities. Dr. Hitt was a participant in the battle of Carrick's Ford and numerous other skirmishes on the retreat therefrom, the battle of Cloyd's Farm and Lynchburg, serving throughout the campaigns of Gen. Early in Virginia; then in the siege of Richmond and at Appomattox Court House. After the war closed Dr. Hitt entered actively upon the practice of medicine at Augusta, removing in 1868 to Lee county, Ga., where he pursued his profession ten years. He returned to Augusta in 1878 and has since resided there, devoting his entire time and attention to a large and increasing clientele. Among the members of the medical profession, Dr. Hitt ranks very high. He is also an honored member of the State Medical association. He is a member also of the masonic fraternity. Dr. Hitt was happily married in Leesburg, Ga., in 1874, to Miss Lucy M., daughter of the late Joseph Woolfolk, a native of Georgia. This union has been blessed by the birth of three manly sons and a charming daughter.

DR. JAMES MERIWETHER HULL, of Augusta, was born in Athens, Ga., Feb. 3, 1859, and lived there until about six years of age, when he came to Augusta. At the age of ten years he was sent to Georgetown university, District of Columbia, where he remained three years, and then went to Bethany college, West Virginia, where he continued until the junior year, then came to Augusta, studied medicine under Dr. Ford, and graduated in 1879 in the medical department of the state university. Later he went to Vienna and Berlin, where he devoted three years to the study of eye, ear and throat diseases. Then he returned to Augusta, where he now resides. Dr. Hull has served on the Augusta board of health, and was in 1891 placed on the police board. He was vice-president of the State Medical association during the year 1890. He has also served as president of the Augusta Medical society. In 1882 he was appointed lecturer on diseases of eye, ear and throat before the medical college in Augusta. In 1893 the chair of ophthalmology, otology and laryngology was created and Dr. Hull was appointed to fill it, holding that position at the present time. He is examiner for the Northwestern Life, Penn Mutual, Kentucky Mutual and the Insurance Clearing company of New York, the Washington Life Insurance company of New York, the Union Central company of Cincinnati, and the Union Mutual of Portland, Me. Dr. Hull belongs to St. Paul's Episcopal church. He was married in 1883 to Miss Mary, daughter of Jasper F. Lyon of Mobile, Ala. Dr. Hull's father was Jasper M. Hull, who died in 1863, in the Confederate service. He was a captain in the Third Georgia regiment, and had served from the first. He died at the age of twenty-three. Dr. Hull's great-grandfather, Rev. Wm. Hope Hull, assisted in founding Franklin college, now the university of Georgia.

MAJ. GEORGE T. JACKSON was born in Augusta, Ga., Dec. 29, 1822, and educated at the Richmond academy, Augusta, never having had the advantage of a collegiate course. At the age of fourteen he commenced business as a clerk with his brothers, who were then conducting an auction and commission business, which was subsequently merged into a wholesale dry goods business. He combined with them as clerk and co-partner, when after various changes to different firms, he became the head of the firm of Jackson, Miller & Verdery. This firm was in existence until near the close of the war. During the war Maj. Jackson purchased the granite mill, located on the Augusta canal, associating with him in the flour and grain business Messrs. John T. Miller and Edward F. Kinchley; this mill was subsequently the nucleus of the building of the Enterprise factory, the first factory erected after the enlargement of the Augusta canal. During his business career he was often solicited to accept political offices, but always declined except in one single instance, when he served in the city council from the First ward. He was appointed by the governor a director in the Bank of Augusta about 1848, and in 1854 was elected a director in the Georgia Railroad & Banking company, in which board he remained until 1882. While serving on that board he aided greatly in inducing the Georgia Railroad & Banking company to promote the building of the Port Royal & Augusta railroad, also the Charlotte, Columbia & Augusta railroad. With all its advantages, the building of the Augusta & Summerville railroad came near being abandoned when he, having been appealed to by its projectors, concluded to aid in its construction and it was built. There was scarcely an enterprise which tended to promote the public welfare of his native city in which he did not take an active interest. During the civil war he was elected captain of a company he helped raise in Augusta, Ga., and responded to Gen. Beauregard's call for volunteers to go to Charleston, S. C., when that city was threatened with a land attack while being bombarded from the Federal ironclads. Subsequently he was promoted to the command of the Augusta battalion, and saw active service in Georgia and South Carolina. He met with business reverses in 1884, and has since, although deeply interested in anything which may be for the general welfare of Augusta, lived a private life. While a progressive Christian, he is not a member of any church. Maj. Jackson married Miss Kate W. Mixon, in Augusta, Dec. 15, 1846. They had nine children, five boys and four girls. When the Hon. Thos. W. Miller organized the Augusta orphan asylum, Maj. Jackson was one of the original subscribers, and was on the finance committee many years. He is now the oldest member of that great charity board.

WILLIAM ELBERT JACKSON, prominent attorney of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city in 1851. His father, John K. Jackson, a native of Georgia, was a graduate of the South Carolina college, Columbia, and was engaged in the practice of law in Augusta, Ga., for more than seventeen years. During the war between the states he was a gallant Confederate soldier, rose to the rank of brigadier-general, and died soon after the memorable struggle. William Elbert Jackson was reared and received his primary education in the city of Augusta, afterward becoming a student of the university of Georgia, Athens, from which seat of learning he was graduated, in the class of 1870, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Immediately after his graduation he returned to his home in Augusta and engaged in the cotton business, which business he successfully conducted for five years. But finding the law better suited to his tastes, Mr. Jackson gave up the cotton business and entered the office of F. H. Miller, studied law assiduously for more than a year, and was admitted to practice at the superior court for Richmond county in 1876. Since his admission to the bar he has practiced in Augusta, never having resided anywhere else. Though a keen observer of politics, and a student of men and measures since his advent to manhood, Mr. Jackson takes no active part in the politics of the day, preferring to devote his time and talents exclusively to the law, among the members of which profession he sustains a most desirable rank.

CHARLES W. JACKSON, soliciting agent of the Augusta Southern railway, with headquarters at Augusta, Ga., was born in that city Dec. 25, 1861. He was reared in Augusta and attended the Richmond academy until he had reached the age of nineteen years, when he entered Bethany college, Brooke county, W. Va., from which he graduated in 1882, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Returning to his home, he at once went to work as shipping clerk for the Excelsior mill, and a short time thereafter was promoted to the position of bookkeeper and manager of the shipping department. For four years he invested his earnings in the stock of the mill, believing it to be a most successful venture; but that enterprise failed in 1887, and he found himself destitute of all resources, save an indomitable will and a determination to succeed in spite of adversity. Beginning life anew as train hand in the employ of the Central railroad of Georgia, he was successively made baggagemaster, warehouseman and conductor of trains. Two years later, having resigned his position of conductor of trains, he organized the grocery firm of C. W. Jackson & Co., of which firm he continued as senior partner until a few months ago, when he retired and accepted his present position, which he is conducting with his characteristic diligence and success.

COL. CHARLES COLCOCK JONES, JR., LL. D., historian, biographer and archaeologist, the most prolific author Georgia has ever produced, and who stands at the head of historical writers of the south of the present generation, was born in Savannah, Ga., Oct. 28, 1831. He comes of an old family, his ancestors in the male line having removed from England to Charleston, S. C., nearly two centuries ago. His great-grandfather, John Jones, the first of the family coming from South Carolina to Georgia, was a rice planter in St. Johns parish. During the revolutionary war he espoused the cause of the patriots, and, as major in the continental army, fell before the British lines around Savannah during the assault by the allied forces of D'Estaing and Lincoln on Oct. 9, 1779. On that memorable occasion he acted in the capacity of aide-de-camp to Brig.-Gen. Lachlan McIntosh. Rev. Charles C. Jones, D. D., father of the historian, a distinguished Presbyterian divine, was, at the time of his son's birth, pastor of the First Presbyterian church in the city of Savannah. Resigning his charge in November, 1832, he removed with his family to his plantation in Liberty county, Ga., where he devoted his energies to the religious instruction of the negroes. He was the apostle to that benighted people, and freely gave his time, talents and money to their evangelization and to the improvement of their moral and religious condition. Dr. Jones was a gentleman of liberal education, a wealthy planter, an eloquent pulpit orator, at one time professor of ecclesiastical history in the Theological seminary at Columbia, S. C., and for some years occupied the position at Philadelphia of secretary of the Presbyterian board of domestic missions. He was the author of several works on the religious instruction of the negroes, of a catechism specially prepared for their spiritual enlightenment, and of a history of the Church of God. Col. Jones' boyhood was spent at the paternal homes—Montevideo and Maybank plantations in Liberty county, Ga. At the former—which was a rice and sea-island cotton plantation on the North Newport river—the winter residence was fixed, while the latter—a sea-island cotton plantation—located on Colonel's island, lying between the island of St. Catharine and the mainland, was the summer retreat. The region abounded in game and fish. An indulgent father generously supplied his sons with guns, dogs, horses, row-boats and sail-boats and fishing tackle. As a natural consequence Col. Jones at an early age became an adept with the fowling-piece, the rifle, the rod and the line. This out-door exercise and these field sports laid the foundations for a fine constitution, and encouraged an ambition to excel in shooting, riding, swimming, fishing and sailing. The opportunity thus afforded for enjoyment and manly diversions was exceptional, and the training then experienced produced a lasting impression. The civilization of the Georgia coast under the patriarchal system then existent was refined, liberal and generous. The school was excellent for the development of manly traits. The early studies of Col. Jones were pursued at home, generally under private tutors; occasionally under the immediate supervision of his father. In 1848 he repaired to South Carolina college at Columbia, where his freshman and sophomore years were passed. That institution was then in the zenith of its prosperity, being presided over by the Hon. William C. Preston, who was assisted by such professors as Dr. Francis Lieber and Dr. Thornwell. Subsequently matriculating at Nassau hall, Princeton, N. J., in the junior class in 1850, Col. Jones at once took high rank among his fellows, and, graduating with distinction, received his A. B. diploma from this college in June, 1852. Selecting the law as his profession he went to Philadelphia and, as a student, entered the office of

Samuel H. Perkins, Esq. After reading law here for about a year, he matriculated at Dane Law school, Harvard university, Cambridge, Mass., from which institution he received in 1855 his degree of LL. B. While he was a member of that law school Joel Parker, Theophilus Parsons and Edward G. Loring were the professors. Besides taking his regular law course, he attended the lectures of Profs. Agassiz, Mr. Longfellow, Dr. Wyman, Prof. Lowell and Dr. Holmes. Returning home in the winter of 1854 he entered the law office of Ward & Owens in Savannah and was called to the bar in that, his native city, on May 24, 1855. In due course he was admitted to plead and practice in the supreme court of Georgia, in the sixth circuit court of the United States, in the district court of the Confederate states, and in the supreme court of the United States. During the second year of his professional life he became the junior partner of the law firm of Ward, Owens & Jones. When Mr. Ward went abroad as United States minister to China Mr. Owens retired from the firm, and the Hon. Henry R. Jackson, late United States minister to Austria, was admitted as a member. The firm continued to be Ward, Jackson & Jones until Judge Jackson took his seat upon the bench as judge of the district court of the Confederate States of America for the district of Georgia. The business of this law firm was large and lucrative. On Nov. 9, 1858, Col. Jones married Miss Ruth Berrien Whitehead, of Burke county, Ga. He was married a second time on Oct. 28, 1863, to Miss Eva Berrien Eve, of Augusta, Ga., a niece of the late Dr. Paul F. Eve, of Nashville, Tenn. These ladies were respectively niece and grand-niece of the Hon. John McPherson Berrien, attorney-general of the United States during Jackson's administration, and afterward United States senator from Georgia. In 1859 Col. Jones was chosen an alderman of Savannah, and in the following year he was, without solicitation, nominated and elected mayor of that city—a position, writes Gov. Stephens, seldom, if ever before, conferred on one so young by a corporation possessing so much wealth, population and commercial importance. With the exception of this position of mayor he never held public office in his life, or drew a dollar of the people's money. During the term of his mayoralty the Confederate revolution was precipitated, and many unusual questions arose demanding for their solution serious consideration and prompt decision. Col. Jones was a secessionist, and it is believed that one of the earliest public addresses on the situation delivered in Savannah fell from his lips. Declining a re-election to the mayoralty, he joined the Chatham artillery (Capt. Claghorn) of which light battery he was the senior first lieutenant. He had been mustered into Confederate service with that battery as its senior first lieutenant on July 31, 1861, and remained on leave until his labors in the capacity of mayor were concluded. The Chatham artillery was then stationed on the Georgia coast. In the fall of 1862 the subject of this sketch was promoted to the grade of lieutenant-colonel of artillery, P. A. C. S., and was assigned to duty as chief of artillery for the military district of Georgia. The assignment was important and the command extensive, including some eight light batteries and nearly 200 guns in fixed position. This command was subsequently enlarged so as to embrace the artillery in the third military district of South Carolina. His headquarters were established at Savannah. Col. Jones was brought into intimate personal and military relations with Gen. Beauregard, Lieut.-Gen. Hardee, Maj.-Gens. McLaws, Gilmer, Taliaferro, and Patton Anderson, and Brig.-Gens. Mercer, Lawton and others. He loved and took special pride in the artillery arm of the service, and preferred it to any other. In illustration of his partiality for this arm of the service it may be stated that at one time a commission of brigadier-general of infantry was tendered him, which he declined. The artillery, both light and heavy, in the military district of Georgia, was remarkable for its proficiency. Col. Jones was chief of artillery during the siege of Savannah in December, 1864, which he has so graphically described in his work on that subject, and figured prominently in the defense of the city. He was at one time in command of the field artillery on James island, during the siege of Charleston, and at another was chief of artillery on the staff of Maj.-Gen. Patton Anderson in Florida. Upon the fall of Savannah he was summoned by Gen. Hardee to the position of chief of artillery upon his staff, and was included in the surrender of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston's army, which occurred near Greensboro, N. C., in April, 1865. Late in December, 1865, Col. Jones removed with his family to New York city, and there resumed the practice of his profession, which had been interrupted by the war. Returning with his family to Georgia in the spring of 1877, Col. Jones fixed his home at Montrose, in Summerville, near Augusta, Ga., where he continued to reside up to the day of his death, which occurred on July 19, 1893. Since his return to his native state, aside from his professional labors, he has not been unmindful of his historical researches and literary pursuits. Among his later publications may be mentioned his Life and Services of Commodore Josiah Tattnall (1878), Memorial of Jean Pierre Purry (1880), the Georgia Historical Society, its Founders, Patrons and Friends (1881), the Life and Services of ex-Gov. Charles Jones Jenkins (1884), Sepulture of Maj.-Gen. Nathaniel Greene, and of Brig.-Gen. Count Casimir Pulaski (1885), the Life, Literary Labors and Neglected Grave of Richard Henry Wilde (1885), Biographical Sketch of the Hon. Maj. John Habersham of Georgia (1886), Brig.-Gen. Robert Toombs (1886), the Life and Services of the Hon. Samuel Elbert of Georgia (1887), the English Colonization of Georgia (1887), Negro Myths from the Georgia Coast (1888), and lastly, and more particularly, his History of Georgia (1883), a work of which the historian Bancroft remarked that it was the finest state history he had ever read, and that its high qualities fairly entitled its author to be called the Macaulay of the south. In addition to the publications to which we have alluded, Col. Jones has printed addresses and discourses upon a variety of topics, prominent among which are his oration upon the unveiling and dedication of the Confederate monument in Augusta, Ga., (1878), his funeral oration pronounced at the capitol of Georgia over the Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, late governor of the state (1883), and his address entitled The Old South (1887). In this connection we may mention the addresses which he has delivered before the Confederate Survivors' association of Augusta, Ga., an organization of which he was president, which was founded and has been perpetuated largely through his instrumentality, and which is among the oldest associations of this character in the south. Col. Jones' literary labors during the year 1888, in addition to the publications already referred to, embrace three historical addresses and the memorial histories of the cities of Savannah and Augusta, Ga., during the eighteenth century. Subsequently one book, his Biographical Sketches of the Delegates from Georgia to the Continental Congress (1891), and eight pamphlets, were the products of his pen. The career of the late Col. Charles Colcock Jones, Jr., LL. D., as an author and man of letters began in 1859 when his Indian Remains in Southern Georgia—an address delivered before the Georgia Historical society on its twentieth anniversary—was given to the public. Aside from his report as mayor of Savannah, it will be remembered that his Monumental Remains of Georgia, and his oration delivered on the occasion of the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Chatham artillery, likewise appeared in 1861. The twelve years of his residence in New York and in Brooklyn were, in a literary way, very productive, and among the contributions from his pen at this time may be mentioned his Historical Sketch of the Chatham Artillery during the Confederate Struggle for Independence (1867), Ancient Tumuli of the Savannah River (1868), Historical Sketch of Tomo-Chi-Chi, Mico of the Yamacraws (1868), Ancient Tumuli in Georgia (1869), Reminiscences of the Last Days, Death and Burial of Gen. Henry Lee (1870), Casimir Pulaski, an address before the Georgia Historical society on its thirty-second anniversary (1873), Antiquities of the Southern Indians, particularly of the Georgia Tribes (1873), the Siege of Savannah in 1779, as described in two contemporaneous journals of French officers in the fleet of Count D'Estaing (1874), the Siege of Savannah in December, 1864, and the Confederate Operations in Georgia and the Third Military District of South Carolina during Gen. Sherman's March from Atlanta to the Sea (1874), Sergt. William Jasper, an address before the Georgia Historical society (1876); A Piece of Secret History (1876), and A Roster of General Officers, Heads of Departments, Senators, Representatives, Military Organizations, etc., in Confederate Service during the War Between the States (1876). From his earliest years he evinced a love for the collation and classification of primitive objects. His collection, comprising some 20,000 specimens, is one of unusual interest. It illustrates in the most complete manner the customs and occupations of the aboriginal population prior to the advent of Europeans, and before the cruel Spaniards had rudely interrupted their simple methods of life. In association with the collection are several hundred typical objects of primitive manufacture from Europe, Asia, Africa and other localities. As a collector of autographs and historical documents Col. Jones occupied a distinguished place among those whose tastes were in harmony with his own. His series of Autograph Letters and Portraits of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence, of Autograph Letters and Portraits of Presidents of the Continental Congress, of Presidents and of Vice-Presidents of the United States, of Autograph Letters and Portraits of Members of the Continental Congress, of Autograph Letters and Portraits of the Chief Justices and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, and of the Attorney-Generals of the United States, of Autograph Letters and Portraits of the Delegates to the Constitutional Convention of 1787, and of Autograph Letters and Portraits of the Signers of the Confederate Constitution are worthy monuments to his industry in this fascinating avenue of research. Twice complimented with the degree of Doctor of Laws, and honored with membership in various literary and scientific societies both in this country and in Europe, the beloved president of the Confederate Survivors' association of Augusta, Ga., cherishing the memories which it perpetuates, and expending his latest breath in its patriotic service, gallant in war, courteous in peace, gifted, magnetic and never so happy as when celebrating the glories of southern womanhood, Col. Jones was a commanding figure in the community in which he lived.

WILLIAM C. JONES, secretary and treasurer of the Augusta Real Estate & Improvement company, of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city on Sept. 30, 1832. His father, William H. Jones, a native of Virginia, was the first teller of the Georgia Railroad bank, in Augusta, holding that position uninterruptedly from 1837 till 1866. He was born Jan. 25, 1793, and died in Augusta on June 9, 1875. At the time of his death he was the oldest past master of Webb lodge No. 1, F. and A. M., of Augusta, one of the oldest Masons residing in Georgia and the oldest member of the board of trustees of the Masonic hall, a noted edifice of Augusta. William C. Jones was reared in Augusta and received his education at the old Richmond academy, leaving that noted seat of learning in 1849 to accept a position in the general offices of the Georgia railroad, which he creditably filled for four years. In 1853 he went on the survey of the Savannah River railroad, thence on the survey of the Memphis & Charleston railroad, where he was engaged until 1859, when he returned to Augusta to accept the position as superintendent of the Augusta & Savannah railroad, serving in that capacity for three years. In 1875 Mr. Jones was elected city sheriff and assessor of Augusta and held that place until November, 1891, when he was chosen secretary and treasurer of the Augusta Real Estate & Improvement company. He now holds, also, the position of chairman of the finance committee of the board of education of Augusta, having been a member of that board for the past six years, the past four as chairman of the finance committee, and was elected president of the board of education in June, 1895. He is also treasurer of the Summerville Land company, and has been a member of the board of health of Augusta since 1889. Mr. Jones was for a long while a vestryman of St. Paul's Episcopal church of Augusta, and is a Knight Templar Mason. He was happily married in 1867 to Miss Ella, daughter of the late Rev. Hansford D. Duncan, a native of South Carolina. Mrs. Jones departed this life in 1880, leaving as the fruit of that union four daughters and two sons, all of whom are living, viz.: Emiline, wife of Charles Whitsell, of Colleton district, S. C.; Duncan A. Jones, Martha, wife of W. H. Tutt, of Augusta; Constance Jones; Henry, now a cadet at the Virginia Military institute, and Ella Duncan Jones.

HON. JOSEPH RUCKER LAMAR, Augusta, Ga., one of the leading lawyers of Georgia, was born in Ruckersville, Elbert Co., Ga., in 1857, being the eldest of two sons and a daughter born to Rev. James S. and Mary (Rucker) Lamar. The other children born to this union were Philip and Mary. Rev. James S. Lamar was born in Gwinnett county, Ga., May 18, 1829. His father, Philip, a farmer, was born in Edgefield district, S. C., in 1796, moved to Georgia when a young man and settled in Gwinnett county, afterward moving to Muscogee county, Ga., where he died in 1860. He was a man who stood high in his community. His wife, Mary Anthony, was born in South Carolina in 1802, bore him seven children, and died in 1861. The early life of Rev. James S. Lamar was spent on his father's farm. In 1853-54 he attended Bethany college, Brooke Co., W. Va., to prepare himself for the ministry, and was graduated from that institution in July, 1854. During the following autumn he began preaching in Augusta, Ga., and remained there in charge of the Christian church until 1875, when he went to Louisville, Ky., was there only one year and returned to Augusta, where he lived until 1884. He then removed to Atlanta, and was pastor of the church in that city until 1887, thence removing to Valdosta, Ga., to assume charge of the church there. He was happily married on June 2, 1856, to Miss Mary Rucker, daughter of Joseph and Margaret (Speer) Rucker, of Ruckersville, Elbert Co. She bore him three children, viz.: Joseph R., Philip, and Mary, who departed this life on Jan. 27, 1864. Rev. James S. Lamar was married a second time, Dec. 5, 1865, to Miss Sallie M. Ford, daughter of Dr. Lewis D. and Emily (Childs) Ford, of Augusta. They have no children. For many years he was associate editor of the "Christian Standard," organ of the Christian church, and published in Cincinnati, Ohio. He is also the author of several valuable published works of especial value to the Christian denomination. Joseph R. Lamar resided in the village of his birth until he had arrived at the age of nine years, when he removed with his parents to Augusta, where he received the greater part of his primary education. He was given the very best academical and collegiate training. During the years 1874-75 he attended the university of Georgia, Athens, thence entering Bethany college, and was graduated from the latter institution in 1877. He then entered the law department of Washington and Lee university, Lexington, Va., and was admitted to the practice of law at the spring term, 1878, of Richmond superior court. He formed a co-partnership in the practice of law with Hon. H. Clay Foster, of Augusta, and the firm was one of the most popular and successful in that city, noted for the exceptional brilliancy and ability of its bar. Mr. Lamar was elected to the general assembly, the first office he ever held, in 1886. In the house and on the committees on railroads, general judiciary, and banks, he took high rank as a careful, conservative and able legislator, rendering such valuable service to his constituents and the state that he was re-elected at the end of his term for the session of 1888-89. He took an active part in the discussion of the famous Olive bill, which sought to forfeit the charters of certain railroads in the state, and won a lasting reputation by his masterful argument of the question then at issue. In 1889 Mr. Lamar was chosen chairman of the committee of one hundred, organized to reform the city civil service of Augusta, and in that capacity rendered incalculable service to that municipality. In December, 1893, he was appointed by Gov. William J. Northen and the supreme court a member of the commission to codify the laws of Georgia, the other members of that commission being Judge John L. Hopkins, of Atlanta, and ex-Attorney-General Clifford Anderson, of Macon. The commission had in hand a work of much magnitude, viz.: The division of the civil and penal laws of Georgia, which were compiled and issued in separate volumes. The combined labors of this distinguished trio are receiving the well-earned commendation of the most prominent members of the legal profession in Georgia. Personally Mr. Lamar is modest and unobtrusive, almost to a fault, yet firm and unyielding when he has arrived at a decision. He is courteous and polished in manner, and has generous social endowments that make him a prime favorite with his friends throughout Georgia. Though never having sought political preferment, as such, he has always been a close observer of public affairs, and in politics is a democrat. Mr. Lamar was married in 1879 to Clarinda, daughter of Dr. W. K. Pendleton, president of Bethany college, West Virginia, and two manly sons are the fruit of that union. Young, talented and amply equipped for any position in the gift of the people of Georgia, the future holds forth much promise, and the friends of the distinguished gentleman whose name heads this sketch predict for him a still more brilliant career of honor and usefulness in the service of his native state.

LIEUT.-COL. I. CLARENCE LEVY, late commander of the First battalion, Georgia volunteers, was born in the village of Hamburg, S. C., Jan. 12, 1850, and lived there until twelve years of age, when he removed across the Savannah river to the city of Augusta, Ga. He was educated at the old Richmond county academy, and later attended the private school of Prof. John Neely. In 1869 he attended Eastman Business college, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Returning to Augusta, Ga., in August, 1871, he entered into a co-partnership with his father in the clothing business, which he has conducted alone since the death of the latter in 1879. As a member of the volunteer forces of Georgia Col. Levy won much distinction, serving in the ranks and as a commissioned officer for twenty-one years. On March 17, 1873, he enlisted as a private in the Clinch rifles of Augusta. On Oct. 16, 1873, he was elected secretary and treasurer of that company, and in 1879 was unanimously elected sergeant for life, an honorary position. On May 2, 1881, he was promoted to the office of second lieutenant of the Clinch rifles, and was made first lieutenant in 1883, being called to the captaincy of that company on Nov. 18, 1884, which position he held until Nov. 9, 1889. The retirement of Lieut.-Col. Levy, on Feb. 1, 1894, was a surprise to the officers of his battalion, as well as to the individual members of his command, and many were the expressions of regret he received from them. Even the adjutant-general of Georgia, Col. John McIntosh Kell, refused to accept his resignation when tendered him officially, hoping that Col. Levy would reconsider his action. But he was obdurate, and on account of pressing business would not accede to the request to remain in office. Thereupon his name was placed on the roll of Georgia's retired officers, giving him all the rights, privileges, immunities and exemptions enjoyed by the volunteers in active service. It is but just to mention in this connection that to the efforts of Col. Levy is chiefly attributable the re-organization of the First battalion and the revival of the military spirit in the city of Augusta, there being now no less than fifteen military organizations there, of which thirteen are white companies. Mr. Levy is also greatly interested in the progress and development of the city of Augusta, and is active in its progress. He is now president of the Jewish congregation, an ex-director of the Irish-American Dime Savings bank, and a director of the Monte Sano Land company, the Augusta Exposition company, past sachem of Monon tribe of Red Men, past chancellor of Woodlawn lodge, Knights of Pythias, ex-captain of Augusta division, uniform rank, Knights of Pythias, secretary of the American Legion of Honor, president of the local board of the Columbus Building and Loan association, chairman of the board of trustees, I. O. B. B., and an active member of the Woodmen of the World, and a director Young Men's Business League. He is also an associate member of the United States Military Service institution.

WILLIAM E. M'COY, a prominent textile manufacturer of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city on Nov. 14, 1840, being a son of Charles and Frances A. (Tutt) McCoy. He was educated in Augusta, but in early life began a mercantile career as a clerk, and when the civil war began was a bookkeeper. May 11, 1861, he enlisted in the Confederate army as a private in Company A, known as the Clinch Rifles, of the Fifth Georgia regiment. He served throughout the war, and was an active participant in the battle of Santa Rosa Island, near Pensacola, Fla.; the battles of Murfreesboro, Tenn., and Farmington, Miss. After the battle of Murfreesboro he was detailed for duty in the quartermaster's department, where he served until the close of hostilities. After the return of peace he came back to Augusta and began to clerk for a living. His first experience in cotton manufacturing was as bookkeeper for the Grantville Manufacturing company, Grantville, S. C., in January, 1868. The year following he was made cashier of that company and stationed at Augusta in the office of the president, H. H. Hickman, and remained there until April 1878, when, having resigned, he went to New York and remained there one year. He then returned to Augusta and purchased the Augusta waste works, which he successfully operated until October, 1881, when a stock company was formed, the name of the new corporation being changed to Riverside mills. Mr. McCoy was elected president of the new company and successfully held that position until February, 1894, when he resigned in order to accept the newly-created office of vice-president, which he now holds. The growth of the mill under his management as president was very rapid and most gratifying. At present about 250 operatives are afforded employment in the manufacturing of cotton batting, machinery waste and paper stock, being the only concern of its kind in the southern states. The phenomenal success of this enterprise is due largely to Mr. McCoy, who, from the beginning, has given it his individual attention. He is also largely interested in other corporations, being a member of the various boards of directors of the following institutions: The John P. King Manufacturing company, Augusta Land company, Georgia Railroad bank, the Manufacturers' Insurance Mutual Aid society (which is strictly an insurance company), and the Southern Manufacturers' association. Mr. McCoy is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, and has taken an active part in the masonic fraternity, being a thirty-second degree Mason, and is past grand captain-general of the grand commandery of the state of Georgia. He was happily married in 1878 to Mrs. Katharine Hammond Gregg, who died in 1882. Leaving the Confederate ranks in the spring of 1865, a penniless soldier, Mr. McCoy has, by his energy and persistent and determined efforts, gained a most creditable place among the merchants of Augusta. He is a thorough master of his line of business and feels a justifiable pride in its progress. He is a hard and methodical worker and possesses executive and administrative ability to a marked degree. High-minded and of the strictest integrity, his standing in Augusta, in all that constitutes good citizenship, is of the very highest order.

FRANK HARVEY MILLER, son of Andrew Jackson and Martha Olive Miller, was born in Augusta, Ga., Oct. 13, 1836. He was educated at the academy of Richmond county, the Villa school of the Rev. C. P. Beman and Franklin college (now university of Georgia). In the fall of 1854 he began the study of law in the office of his father and was admitted to the bar Nov. 20, 1858, at Burke superior court. Upon the death of his father, in February, 1856, he became a member of the law firm of Millers & Jackson, the other partners being Thomas W. Miller and John K. Jackson. On July 6, 1859, he married Julia Dyer, daughter of William K. and Sarah A. Kitchen. The firm of Millers & Jackson was dissolved Feb. 15, 1860, from which date Mr. Miller has practiced his profession alone, calling to his aid the assistance of associate counsel when necessary. At the commencement of the late war he entered the state service as a member of the Oglethorpe infantry, performing his first duty on the night of the surrender of the United States arsenal at Augusta to Gov. Brown. His company subsequently entered the service of the Confederate states as Company A, First regiment, Georgia volunteers. As the number of enlisted men was limited, all the married men, other than commissioned officers, were left at home. These organized Company B, of which Mr. Miller was first lieutenant. This company was ordered into the service of the state in November, 1861, and made a part of the Ninth regiment, of which the subject of this sketch was commissioned adjutant. As the war progressed many persons sought to avoid military duty by a resort to the courts. Such action necessitated the employment of counsel as assistant to the district attorney of the Confederate states, and Mr. Miller, who had much experience during his military service as judge advocate and had represented the government in other matters, was permanently and continuously engaged as such. At the close of the war he visited New York and Washington, where he had advantageous offers made to him to enter business, all of which he declined, preferring to bear the burdens of reconstruction with his own people. He returned to Augusta and resumed the practice of his profession before the military courts until the re-establishment of civil law, from which time he has devoted most of his attention to commercial and ecclesiastical law. In the former Mr. Miller's industry and success are best shown by a reference to the Georgia and Federal reports, which contain numerous interesting cases of his, in a majority of which he has been successful. He is one of the few busy lawyers who has given much attention to ecclesiastical law, in which branch of judicature he is recognized as an authority. In 1890 Mr. Miller was elected president of the Georgia Bar association. He has never sought or held political or judicial office. As a citizen he is deeply interested in the prosperity of Augusta and her institutions, and as a trustee of the academy of Richmond county and of the Masonic hall, has freely given time and attention to promote their welfare. Mr. Miller is one of the committee charged with directing the improvement and enlargement of the courthouse of Richmond county, in which capacity he has freely rendered valuable and timely service.

WILLIAM K. MILLER, a prominent attorney of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city April 15, 1860. He was reared and received his primary education in Augusta, going to the university of the South, Suwanee, Tenn., 1872, and then to the university of Virginia, where he took a law course. Returning to Augusta he was admitted to the bar, Oct. 24, 1879, and to the supreme court of Georgia, Nov. 17, 1880, and to the United States court, fifth circuit in Georgia, June 1, 1886; also to the United States court of the fourth circuit April 4, 1893. Mr. Miller is a Knight Templar Mason.

REV. JAMES M. O'BRIEN, of the Church of the Holy Trinity, under the invocation of the Patrick, Augusta, Ga., was born in Kennebunk, Me., Jan. 28, 1842. In infancy he went to Keene, N. H., where he was brought up and received his primary education at the high schools, going thence to St. Mary's college, Wilmington, Del., and finishing his literary studies at Villanova college, near Philadelphia, in 1869. Then he went to St. Mary's seminary, Baltimore, Md., for his theological course, and was ordained priest in the old cathedral at Savannah, Ga., Jan. 6, 1874, by Rev. W. H. Grass, then bishop of Savannah, Ga. Father O'Brien's first charge was at St. Patrick's church at Washington, Ga., and the adjoining missions of Sharon, Sparta and Athens. He remained in that charge from 1874 to 1879, when he was sent to the Church of the Immaculate Conception at Atlanta, Ga., and remained there two and a half years. Then he returned to Washington, Ga., and was in charge of St. Joseph's orphanage until February, 1889, when he was transferred to his present charge at Augusta.

EUGENE J. O'CONNOR, wholesale dealer in wines and liquors, of Augusta, Ga., was born in the County of Cork, Ireland. His father, Jeremiah, had come to America in 1847, settling at the city of Augusta, Ga., and in 1858 was joined by the son, who attended school there until his enlistment in the army of the Confederate States of America. In January, 1862, he joined the Richmond Hussars, Cobb's legion, rose to the rank of sergeant and laid down his arms at the surrender of Greensboro, N. C. During his service Mr. O'Connor was an active participant in the battles of seven days around Richmond; Brandy Station, where he was severely wounded; Upperville, Va., Sharpsburg, Second Manassas, Williamsport; Little Washington, Va., where he received a saber cut; Gettysburg, where he was badly wounded and disabled for five months; Petersburg, and Bentonville, N. C. After the close of hostilities Mr. O'Connor, who was in the cavalry service, traded his horse for a mule, riding to his home in Augusta and selling the mule for $90, which he paid as rental for a small place in which he conducted a general grocery store. After sixteen months had elapsed he removed to larger quarters on Broad street, in the heart of Augusta, having as a partner at that time John C. Galvin. In 1870 he entered the employ of John W. Bessman, wholesale liquor dealer, as manager, remaining with him ten years. In 1880 the firm of Reab & O'Connor was formed, in 1884 the title of the house became Reab, O'Connor & Bailey, and in 1886 it was changed to O'Connor & Bailey. In 1890 Mr. O'Connor assumed the sole control and has conducted the business alone up to this time. He is a member of the Roman Catholic church, and is very prominently identified with the educational interests of the city of Augusta, having been for twenty years a member of the board of education of that city. Nearly all those years he has been a member of the committee on finance, and it is safe to say that probably no one in the municipality has exerted a greater and better influence in school matters. Mr. O'Connor is also a member of the Confederate Survivors' association of Richmond county, vice-president of the Richmond County Belt Line railroad, of the Murray Hill Improvement and Water Supply company; a director of the Augusta Exposition company, of the Irish-American Investment company, of the Real Estate and Investment company and the Augusta Savings bank. Thus it will be seen that he is bound up with the interests of the city of Augusta, and is altogether a public-spirited citizen. He was married in 1868 to Margaret McGarran of Augusta, a union which has been blessed by the birth of three lovely daughters, all of whom survive, viz.: Mary M., Margaret, and Julia.

PATRICK JOSEPH O'CONNOR, sheriff of Richmond county, Ga., was born in County Mayo, Ireland, in January, 1846. His father, Edward O'Connor, also a native of the land of the shamrock, is now, in 1895, in his ninety-ninth year, and still resides in County Mayo, which has been the local habitation of the O'Connor family for several centuries. Patrick Joseph O'Connor emigrated to the United States in his twentieth year, landing at New York, in which city he was engaged in business for a few months. He then came to the city of Augusta, Ga., and began clerking in a dry goods establishment, which position he filled most creditably until 1872. Removing to the town of Sparta, county seat of Hancock, he operated a general merchandise business there for eight years, at the end of that time returning to Augusta, where he carried on a general grocery store, until his election as sheriff of Richmond county, in 1888. He has been successively re-elected as sheriff of his county every term since his first and holds that office at this time. Mr. O'Connor has also held other positions of trust and honor, serving as councilman from the Fifth ward of the city of Augusta for six years. As a member of the city council he took high rank, being a member of the finance committee, chairman of the appropriations committee for two years, and chairman of the committee on streets and drains from 1889 to 1892. Patrick J. O'Connor was married in 1872 to Miss Mary E., daughter of the late M. P. Murray, a prominent citizen of Augusta, and that union has been blessed by the birth of several children, of whom five are now in life, viz.: John Joseph, Anna Kate, Thomas Henry, Mary Ellen and Mattie.

LEONARD PHINIZY, one of the more prominent attorneys of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city, on the exact site of his present law office, Dec. 22, 1854. He is the third child and son of Ferdinand and Harriet H. (Bowdre) Phinizy. Ferdinand Phinizy was born on the old family plantation at Bowling Green, Oglethorpe Co., Ga., Jan. 20, 1819, being the eldest son and child of Jacob Phinizy and Matilda Stewart. The family of Jacob Phinizy consisted of Ferdinand, the eldest; Sarah, Margaret, Marco, Jacob and John. Sarah married John M. Billups of Columbus, Miss., and died in that city during the eventful days of the late war. Margaret, the second daughter, was wedded to Col. T. D. Lockhardt, of Nashville, Tenn., and departed this life in the city of Atlanta, Ga.; Jacob fell on the field of Manassas, gallantly leading the Oglethorpe rifles, of which he was captain—a part of the famous Eighth Georgia regiment, that Beauregard saluted for heroic conduct and unparalleled bravery; John died at his home in north Alabama a few years since, a faithful, Christian man; and Marco, the last of that family, remains at the residence of his late lamented brother, Ferdinand, in the city of Athens, Ga., an old man awaiting with calm resignation the call of the Master. Each of these children bore the name of some dead relative, Ferdinand being called after his paternal grandfather. The boyhood of Ferdinand Phinizy was spent at Bowling Green, attending the schools of his native county. When still a mere lad his father moved to Athens, where Ferdinand was entered as a student in Franklin college (now university of Georgia). For three years he pursued his studies at that venerable institution and was graduated with honor in the class of 1838. Leaving the university he passed a few years on his father's farm at Bowling Green, overlooking the paternal interests there but the Georgia railroad being then in process of construction from Augusta to Athens, he obtained the contract to grade the first eleven miles of the road from Athens. This work he prosecuted to a successful completion, and may be said to have achieved here his first business success. Soon afterward he moved to the city of Augusta, where he had numerous relatives, and formed a co-partnership with Edward P. Cayton, an old college classmate, and engaged in the cotton trade. The firm of Phinizy & Clayton soon became one of the largest and best known in the south. This firm dissolving by mutual consent after some years of prosperous life, he took with him, as partners, his two kinsmen, Charles H. Phinizy and Joseph M. Burdell, and established the cotton house of F. Phinizy & Co.; this was the style and name of the firm when he retired from active business, but, up to the day of his death, he was connected in some way with the cotton houses of C. H. Phinizy & Co., F. B. Phinizy, and Phinizy & Co. He was for many years a director and leading spirit in the Georgia railroad and Banking company, an organization he always loved, and in whose safety he had absolute reliance. He was a director also in the Atlanta & West Point Railroad company, the Augusta & Savannah railroad, the Northeastern railroad of Georgia, the Augusta factory, the Southern Express company, the Bank of the University, and the Southern Mutual Insurance company, Athens, and a trustee of the university of Georgia. Ferdinand Phinizy did not enter the Confederate armies in the struggle of 1861-65, but served the cause he loved well, ably and honorably, as the financial agent of the Confederate government. As such, he successfully handled large amounts of cotton that ran the blockade of Union war vessels, and succeeded in floating large blocks of Confederate bonds. He lost heavily by the failure of the Confederate arms. He was married on Feb. 22, 1849, to Harriet H., the only child of Hayes Bowdre, a well-known citizen of Augusta. He was thirty and his wife twenty when they began life together, and he is quoted to have remarked that to this lady was due much of his success in life, as it was she who counseled him in many undertakings that proved of great benefit in the end. For fourteen years they lived a life of perfect happiness and harmony. On Feb. 7, 1863, his wife died, leaving as the fruit of that perfect union eight children, viz.: Ferdinand Bowdre (deceased); Stewart, Leonard, Mary Louise (now Mrs. Dr. A. W. Calhoun of Atlanta), Jacob, Marion Daniel, Billups and Harry Hays. On Aug. 11, 1865, he was married the second time to Annie S., the second daughter of Thomas Barrett and Savannah Glascock, of Augusta. This union resulted in the birth of three children: Savannah Barrett (deceased); Barrett and Charles Henry. Though probably the wealthiest citizen of Georgia at the time of his death, Ferdinand Phinizy was not an ostentatious man. His manners were simple, cordial and unaffected. Essentially a man of sentiment, he loved and treasured everything that came down to him from the dead past. The place where he was born and reared, he kept up as long as he lived, and before he died, entailed it, as far as the law permits, upon his eldest son, and his son after him. The house in which he won and wooed his fair young bride, and where his younger married life was spent, he gave to his only daughter and charged her to forever maintain it, as it was the home of her mother. The watch he wore was the one his mother had fastened to his side when he began life for himself. To outsiders, Ferdinand Phinizy never spoke of his forefathers, but there were rare occasions in the family circle and around his own hearthstone, when he would tell his children much of those who had preceded them. He was proud of his paternal grandfather—the Italian refugee—who landed penniless upon American shores, and by indomitable will and persevering industry built up a large fortune. This gentleman, marrying Margaret Condow, reared a family of three sons and two daughters: Jacob, the father of Ferdinand; Marco, the father of John F. Phinizy; John, the father of Charles H. Phinizy; Sarah, who married Thomas Burdell, and Eliza, who married Thomas McGrau of Mobile. Jacob Phinizy, the father of Ferdinand, married Matilda Stewart, the daughter of Gen. John B. Stewart of Virginia, who settled in Georgia after the revolution, and who won his title in that struggle. The wife of Gen. Stewart, Ferdinand Phinizy's maternal grandmother, was Mourning Floyd of Virginia, an aunt of John B. Floyd, secretary of war under President Buchanan, and an aunt also of John C. Breckinridge of Kentucky. On both his paternal and his maternal sides, therefore, Ferdinand Phinizy belonged to the best families of Virginia and Georgia. The death of Ferdinand Phinizy occurred in Athens, Ga., on Oct. 20, 1889. Like his life, his end was calm and peaceful; he had faith in the power of the Savior; he trusted implicitly; he was prepared and ready and willing to go. The best of fathers, the kindest and most generous of men; the staunchest friend man ever had; an honest, truthful, sincere man was dead. By the gently flowing waters of the Oconee, typical of that bright river he had already crossed, the mortal remains were tenderly laid to rest. A prince, indeed, had fallen that day in Israel. Leonard Phinizy, third son of Ferdinand, was reared and received his primary education in the city of Augusta, and was graduated with distinction from the university of Georgia, Athens, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, in 1872. He taught school in Watkinsville, Oconee Co., Ga., in 1873, one year later entering the law school of Cumberland university at Lebanon, Tenn., and was graduated from that institution in 1875. In October of that year he began the practice of law in the city of Augusta and has continued uninterruptedly and very successfully in that profession up to the present time. Mr. Phinizy has never held any public office and, like his father, cares nothing for political preferment, choosing rather to devote his time and talents to his large law practice and to the supervision of his extensive business interests in various corporations. He is at this time vice-president of the Georgia Railroad bank, the Augusta Gas company, member of the lessee board of the Georgia Railroad company, and general counsel for the Augusta Southern Railroad company. He was happily married on April 10, 1878, to Annie E., daughter of the late Robert Martin of Charleston, and this union has been an ideally happy one. He ranks high in his profession, and is considered one of Augusta's most conservative and soundest business men. In character and conduct he resembles his illustrious father; possessed of great ability, indomitable will, and never-flagging energy, wonderful success awaits him in the legal and commercial world.

CHARLES H. PHINIZY, president of the Georgia Railroad bank, Augusta, Ga., was born on Jan. 15, 1835, on what is known as the Eve plantation, a few miles from the city of Augusta, and is a son of John and Martha (Creswell) Phinizy. He received his earlier education at home until his preparation for college, when he entered the university of Georgia, graduating from that institution in 1853. He afterward took a course of scientific study under D. H. Mahan, professor of engineering at the United States Military academy at West Point. For some two or three years thereafter, Mr. Phinizy was employed as a civil engineer during the construction of the Blue Ridge railroad. At the beginning of the civil war he entered the Confederate service as first lieutenant of Company B, Tenth Georgia regiment of infantry, but was soon thereafter transferred to the adjutant-general's department and assigned to duty under Brig.-Gen. Alfred Cummings. In the consolidation of regiments in 1865, he was commissioned as colonel of the Thirty-ninth Georgia regiment, and held that position at the close of the war. He served in the battles of Williamsburg, Seven Pines, Malvern Hill, Sharpsburg, siege of Vicksburg, Hood's campaign in Tennessee, Missionary Ridge, Jonesboro, Powder Springs Road, Bennettsville, and in innumerable smaller engagements, and surrendered at Greensboro, N. C. After the close of the war, Col. Phinizy in the fall of 1865 embarked in the cotton factorage business in Augusta, which he successfully conducted until 1879, when he retired from that line of business. In the meantime he had become largely interested in railroad operation and construction, and soon after his retirement from the cotton business, in 1879, was elected president of the Georgia railroad and of the Georgia Railroad and Banking company. He remained as president of the Georgia railroad until it was leased, in May, 1881, since which time he has been one of the six commissioners who have general charge of the road. Mr. Phinizy is still president of the banking company, a position he has filled most creditably to himself and to the entire satisfaction of the stockholders and directors of that institution. In 1882 he was elected president of the Augusta factory, but after holding that position five years resigned. In July, 1888, he was elected president of the Atlanta & West Point Railroad company, and held that position until Sept. 4, 1894, when the offices of president and general manager were consolidated and he retired from the directory of that corporation. Referring to his retirement from this position, "The Atlanta Journal," leading afternoon paper of the south, says: "The retirement of President Charles H. Phinizy of the Atlanta & West Point railroad and the Western railroad of Alabama, was announced in yesterday's 'Journal.' This gentleman is known as one of the most successful railroad officials in the south. Under his control, the line between Atlanta and Montgomery has made a record which can hardly be matched. It is one of the few railroads in the south which has escaped a receivership. During the past two years of general depression this road has done a prosperous business and declared handsome dividends regularly. During the past twelve months it has increased both its gross and its net earnings. This is not true of any other railroad in the United States. The record which Mr. Phinizy leaves is highly creditable, and his late associates hate to part with him. Besides his large interest in the corporation before mentioned, Mr. Phinizy is a director in the Central Railroad and Banking company of Georgia, the Port Royal & Augusta railroad, the Port Royal & Western Carolina railroad, the Western railroad of Alabama, and the Augusta factory. During the Augusta National exposition, Col. Phinizy was first vice-president of that enterprise, and by his personal efforts largely contributed to its success. As a business man, Col. Phinizy's course has been marked by rare success. He is conservative, possesses excellent judgment and a very high degree of administrative ability; and his ventures have all been in the line of legitimate trade and commerce. His success has been won by fair and honorable methods and he possesses in the highest degree the respect and confidence of the people of Augusta, where the entire years of his life have been passed, and where few names are better known than his own. While a thorough business man, in the best sense of the term, he is sociable and affable in disposition, and in his home dispenses a hospitality typical of the true southern gentlemen." Col. Phinizy was married in 1885, to the widow of F. B. Phinizy, and a daughter of Col. B. C. Yancey of Georgia. That union has been an ideally happy one.

STEWART PHINIZY, a prominent cotton factor of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city on Nov. 23, 1854, being the eldest son of Ferdinand and Harriet H. (Bowdre) Phinizy. Ferdinand Phinizy, of whom a sketch appears in this volume, was a native of Bowling Green, Oglethorpe Co., Ga. He was a man of immense wealth and was very charitable and liberal, especially to the church. Harriet H.

(Bowdre) Phinizy was born in the city of Augusta, Ga., in 1820. She was the only child of Hayes Bowdre, a well-known citizen of Augusta. Ferdinand Phinizy died in the city of Athens, Ga., on Oct. 20, 1889, and Harriet H. (Bowdre) Phinizy died on Feb. 7, 1863. They were buried side by side in Oconee cemetery, Athens, Ga. Stewart Phinizy was educated in the schools of Augusta and in Franklin college, now the university of Georgia, at Athens. He came to Augusta in 1871 and clerked for some time in the house of Phinizy & Co., but during the year following entered the firm of Phinizy & Co., cotton factors, with which he is still connected. The present house was originally founded as F. Phinizy & Co., then became C. H. Phinizy & Co., and then F. B. Phinizy & Co. The present title of Phinizy & Co. was assumed in 1877, the copartners then being Jacob Phinizy, Stewart Phinizy and James Tobin. In January, 1893, Mr. Jacob Phinizy withdrew, and the business has been continued to this time by the remaining members of the firm. In 1887 Mr. Phinizy became president of the Augusta factory, a model establishment of 827 looms and 27,442 spindles. Stewart Phinizy was happily married in 1876 to Miss Coles, a daughter of J. S. Coles, of Columbia, S. C., and a granddaughter of the late Gov. Pickens of that state. This union, which has proven an ideally happy one, has been blessed by the birth of two sons, Ferdinand and Coles, and four daughters, Eliza P., Marie S., Louise C. and Izaetta.

W. EDWARD PLATT, undertaker and embalmer of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city on Jan. 21, 1853. His father, Charles Adolphus Platt, was a native of New York, and his mother, Elizabeth (Platt) Platt, was a native of Connecticut. The subject of this sketch was educated in the city of Augusta by private tutors and at the Richmond County academy. In 1870 he went into business with his father, who, up to the date of his death in 1889, had conducted a furniture business for fifty-three years. In 1872 W. E. Platt went to Stuttgart, Germany, and was engaged there in the study of his business for two years. Returning to Augusta, he again entered business with his father and remained with him until his death, since then conducting the business alone. In 1882 Mr. Platt was made chief of the old volunteer fire department of Augusta and served four years, when it was abolished. He was, also, very active in the organization of the present paid department of Augusta. He was elected a member of the common council of Augusta from the second ward in 1892 and now serves as chairman of the hospital committee, also a member of the committee on cemeteries, arbitration, charity, engines, lamps and police. After the close of the war between the states he was elected honorary sergeant for life of the Clinch rifles, a prominent volunteer military organization of Augusta. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the grand lodge of Knights of Pythias; was district deputy for three years and is chancellor of Fountain City lodge No. 35, of Augusta. He is also connected with the Red Men and the B. P. O. Elks, and was one of the founders and the first president of the Funeral Directors' association of Georgia. Mr. Platt is a consistent member of the Episcopal church, in whose mission work he is greatly interested. He was happily married in September, 1876, to Miss Essie, daughter of the late Thaddeus Davids, of New York city, the oldest manufacturer of inks in the United States.

HON. CHARLES A. ROBBE, who now represents the Eighteenth district in the senate of Georgia, was born in Hancock, N. H., Nov. 10, 1833. At about twenty years of age he removed to Savannah, Ga., where he remained a short time, thence removed to Augusta and engaged as superintendent of construction of gas works at various points throughout Georgia and Tennessee. In the autumn of 1860 he entered the plumbing business in the city of Augusta, which business was continued until the beginning of the war between the states. Enlisting as a private in Company C, Forty-eighth Georgia infantry, on Feb. 28, 1862, he was rapidly promoted, being made sergeant a few weeks later, first lieutenant in March, 1863, and captain during the autumn of the next year, which rank he held at the surrender of Appomattox court house. Capt. Robbe was an active participant in the first battle of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, second Fredericksburg and Gettysburg, where he received a severe wound in the neck and shoulder on the second day, in the assault on Cemetery hill. About three months later, before his wound had entirely healed, he rejoined his company at Mine Run and remained with it until the surrender, being in command at the battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna Ford and Gaines' Mill. In making reconnoissance in front of Petersburg, on June 22, 1864, he was shot in the left arm, but rejoined his command the following September, and was in the battles of Petersburg and Farmville, Va. After the close of hostilities he returned to Augusta and engaged in the manufacture of artificial ice for one year, resuming the plumbing and heating business in 1866, which business he has successfully carried on since, and is now one of the best known and most extensive houses of its kind in the south. A complete equipment of modern and improved tools are available, and often the force of hands employed averages fifty work-people, many of whom are skilled artisans. Mr. Robbe also has a drain and sewer pipe factory in Augusta and manufactures a very high grade of product. He has executed many notable contracts in steam heating and plumbing, having furnished the steam heating plant of the Georgia state lunatic asylum at Milledgeville, hot water heating apparatus to the Georgia Normal and Industrial college, also at Milledgeville, steam heat for the Aiken institute, South Carolina, and to the Chatham county jail, Savannah, Ga. Charles A. Robbe was also very prominent in the reorganization of the Augusta Ice company, of which he was a director and is now a stockholder. He also erected the first ice plant ever established in the city of Augusta, which is now in operation. In 1860 he became a member of the old volunteer fire department of Augusta, was made chief in 1876, and retired, on breaking his ankle, in 1884. Probably no man ever connected with the volunteer fire department of Augusta, which was acknowledged one of the most efficient in the Union, has ever achieved more popularity than "Chug" Robbe, and he is to-day, ten years after his retirement from active service, familiarly known as "Chief." So high does he stand in public esteem that he was elected, in 1882, to the lower house of the legislature of Georgia, running some 500 ahead of the democratic ticket. In 1884 he was re-elected and was made chairman of the committee on manufactures and served as second member of the committee on finance. During that session of the house of representatives he introduced a bill to encourage direct trade and immigration. He declined to be a candidate for the next term. In 1892 he was chosen to represent the Eighteenth district in the Georgia senate, serving as chairman of the committees on public schools, sanitation and hygiene, and as a member of the committees on military, corporations, finance, lunatic asylum and academy for the blind. He was also chairman of the special committee of the senate which introduced and secured the passage of the bill appropriating $100,000 for the building of the new lunatic asylum at Milledgeville, Ga. Mr. Robbe is president of the board of commissioners of the Richmond county Reformatory institute, and has evinced a very profound interest in the work of that institution. He is a Knight Templar Mason and has been for many years a member of the Sovereign grand lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is connected with the Benevolent Order of Elks. He was for two years chancellor commander of Vigilant lodge No. 2, Knights of Pythias, and organized the endowment rank of that order in the city of Augusta, was elected deputy grand chancellor for the state of Georgia, but declined to serve. He is also prominently connected with the local chapter of the Knights of Honor, and is an attendant of St. Paul's Episcopal church of Augusta. Mr. Robbe was married in 1867 to Miss Mary A., daughter of the late John Reaney, a prominent citizen of Augusta, and that union has been blessed by the birth of two bright sons, viz.: Frank A. and Charles A., Jr.

HENRY C. RONEY, judge of the superior court, Augusta circuit, was born in Warren county, Ga., Dec. 31, 1845. His father, Thomas Roney, was a native of Georgia, a planter all his long and useful life, and died in 1860. The son, Henry C., was reared and educated in the county of his birth, and in 1861 enlisted in Company H of the Seventy-second Georgia regiment, Gen. A. R. Wright's brigade, Anderson division, A. P. Hill's corps, army of northern Virginia. He served as a private in the ranks until the battle of Petersburg, Va., June 23, 1864, when he received a wound so severe that he was rendered incapable of service during the remaining portion of the war. Judge Roney was, however, an active participant in the following battles: Second Manassas, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Spottsylvania court house, the battles around Richmond and in many minor skirmishes. After the close of hostilities, Judge Roney, finding all his property swept away, taught school in Warren and Columbia counties for about eighteen months; then entered the university of Georgia, at Athens, from which institution he was graduated with the degree B. A., in 1870. Immediately after his graduation he began the practice of law at Thompson, McDuffie Co., Ga., having been admitted to the bar at Sparta, Hancock Co., in the fall of 1870. He sedulously pursued his profession at Thompson until 1882, when he was elected judge of the superior court of the Augusta circuit, and has retained that seat to the present time. Judge Roney was elected a member of the state house of representatives in 1878 from Richmond county, and re-elected to the same position in 1880, serving ably on the committees of general judiciary and corporations. He is a consistent member of the Baptist church and was married Dec. 16, 1873, to Miss Bettie V., daughter of Obadiah Florence, a prominent citizen of Glennville, Ala.

JUDGE JOHN T. SHEWMAKE was born in Burke county, Ga., at the old family plantation, on Jan. 22, 1826. He studied at home until he became eighteen years of age and then entered the college of New Jersey, at Princeton, where he remained one year. Returning to his home in Burke county, Ga., he entered the law school of Judge William T. Gould, at Augusta, and after a law course of one year, he was admitted to the bar at Augusta, Judge W. W. Holt, presiding. Immediately after his admission he located at Waynesboro, county seat of Burke, and entered actively and successfully upon the practice of his chosen profession, but desiring a wider field for the exercise of his talents, he removed to the city of Augusta and continued in the practice there until the commencement of the civil war, when he was elected a member of the Confederate states' congress and served in that capacity until 1865. After the close of the war he resumed the practice of law in Augusta, which he continued until his retirement in 1865. In 1874 Judge Shewmake was made the president of the board of education of Augusta, then newly created, and held that office five years, when he was elected a member of the Georgia senate and served two terms, declining further re-election. In 1851 Judge Shewmake was married to Miss Lizzie P., daughter of Henry P. Jones of Burke county, Ga., and that union was blessed by the birth of eight children, all of whom, save one, survive. Burke, the eldest son, was married to Miss Alice, the second daughter of John M. Clarke of Augusta. Of the two daughters of John T. and Lizzie P. (Jones) Shewmake, the elder married James Whitehead of Warrentown, Ga., and they have at this time six children. The younger daughter married P. P. Johnson of Waynesboro, Ga., and they have four children. Judge John T. Shewmake was decidedly a man of much prominence in Georgia politics and an acknowledged leader at the bar. His children have, in a great measure, inherited that strength of character and force of soul which made their father illustrious, and they command the respect and earn the esteem of all with whom they are thrown in contact.

BURKE SHEWMAKE, eldest son of Judge John T. and Lizzie P. (Jones) Shewmake, was born in the city of Augusta, Ga., June 16, 1859. He studied at home until twelve years of age and then attended the private school of Prof. J. Alma Petot, in the city of Augusta, two years later becoming a student at the old Richmond academy, at Augusta, from which he was graduated, in 1876, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He then attended the Virginia Military institute, at which institution he made a most remarkable record, never receiving a mark of discredit as a cadet, and was graduated, with rank of adjutant, in the course of Bachelor of Arts. Returning to Augusta, Ga., he immediately entered the employ of Z. McCord, the largest grocery house in that city, as chief clerk and occasionally acted as traveling salesman. He remained in the employ of Mr. McCord for five years, resigning at the end of that time in order to organize the firm of Beane, Shewmake & Savage. Three years later he withdrew from that firm and organized the firm of Moore & Shewmake, which continued until the organization of the present firm of Shewmake Bros., three years later. The present firm conducts quite an extensive business and commands a generous patronage among the citizens of Augusta and vicinity. Burke Shewmake, senior member of the firm, is major of the Sixth Georgia regiment, volunteers, and has received the third degree of masonry.

HON. GEORGE ROYAL SIBLEY, deceased. As a citizen and public man, the record of the late Hon. George R. Sibley of Augusta, Ga., is worthy of all the praise and honor which man can bestow on man. His ability was universally acknowledged, and he was known and loved by all. Born and reared in Augusta, he made that city his home for nearly fifty years, and in business matters and public affairs he was ever regarded as a leader and a sound adviser. Successful in private affairs, he was even more successful in the public trusts which he was often called to administer. Full of public spirit and enterprise, the friend of the struggling young man and of the children, George R. Sibley easily took rank as the foremost citizen of Augusta. In the home circle, in the great world of business, he was esteemed and beloved for his grandeur of character and the spotless purity of his life. The most touching incident, probably, in the entire life of this nobleman of God was his connection, as president, of the Augusta Orphan asylum. His visits, almost daily, to that charity were hailed with enthusiasm by the childish inmates, and the great love and charity he there dispensed were as lavish and substantial as they were beautiful. He treated the young orphans as he would his own little ones and completely won their love and respect. His beloved wife and children idolized him as husband and father, his own brothers and sisters regarded him as a leader and counselor, and his aged and honored father rejoiced in the achievements of so noble a son. George R.

Sibley was born in the city of Augusta, Ga., on June 19, 1839, and passed the full term of his useful life in that community. At an early age he gave decided evidence of that strong will and resolute determination to succeed which, in after years, was so abundantly illustrated by the places of honor and trust he filled to the entire satisfaction of his constituency. Beginning his manhood with the benefits of the liberal education he had received from the old Richmond academy and Yale college, New Haven, Conn., where he secured second honor, he chose mercantile affairs in preference to any of the professions, and became in all that characterizes such a calling, a model of wisdom, sound judgment and commercial honor. Mr. Sibley was happily married during his twenty-second year, on Jan. 21, 1862, to Miss Emma, the lovely and highly accomplished daughter of Judge Daniel R. Tucker, a leading and prominent citizen of Baldwin county, Ga. Soon after he began his business career in Augusta, Mr. Sibley attracted the attention of the business talent of that municipality. His thorough knowledge of men, his firm, yet courteous demeanor, his extended information in reference to improved business methods, his industry and close attention, soon attracted not only the endorsement of his associates, but marked him in the eyes of the public as a citizen upon whom distinction as well as wealth could be worthily bestowed. The natural results of such a disposition, combined with such talents and qualities of head and heart, were soon witnessed by his friends and neighbors in the rapidity with which wealth and public duties came to him. Many years ago, when the enterprise of Augusta's merchants found a substantial exhibition in the organization of the exchange, he willingly became a charter member and was several times called to the presidency of that body, in whose prosperity he felt a profound interest, manifested by judicious counsel and pecuniary aid whenever either was required. It may be declared without reflection upon the living, that the memory of the dead holds high place in the history and progress of what to-day is a fitting monument of the liberal and public spirit which actuated his life and conduct. When the war between the states called for defenders of the south, Mr. Sibley entered the Confederate army as a private, in 1862, and was subsequently made quartermaster-sergeant, serving until the war closed. In 1877, when the people of Georgia called to their assistance the intelligence and manhood of the state, to prepare a fundamental law in keeping with the needs of the hour, he went into the deliberations of the constitutional convention as one of the delegates from his district, fully armed to meet all the necessities of the occasion; and the record of its labors will demonstrate that his practical sense, firm judgment and progressive spirit found expression in many of its provisions. And when the constitution received the endorsement of the people he was called to the halls of the general assembly as a representative from Richmond county to enforce its requirements by appropriate legislation. In the matter of public education he was fully abreast of the most advanced thought on that important subject, and he placed himself in sympathy with the cause, exhibiting a vigor and zeal which tired not, even to the moment of his sudden taking off. He was for several terms the distinguished president of the board, and gave, as the system needed it, the amplest proof of how near to his large and generous heart was the education of the masses. Nor did his restless purpose to serve his day and generation cease with these important offices of public service. The homeless and the orphan found ready sympathy and substantial help at his hands, and when he accepted a call, unanimously made, to the presidency of the Augusta Orphan asylum, he entered upon a work most congenial, and to which he brought a liberal mind, coupled with a tender heart. The orphans miss his regular visits, in which he was ever the bearer of kind words and attractive gifts that made gladness come to the little ones whose pleasures follow from footsteps of the good and charitable. In municipal affairs he ever felt a deep concern and interested himself in all matters which tended to promote the advance of the city's welfare. As chairman of the finance committee of the council he rendered valuable service in promoting the credit of the municipality at a time when the utmost care was needed to protect its good name and credit, and enjoyed the satisfaction of seeing its bonds become a much-sought for security in the markets of the country at a price that indicated a financial strength most desirable. In the membership of the Presbyterian church, and as one of the most constant contributors to all the good works in which it is engaged, he came up to the full stature of a Christian man, and while the charities of his right hand were carefully concealed from the knowledge of his left, the blessings which follow them rise up to-day in eloquent commendation of the generous giver, who sought not applause so much as he did the relief of suffering and want. He was a valued counselor in the board of directors of the Augusta factory and National Exchange bank and filled most acceptably the high and responsible position of president of the First National bank, whose interests under his care and guidance were well protected, while at the same time the accommodations afforded the public were constantly enlarged. His administration of the duties of this and other offices, though well and faithfully performed, did not prevent proper attention to a large private business, the successful management of which commanded the best of care and talent. In the very meridian of his mental and physical manhood, on July 15, 1887, he died in the faith of his fathers and entered into the rest promised the faithful. The death of George R. Sibley was felt throughout the city of Augusta, and his late associates in business commemorated his death in a most fitting manner. The Augusta exchange passing the following resolutions unanimously: "Resolved, By the Augusta exchange, that in the death of Hon. George R. Sibley, this organization has sustained the loss of one of its most valued members, and the people of Augusta and of Georgia a citizen whose record of official and private worth should, and will be held in grateful remembrance. Resolved second, That in common with all our people who hold in loving recognition the many evidences of public spirit, generous nature and business qualities he possessed, we tender to his bereaved family our profound condolence. Resolved third, That this memorial be entered upon the minutes of the exchange, a copy framed and hung upon its walls, a copy furnished to the family of the deceased and published in the newspapers of the city." The directors of the National Exchange bank also offered this tribute of respect: "In commemoration of the many virtues of the lamented president of this bank, whose sudden and untimely death removes from this board a wise counselor, upright man and trusted executive, Resolved, That this board, as a tribute of respect, expresses its profound sorrow upon the demise of Mr. George R. Sibley, the honored and faithful president of this institution. Resolved further, That the board tenders its sympathies to the grief-stricken family who mourn the death of father, son and husband. Resolved further, That a page in the minute book be inscribed with these resolutions and a copy be furnished to his family; also, that the same be published in each of our daily papers."

WILLIAM CRAPON SIBLEY, president of the Sibley Manufacturing company of Augusta, Ga., was born in that city May 3, 1832. He is the ninth in lineal descent from John Sibley of St. Albans, Hertfordshire, England, who in 1629 settled in Salem, and later in Charlestown, Mass. His father, Josiah Sibley, of Uxbridge, Mass., removed to Augusta, Ga., in 1821, and died there in 1888. His mother was Sarah Ann, daughter of William Crapon of Providence, R. I.

Although prepared for college at the age of sixteen, he clerked in the general store of his father, at Hamburg, S. C., continuing in that capacity for five years, when he was made a partner. In 1856 the cotton and commission house of J. Sibley & Son was formed in Augusta, Ga.; his brother, Samuel H., being added two years later, the style of the firm was changed to Josiah Sibley & Sons. He was elected a member of the city council of Augusta in 1859, and served two years. In November, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company B, Oglethorpe infantry, Georgia state troops, and served for six months on the coast; the regiment of which he was a member was discharged, the term of enlistment having expired. Then joining the Oglethorpe artillery, he was made quartermaster-sergeant, and six weeks later commissary, with the rank of captain, of Gen. John K. Jackson's brigade. Joining Bragg's army at Tupelo, Miss., he served throughout the Kentucky campaign, remaining with that branch of the army until the retreat to Dalton, when he was retired on account of broken health. In November, 1865, at New Orleans, La., he formed the shipping and commission firm of Sibley, Guion & Co., which was dissolved in 1867, Mr. Sibley doing business there alone until the spring of 1870, when he returned to Augusta, Ga., to accept the presidency of the Langley Cotton Manufacturing company of South Carolina, with its main office in Augusta, Ga.; also forming the cotton firm of Dunbar & Sibley of Augusta, Ga., which was dissolved in 1877. In 1880 he was made president of the Sibley Manufacturing company of Augusta, manufacturing colored and other goods, which now has in operation 40,256 spindles, and 1,109 looms. In 1889 he resigned the presidency of the Langley Manufacturing company in order to devote his entire attention to the Sibley mills. Among the cotton-mill presidents of the south none surpass him in successful administration. His great factories are patterns of successful management, and are among the best in the land. He has, however, other extensive business interests that claim a portion of his time, being president of the Coaldale Brick & Tile company of Alabama, of the Warrior Coal & Coke company, also of Alabama; the Round Mountain Coal & Iron company of Alabama, and is a director of the Commercial bank of Augusta. In all personal and social excellencies, Mr. Sibley is a model citizen. He was happily married, in November, 1860, to Jane E., daughter of the late Judge Grigsby E. Thomas of Columbus, Ga. This union, which has proven an ideally happy one, has been blessed by the birth of six sons and three daughter, seven of whom are still living, who nobly uphold the family name in the several communities in which they reside. Jane E. (Thomas) Sibley, his wife, is the foremost among the temperance crusaders of Georgia, having been president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of her state for many years, and by her noble traits and Christian influence has led her devoted husband to become an active elder in the Presbyterian church.

CAPT. JEREMIAH T. SMITH, of the firm of Baker & Smith, cotton factors and commission merchants, Augusta, Ga., was born in Columbia Co., Ga., March 12, 1850. He received his primary education in the county of his birth, attended Mercer university, then located at Penfield, Ga., and was graduated from that institution in 1870, also graduating the same year from the Eastman Business college, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Returning to his home in Columbia county, he taught school at Appling, the county seat, for one year; was elected county school commissioner of that county, and held that office twenty-one consecutive years. He resigned his office in 1893 in order to engage in the cotton business in Augusta. Capt. Smith has never, however, given up his agricultural interests, and still cultivates the family homestead in Columbia county, Ga. He still has in his employ the old slaves and their children owned by his father in ante-bellum days. Capt. Smith is a consistent and a prominent member of the Baptist church. He was happily married in Augusta, Ga., Sept. 11, 1872, to Miss Moragne, and this union has been blessed by the birth of five children, viz.: Louise Moragne, Ruth Blanton, Ella Butler, Roberta Fleming, and Cecil. Mrs. Smith is a niece of Col. John Moragne, who was killed in the Mexican war, and a niece, also, of Gen. William Moragne, a gallant soldier in that war. The father of Capt. Jeremiah T. Smith was born in Savannah, Ga., in 1789. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died in 1874 at the ripe age of eighty-five years. He was a farmer throughout his long and useful life.

DR. JOSEPH HENRY SPEARS, one of the leading cotton factors of Augusta, Ga., was born in the county of Washington, this state, on Aug. 10, 1833, being the second son and child born to Francis and Mary (Malpass) Spears. Francis Spears, a native of France, migrated to America when a youth, was merchant all his long and active life, lived in the city of Augusta for many years, and died there in 1850. Mary (Malpass) Spear was a native of Washington county, Ga. On her marriage there were born to her several sons and daughters, all of whom are now living, viz.: Madison L., William E., Frank, and Catharine E., and Savannah, relict of the late A. A. Beall, of Augusta, Ga. Mary (Malpass) Spears departed this life in the city of Augusta in 1875, aged sixty years, loved and respected by all who knew her. Both husband and wife died in St. John's church, of which they had been consistent members for many years. Dr. Joseph Henry Spears, the subject of this sketch, resided in the county of his birth until ten years of age, when he removed to Augusta and attended the old Richmond county academy, thence entering the employ of the general merchandise firm of Spears & Beaufort, where he remained until the death of his father, who was the senior member of that firm, in 1850, and one year thereafter with the firm of Beaufort, Beall & Co., successors to the business. He then began the study of medicine under the tutorage of Dr. A. C. Hart, of Augusta, afterward attending one session at the medical department at the university of Georgia, located at Augusta, and the old Jefferson Medical college, Philadelphia, Penn., from which latter institution he was graduated in 1852. Returning to Philadelphia the following year, he was made resident physician of St. Joseph's hospital in that city, and served in that capacity about twelve months. He then returned to Augusta, and entered actively upon the practice of medicine, but not being satisfied with the outlook, he entered in a co-partnership for the sale of drugs in Augusta, under the firm name of Clark, Wells & Spears. This firm continued in the drug business in Augusta until the outbreak of the civil war, Clark and Wells disposing of their interests to Spears & Height, and Spears finally selling to Height. In the spring of 1864 Dr. Spears entered the service of the Confederate states as a member of the Georgia state troops, and proved a very gallant soldier. Prior to the war, however, he had been a lieutenant of militia, and had been extensively engaged in the manufacture of salt by evaporation, which business was continued under detail by Gen. Cobb for the state troops until the close of hostilities. Dr. Spears is one of the oldest cotton men in the city of Augusta, and his experience during a business career of twenty-eight years is second to none in all matters relating to the fleecy staple. He is a master Mason and is a steward of St. John's Methodist Episcopal church, south, of Augusta. He was happily married in 1863 to Mary G., daughter of the late Robert Warren, a native of the city of Augusta, and that union has been blessed by the birth of three daughters, two of whom are now in life, viz.: Harriet T., the wife of C. Winston Pilcher, of Augusta, and Mary C., the wife of John Oscar Wicker, of Augusta. The third child, Ophelia Joseph, died in infancy, about three months old.

PATRICK J. SULLIVAN, attorney-at-law, Augusta, Ga., was born in County Kerry, Ireland, Nov. 2, 1859, and is a son of John and Helen C. (Daly) Sullivan. John Sullivan was born in 1830 in Tralee, Ireland, came to the United States, was naturalized, and then returned to the old country for a year or so, and during his visit the subject of this sketch was born, but born an American citizen through the act of his father in having become naturalized. When the state of Louisiana seceded from the Union the father left his wife and infant son with the family in Ireland, and returned to America to cast his lot with the Confederacy. He was in active service during the entire war, with the exception of a short period spent in the hospital suffering with two gunshot wounds received in the battle of Gettysburg. After the surrender of Lee's army he embarked for Ireland, and accompanied by his wife and child returned to his adopted home in the latter part of the summer of 1866. Up to the age of ten the subject of this sketch knew no teacher save his mother, and the succeeding seven years he spent at the private school of the Rev. James T. Easterday, a Presbyterian minister. He began the study of law in 1878 with J. C. C. Black, of Augusta, now congressman from the Tenth district of Georgia, and was admitted to the bar April 21, 1880. He at once entered upon the practice of his profession in all its branches, rising at once to high rank as attorney, being secretary of the judiciary committee of the legislature of 1882, and was the court reporter for the Augusta circuit, retiring from that position in 1889. He is a lawyer by nature, an original thinker and a good speaker, and with a heart full of noble and generous impulses, wins friends wherever he goes. His genial nature renders him a favorite in the circle in which he moves, and being still young and in vigorous health, there is before him a prospective career of usefulness and distinction which may well be envied. He is an enthusiastic member of the masonic fraternity and of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

DR. NEWTON A. TEAGUE, a well-known dentist and a prominent figure in the military circles of Augusta, Ga., was born in the city of Charleston, S. C., Oct. 4, 1861. His father, Isaac N. Teague, was a native of South Carolina, and his uncle, Benjamin H., was a soldier in Wade Hampton's legion during the civil war. Early in infancy the subject of this sketch was removed by his parents to Edgefield, S. C., where he remained until ten years of age, when his family removed to Barnwell, S. C., and soon thereafter again removed to the Porter Military academy, Charleston, where he remained for four years. In 1882 he was graduated from the university of Maryland in the medical and dental departments, and immediately after his graduation he came to Augusta, Ga., and entered actively and successfully upon the practice of dentistry, in which profession he has continued to this time. In 1877 Dr. Teague joined the Palmetto rifles, of Aiken, S. C., and was a member of that company for four years, rising to the rank of sergeant. In 1884 he became a member of Company C, Clinch rifles, Augusta, Ga., and one year later joined the Oglethorpe infantry, of that city, as first sergeant, Company D, Sixth regiment Georgia volunteers, and rose later to the rank of captain. In August, 1894, Capt. Teague was made junior major of the Sixth regiment of Georgia volunteer forces, which commission he now holds. In 1889 Dr. Teague was happily joined in marriage to Miss Bessie Nesbitt Dawson, a daughter of the late Capt. E. J. Dawson, of Charleston, S. C., and that union, which has proven an ideally happy one, has been blessed by the birth of a son and daughter. Dr. Teague is a prominent and consistent member of the Protestant Episcopal church.

F. A. TIMBERLAKE, leading commission merchant of Augusta, Ga., was born in Smith county, Tenn., Nov. 20, 1836, and was reared in the county of his birth. In 1861 he enlisted as a private in Company B, Seventh Tennessee regiment of infantry, and in the reorganization of the Confederate forces in 1862, was elected first lieutenant of his company and served as such until the battle of Fredericksburg, when he was temporarily assigned for duty on the staff of Gen. Archer, with the rank of captain. Returning to his own company, Lieut. Timberlake was for some time in the same command. He was an active participant in the battles of Seven Pines, where he was twice wounded; the seven days' battles around Richmond, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Harper's Ferry and Gettysburg, where he was captured after being very severely wounded in the lungs and hip. He was confined at Johnson's island as a prisoner of war for ten months and was then regularly exchanged. He was then made adjutant-general at Augusta, Ga., and was serving in that capacity at the close of hostilities. In the fall of 1865 Mr. Timberlake entered the grocery and commission business at Augusta, and has continued in that business ever since. He sustains a most desirable rank among the business men of Augusta and is interested in several local enterprises, being a member of the board of directors of the National Exchange bank. He is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church south, at Augusta.

DR. AUSTIN S. TINSLEY, a leading specialist of Augusta, Ga., was born in Morgan county, Ga., March 28, 1868. His father, A. J. Tinsley, was a native of Georgia and served in the Confederate states army during the civil war. Austin S. Tinsley was educated in Galveston, Tex., where he attended the Lyon academy from 1881 to 1885, and was graduated. Returning to Augusta, Ga., the same year he was graduated from the Augusta Business college and was immediately appointed deputy United States revenue collector under Thomas C. Crenshaw, marshal of Georgia, and held that position fifteen months. He then began the study of medicine under Dr. Joseph Eve Allen, of Augusta, Ga., and was graduated from the medical department of the university of Georgia, located at Augusta, in 1888, standing first in a class of forty-eight members. As a reward for his meritorious record as a student he was awarded a prize in the practice of medicine by the faculty of that institution and also appointed resident physician of the city hospital of Augusta and dispensary clerk for one year. Entering the New York polyclinic, Dr. Tinsley took a post-graduate course, and later a course on diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat under Prof. Herman Knapp, at the New York Ophthalmic and Aural institute. Returning to Augusta, he entered immediately upon the practice of his specialties, and has continued actively and successfully in that practice to this time. Together with Prof. George W. Raines, M. D., LL. D., Dr. Tinsley was, from 1891-93, assistant to the department of chemistry in the medical department of the university of Georgia. Dating from 1888 he was also assistant demonstrator of anatomy at the same institution for three years, and chief demonstrator for three years from 1891. He has been, since August, 1891, secretary of the Alumni association of the medical department of the university of Georgia, is a member of the Augusta Academy of Medicine and surgeon of the Sixth regiment, Georgia volunteers, is a member of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States, the Georgia State Medical society, and is president of the examining board of military surgeons stationed at the city of Augusta, Ga. In 1895 Dr. Tinsley opened the Augusta Ophthalmic and Aural institute for the treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, at 812 Broadway. Socially Dr. Tinsley occupies a most exalted position and he is a member of several fraternal and benevolent orders, notably of the Knights of Pythias, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Golden Chain. He is also a consistent member of St. Paul's Episcopal church, of Augusta, and is unmarried.

JAMES PAUL VERDERY, president of the Enterprise Manufacturing company, of Augusta, Ga., was born in Richmond county, six miles from the city of Augusta, and was reared at his rural home, but received his education at the Richmond academy of Augusta. In May, 1863, he left school and enlisted in Company I, of the Forty-eighth Georgia regiment as a private, serving as such until the close of hostilities. He was an active participant in the battles around Petersburg, June 22 and 23, 1864; the battle of the Crater, July 30, 1864, and the battle of Hatch's Run, Feb. 5 and 6, 1865. He was slightly wounded at Petersburg. After the surrender Mr. Verdery returned to Augusta and kept books for four years for the late M. P. Stovall, cotton factor. He then began the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1870. He was for fifteen years sedulously engaged in the practice of his profession until his election as president of the Enterprise Manufacturing company, retaining that position at the present time. Mr. Verdery takes no part in politics, preferring to devote his time to his extensive business interests. He was for some years lieutenant in the Georgia hussars, of Augusta, but resigned. He is a consistent member of the Baptist church. Mr. Verdery was happily married, in 1888, to Miss Cumming, daughter of Maj. Joseph Bryan Cumming, of Augusta, and that union has been blessed by the birth of two lovely daughters.

HON. PATRICK WALSH. No man has more at heart the welfare of Georgia than the Hon. Patrick Walsh, of Augusta, and no man of the present generation has done more for the advancement of the interests of the city of his adoption. For years, alike in state and local matters, Mr. Walsh has proven a safe adviser and a steadfast friend. He was born in Ballygarry, County Limerick, Ireland, Jan. 1, 1840. When he was eight years of age his father and two brothers emigrated to the United States and settled in Charleston, S. C., where, in 1852, Mr. Walsh joined them in company with his mother and sisters. Here the future great editor at once began his life-work, being apprenticed to the Charleston "Evening News" to learn the printer's trade. At the age of eighteen he had become a master of the typographic art and his own man as a journeyman printer. Having decided to adopt journalism as a profession, with that foresight and prudence so characteristic of his conservative nature, he at once devoted himself to a studious preparation for the manifold requirements of that exacting calling. Not unlike many other men who have made an indelible impress upon the times in which they lived, and whose blazoned Celtic names shine like stars in our political firmament, Mr. Walsh was confronted at the outset of his now brilliant career with that true saying: "Slow rises worth by poverty oppressed." The yearnings of the lad for an education, which should fit him for the career his ambition had depicted were chilled by the hard necessity of daily toil, but difficulty is only a spur to one of the right mettle, and Mr. Walsh fought the battle of life and engaged in the struggle for knowledge simultaneously, emerging from that unequal contest twice a conqueror and doubly a hero. Just as that other honored and beloved east Georgian, Alexander H. Stephens, taught school by day and studied law by the feeble and flickering glare of the light-wood knots, while the stars their silent vigils kept; just as Hugh Miller used mallet and chisel from dawn to dusk and then, far into the weary watches of the night, wrought out the geological secrets of the earth; so, during the academical hours of the day, Mr. Walsh was a most diligent student at the Charleston high school, and in the afternoon, and at night, worked also as a compositor in the newspaper offices of the city. By this untiring double industry he soon found himself prepared to enter college, with a modest fund in hand to sustain him while further pursuing his studies. In 1859 he became a student at that venerable and renowned Catholic seat of learning, Georgetown college, in the District of Columbia. His progress here was rapid, and but for the gathering war clouds which then began to overshadow the country, he would have been graduated in due course with distinguished honors. But, in December, 1860, South Carolina seceded; in April, 1861, the sullen boom of the opening gun reverberated through Charleston harbor, and forthwith closing his books, the student returned home and joined the Meagher guards, one of the companies of the First South Carolina Rifle regiment, then on duty on Sullivan's island. On the reorganization of the South Carolina forces the Meagher guards became the Emerald Light infantry, and Mr. Walsh was commissioned as one of its lieutenants and stationed at Castle Pinckney. His two brothers also entered the Confederate service. Then, the blockade becoming established, the pinch of want became felt throughout the unfortunate beleaguered Confederacy. An aged father and mother and two sisters demanded assistance, and on Patrick, as the youngest son, devolved the sacred duty. In August, 1862, he came to Augusta in search of employment and became a printer on the "Constitutionalist." In January, 1863, he was promoted to be local and night editor, the latter a very responsible position in those times, when each night the wires were freighted with news of life and death. In 1864 Mr. Walsh, in connection with Mr. T. L. Blome, then an Augusta journalist, and afterward for a quarter of a century the valued and efficient clerk of the city council, began the publication of the "Pacifcator," a weekly paper which obtained an extended circulation throughout the south, which was continued until June, 1865. In founding this journal Mr. Walsh foresaw the approaching end of the struggle—so glorious yet so disastrous—and with his usual sagacity sought to outline a policy which might secure the south honorable terms. For months he was so far in advance of public sentiment that his efforts failed to meet a response, and when finally the Confederate government alligned itself upon his idea and sent Vice-President Stephens to the Hampton Roads conference the golden time had passed and nothing remained but to await the silent heroism of the bitter end. Mr. Walsh's presence in public affairs has been often signally manifest, but this early exhibition of the soundness of his judgment is almost unexampled. Had his views been acted upon promptly, as they were ultimately, by the Confederate government, precious blood in all probability would have been spared, and years of agony, poverty and retardation averted. In 1866 he was appointed southern agent of the New York Associated Press. Severing his connection with the "Constitutionalist," he became one of the editorial staff of the "Chronicle and Sentinel," then run by Henry Moore, and edited by Gen. A. R. Wright. After the death of Gen. Wright Mr. Moore sold his interest in the paper to Mr. Walsh and H. Gregg Wright, son of the general. Mr. Wright edited the paper and Mr. Walsh managed its affairs so wisely and so well that in 1877 it absorbed the "Constitutionalist," its rival for nearly half a century, Messrs. Walsh & Wright continuing as sole managers and editors. Upon the consolidation the name of the paper was changed to the "Chronicle and Constitutionalist," but in 1885, the centennial of the "Chronicle," the latter portion of the name was dropped, thereby resuming the original style under which the journal first appeared in 1785. The career of the "Chronicle" from 1866 to the present time is well known. Though one of the oldest established journals in America, it may to-day be quoted as one of the most progressive and enterprising. In its opinions it is honest, fearless and fair. In politics it is democratic, but devoid of the slightest trace of sectional animus or prejudice. Laboring steadily for the public good, the "Chronicle" is recognized as the leading organ and authority of public sentiment in eastern Georgia and that part of South Carolina tributary to Augusta.

In 1870-71 Mr. Walsh was elected a member of the city council of Augusta, and in 1872 was sent from Richmond county to the general assembly of Georgia, and was re-elected in 1874 and 1876, serving in the meantime on many important committees. He was a delegate from his county to the state democratic convention in 1880, a delegate to the national convention which nominated Gen. Hancock for president the same year, and in 1884 was one of the delegates-at-large to the Chicago convention which nominated Grover Cleveland for president. He was also for four years the Georgia member of the national democratic executive committee. Mr. Walsh made a notable success as president of the Augusta Exposition company, and by the strength of his own personal resources and influence made Augusta the most talked about city in the country next to Chicago in the year of the world's fair. In a time of national depression, and following immediately upon the heels of the world's fair, the Augusta exposition of 1893 attracted national attention to this city and section. He brought here Vice-President Stevenson, members of the cabinet, and speaker of the house of representatives, governors of states and the legislatures of Georgia and the Carolinas, and kept the enterprise constantly before the eyes of the nation. So great was the triumph over adverse circumstances that there was unanimous desire on the part of the community to make him some practical testimonial of the public appreciation of his services, and the idea had about crystallized into a movement to tender him unanimously the mayoralty of the city when he was unexpectedly called upon to accept a much greater honor. United States Senator Alfred H. Colquitt having died toward the close of March, 1894, Gov. W. J. Northen appointed Mr. Walsh United States senator for the unexpired term. Before his appointment as United States senator was an hour old, and while friends were pouring in congratulations upon him in person and by telegraph, he took from his desk an article he had just prepared for a syndicate on the Development of the South, and declared with ingenuous satisfaction: "I reckon this will be worth more to the south, coming from a United States senator, than from plain Patrick Walsh." This is illustrative of his ever-wakeful interest in this section, and the thought that as United States senator he may be more able to exert more influence in building up the south and advancing the interests of his people, is a much dearer consideration to him than the distinction of the office itself. His ambition by day and his dream by night is to see the south the most popular and progressive section of this great country; to see Georgia the recognized center of southern development, and Augusta the leading city of the southeast. To live to see this come about, and to feel that he had been instrumental in accomplishing it, would be to him a dearer honor than the highest office in the gift of the people. As to Mr. Walsh's mental endowments, his unimpeachable character, and his unswerving rectitude of purpose, no testimony is needed. These are known of all men. No man ever entered battle with more patriotic love of country than that with which he entered the highest legislative councils of the nation, and no man ever consecrated his life to the service of his people more unreservedly than did Patrick Walsh. Mr. Walsh's brief service in the senate has been marked by unusual ability for advancing the interests of his section. He has proven himself a man of liberal ideas, a stanch party man, and an untiring advocate of southern development, and unremitting in setting forth its great possibilities. No man has ever attracted more attention and more favorable comment during so short a service. Mr. Walsh was married in August, 1866, to Miss Ann Isabella, daughter of Mr. John E. McDonald, of Edgefield district, S. C., and that union has been one of uninterrupted happiness.

SEYMOUR MURRAY WHITNEY, cotton factor of Augusta, Ga., was born in the township of Philadelphia, New York, in 1829, receiving his educational advantages in the common and high schools of his native district. In 1858, he removed to Elbert county, Ga., and engaged in teaching school. In the autumn of 1861, he enlisted in the Fifteenth Georgia regiment, Toombs' brigade, Confederate States army, serving in the quartermaster's department throughout that memorable struggle and received promotion to the rank of major, though he never received a commission as such. He was captured at Sharpsburg, and when it became known among the soldiers of the Union army that he was born north of Mason and Dixon's line strong inducements were offered him to abandon the cause of the south, but he steadfastly refused every offer with scorn, and after being duly paroled ten days later, returned to his regiment. After the war had closed, he returned to his home in Elbert county, Ga., and engaged in the general merchandise business, which was continued until his removal to the city of Augusta, in August, 1868. One of the oldest and best known houses in Augusta is that now conducted under the sole auspices of S. M. Whitney, cotton factor. This business was originally founded in 1868, as S. Franklin & Co., and in 1870 the firm title became Franklin, Read & Co. In 1873 another change transpired, this time to Franklin & Whitney. Since 1876 Mr. Whitney has conducted the business alone. Mr. Whitney, however, has been connected with the enterprise from its inception, having been a member of the original firm of S. Franklin & Co. The business is one of the two oldest established cotton houses in Augusta, and is therefore a pioneer in the important trade since developed in that line in the city. Mr. Whitney handles annually between 15,000 and 20,000 bales of the fleecy staple, and his long experience and complete familiarity with the business, together with his standing in the community, assures consignors that their interests will be considered in every available manner. Though not engaged in agricultural pursuits, Mr. Whitney owns the old homestead in Philadelphia, N. Y., besides tracts of land in Georgia and South Carolina, which he rents to croppers. He takes no active interest in political affairs and affiliates with the Presbyterian church. He was married in Atlanta, Ga., in 1868, to Sallie J., daughter of Maj. C. M. Barry of that city. That union has proved a very happy one, and has been blessed by the birth of seven children, viz.: Bessie, Grace, Charles E., Frank E., Eddy R., Alexander B., George W., and John B. The father of Maj. Whitney was Erastus, a native of the state of New York. He died after a long and useful life, beloved by all who knew him.

DR. THOMAS R. WRIGHT, dean of the medical department of the university of Georgia, was born in Augusta, Ga., July 11, 1855. He was reared and received his education in Augusta, principally at the academy of Richmond county. He entered the medical college of Georgia, medical department of the university of Georgia, in 1873, graduating in March, 1876, afterward taking post-graduate courses in the medical department of Harvard university, and at Bellevue Medical college and the medical department of the university of New York. In 1877 he was made assistant demonstrator of anatomy in the medical department of the university, afterward becoming demonstrator, then professor of anatomy and clinical surgery, and later on professor of operative and clinical surgery. In April, 1894, he was elected by the faculty to be their dean, which position he still holds. He is a member of the State Medical association and of the Augusta Academy of Medicine.

BOYKIN WRIGHT, ex-solicitor-general of the Augusta circuit, was born in Newton county, Ga., May 20, 1852, and was reared and received his primary education in the county of his birth. He entered Emory college, Oxford, Ga., in 1869, attended that institution three years, and was graduated from the university of Georgia, at Athens, in 1875, with the degree of Bachelor of Law. Immediately after his graduation, he was admitted to the bar in Newton county, thence moving to the city of Augusta, where he has since practiced his profession. Such was his advancement at the bar that, in 1880, he was elected by the general assembly of Georgia to the position of solicitor-general of the Augusta circuit, ably serving in that capacity for twelve years. Mr. Wright has extensive business interests in the city of Augusta, being a director of the Enterprise Manufacturing company. He is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church south, and is an influential and valued factor in the lay service of that body.

ROCKDALE COUNTY.

H. V. HARDWICK, a leading and progressive citizen of Conyers, Rockdale Co., Ga., was born in Jasper county, July 14, 1836. The Hardwicks have the distinction of being descended from a noble English family, Mr. Hardwick's great-grandfather having been a member of the house of lords during the reign of the choleric King George III. Just before the war for independence he was sent to America as a committee of one, to note and report the condition of affairs, with such recommendations as he thought necessary to the interest of England. It does not appear whether he himself was friendly to the colonists. He brought along on the trip, however, three boys: Garland, George and William, the latter of whom concluded to remain in this land of freedom. He married a Miss Parker, daughter of his father's family physician, and became the progenitor of the Hardwick family in America. He settled in Washington county, Ga., just before the revolutionary war, in which he served during the entire seven years on the patriot side. For this he was disinherited and left to the consequences of his choice. William Hardwick had six sons: Garland, George, Charles, Robert, William, and John W. With this family he moved to Jasper county in about 1790, where he died a few years later. John W., his youngest son, married Miss Mary Rivers Nally, an orphan girl who had lost her father before she was born, and her mother immediately after. She, however, fell into good hands, Judge Hines Holt having been appointed her guardian, and who gave her every opportunity her means would allow. She became a woman of rare ability and exalted piety. She was a sister of the Rev. Richmond Nally, whose tragic and touching death occurred while on a missionary tour to the early settlers of Louisiana. One bitter cold day, while crossing a swollen stream, he became separated from his horse, and though reaching the bank in safety, got lost, and was found the next morning frozen to death at the foot of a tree, where he had knelt in prayer. Mr. and Mrs. John Hardwick became the parents of seven children, and after a useful life, died in Jasper county. The gentleman whose name heads this sketch was the third son of this marriage. He was reared on the farm and on account of the financial embarrassment of his father had to depend on his own efforts for an education. Naturally of a retentive mind, and with a love for books, he made rapid progress, and was a matriculate of the university of Georgia, when the civil war put a stop to his further progress in that line. He left school and joined the army, serving in the ranks till after the seven days' fight before Richmond, when he was taken very sick and sent home to die. Recovering his health, he again reported for duty, and was given a detail in the quartermaster's department, and was sent to the army of the west. His duties were arduous and dangerous, and he experienced many narrow escapes from the enemy. The close of the war found Mr. Hardwick almost penniless, but nothing daunted, he began the study of medicine and dentistry. He soon entered the active practice of the latter profession, which he continued for fifteen years with excellent financial success. Since 1891 he has been engaged in handling fertilizers and in farming, in both of which he has been quite successful. Mr. Hardwick married Miss Minnie Ward in 1867, she being the daughter of Maj. P. Z. Ward, of Henry county. She went to her reward in 1883, leaving four children. In 1884 Mr. Hardwick again entered the matrimonial state, being joined to Miss Kate Mallette of Thomasville, Ga., and who has borne him four children. In politics Mr. Hardwick is a staunch democrat, ever ready to help a friend, but asking nothing for himself. As a citizen he is true to every principle of right, and is ever ready to help advance the public good. He has been an earnest and zealous Methodist since his youth, and has filled all the offices of his church open to laymen—has been a delegate frequently to the district and annual conferences, and has served as Sunday school superintendent for thirty years. He is a strong and vigorous writer and may yet be heard from through the public press, as he has several manuscripts incomplete that will make books of interest and profit.

SCHLEY COUNTY.

FRANK M. DEVANE, planter, Schley county, Ga., son of John and Eliza (Sellers) Devane, was born in Schley county, Jan. 15, 1844. His father was the son of William Devane, a North Carolina planter, and was born and raised in that state. When a young man he came to Georgia and settled in Schley county, married, reared his family and ended his days there. During the war he was a member of Company B (Capt. French), Seventeenth Georgia regiment. Mr. Devane was reared on the plantation, and received only a limited education. He enlisted in Company B, Seventeenth Georgia regiment, early in the war and among other battles was in those fought in the Wilderness and at Gettysburg, and surrendered at Appomattox. He was so fortunate as to escape with only some slight wounds. After the war he returned to his plantation—containing 400 acres—where he is enjoying life. Mr. Devane was married in Schley county, June 3, 1867, to Miss Polly Ann Wall, daughter of Austin Wall, a prominent planter of Schley county. He is a member of the farmers' alliance, a populist, politically, and himself and wife are members of the Methodist church.

GEORGE C. DYERS, planter, Schley county, Ga., was born in Macon county, Ga., Aug. 6, 1839. His grandfather, Thomas Dyers, was a large planter of Monroe county, where our subject's father was born and raised. In 1863 he moved to Macon county, where he died the same year. George C. Dyers was reared on the plantation and received but limited education. At the beginning of the war he enlisted in Company B, Capt. French, Seventeenth Georgia regiment; was in active service and engaged in many important battles until the battle of Malvern Hill in 1862. In that battle he was so severely wounded as to be completely disabled for further service, and from which he has never recovered. He has a good plantation of 400 acres, where he enjoys the fruits of his labor. Unambitious of wealth, or of office, he is content with such prosperity as comes from his daily toil and propitious seasons. Mr. Dyers was married in 1864 to Miss Margaret Peters, a daughter of Levis M. Peters, a planter of Macon county, who, himself, served in the state militia during the war. Of the children born to them four are living: Lena, wife of Joseph English, planter, Macon county; Anna, wife of Augustus Johnson, planter, Sumter county, Ga.; Henry and Eunice. Mr. Dyers is a democrat, and a member of the Primitive Baptist church.

HARDY H. PHILLIPS, planter, Schley county, Ga., was born in Randolph county, Ga., Dec. 10, 1850. His grandfather, Elijah Phillips, was an early settler of Georgia, a practical farmer, a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, and a Primitive Baptist minister. His father, Trussa Phillips, was a plain, hard-working farmer in Randolph county, but moved to Macon county, where, when Mr. Phillips was only six years old, both parents died. He was then bound out to Capt. Kinsey, from whom he received such harsh treatment that, when fourteen years old, he ran away from him and came to Schley county. Here he hired himself out for a year under an agreement that he was to work a portion of the year and go to school the remainder. The next year he went to work at the carpenter's trade, and continued at it until he married. Mr. Phillips was married Dec. 14, 1871, to Julia Ann, daughter of G. W. Marshall, a planter of Schley county. He and his wife then began life on a rented farm. By constant work and close economy they made and saved up by 1881 money enough to buy the fine 400-acre farm which has since been their home. Of the children born to them there are living: Jane, Rebecca, Eliza, George, and Trussa. Mr. Phillips and his wife are devoted Christians, and for the last three years Mr. Phillips has been in the ministry. He is a useful and highly esteemed member of the community in which he lives.

STINSON J. REES, planter, La Crosse, Schley Co., Ga., son of Joel and Carrie (Mahone) Rees, was born in Schley county, Feb. 18, 1857. His paternal grandparents were Joel and Anna (Stinson) Rees, and his grandfather was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. His father was born in Putnam county, Ga., but when he was small his parents removed to Alabama, whence, about 1837, they returned to Georgia. They lived there until 1856, when, having a large number of slaves, his father bought and settled a large plantation in Schley county. He enlisted as a private in the Twelfth Georgia regiment, and went to the front; was promoted to first lieutenant, served through the war, and contracted a disease of which, finally, he died. His maternal grandfather was Peter H. Mahone, a rich Talbot county planter, and proprietor and landlord of the Mahone house, Talbotton, Ga. He was a soldier in the Seminole war. Mr. Rees received a good education; when a young man taught school, including four years in Florida. He has a large, fine plantation, and is a prosperous planter of the progressive type. He was married Aug. 14, 1889, to Miss Mollie, daughter of James and Bettie (Duncan) Cox. Her father was a native Georgian and a large planter. He enlisted and lost his life in the late war. Mrs. Rees received a classical education, and is a lady of varied and many accomplishments, a graduate of the celebrated Lebanon college, Ohio. She is one of the leading instructors of Schley county, and the popular principal of the La Crosse schools. One child only, James S., has blessed this union.

HENRY HARRISON SINGLETARY, merchant-planter, La Crosse, Schley Co., Ga., son of Nathan P. and Cassandra (Wright) Singletary, was born in Sumter county, Feb. 4, 1841. His grandfather, Thomas W. Singletary, was a native of South Carolina, came to Georgia when a young man and became identified with the leading planters of Georgia. Mr. Singletary's father was born in Laurens county, Ga., removed to Taliaferro county, Ga., and in 1836 came to Sumter county. Being a skilled mechanic he engaged in various kinds of woodwork, and helped to build a number of boats to run on the Ocmulgee river. Later in life he gave his entire time and attention to his plantation. His only public service was as a justice of the inferior court. Mr. Singletary was raised on the plantation and was educated at the common schools of the county. Early in 1862 he enlisted in Company B, Capt. J. C. Dunlap, Forty-sixth Georgia regiment, as a private, and served through the war. He was in the battles of Missionary Ridge, Chickamauga, Kennesaw Mountain, Jonesboro, Nashville and Franklin. He came home from the war with only a few slight wounds as souvenirs, and without a dollar in the world went to work on a plantation. By close attention, hard work, by enterprise and good management he has forged ahead until he ranks among the foremost of Schley county's farmers and business men. He has now more than 2,000 acres of choice land, which includes an excellent productive 100-acre peach orchard. In addition to his extensive planting interests he conducts one of the largest general merchandise stores in the county at La Crosse. Enterprising, prosperous and popular, Mr. Singletary has a bright future before him. Mr. Singletary has but two children: Lydia C., and Cattie L., both of whom are graduates of the Southern Female college, La Grange, Ga.

JOHN STEWART, planter, Schley county, Ga., son of Henry and Sophia (McKinney) Stewart, was born in Schley county Dec. 6, 1851. His paternal grandfather, Randall Stewart, was a native of and a planter in North Carolina, and quite late in life migrated to Georgia. He was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, and was also a soldier in the war of 1812. Mr. Stewart's father was born in North Carolina in 1805, came to Georgia when a boy, and finally settled permanently in Schley county, where he became an esteemed citizen and prosperous planter. He was a soldier in the Seminole war. Mr. Stewart was raised on the plantation, and had very limited educational advantages. He has enjoyed average planter prosperity, and now owns 300 acres of land in Schley county, and 200 acres in Taylor county, Ga. Mr. Stewart was married in December, 1874, to Miss Martha McCantz, daughter of Jesse McCantz, of Taylor county, who bore him six children: Lillie, Oalie, Annie, two infants, deceased, and John Henry, deceased. The mother of these died in 1887, leaving a husband and those children to mourn the loss of a wife and mother. In October, 1888, he married Miss Rebecca Donnan, daughter of James Donnan, a planter of Marion county. Two children have blessed this union: Robert D., and Nancy E. Mr. Stewart is a member of the Farmers' alliance and a populist in politics. His wife is a devoted member of the Methodist church.

CHARLES A. TAYLOR, planter, Schley county, Ga., son of James N. and Eliza Coleman (Jones) Taylor, was born in Macon county, Ga., March 15, 1835. His paternal grandparents, James L. and Mary Taylor, were natives of Georgia, and the grandfather was a major in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Mr. Taylor's father was born in what is now Pulaski county, Aug. 22, 1804, where he grew to manhood, and then removed, first to Macon county, and afterward, in 1859, to Schley county, where he raised his family, consisting of eight children: Mary A. E., Charles A., Artie C., Julia F., James N., John J., Anna C., and Philip

E., dying in 1865. Mr. Taylor, like his father, was raised a farmer, and received a collegiate education. Early in the war he enlisted in the Macon county volunteers, Capt. Prothro, which afterward became Company I, Fourth Georgia regiment. (With this company Phil Cook went into the service as second sergeant, became Brig.-Gen. Phil Cook, of the Confederate army, and died in 1894 as secretary of state of Georgia.) Mr. Taylor was in the battles of Chancellorsville—where he was wounded severely—Fredericksburg, Malvern Hill and Spottsylvania court house. At this last-named battle he received some very serious wounds, was taken prisoner and sent to Washington. Here he was imprisoned until March, 1865, when he was exchanged and returned to his father's plantation in Schley county. Soon after reaching home he had to undergo a surgical operation, the removal of five or six inches of bone from the left arm. Mr. Taylor was married Oct. 17, 1867, to Miss Antoinette Hart, by whom he had six children: James N., deceased; Mary E., Nettie R., Lizzie L., Charlie E., and Artie C. Their mother died in August, 1885. In December, 1889, he married Sarah Alice, daughter of John S. and Mary H. Smith. Mr. Smith is a large planter, and a veteran of the late war. By this marriage he has had three children: Annie Alice, Mary H., and Finis E. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are members of the Methodist church, and he is a master Mason.

SCREVEN COUNTY.

W. C. BOWIE, physician, Buck Creek P. O., was born in Screven county, Ga., in 1827. He is the son of James W. and Mary B. (Campbell) Bowie, now deceased. The father was born near Charleston, S. C., and took up a farm in Screven county, Ga., about 1800. He was a member of the M. E. church, and a soldier in the war of 1812. He died in 1852. He left a family of children, of whom those now living are: Sarah, married to James D. Wade, of Brooks county; A. J., who lives with Dr. Bowie; Mary, wife of William P. Wade, of Quitman, and Martha, now wife of L. L. Miller, Bulloch county. Dr. Bowie's mother was a daughter of William Campbell, of South Carolina. He was reared on a farm and educated in the common schools of the county, and in 1846 began reading medicine under Dr. T. S. Mims. He received his diploma in 1848 and located in Screven county, where he has since continued his profession. In 1851 he was married to Lucy Virginia Humphreys, daughter of Curtis Humphreys and Mary B. (Best) Humphreys. Mr. Humphreys was a native of South Carolina, came to Georgia, and was an influential politician of Screven county, having represented his district in the state senate, and for several years was ordinary of said county. To Dr. and Mrs. Bowie were born four children, all of whom are now living. The eldest, Dr. J. W. Bowie, is a physician of Emanuel county; the first daughter, Belle (Bowie) Black, is the widow of Thomas J. Black; Gabriella is the wife of W. C. Thomas, Sylvania, and Zuline, the third daughter, married Dr. B. R. Saxton, who resides in Valdosta. Mrs. Bowie was born in Barnwell county, S. C., 1828. Dr. and Mrs. Bowie are both members of the Methodist Episcopal church, south. Dr. Bowie is a mason of high degree, has a large practice, and is one of the ranking physicians of the county. He owns a fine farm of 2,000 acres near Buck Creek P. O.

J. H. DANIEL, merchant, Millen, was born in Burke county in 1831, and is the son of Zack and Lydia (Griffin) Daniel. His father was a native of, and followed farming all his life in Burke county, and his grandfather, a native of North Carolina, first settled in Burke county about 1800. The parents of the mother of Mr. Daniel were born in South Carolina, and moving to Georgia, died in this state. He was educated at the public schools and in 1858 married Mary H. Gray, daughter of Robert H. Gray. Mr. Gray was born in Columbia, S. C., and moved to Waynesboro, Ga. He was tax receiver for a number of years and afterward moved to Millen, where he died in 1870. To this union were born four children, now living: Robert G., engaged in business with his father, now in England; James H., also in business with his father; and Grover Stanley. The mother was born in Waynesboro in 1840. They are both active members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and he is a member of the masonic fraternity. In 1855 he was made tax receiver of Burke county and held the office two years. He was then employed as a mail clerk for two years and was then promoted to conductor, and afterward became a railroad agent at Millen. He also established a general mercantile business in 1876, which has since been continued. He is a partner in the firm of Daniel Sons & Palmer, and owns large farming interests in both Burke and Screven counties. Mr. Daniel has about 20,000 acres of land, a large number being in cultivation, in tilling which he runs about 130 plows; his cotton production being about 1,500 bales annually. Mr. Daniels is one of the best business men in Screven county, and handles the reins of his vast interests without any apparent responsibility. He lives in a fine residence near Millen.

H. C. KITTLES, judge of the county court, Sylvania, was born in Screven county in 1842, and is the son of John R. and Clarky A. (Lovett) Kittles. John R. Kittles was born in Screven county and was one of the commissioners who laid off Sylvania. He was also a member of the legislature and a strong whig in politics. He was a son of Peter and Sarah (Williamson) Kittles. Peter Kittles was a revolutionary soldier under Gen. Marion and settled in Georgia after the war. The mother of Judge Kittles was a daughter of Fens Lovett, a native of Screven county and a wealthy farmer. Judge Kittles was reared on the farm and in August, 1861, enlisted in the Ogeechee Rifles, which was afterward Company K, Capt. A. J. Williams, Twenty-fifth Georgia regiment, who was promoted to lieutenant-colonel and killed at the battle of Chickamauga. He was afterward transferred to Company A, First battalion Georgia sharpshooters, and was at the important battles of Ft. McAllister, Jackson, Miss., and Chickamauga and Resaca, Ga. At the latter place he was captured and sent to Rock Island prison, and remained there until the war closed. Judge Kittles read law under Gen. A. R. (Ranse) Wright and was admitted to the bar in Augusta, Ga., in June, 1870; since that he has practiced law and been a planter in Screven county. In 1876 he married Eva P. McCall, daughter of M. N. and Catherine (Porter) McCall. Mr. McCall was born and died in Screven county. He was a soldier in the Indian war, and was also a member of the Georgia legislature for a number of years. He preached in the Baptist church for sixty years and died at the age of ninety-seven. He had six sons in the Confederate army. They were as follows: Philip G.; Moses N., captain of the Screven troop of Fifth Georgia cavalry; Thomas K., first lieutenant Fifth Georgia cavalry, and killed near Marietta while serving on Gen. Anderson's staff; Charles P.; Daniel T., now a leading physician of Rome, Ga.; and William C., a Baptist minister and in charge of Orangeburg church, South Carolina. George, another son, did not serve in the war, and is now living in Macon and is a Baptist minister. To the union of Judge Kittles and wife have been born four children, now living: William H., Peter R., Catherine L. and Mamie L. The mother was born in Screven county. They are both members of the Baptist church, and he is superintendent of the Sunday school. In 1893 he was elected judge of the county court, and is now holding that position. He has been a very successful business man and owns about 4,000 acres of land and much valuable stock. Judge Kittles had two brothers, both of whom are now dead, who served in the late war, Robert C. and Peter R., the latter being a captain.

G. L. MILLS, physician, Haides, was born in Screven county in 1850, and is the son of Henry F. and Candacy (Lovett) Mills. The father was born in Screven county, was a large farmer, a brave soldier, a conscientious and influential member of the Methodist church, dying in 1881. He was a son of William R. and Lucy (Paris) Mills. William R. Mills was born, lived and died in Burke county, and was a large farmer. The mother of Mr. G. L. Mills was the daughter of Thomas F. and Nancy (William) Lovett. Thomas Lovett was of Dutch descent and born in Burke county, but afterward moved to Screven county, where he died. In 1868 Mr. Mills entered the Georgia Medical college, Augusta, and was graduated in 1870. In 1880 he married Josephine Roberts, daughter of Robert and Jane Mills Roberts. The parents were natives and residents of Screven county. Robert Roberts was the son of Elijah and Elizabeth (Warren) Roberts. Mrs. G. L. Mills was born in Screven county in 1849. They are both members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and Dr. Mills is a master Mason. In 1870, after he graduated, he located in Screven county and began the practice of medicine, which he continued until a year ago, when he gave it up so as to give all his time to his extensive farming interests. He owns a fine farm of 1,600 acres near Haides.

NICHOLAS ODAM, farmer, Mobley Pond, was born in Screven county in 1827, and is the son of Bryant and Barbara (Strigler) Odam. The father was born in North Carolina and moved to Georgia at an early day. He was a soldier in the war of 1812 and a well-to-do farmer. He died in Screven county at the age of one hundred and six. He married Barbara, daughter of Nicholas and Sarah (Bryant) Strigler. Nicholas Strigler was born and lived in Screven county, and his father was one of its earliest settlers. Nicholas served in the patriot army in the revolutionary war. Nicholas Odam was reared a farmer boy and got his education from a few weeks' schooling in the old field schools, and reading by the pine knot or tallow dip. He married Caroline Freeman, daughter of Gart Freeman, a well-to-do farmer of Screven county, and the union has been blessed with five children, now living: Georgia, William, Caroline, Virgil and Joseph. The mother was born in Screven county in 1827, and died in 1890. In 1892 Mr. Odam was married to Laura Littlefield, daughter of Samuel H. Littlefield. The latter was born in Massachusetts and moved to Georgia in 1842, where he engaged in farming and the mercantile business and accumulated considerable money. In 1845 he married Miss Martha C. Lovett, daughter of Thomas and Nancy Lovett. Mr. Littlefield and wife lived together forty years, and to them were born nine living children: Thomas, Laura, Susan, Annie, Charlie, Velera, Samuel, Julia and Louise. He died Jan. 24, 1883, and his wife, Martha, born in 1821, is still living. Mr. Littlefield served in the Confederate army. Mrs. Odam was born in Georgia in March, 1847. They are both members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and much respected for their Christian characters. In 1862 Mr. Odam enlisted in the civil war, joining Company F, Fifth Georgia regiment, under Capt. McCall, and engaged in the battles of Ocean Pond and Noon Day church. At the battle of Griswoldville he was wounded. Mr. Odam started in life as a poor boy and began work on the farm, and now owns about 3,000 acres of land.

JESSE T. WADE, farmer, was born in Whitfield county in 1851, and is the son of Peyton L. and Elizabeth E. (Robert) Wade. The father was born in Greene county and reared on the farm, studied for the ministry and began preaching about 1822. He was a member of the conference for two years and was located at Waynesboro, and later lived in Screven county, where he began farming and his later life was devoted to this vocation. He was a whig in politics and died leaving a large estate. His father was a native of Wales, and moving to America when a young man, died here. The mother of Mr. Wade was Elizabeth, daughter of William H. Robert. He was born in South Carolina and was an eminent citizen of that state, dying well possessed of this world's goods and highly respected by all who knew him. Mr. Wade's great maternal grandfather, Samuel Maner, served in the revolutionary army as captain and was a very wealthy planter. He owned property both in South Carolina and Georgia. Mr. Wade was reared on the farm in both Whitfield and Screven counties. He graduated at the Virginia Military institute in 1871. In 1887 he married Elizabeth Jones, daughter of Seaborn and Jane (Bostwick) Jones. Mr. Jones was born in Screven county and was a distinguished lawyer of the state and a large land owner and an officer of the Confederate army. He was the son of A. S. Jones, who was a native of Georgia and a son of Seaborn Jones, who was a leading lawyer in Georgia for a number of years and a member of congress. Mrs. Wade was born in Screven county in 1865. She and her husband are both members of religious denominations, she being an Episcopalian and he a Methodist. Mr. Wade was county surveyor at one time, and has been a life-long farmer. Mr. Wade comes from a family which sent four sons to the war. He himself was too young to enlist, but four of his brothers went in the Confederate army. They were Dr. R. M. Wade, now a physician in Athens; Peyton L. Wade, who died in Richmond during the war, belonged to the First Georgia regiment, and was promoted for bravery to be first lieutenant; Edward C., of the Savannah Guards, who was wounded and captured at Sailor's Creek and carried to Camp Douglas, where he died; and Ulysses P. Wade, who is now a prominent lawyer of Screven county.

GEORGE W. WATERS, farmer, Sylvania, was born in Screven county in 1837, and is the son of Michael and Mary (Bolton) Waters. Michael Waters was a native of and life-long resident of Screven county. He was of German descent, and his father was a native of Germany and died in this country. His mother was a daughter of Reuben Bolton, a native of Screven county. Mr. Waters received a limited education, having only the opportunities of the meager school advantages. In 1861 he enlisted in the war in Company A, Fifty-fourth Georgia regiment, under Capt. Roberts. In 1857 he was married to Rachel Ziegler, daughter of Solomon Ziegler. The father was a respected citizen and prosperous farmer, and a son of a revolutionary soldier who, while home on a furlough, and attending church, was fired on by tories and only escaped death by a chance. Mr. and Mrs. Waters have eight living children: Israel, Solomon, Mary, Holman, Charity, Reuben, Alonzo and Laura. The mother was born in Screven county in 1838. She is a member of the M. E. church. Mr. Waters is one of the most progressive of Screven county's farmers and has a large estate of 5,000 acres, a big part of which is in cultivation.

SPALDING COUNTY.

JAMES STODDARD BOYNTON, lawyer and ex-judge, Griffin, Ga., son of Elijah S. and Elizabeth (Moffet) Boynton, was born in Henry county, Ga., in 1833. His father was of English descent, tracing his lineage back to the Boynton knighted by William the Conqueror, was born in Vermont, came to Georgia when a young man, and settled in Henry county. His mother was of a South Carolina family of French extraction, and his parents, though not rich, were in moderately good circumstances. Judge Boynton grew up on the farm, and received only such education as could be obtained at the "old field" schools of the day, a few months each year after laying-by time. The hot blood of his youth was set on fire by reading of the heroic deeds of our chivalrous citizen-soldiery during the Mexican war, and he was inspired by an ambition to secure an appointment to West Point and enter the army. Accordingly, in 1849, he entered upon a preparatory course of study, but in November of that year his father died, leaving him a patrimony of only 100 acres of land and one negro. Still intent on his cherished object, he chose for his guardian a gentleman able and willing to assist him. But in 1851 this friend and guardian died, by which all hope was destroyed. Still bent on a military career, with the consent of his newly-chosen guardian, he sold his land with the view of attending the Georgia Military institute at Marietta. On application and inquiry there he found the money he had barely enough to support him two years, while he could not graduate in less than three years. This was a crushing blow to his ambition, and he abandoned his object. His thirst for knowledge and the higher and nobler aspirations of his nature never deserted him. Going to Cave Spring, near Rome, he entered Hearne's school, and remained there until his exchequer was exhausted, when he was compelled to lay aside his books and seek employment. Returning to McDonough, he accepted a proposition made by Col. L. T. Doyal, then one of the most distinguished lawyers in that circuit, and read law under him. His ambition and industry, and the wide scope and strong grasp of his mind were such that in the unparalleled short time of seven weeks he mastered the principles of law, and at the October term of the court (1852, Judge James H. Stark presiding) he was admitted to the bar. Nov. 15 following he opened an office in Monticello, Jasper Co., Ga., only nineteen years old, a stranger among strangers, and imperfectly educated. Yet he succeeded. In 1858 he went to Jackson, Butts Co., Ga., and entered into partnership with Col. James R. Lyons and rose rapidly in his profession and in the good opinion of the people. In 1860 he was elected ordinary over a strong and popular member of the dominant party, administering the office with unusual acceptability. Although opposed to secession, and by virtue of his office exempt from military service, in response to his patriotic impulses he enlisted as a private in the Thirtieth Georgia regiment and served as such seven months. On the reorganization of the regiment in 1862 he was elected major, and in December following was made lieutenant-colonel. His regiment served at Savannah, Charleston, Wilmington, Pocotaligo and Jacksonville, and then, in May, 1863, was ordered to Jackson, Miss., and went through the arduous campaign in that state. During this campaign Col. Boynton won a high reputation for courage and ability, and in general orders, issued by Gen. Walker, was specially mentioned for gallantry. His regiment was always where the battle raged hottest and fiercest, and there Col. Boynton would be found, coolly and courageously leading and encouraging his men. In one engagement he lost forty-five per cent of his command in one hour and a half. Col. Manghum having been permanently disabled by wounds and retired, he was commissioned as colonel of the regiment, and shared the fortunes of the western army, participating in the battles of Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Dalton, the continuous fights thence to Atlanta, and the battles around that city. Never did the Thirtieth Georgia go into action so long as he commanded it except under his intrepid leadership. While forty yards in front of his command, leading it in a charge at the battle near Decatur, Ga., July 22, 1864, he was stricken down and detained from his command until January, 1865, when, a mere skeleton and just off crutches, he rejoined it, but was unable to continue in active service. He suffered seriously from his wound many years after the war. In 1863 Col. Boynton removed his family to Griffin where, after the war, he resumed his law practice. In 1866 he was elected county judge and held the office until the court was abolished. From 1869 to 1872 he was mayor of Griffin, and then, for the next eight years he devoted himself to his profession, quickly gaining a large and valuable clientage. In 1880 he was elected to represent the Twenty-sixth senatorial district in the general assembly, and was unanimously chosen president of the senate. This is believed to be the only instance where a member serving his first term has had so distinguished an honor conferred on him; and during a session of five months no appeal from a decision of his was sustained. In 1882 he was again elected to the senate, and again, unopposed, elected its president. On the death of Gov. Stephens he was sworn in as governor by Chief Justice James Jackson, March 5, 1883, and served until the election of Gov. McDaniel. In November, 1886, he was appointed by Gov. McDaniel judge of the Flint circuit to fill a vacancy, and was afterward elected to fill the unexpired and the succeeding full term—in each instance without opposition. In 1890 he was again elected for four years—this time over Hon. J. S. Pope. April 8, 1893, he resigned the judgeship and has since been actively engaged in the general practice of his profession, and as division counsel of the Central railroad of Georgia, embracing nine counties. Judge Boynton was married Dec. 2, 1852, to Miss Fannie Loyall, by whom he had two sons. This estimable lady, by her cheerful and cheering devotion during his early struggles for recognition and distinction, proved to be a never-failing incentive and support to him. By her death in 1877 Judge Boynton sustained an irreparable loss. But sympathizing wifely companionship was a necessity, and on April 30, 1883, while governor, he was married to Miss Susan T. Harris, daughter of James W. Harris, of Walton county, Ga. She is a lady of attractive manners and many accomplishments, and Judge Boynton was indeed fortunate in this marriage—realizing that ideal happiness which comes only with congenial companionship. Judge Boynton is an exemplary and influential member of the Missionary Baptist church. From whatever standpoint viewed, a true and noble manhood is developed in the character of Judge Boynton. The sixteen-year-old boy, ambitious of military glory and fame, though thwarted then, ten years later proved on many a bloody battlefield, by his intrepidity, coolness and courage seldom equaled, that it was no transitory boyish impulse, but the grander inspiration, that begot and fired the ambition. The nineteen-year-old, friendless and moneyless attorney has proved by his after successes at the bar, in the halls of legislation, on the bench, and in the gubernatorial chair, that a strong and true self-reliant manhood was the deep and broad foundation on which James Stoddard Boynton built.

REV. W. H. PATTERSON, pastor of the Baptist church, Griffin, Spalding Co., Ga., son of George M. and Frances H. (Wade) Patterson, was born in Hancock county in 1836. His parents, born, raised and married in Screven county, Ga., descended from old settlers and moved in early life to Hancock county. Here Dr. Patterson was raised, educated and prepared for college. He then entered Mercer university, from which he was graduated in 1858, receiving the degree of A. B. and A. M. After his graduation he went to Eufaula, Ala., where he engaged in teaching. He was president of Union Female college eight years, superintendent of the public schools twelve years, and was also superintendent of the Baptist Sunday school for many years previous to his entering the ministry. Dr. Patterson was converted when sixteen years of age, at Sparta, Ga., under the preaching of Rev. (afterward bishop) George F. Pierce, of the Methodist church, and connected himself with the Baptist church, since which time he has devoted himself to its service and Christian work generally. After his ordination he was chosen president of the Eufaula Baptist association fourteen years in succession. In 1889 he accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Baptist church at Dawson, the duties of which he faithfully discharged. When he took charge of the church it was holding its services in a dilapidated frame building, and the membership was only a little over 100. Now the membership is 230, and a new church edifice, built of brick and stone, costing $15,000 (paid for), one of the finest church buildings in southwest Georgia, has been built, having been completed and dedicated March 8, 1891. In 1892 the degree of D. D. was conferred on him by the university of Alabama. Dr. Patterson has always taken an active and a prominent interest in all Christian work, while remaining intensely loyal to his denomination. He is laborious in his local church work and progressive on all lines, secular or religious—a Christian worker and warrior, and a useful citizen. In 1894 he accepted a call to the pastorate of the Baptist church at Griffin, Ga., where he is now located. Dr. Patterson married Miss L. C. Williams, of White Plains, Greene Co., Ga., where she was born. She received her early education in local schools, but graduated from the Georgia Female college, Madison, Ga. They have two children: F. M., living near Eufaula, Ala., and William R., at the Marion Military institute, Marion, Ga. Dr. Patterson is a member of the A. O. U. W., K. of H., the I. O. O. F., of which he is a past grand chaplain of Alabama, and a master Mason.

STEWART COUNTY.

DR. B. W. ALLEN. Of the many bright medical lights in Stewart county, there is no one enjoying a higher reputation for professional skill and knowledge than Dr. B. W. Allen of Omaha. He is practically a young man, but is old in his practice and experience. He is a native of Louisiana, having been born in Morehouse Parish, May 1, 1864. His father, J. N. Allen, was a physician and was born in Heard county, Ga. When he was about grown he moved to Louisiana, where he died in 1867, aged about thirty-four years. His wife, who survived him, is now living in Stewart, her native county. She was a Miss Josephine M. Prather. Dr. B. W. Allen is their only living child. The father was a physician well known to the profession of Louisiana, and a most promising and useful career was cut off by his sudden death. He was a graduate from the New Orleans—now Tulane—university. Dr. B. W. Allen attended the public schools in Stewart county and finished his course at the agricultural school at Cuthbert, Ga. He immediately began the study of medicine, and in 1884 was graduated from the Atlanta Medical college. He began the practice of his profession in Russell county, Ala., and remained there until 1894, when he returned to Stewart county and has since practiced at Omaha. He was united in marriage to Miss Mattie L. Brewer, of Opelika, Ala., April 7, 1888. Mr. and Mrs. Allen belong to the Baptist church, and the doctor is a member of the fraternal orders of the Masons and Knights of Pythias. He enjoys an extensive practice, both in Stewart county, Ga., and in Russell county, Ala.

JOHN W. BARGE, one of the leading planters of Stewart county, is a native of that county, being born Oct. 11, 1849, within one mile of where he now lives. He was the son of B. F. Barge, one of the early settlers of Stewart county (see sketch of J. W. Barge, Webster county). He was educated in the log cabin schools near his home and brought up on the farm. At the age of twenty-one he commenced business for himself, and operated a mill owned by his father. In October, 1873, he married Fannie H. York, a native of Webster county, and a daughter of Rev. P. L. York, a farmer and minister of the Primitive Baptist church, now residing in Terrell county, Ga., near Dawson. Mrs. Barge was reared by her grandfather, Mr. Daniel, of Webster county. After his marriage Mr. Barge settled on the place where he now lives, and engaged in farming. He is one of the progressive farmers of the county and has 1,000 acres of fine land under a high state of cultivation. He owns the old home place, having purchased the interests of the other heirs. By his marriage he has five children: Nancy Lizzie, attending the La Grange Female college; Emma Rebecca; Benjamin F.; John L., and Joe Hill. Mrs. Barge is an active member of the Methodist church, and takes great interest in charitable work. Mr. Barge is a democrat and wields much influence in the councils of his party in directing county and state affairs. The Barge family live in a beautiful home about four miles west of Weston. Mr. Barge is a very successful business man and one whose probity and integrity are unquestioned.

DR. G. B. BATTLE. About the beginning of this century three English boys and brothers, left their old home to carve out their fortunes in the United States. One adopted North Carolina for his home, the second journeyed through to Alabama, while the third began his distinguished career in Georgia. The latter was Thomas Battle, the head of a family eminent in church and medical history of the empire state of the south. He had received the benefits of a good educational training under efficient tutors in the old country, and with a taste for learning he for years devoted himself to unceasing study in his new home. He prepared himself for the ministry and was ordained as a preacher in the Methodist Episcopal church. He was one of the half dozen divines whose life history is the story of the struggles of this great aggressive church in the early days of the state. Rev. Mr. Battle selected Monroe county for his home and there his family grew up. There were many years granted to him for his Christian labors and he lived nearly to the present decade, dying in 1885, at the age of ninety-eight years. Dr. T. W. Battle was his son, born in Monroe county in 1815. He received his primary education from his father, and it was finished at the university of Georgia (then Franklin college), Athens. He had early selected medicine as his profession, and was graduated from the Medical University of Pennsylvania. He began practice in Monroe county, and from the first his professional career was one of remarkable success. About 1845 he was married to Ann C., daughter of Green B. Ball, of Stewart county. He was at that time living in Lumpkin, where he remained until 1882, when he removed to Columbus and continued in the practice of his profession the remainder of his life. Outside of his profession, in which his reputation for skill and learning ranked him among the first physicians in the state, he was known to be a man of fine business ability. He personally directed large farming interests, and was an active director in the Eagle and Phoenix Manufacturing company of Columbus, Ga. He was a most interesting man; kind and charitable, genial, yet dignified, he had the esteem of all and the friendship of many. He died in 1888, at the good old age of seventy-three years. His widow still survives and lives in Columbus. They were members of the church in which Rev. Mr. Battle was such a distinguished light, and the husband was an eminent Mason. To their union were born eight children, of whom all are living. They are: Mollie, wife of James E. Cargill, of Columbus; Dr. G. B., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Laura Winters, of Chattanooga; Thomas W., Jr., of Columbus; Charlton E., of Columbus, member of the state legislature from that county; Alice F., of Columbus; Mrs. Beulah, wife of Charles E. Morton, Columbus; Annie L., wife of Randolph Mott, of Columbus. Dr. G. B. Battle, farmer and physician, Omaha, Stewart Co., was born May 28, 1852, and was the eldest son of Dr. T. W. Battle. He acquired his education from Emory college, Oxford, Ga., and was graduated in medicine from the Medical College of Georgia, Augusta, in 1875. For twenty years he practiced his vocation at Lumpkin with marked success, and in 1895 he moved to his plantation near Omaha. He was married in 1879 to Minnie O. Fitzgerald, daughter of James Fitzgerald, of Stewart county. They have had born to them eight children, of whom four are now living: Alice F., Greene B., Minnie O., and James Fitzgerald. Dr. Battle is a master Mason and an Odd Fellow. He has large farming investments and an extensive professional practice.

T. F. CARTER. One of the chief business men of Richland, Stewart Co., Ga., and the mayor of this charming town, is Mr. T. F. Carter, the representative of an old and prominent Georgia family. He was born in 1856, in Florence, Stewart Co., and is the son of William Carter and Mary Buckhalter—natives, respectively, of Butts and Wilkinson counties. William Carter was the son of James Carter, a native Georgian, born near Indian Springs, Butts Co., Ga., and a minister of the Baptist church. Mary Buckhalter was the daughter of Icalia and Epsie (Beall) Buckhalter of Wilkinson county, Ga. William Carter was born in 1813, and died in 1869. During his lifetime he was engaged in mercantile business in Lumpkin and Florence. He represented Stewart county in the general assembly, being a member at the time the war was concluded. He was a distinguished Mason, and conscientious member of the Baptist church, in whose affairs he took much interest. His wife was a Methodist, and equally ardent and prominent in that denomination. She is still living, and resides in Richland. This union was blessed with twelve children, of whom six are living: W. J., merchant, Florence; S. A., Columbus, president of the Columbus Grocery company; T. F., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. A. J., wife of L. C. Willifield, of Richland; J. H., merchant, Omaha, Stewart Co.; E. J., connected with the Columbus Grocery company. Mr. Carter was educated in the public schools and remained in Florence until about 1884, when he moved to Lumpkin, and three years afterward to Richland, where until 1889 he was engaged in the warehouse and fertilizer business; since that time he has been merchandising. He was married in January, 1889, to Miss M. L. Bedingfield, of Florence. They have one child, Miss Charlie May. Mr. Carter has been a member of and president of the board of education, and in December, 1893, was elected mayor of Richland, and re-elected in 1894. He is a partner in the warehouse firm of Carter & Dixon, and is associated with Mr. Williford in the fruit-growing business. Mr. Carter and wife are regular attendants at the Methodist church. He is a Mason, and at present worshipful master of the lodge at Richland. Politically he is a democrat, though he takes no decided interest in politics.

J. H. CARTER, merchant and farmer, Omaha, Stewart Co., Ga., was born Jan. 17, 1862, and is a son of William Carter, whose biographical sketch is found elsewhere in these Memoirs. He was given the educational advantages afforded by the public schools, and early displayed a predilection for a mercantile life. In 1887 he was married to Miss Hightower, of Lumpkin, Ga., daughter of Mr. John Hightower. They have three children: Hattie, Joseph Henry, and Annie. Mr. Carter and wife are Methodists; and he is a master Mason, and a leading member of the Knights of Pythias. He has been mayor of Omaha for two years, and for two years was secretary and treasurer of the Omaha Improvement company. He is at the head of a thriving mercantile business in Omaha, and owns a large warehouse. He is a public-spirited citizen, and a pushing, energetic business man.

DR. ZIMRI SMITH COFFIN, merchant and planter of Stewart county, is a native of North Carolina, Guilford county, and was born May 20, 1833. He is a descendant of an old and honorable family of the name who came to this country in the early colonial days and settled on the island of Nantucket. His mother, whose maiden name was Rachel Osborn, was a native of Guilford county, N. C., where she lived all her life. She died in 1883 on the old homestead at the age of sixty-eight years. She was the daughter of R. H. Osborn, a native of North Carolina, who married a Miss Lamar, a sister of the father of Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar. R. H. Osborn raised a large family of children. Rachel Osborn married Abner Coffin, a native of the same county, born and reared where he lived and died. His father's name was Joseph Coffin, who came from the island of Nantucket, and it was Abner's grandfather who came to this country from England in 1642, and was a relative of Admiral Coffin of the British navy. All of the Coffins in the United States spring from this English family, who came here from England during the old colonial days. The record of this family has been kept with special care by the members, and reunions at which many of the representatives have appeared have kept up an interest in the private history of the family, which is worthy of emulation. It is estimated that there are now in the United States 100,000 descendants of the original couple who landed on the island of Nantucket. The Coffin family of Nantucket have a college known as the Coffin school, for the education of the Coffin children throughout the United States who are not able to educate themselves. The grandfather of Dr. Coffin, Joseph Coffin, settled before the war on the banks of Deep river, where he lived and died at the age of eighty-four, in 1841. He was a farmer and the place where his home was located is still owned by the Coffins. Joseph had two sons and a daughter, the latter dying at an early age. Peter Coffin, brother of Abner, moved to Indiana, where he died. Abner purchased the home place and there brought up his family. He died in 1877, aged seventy-two years, a member of the Methodist church, and a highly respected man. By his marriage with Miss Osborn nine children were born, viz.: Joseph, died aged sixteen; Peter, died aged fifteen; Winright, died aged six years; Melinda, who married Alpheus Woodburn, and settled in Guilford county, N. C., where she died at Greensboro,, aged forty-five; Dr. Z. S. Coffin, the subject of this sketch; Cyrus C., of Montgomery county; Mrs. Lucinda B. Myrick, who lives near Ennis, Tex.; Mrs. M. R. Oats, of Jamestown, N. C., and S. F. Francesca, who died in 1887. Dr. Z. S. Coffin was a studious scholar in the private schools of his county, and there fitted himself for his professional life. He attended a course of lectures on dental surgery at the Pennsylvania college in Philadelphia, and was graduated in 1857. He located in Newborn, N. C., and followed his profession with good success until the commencement of the civil war. During his residence in Newburn he devoted much of his leisure time to the completion of his education. To aid him in this he employed a private tutor, under whose instruction he made great progress in the studies of the languages, ancient and modern. At the beginning of the war he was appointed an agent of the ordnance department for the state of North Carolina, with the rank of captain, which position he held until the close of hostilities. In that position he handled millions of dollars' worth of property and cash, and that his accounts with the government always balanced to the cent demonstrates the strict integrity of his character. During a raid through the state the men employed in the ordnance department were formed into a regiment with Dr. Coffin acting as brevet-major. These special troops were in several skirmishes. After the war he traded in stock, cotton and tobacco in North Carolina, and cleared $10,000 the first year. With this he came to Georgia, where he engaged in the timber business. He was successful for awhile, but later his entire property was swept away by the failure of others who had his finances in their power. Thus reduced to penury, he resumed the practice of his profession in Stewart county, and so successful was he that in a few years he purchased a body of land on the Chattahoochee river, once owned by Gen. Toombs. Here he now resides, surrounded by all the comforts of a beautiful southern home, with every convenience and luxury possible to a home life. In connection with his great farming interests he carried on a merchandise business, which he established in 1880, and which led to a postoffice known as Coffinton. Dr. Coffin has a set of steam mills—ginning, grist, saw and syrup mills. Dr. Coffin is a stanch democrat and was elected to represent the county in the legislature in 1880-81. The doctor was a quiet, unaffected member, not disposed to waste words on all measures, but when called out by circumstances is an easy and fluent speaker and cogent reasoner. The doctor was married July 29, 1869, to Victoria A. Clements of Richland. She was born and raised in Stewart county, and was the daughter of Nelson Clements and Nancy Winn, natives of Georgia. Mrs. Clements died when the daughter was a child, and Mr. Clements survived her twelve years. He was a very wealthy man, having accumulated about $200,000 in twenty-five years on the plantation. The war reduced his wealth to about $40,000. Victoria lived with her father until his death, when Thomas W., her older brother became her guardian. She was educated in the schools at Lumpkin and the Masonic Female college. She was the youngest child of a large family, all of whom lived to be grown but two. The children were: Jasper, who died in the war; James from exposure in the war; William M., a soldier, died in 1893; Thomas W., an ex-Confederate, died in 1892; Mrs. Lizzie Thornton, died in Randolph county; Mrs. Eliza Dixon, died in Webster county; Mrs. Josephine Kimbro, died in Stewart county in 1867. Dr. Coffin and wife have the following children: Linda Belle, Nelson Clements, Edward Chester, Leroy, Zimri Lamar, Victoria Pearl, William Carter. The doctor and his wife take special pains in the education of their children. They live in a fine home at Coffinton and own all its surroundings.

SWIFT CRUMBLEY. One of the solid and enterprising business men of Lumpkin is Swift Crumbley. He was born Nov. 11, 1830, in Henry county, Ga. He was the son of Anthony Crumbley and Zeptha (Grooms) Crumbley, natives of Washington county, Ga. The parents moved to Stewart county in 1831 and located near the farm on which the son now lives. Anthony Crumbley took part in the Indian war of 1835-36, and was an influential and prosperous citizen. They had six children: Alexander; Swift, the subject of this sketch, and James J., now living, and W. R., Adaline Pierce, and Anthony Lee, deceased. They were members of the Baptist denomination and both lived exemplary Christian lives. The husband died Nov. 4, 1869, aged about seventy-seven years, and the wife lived until April 29, 1884, aged about eighty-four years. Mr. Swift Crumbley was brought up on the home place and in 1853 was married to Amelia A., daughter of Shedrick and Susan Pinkston of Stewart county. Soon after his marriage he settled on the farm where he now resides. When the civil war commenced he was among the first volunteers to respond to the call, and enlisted in the Third Georgia cavalry, serving with that regiment throughout the entire war. In 1882 he opened a general merchandise store, which he has since continued and in addition he is engaged in extensive farming. Mr. Crumbley and wife have had born to them four children: James D., Susan Florence, Henry and Charles, the latter two being deceased. The family worship in the Baptist church, with which denomination Mr. Crumbley's ancestors have long been identified. He is a Mason and in politics a democrat. Mr. Crumbley enjoys a high reputation for the honorable methods he has always followed in business, and in social circles his family are esteemed for the kind graces of character and their culture and refinement.

JUDGE W. W. FITZGERALD, merchant and farmer, Omaha, was born in December, 1836, within three miles of his present home. He was the son of James Fitzgerald and Nancy (Hilliard) Fitzgerald, natives of Stewart county, Ga. James Fitzgerald's father was a native of Ireland and came to Georgia before the revolutionary war. James was one of three children and was born in Burke county; when a child went with his parents to Dooly county, and when a young man settled in Stewart county, where he lived the balance of his life, engaged in farming. He was married to Nancy Hilliard in 1831 and settled near the Chattahoochee river. He was a life-long member of the Baptist church and died in 1880, aged about seventy-three years. His wife still survives him. To their union were born twelve children, of whom ten are still living: Mrs. M. A., wife of J. D. Alexander of Stewart county; Mrs. S. J., wife of Joseph C. Collins, deceased, of Mitchell county; Judge W. W., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. M. C., widow of Charles Collins of Mitchell county; Mrs. Laura A., wife of Marion Collins of Mitchell county; D. B. and J. H., living in Stewart county; Mrs. Thomas Salter of Stewart county; Mrs. Dr. Battle; Mrs. Sallie, wife of Leroy J. Simpson of Eufaula, Ala. Judge W. W. Fitzgerald attended the schools in Stewart county, studied law and was admitted to practice just before the war. He enlisted with Company K, Second Georgia regiment, in 1861, and served until 1862, when he was discharged on account of ill-health. He was justice of the inferior court for four years previous to the war, and served in the Georgia legislature in the years of 1873-74, and again in 1878-79. In 1889-90 he represented his district in the senate and was re-elected, serving in 1892-93. After the war ended Mr. Fitzgerald devoted his time entirely to farming and merchandising, in which he is still engaged, and in which he has been very successful. He was married in May, 1865, to Josephine Bedingford of Stewart county, but at that time living in Alabama. They have had six children born to them, five of whom are living: J. B.; Minnie, wife of C. D. Burnell; W. E.; Flora, and Mary Josephine. Judge Fitzgerald and wife are active members of the Baptist church, and he is a royal arch Mason. He is a firm democrat and prominent in the party, having served on the county committees and always taking a great interest in its success and welfare.

ARTHUR T. FORT, ordinary, Lumpkin, Stewart Co., Ga., son of Tomlinson T. Fort, was born in Stewart county, Jan. 8, 1845. The family came from Virginia, and has become one of no inconsiderable note and influence in Georgia. Mr. Fort's father was a native of the state and was a large planter. He served in the Creek Indian war under Capt. J. U. Horn and after the war resumed farming. He was elected sheriff of Stewart county, but resigned before his term expired, and died when only thirty-six years of age. Mr. Fort was raised on the farm and was educated at the common schools of the county. When seventeen years old he enlisted under Capt. Harrison, Company E, Thirty-first Georgia regiment, and served twelve months. He afterward enlisted in Gen. Wheeler's command and served during the war. Returning home he engaged in farming. In 1890 he was elected ordinary of the county to fill the unexpired term of W. F. Clark, resigned, an office which he now occupies. Mr. Fort was married to Miss Sallie, the accomplished daughter of Col. Samuel Sibbey, long connected with Savannah journalism. They have had four children: Samuel Sibbey, Tomlinson, Laura and Arthur Godfrey. Mr. Fort is a staunch democrat.

WILLIAM H. GRIFFIS, farmer, Lumpkin, Stewart Co., Ga., son of Henry and Rebecca (Carrington) Griffis, both of whom are deceased, was born in Stewart county, Dec. 24, 1841. He was reared on the farm, and received a fairly good education at the near-by country schools. On reaching manhood he commenced farming for himself, but had only been engaged in it a year when he enlisted in the Seventeenth Georgia regiment, under Capt. D. B. Harrell. He saw much and arduous service, and participated in the battles of Seven Pines, Malvern Hill, Sharpsburg, Cold Harbor, Gettysburg and Petersburg. After the surrender he returned to Lumpkin, reaching home May 26, 1865. He went to work on his farm, which he has successfully cultivated since. In 1883 he added merchandising in Lumpkin to his farming, and continued it until 1886, when he was elected marshal of the city, an office which he has filled with great efficiency and acceptably to the people. He has a fine 300-acre plantation under excellent cultivation, and an elegant and cozy residence in Lumpkin, and is popular and highly respected. Mr. Griffis was married March 9, 1868, to Miss A. K., daughter of John L. Den-skin, a union which has been blessed with five children: Emory J., Lamar D., Samuel E., Lloyd T., and William H., Jr. Mrs. Griffis, an exemplary member of the Methodist church, died May 7, 1894. He is an ardent democrat and a member of the Methodist church.

JUDGE D. B. HARRELL. The Harrell family came from North Carolina. Jesse Harrell, the head of the family, was a prosperous farmer in that state and a man of great strength of character, and fine business ability. A son, Solomon, born in North Carolina in 1796, came to Georgia in 1800 with his parents, who located in Washington county. Here he was educated and grew to manhood, and in the war of 1812 served faithfully throughout that conflict. In 1839 he moved to Stewart county, and engaged in farming. He took no more part in politics than to vote, but was elected a justice of the inferior court, both in Washington and Stewart counties. He was married to Nancy Turner, and they had five children born to them, two of whom are now living: Judge D. B. Harrell, and Solomon Harrell, of Webster county. Husband and wife were faithful members of the Baptist church. He died in 1858, aged sixty-two years, and the wife died in 1845. Judge D. B. Harrell was a small boy when his father located in Stewart county. He was educated at Lumpkin academy, under the direction of Prof. Baker, of South Carolina, who was a classmate of Daniel Webster. Impressed with the conviction that the profession of law was that for which his talents were specially fitted, he was, after thorough study, admitted to practice. After a few years of work he was elected solicitor-general of the Pataula judicial circuit, serving from 1855 to 1859, when he was elected judge of the superior court of the circuit. He also represented Webster county three years in the general assembly. He was captain of Company A, Seventeenth Georgia regiment, during the war, but was forced to retire on account of ill health. Judge Harrell was a member of Gov. Brown's staff during the time of the conflict. Most of his life has been spent on the farm, in which he takes great interest. In 1890 the bank of Richland was established, with a capital of $50,000, and Judge Harrell was made president. Judge Harrell is a strong democrat, and a high Mason. He lives in a fine residence on his farm near Richland, and is very highly respected by all who have the honor of his acquaintance.

BENJAMIN F. HAWES, clerk superior court, Lumpkin, Stewart Co., Ga., son of William and Jane (Gay) Hawes, was born in Stewart county April 29, 1842. Both parents are now dead. His father was a very extensive planter; also, a prominent and prosperous merchant, and did a large business in Lumpkin. Mr. Hawes was reared on the plantation, and educated in the common schools of the county. He enlisted in Company E, Thirty-first Georgia regiment, as a private, was afterwards made second lieutenant, and retained the rank during the remainder of his service. After the surrender he returned to Lumpkin and clerked in his father's store until 1870, when he was elected clerk of the superior court, and has been continuously re-elected since. This prolonged incumbency is highly complimentary to him, and is the best possible evidence of his superior ability and efficiency, as well as of his great personal popularity. Mr. Hawes was married to Miss Henrietta, daughter of Mr. Jared Irwin, on Dec. 17, 1874. She died June 16, 1888, leaving three children: Benjamin F., Jr., Lilly, and Mary Lou. He afterward married Miss Annie Irwin, Dec. 14, 1889, a sister of his first wife, who has borne him four children, two of whom are now living: Jared Irwin and Eunice. Mr. Hawes is a strong, active democrat, and a member of the Methodist church. Mrs. Hawes is a consistent member of the Baptist church.

JAMES RUFUS JAMES, merchant and postmaster at Omaha, Stewart Co., Ga., son of James and Elizabeth (Harold) James, was born in Twiggs county, Ga., Nov. 24, 1841. His father was born in Warren county, Ga., where he owned large planting interests, was quite a prominent citizen, and died April 10, 1860. Mr. James was the youngest of eleven children, was reared on the farm and received a fairly good education. When eighteen years of age he went to Forsyth, Monroe Co., where he engaged as clerk with W. B. Pye, wholesale and retail grocery and furniture business, with whom he remained until the beginning of the war between the states, when he enlisted in Company K, Capt. Pinkard, First Georgia regiment, and remained in the service until the surrender. He was in many of the most obstinately contested battles, and was wounded three times—once at Sharpsburg, wounded also at Gettysburg—and received a serious wound at Petersburg, in which last engagement he was with Company I, Sixty-first Georgia regiment. He was in Jackson hospital at the time of the surrender, after which he was sent to Johnson's island, and after being detained there as a prisoner thirty days, was released. After his release he came to Houston county, Ga., but soon thereafter went to Macon, Ga., where he served on the police force. About 1869 he went to Dooly county, Ga., where he remained until 1890, when he came to Omaha, built a store-house and roomy hotel and now keeps a hotel, and does a large general merchandising business, which increases every year. He was a justice of the peace two years, and then resigned. He was appointed postmaster in July, 1891, and still holds the position. He is a prompt and reliable business man, and enjoys the respect and confidence of the community. Mr. James has been married three times. His first marriage was to Miss Mary Stripling, of Houston, Feb. 16, 1866, who died Aug. 28, 1876, leaving two children. He was then married Jan. 4, 1877, to Susan Annie (Green) Hightower, of Dodd county, who died May 29, 1886, leaving five children. For his third companion he married Miss Ella Udora, daughter of Benjamin Hayslip, a large planter of Leesburg, Lee Co., Ga., by whom he has had five children. The children living are: John F., Willie J., Edgar P., Nannie P., Reuby E. He is a democrat, and both he and Mrs. James are members of the church.

COL. J. H. LOWE, Richland, is one of Stewart county's most prominent citizens. He was born in 1833 and is the son of James P. Lowe and Amelia G. (Brown) Lowe, natives of Jones county, Ga. His grandfather was John Lowe, a native of North Carolina, and an early resident of Georgia. James P. Lowe was born in 1800 and grew to manhood on his father's estate in Jones county. In 1830 he married Amelia, daughter of Hollinger Brown, for many years a resident of Jones county, but who in 1841 moved to Stewart county. Mr. Hollinger Brown was a prosperous farmer and lived until 1860. To himself and wife were born seven children, of whom only one is living—Louisa, wife of Thomas J. Brown, deceased. By the marriage of Mr. James P. Lowe six children were born, of whom Col. J. H. Lowe is the only one surviving. The father died in 1858, and the mother in 1888. Both were conscientious members of the Primitive Baptist church. The parents of Col. Lowe moved to Stewart county when he was ten years old. He obtained his education in the county schools and by study after the work of the farm was finished and the tallow dip was brought into requisition. In 1855 he was married to Lucy Haynes, daughter of James M. Haynes, of Stewart county. After his marriage he continued to reside in Stewart county till the breaking out of the war. Col. Lowe's record as a soldier is a brilliant one, and rarely found surpassed by individuals of either armies. He left home with Company G, Thirty-first Georgia regiment, as captain, and in about six months was promoted to the rank of major by election. In October, 1862, he was made lieutenant-colonel by appointment, in which rank he served until the fight at Spottsylvania Court House, in 1864, when he was promoted to colonel, serving in that capacity till the close of the war. Col. Lowe was wounded in a skirmish fight in Virginia, and again in line of battle at Winchester. When hostilities were concluded Col. Lowe returned to his farm. In 1884 he moved his family to Buena Vista. He engaged in mercantile business there for about three years, still retaining his interests in farming. His store was destroyed by fire and he retired from business. He is now engaged at Richland in the warehouse and cotton brokerage business. He is a democrat and has frequently been called upon to fill official positions of honor and trust. He was a resident of Chattahoochee county for a year or two, and during that time was justice of the inferior court. For about ten years he was school commissioner of Stewart county. He also served two years as a member of the legislature from Stewart county, being elected in 1872. Col. Lowe and wife have been blessed by the birth of nine children: O. E., married and living in Americus; Mattie, wife of J. F. Rushin, of Marion county; W. H., deceased; Minnie; Sarah; Floyd; James Gordon, at home; W. A., at Buena Vista; Thomas H., at Alexander City, Ala. Mrs. Lowe belongs to the Baptist church, and Col. Lowe is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

E. W. McLENDON. The McLendon family comprises on the male side several prominent farmers of Stewart county, while its connections embrace others, and even extends out over the state. Wilton McLendon was a son of John McLendon, of Alabama, where he was born in 1823. He was reared and married there, his wife being Amanda Elizabeth Wall, daughter of a large planter. He died in 1865, and his widow still survives, and is now living with her son in Stewart county. They had four children, three of whom are still living: William J., E. W., the subject of this sketch, and Mrs. Sarah Lee, wife of J. B. Lee, of Pike county, Ga. The sons are extensive famers near Omaha, Stewart county, and their estates lie on the Chattahoochee river. W. J. McLendon was born Dec. 10, 1854, and was reared at the home place. He was married Feb. 14, 1884, to Miss Mary O. McMillan, of Alabama. They have been blessed with four children: Mary, John, Mack and William. E. W. McLendon was married Feb. 4, 1893, to Leila Moye, of Russell county, Ala. They have one child, a babe. The families of the McLendons all belong to the Baptist church. The old home near Florence, Stewart Co., is nearly sixty years old, and was originally owned by Mathew Averett, great-grandfather of W. J. and E. W. McLendon. The McLendons are prosperous farmers, entirely devoted to their vocation, and they conduct their estates on a progressive line, with the most gratifying results.

CAPT. W. J. MABRY, JR., planter, Richland, Stewart Co., Ga., was born in 1820, in Warren county, N. C. The founder of the family in America was Charles Mabry, an Englishman who in 1717 came to North Carolina from Quebec, Canada. He had been married to a Miss Gibbs, of Irish descent, and connected with an old Quebec family. He was a planter and fought for independence in the patriot army. One of his sons, W. J., born about 1764, was married to Mary Ann Short, daughter of an old settler in North Carolina. He served with distinction in the war of 1812, and lived in the old Tar Heel state, dying in 1824. His wife survived him and was married the second time to a Miss Baker. They moved to Quebec, where she died in 1876, at the very old age of ninety-six years. She bore to Mr. Mabry the following children: Mrs. Harriet McCartha, deceased; L. F., Atlanta; Mrs. Ann Jones, of Carroll county; Mrs. Susan Kidd, of Alabama; Seaborn, deceased, and Capt. W. J., the subject of this sketch. The Mabrys have long been democrats and members of the Methodist church. Capt. W. J. Mabry came to Georgia with his uncle when he was six years old and settled in Lincoln county. There he was educated and when the early inhabitants were harassed by the murderous Creek Indians he shouldered a musket and aided in the subjugation of that warring tribe. In 1839 he moved to Stewart county and commenced a farming life that has been continued for over half a century. He entered the Mexican war as a private and was promoted to the rank of captain. He participated in the battles of Matamoras and Monterey, was in a trip to the Rocky mountains to move an Indian tribe and back again, was in the front in the engagements at Tampico, Vera Cruz, Alvarado, Sierra Gordo, Pero, Black Pass, and for six months was in the siege of Mexico. In 1851 he was married to Mary C. Bowers, daughter of Philemon and Mary Ann Bowers, of Stewart county. In the civil war he headed a company, but in Virginia he was put in the quartermaster's department, and was later transferred to the western army with the rank of captain. He was in the first battles in Virginia, at Bethel, first Manassas, Perryville, Ky., Murfreesboro, Tenn., Chickamauga and numerous others of smaller importance. After the war he again put his hand to the plow and once more took up the affairs of his farm. Capt. Mabry has five children: W. W., of Richland; E. N., of Terrell county; T. J. and Philip P. (twins), at home; Mrs. Mattie, wife of Isom T. Webb, of Stewart county. Mr. W. W. Mabry is a distinguished Baptist divine. Capt. Mabry, though in the last part of the three-quarter-century walk of life, is robust in appearance and enjoying splendid health, with his mental faculties strong and unimpaired. He was a boy when there was no railroad in the state, and was a visitor in the neighborhood of Atlanta when the site of that thriving city could not boast of a single house. He remembers the event of the laying of the first rail on the first railroad in the United States; of the second one, from Charleston to Aiken, S. C., and of the driving of the first spike in the first road in Georgia—from Macon to Forsyth. He was the personal friend of the first engineer to cross the Chattahoochee river—Mr. Watson.

MAJ. T. A. H. MEYER. Identified with Stewart county in its material interests and prosperity, and a figure on the pages of the county's war history is Maj. T. A. H. Meyer, Richland, one of its largest farmers and prominent citizens. He was born on Aug. 12, 1822, in Silverton, Barnwell district, S. C., and was the son of Wiley and Ruth (Parker) Meyer, natives respectively of South Carolina and Virginia. Maj. Meyer's father died when he was a child in arms and he was reared under the care of his mother. His mother dying in 1858, he came to Georgia in the spring of 1859, and on September 13 was married to Miss Mary Walker, a native of Charleston, S. C., but at that time living in Stewart county. She was the daughter of Alexander Walker, an eminent citizen of Charleston, who married a Miss Canaday, of South Carolina. After marrying Maj. Meyer settled in Augusta, Ga., and engaged in the cotton business. He remained there until October, 1867, when he moved to Americus; lived there until 1874 and then moved to Richland, where he has since lived. In 1871 he commenced merchandising and farming, and continued both until 1889. Maj. Meyer enlisted with the Twenty-second Georgia regiment—Schley rifles—of which he was elected second lieutenant. He was afterward promoted to the rank of captain and was in active service throughout the war. He was in the battles of Warrenton, Antietam, second Manassas and Hagerstown, and was twice wounded. Owing to bad health he was transferred to light duty. Mrs. Meyer, who was an exemplary member of the Methodist church, died Nov. 25, 1883. He was married the second time to Eula Lee Fison, of Randolph county, Ga. Maj. Meyer came to Richland when his store and residence constituted the town which is now a beautiful place of 800 people, with many magnificent brick buildings and fine hotel. Situated as it is at the junction of the S. A. & M. and Southern railroads, its prospects are very bright.

DR. THOMAS B. MILLER. The medical profession of Stewart county for half a century has embraced in its membership a representative of the Miller family. It was first the father who began his practice in 1843, and stood at the head of the early fraternity; then came the son, who to-day enjoys a reputation that promises to bring him the fame of his parent. Dr. Thomas Bright Miller was born in Stewart county, April 14, 1854, and was the son of Dr. Bright Miller and Miss Grace Ann Williams, natives of Washington county, Ga. Dr. Miller, Sr., was a poor boy, and never had six weeks' schooling in his life. But he was born with an unconquerable will and an energy to do or die; and the lack of educational advantages did not prevent him from acquiring a thorough intellectual training and to equip his mind for the successful professional life which followed. He was born in 1816, in Washington county, Ga., and when eighteen years old moved to Stewart county and opened up a store at Moccasin

Gap, now Louvale. But he soon found that his talent directed him to another pursuit in life, and he commenced the study of medicine. He attended a course of lectures at the medical college of Georgia, Augusta, and was graduated from there in 1843. He returned to Stewart county and located at Union P. O. He practiced there for fifteen years and distinguished himself by his signal success in his profession and pecuniary matters. He then removed to Lumpkin, where he continued his practice in connection with a drug store until his death. Dr. Miller was thoroughly devoted to his profession, and all other things were subordinate to this, which explains his fortunate career. Even up to the last days of his life he was a hard student and an industrious, indefatigable worker. His practice was extensive and he was very frequently called to the surrounding counties of Quitman, Randolph, Webster, and Chattahoochee for advice and consultation. He amassed a large fortune. The doctor's ancestors were Irish, and in his active life he possessed all the characteristics of that irrepressible race, as embodied in grit and perseverance. In the civil war he served in the Georgia militia for four months. He was nominated several times to represent the county in the general assembly in both the house and senate, but refused all office, though he always manifested great concern in the welfare of the county and state. Mrs. Dr. Miller was the daughter of Col. Thomas Williams, of Washington county, a large farmer and a prominent democratic politician, who represented that county in the general assembly a number of terms and died during the war. Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Miller were married in 1847, and they had six children born to them, three of whom are living: John Walker, a farmer of Lumpkin; Shelby, a merchant of Columbus; and Dr. Thomas Bright, the subject of this sketch. The deceased children are Fannie, wife of S. S. Everett, Lumpkin; Mrs. Mollie Lee, wife of R. T. Gregory, Columbus, and Joseph. Dr. Miller, Sr., was a member of the Masonic order from the age of twenty-one, and at his demise was buried by them. He died in 1880, and his widow in 1892. He was a democrat, and himself and wife belonged to the Baptist church. Dr. Thomas Bright Miller received his education in the Lumpkin schools, and remained at home until he commenced to read medicine. He attended the medical college of Georgia, Augusta, and was graduated in 1875. He was associated with his father in the practice for about a year, when he was married to Leah Corrine Cox, of Pineville, Marion county, when he removed to that place and followed his profession for ten years. He returned to Lumpkin in 1885, where he practiced until 1890, when he located in Richland, his present home. Dr. Miller takes much interest in politics, and has served as an alderman and mayor of Richland, and has been a member of the democratic executive committee for many years. Mrs. Miller is the daughter of William and Sarah (Hall) Cox, of Marion county. Mr. Cox was an extensive farmer and also a big merchant, dying in 1882, aged sixty-three years. Mrs. Cox died in 1861. They had a family of six children, of whom Mrs. Miller is the only one living, Mrs. Cox and five children dying during an epidemic of typhoid fever. Dr. and Mrs. Miller have had four children, of whom two, Willie Bright and Charlie Cox, are now living. In 1882 he attended the female hospital of Philadelphia for four months, receiving special training in diseases of women.

M. K. MONK, farmer, Lumpkin, Stewart Co., Ga., son of John and Salive (Kendrick) Monk, was born Sept. 15, 1819. His parents were South Carolinians, and came to Georgia early in this century. His father was an extensive and a very prosperous farmer, was married four times, and raised a family of fifteen children—seven of whom were step-children. Mr. Monk was reared on the farm, and received such education as the locality and times afforded. In 1843 he went to Arkansas, but in a short time left there and went to New Orleans, where he enlisted as a volunteer for the Mexican war, through which he served. He then returned to Georgia, and in 1861 he enlisted in the Webster (county) rifles, Capt. D. B. Harrell, and served through the war. After the surrender he came to Stewart county and engaged in farming. In 1867 he moved to Alabama, where he lived and farmed fifteen years. Then he returned to Georgia and settled at Arlington, Calhoun Co., whence, in a short time he went to Americus, Ga., where he engaged in merchandising two years. Returning to Stewart county he settled down permanently and went to farming, which he has since prosperously pursued. Mr. Monk is one of the oldest citizens in the county, and is living a very retired life in Lumpkin, where he has a nice comfortable home. Mr. Monk was married March 1, 1859, to Miss Mary, daughter of J. L. Griffis, of Randolph county, a union which has been blessed with two children. He has been a member of the masonic fraternity forty years, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist church—his membership covering fifty-three years.

B. T. RAY, farmer, Sanford, Stewart Co., was born June 20, 1846, in that part of the county which is Quitman county. He was the son of James Ray and Dorothy Bryan, both natives of North Carolina, who came to Georgia after their marriage, and first settled in Macon, about the time of the Indian war of 1835-36. Mr. James Ray once owned a big farm on the site of that thrifty city. These pioneers had a family of eleven sturdy children, of whom only one is dead. After a few years' residence in Bibb and Twiggs counties Mr. Ray moved to Florida, but soon returned to Georgia and settled in Stewart county, where he died in August, 1872, aged sixty-five years. His wife, now about eighty-two years old, still survives him and enjoys excellent health. James Ray was a prominent man of his day, strong in character and bright in mind. The family were strict Baptists, and he was a Mason, and devoted to the teachings and precepts of that fraternity. Mr. B. T. Ray has always lived in Stewart county, and there married his wife, Margaret A. McRee, who was born in Stewart county and was the daughter of W. J. and Mary A. McRee, natives of North Carolina. The McRees were of the Methodist religious faith, and the husband a Mason from early manhood. Mr. McRee shouldered a gun with the state militia during the war, and lived until December, 1877, when he died in his fifty-eighth year. The wife still lives at the age of sixty-three years. After marriage Mr. Ray settled on the farm where he now lives. They have two grown children: William Davis and Benjamin Leon. Mr. Ray broke away from the denomination of his parents and united with the Methodist church, of which his wife had been a member from her girlhood days. Mr. Ray is one of the stewards of the church and a member of the board of trustees. During the last year of the war Mr. Ray enlisted with the state militia under Capt. Cook, and served in defense of Georgia homes and property.

Z. T. SNELLING. Richard J. Snelling, one of the pioneers of that part of the county around what is now Richland, Stewart Co., Ga., came from North Carolina with his family in an ox-cart in the early thirties. He first located on Pataula creek, southwest of Richland, and some few years later he purchased the land upon which Richland is now located, the neighborhood then being familiarly known as Box Ankle. He moved his family there, where he continued to live until his death in 1853 at the age of fifty-six years. In politics he took a very active part and represented the county in the general assembly several times. He was a man well liked, and by his industry and energy became very wealthy. He was charitable and gave with an open hand to the needy. He was married twice. His first wife died soon after coming to Georgia, having borne him eight children. His second marriage was to Mrs. Walker, nee Canaday, of Charleston, S. C. They had seven children. The children by his first wife were: John D., died in Arkansas, leaving a widow who was the daughter of Dr. Charles Austin, of Richland; Mrs. Frances Beaty, wife of Capt. J. P. Beaty, of Preston; Mrs. Hannah Hines, now living in Texas; Mrs. Elizabeth Richardson, Smithville, Ga.; Mrs. Susan Bell, Americus; William, died in childhood. Mrs. Walker had two children when she married Mr. Snelling. They were Alexander and Mrs. Mary Meyer. By her second marriage she was the mother of the following: Henry Clay Snelling, deceased; Jennie, wife of Andrew Hill, Jesup, Ga.; Mrs. Mattie Purvis, of Pickens county, Ala.; Mrs. Kossuth Ward, of Newnan, Ga.; Z. T., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Jennie Flecks, of Augusta, and Richard J., deceased. The mother of these children died in 1879. Mr. Richard J. Snelling, Sr., was an unassuming gentleman with fine business ability, and of a gentle, Christian character. He was a lover of the piscatorial art, and greatly enjoyed the sport of fishing. Z. T. Snelling, the fifth child by the second marriage of Richard Snelling, was born in 1848, near Richland, and was just prepared to enter the university of Georgia, Athens, a lad of sixteen years, when his studies were interrupted by his enlisting with the state militia, Tenth regiment state troops. He served until the close of the war. His company was commanded by Capt. La Fayette Harp, of Chattahoochee county, and did service against Sherman in his march through the state. Mr. Snelling was first married in 1868, his wife being Kate Smith, of Atlanta, daughter of Col. T. T. Smith. Her mother died when she was a child and she was reared by her grandfather, Mr. Green Hill, of Houston county, and was educated in North Carolina. She died in 1868, shortly after her marriage. Mr. Snelling's second wife was Kate Allums, a native of Cusseta, Chattahoochee county, daughter of Judge Allums, of that county. Mrs. Snelling was the granddaughter of Mark George, of Talbot county, was reared in Cusseta and educated in Talbotton, and is the mother of nine children, as follows: Lelia, wife of I. Jones, living near Richland; Mary, James, Julia, Meyer, Andrew, Annie, Jessie, and Flossie. Mr. Snelling and family are members of the Missionary Baptist church, of which he is a deacon. Mr. Snelling's father was a man that stood very high among the people, and was a man of strong character and unflinching integrity. Mr. Snelling is a democrat, and owns a good farm near Richland, upon which he lives in ease and comfort.

D. R. WADE, farmer, Sanford, Stewart Co., Ga., was born in Warren county in 1857, and is the son of J. M. Wade and Isabella Wheeler. When about six years old Mr. Wade's parents moved to Quitman county, remaining there until after the war, when they located in Stewart county. His education was obtained in the schools of these counties, and until he reached his majority he remained on the home farm helping his father. In 1880 he was married to Theodosia Williams of Stewart county, and soon after established a home on the place where he now lives. His domestic life has been a happy and fortunate one. Of the children born to the parents all are still living. They are: Eula Bell, Robert Lee, Charles Andrew, William Homer Holcomb, and Ellen. Mr. and Mrs. Wade are good Baptists. Mr. Wade, while a leading farmer and popular citizen, takes no special interest in politics, more than to exercise the right of suffrage. He lives on a fine farm near Sanford, Stewart Co.

J. M. WADE. Among the old families in southwestern Georgia the name of Wade is well known. Hampton T. Wade was the son of one of Georgia's early settlers and was born in Columbia county about 1807. He was married to Elizabeth G. Bolton, the daughter of Matthew Bolton, an old planter of Columbia county. They had two children, J. M. Wade, the subject of this sketch, and Mary Frances. The father died at the age of thirty years, and the mother afterward became the wife of Mr. Joseph Elliott, of Taliaferro county, and lived until 1857, dying aged fifty-four years. Mr. J. M. Wade was born March 20, 1833, in Warren county, and was only three years old when his father died. He lived with his mother until sixteen years old, when he went to the home of his guardian, where he lived to manhood, receiving his education in the Wrightsboro schools. In 1855 he was married to Isabella Wheeler of Warren county, and after a year's residence in that county settled upon a farm in Stewart county, where he now lives. When the civil war broke out he joined his comrades in the rush to the defense of his people, and leaving his young wife and babe enlisted with the Stark guards of Quitman county, Company F, Sixty-first Georgia regiment. He served in the army of northern Virginia, and was in the seven days' fight around Richmond, the second Manassas, Sharpsburg, Petersburg, Gettysburg, where he was wounded, the first and second battles around Fredericksburg, and was in the last struggle at Appomattox, and surrendered with his regiment. When hostilities ceased he returned to his family and again began farming. To Mr. Wade and wife have been born six children—four sons and two daughters. Mr. Wade is an enthusiastic democrat, a high Mason, and with his wife belongs to the Baptist church, being a deacon in his congregation. He is an honorable, upright, industrious citizen, enjoying the respect and confidence of all who know him.

R. F. WATTS. One of the leading lawyers of Georgia is Judge Richard F. Watts, of Lumpkin, Stewart Co., Ga. Previous to the revolutionary war John Watts, a Virginian and the son of a Scotchman, moved his family to Georgia. He was an ardent patriot, and in 1792 was a member of the general assembly of Georgia. He was among the oldest settlers of the state and a man of strong character and much influence. Thomas H. Watts, his son, located in Clay county, was one of the first dozen residents of the county, and lived and died near Ft. Gaines. He was married in Morgan county to Miss Crenshaw, and was engaged in milling. They had eight children, of whom Benjamin Franklin was the eldest. Upon the death of his wife Mr. Thomas H. Watts was married to Elizabeth Garner, of Henry county, Ga., a union blessed by eight children, all girls, Mrs. Antoinette Sawyer, of Lumpkin, being the only one living. He died in 1844, aged seventy-two years. Benjamin F. Watts was born in 1807 in Morgan county, Ga., and was sent to Virginia, where he was educated as a civil and mechanical engineer. In 1833 he was married to Emeline Bryan, of Montgomery county, Ga., immediately after which he built a mill property in Lumber City, Telfair Co., Ga. He served an apprenticeship in ship-building at Gasport navy yard, and was one of the best mechanical engineers of his time. He died in 1847 at his home at Cordry's (then Watts') Mill, Calhoun Co., Ga. Emeline Bryan, his wife, was a daughter of Clement Bryan, of Johnston county, N. C. The father was the son of Needham Bryan, Jr., of Johnston county, N. C., son of Needham Bryan, Sr., of the same county, who was a son of Needham Bryan, of Bertie county, N. C., a native of the province of Ulster, Ireland. The ancestry on the maternal side was Scotch-Irish. Clement Bryan's wife was Edith Smith, daughter of Col. David Smith, of Cumberland county, N. C. He was a son of Col. Sam Smith of Johnston county, N. C., who was born in 1709, and came over with several Scotch families to Cross Creek, now Fayetteville, a colony established by Neil McNeil. Samuel Smith married the daughter of Bryan Whitfield of Lenoir county, N. C. Mr. Bryan Whitfield was the son of William Whitfield, who came from Nansemond county, Va., and married a daughter of the first and eldest Needham Bryan. Needham Bryan, Jr., married Sarah, daughter of Col. John Hinton, Wake county, N. C. Needham Bryan, Sr., married a daughter of Col. John Smith, of Johnston county, who was a brother of Col. Sam Smith, of the same county. Clement Bryan was killed during the Indian war—on his plantation in Randolph county—the battle ground of Ich-a-way (Noch-a-way). All the Bryan family were soldiers in the Creek Indian war. To Benjamin F. Watts and wife were born: John Whitfield; William B.; Thomas B.; Richard F., the subject of this sketch; and Emeline C. Only the last two are now living; Miss Watts is living in Texas. Mrs. Benjamin F. Watts died in 1846 and her husband in 1847. Richard F. Watts was born May 3, 1841. He was very young when his parents died and was reared by his uncle, Loverd Bryan, of Stewart county. He was delicate for many years previous to reaching his majority, and on account of this was sent to Florida, where he obtained his education. He was among the very first to volunteer in the Confederate army, and served throughout the war as a private. After the surrender he returned to Stewart county and commenced the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in 1866. He was married the same year to Virginia T., daughter of E. F. Kirksey, who is still living, and who was originally from Mecklenburg county, N. C. Mrs. Watts' grandfather, Jared Irwin, Jr., was killed by the Indians in the Creek war. In 1868 Judge Watts was elected ordinary; and in 1882-83, and again in 1886-87, represented Stewart county in the general assembly. In 1888 he was appointed by Gov. Gordon as one of the trustees of the lunatic asylum, and reappointed twice by Gov. Northen. Mr. and Mrs. Watts are members of the Methodist church, and Judge Watts is prominently identified with the I. O. O. F. They have three children: Benjamin Hinton, at present school commissioner of the county; Richard F., Jr., and Helen. Judge Watts enjoys a large practice, both in the state and federal courts.

GEORGE W. WILLIFORD, farmer, Omaha, Ga., was born Nov. 28, 1826, in Warren county, Ga., and is the son of Benjamin C. and Charity (Cobb) Williford, natives of North Carolina. Benjamin C. Williford left his native state in 1826 and settled in Warren county, Ga. He lived there ten years, and then removed to Pulaski county, afterward to Monroe, and thence to Crawford county, where he died in 1833. His wife survived him, dying in 1850. By this union twelve children were born, only two of whom are living: Mrs. Mary Bailey, of Alabama, and Mr. George W. Williford, the subject of this sketch. The latter was only seven years old when his father died and when a mere youth was compelled to go to work to help support his mother and himself. His first earnings were $1 a month, not a munificent sum, but to the brave lad was sufficient to encourage him in his industrious habits, and well prepare him for the busy life that followed. When about twenty-one years old he moved to Stewart county, where he met and wedded Susan Bullard. This marriage was blessed by ten children, eight of whom are still living. Mrs. Williford died in 1871, and the husband was married the second time, in 1873, to Jennie Cowan, a native and resident of Stewart county. To this union were born ten children, six of whom are still living. The children by the first marriage now living are: Antoinette S., wife of J. B. Collins, of Mitchell county; Mary T., wife of W. J. Carter, of Florence; L. C., W. B., M. C., B. W., W. M., and Minnie Powell, wife of H. M. Powell, of Stewart county; and the children by the second marriage that are still living are: George W., F. C., Charlie, Joe Brown, Grace, and Ruth.

SUMTER COUNTY.

WILLIS PERRY BURT, one of the leading dentists of Americus, Sumter Co., Ga., has been for twenty-eight years engaged in that occupation, and has the reputation of being one of the foremost members of his profession in the state. He was born Sept. 6, 1842, in Chambers Co., Ala., and when he was four years old his parents moved to Georgia, where he was educated in the common schools. When the war between the states broke out he enlisted in the Confederate ranks, joining the Twelfth Georgia regiment. On account of physical disability he was discharged from service, but later joined the Forty-sixth Georgia regiment, with which he served until paroled at Greensboro, N. C. As with a vast majority of his fellow-soldiers, Dr. Burt came home penniless. An uncle, L. F. McLaughlin, of Talbotton, Ga., offered to instruct him in dentistry, and, taking up the study, he finished with a course at the famous Baltimore Dental college, in 1867. He was associated with his uncle until 1871, when he removed to Americus, where he has since met with flattering success. Dr. Burt has been a very close student of his profession, but has found time to give some attention to the handling of real estate. A citizen always awake to the interests of his community, he has held important public positions in the council chamber, and as a member of the fire department. He is a Knight of Pythias, and as a democrat has assisted in the councils of the party in maintaining Democratic supremacy. On Dec. 13, 1870, Dr. Burt and Miss Kate Chapman were made man and wife in Talbotton, Ga., where her father, Asa W. Chapman, was a respected citizen, dying in 1889. Mrs. Burt is of a family somewhat distinguished in the journalistic field, three brothers being members of that noble craft—James W., editor and publisher of the Washington "Gazette;" Henry A., of the Cartersville "Courier," and Charles B., of the Sandersville "Progress." Dr. and Mrs. Burt are the parents of seven interesting and devoted children, five sons and two daughters. The eldest son, Lynn W., is practicing dentistry with his father, and the second son, Charles Perry, a cadet at the United States Naval academy, at Annapolis, Md., is now first classman, and will graduate June, 1896, just before he completes his twenty-first year. Dr. Willis Perry Burt, the subject of this sketch, is the second son among eight children born to Joseph J. and Elizabeth G. (Baker) Burt. The former was a farmer and merchant, of Summerville, Chattooga Co., Ga., where he died in 1852, a devout member of the Presbyterian church. Mrs. Burt's father, Willis Perry Baker, was a planter and land trader, of Muscogee county, Ga., where he moved in 1827 from Wilkinson county. He was a man of keen foresight, and most progressive. Having faith in the efficacy of commercial fertilizer, he was one of the first men to ship Peruvian guano into Georgia, bringing the first lot to his plantation near Columbus in 1851. As evidencing his foresight he became convinced early in the fifties that slavery was doomed and sold off all his slaves and a large plantation in Baker county, the proceeds of which he invested in North Georgia mineral lands, in Murray county, where he removed and died in 1858.

CHARLES FREDERICK CRISP, speaker of the United States house of representatives, was born in Sheffield, England, Jan. 29, 1843, while his parents were on a visit to that country. He was educated in the common schools of Georgia, and was admitted to the bar in Americus, Ga., in 1866, after his return from a gallant service in the civil war, in which he was a lieutenant. His first practice was in Ellaville, Schley Co., where he remained for several years, serving as solicitor-general in 1872-73. In 1873 he moved to Americus, and in 1877 was appointed judge of the superior court, being elected to the office by the general assembly in 1878 and 1880. He was elected to congress in 1882, and re-elected for every succeeding term. After protracted and excited contests, he was elected speaker of the house in 1891. As a lawyer, a judge, and a legislator, Mr. Crisp has displayed mental energy, conservatism and broad statesmanship. He possesses an imposing person and courtly manner, and is an eloquent speaker. In emergencies, he always comes forward as a leader, owing to a certain dignity and force in his character that commands respect and wields influence.

COL. ALLEN SHERROD CUTTS, mayor of the thriving city of Americus, Sumter Co., Ga., comes from good English stock, three brothers of the name having settled in America soon after the revolutionary war. His father, Maj. Cutts, was a native of North Carolina, where his people were slave-owning planters, and of large means. He came to Georgia when a young man, and married and settled in Warren county. He was a veteran of the war of 1812, and was a leading and devout member of the Baptist church. His wife was Elizabeth Maddox, daughter of Judge Maddox, a family which is of fine standing in Georgia, and which has a large and influential relationship in Maryland. Col. Allen S. Cutts was born in Pulaski county, Ga., Dec. 4, 1827. He began life for himself by clerking in mercantile establishments, and in 1851 began a business of his own in Oglethorpe, then the terminus of the Central railroad. Conducting that business with success until 1854, he removed to Americus, near which he purchased a farm the following year, and became a planter, meanwhile dealing in cotton in the fall of the year. In 1858 he resumed mercantile life with the firm of Cutts & Johnson, in Americus, which he continued until the firm was dissolved by both members enlisting in the army. Since the war he has been engaged extensively as a planter and cotton factor. Col. Cutts is one of the few who won his title on the battle-field, being a veteran of two wars. When the call was made for troops for service in Mexico in 1846, he entered an artillery company as a private, and served until the close of that brief and triumphant struggle. When the civil war opened, his knowledge of the artillery service brought him into prominence at once, and he organized and was made captain of the Sumter Flying artillery. Leaving for the seat of war, the company was equipped with guns captured at first Manassas, and from that time participated in a large number of the most sanguinary battles of the war. In 1863 Capt. Cutts was rapidly promoted for gallant conduct and efficiency, from captain to major, to lieutenant-colonel, and finally to the full colonelcy. He passed through the entire period of four years with but a slight wound, and was at home sick when the surrender was made. The life of Col. Cutts has been a most useful one to his state, his county and to his city. Again and again he has been complimented with positions of public trust; and it is due him to say that never has he betrayed the confidence thus reposed in him. He was the sheriff of Sumter county in 1856-57. He was a member of the constitutional convention in 1865, and represented Sumter county in the lower house of the legislature in the sessions of 1890-91. He is now, and has been for several terms, mayor of the city. Always an earnest friend to all educational interests, he was one of the originators, and has been a member of the board of education since its establishment, and was for a period of years a trustee of the Female college in Americus. The marriage of Col. Cutts was consummated with Miss Fannie O. Brown, of Monroe county, June 17, 1854. She was a daughter of James V. Brown, a prominent planter of that county, and has borne seven children, four of whom are living: Ernest A., cotton dealer in Savannah; Claude S., planter and cotton factor at Marshallville; Eldridge H., lawyer, and at present stenographer to the supreme court, and Inez M., at home. The principles of the democratic party embody Col. Cutts' political belief, and he is a member of the Methodist church. He is a Knight Templar, and past grand commander of the state.

DR. JOHN I. DARLEY, an eminent physician and surgeon of Americus, Sumter Co., Ga., was born June 18, 1851, in Stewart county, the son of John W. and Susan (White) Darley. His grandfather, Isaac Darley, was a North Carolinian, his wife, Mary, being a daughter of Henry B. Lee, of Virginia. His maternal grandfather was Capt. John White, a wealthy planter of North Carolina and prominent in the local militia service prior to the war. Dr. Darley's father was an extensive planter of North Carolina, and died in the Confederate service during the war at the age of thirty-two. Dr. John I. Darley is one of the most profoundly educated physicians in Georgia, and though a comparatively young man, has established a reputation as a writer on medical jurisprudence which extends throughout the entire country. After securing a good academic education he attended the Alabama Medical college for a period, went thence to Louisville, and was graduated in the spring of 1880. In 1888 he took the medical course in Tulane university, New Orleans, La., and in 1891, a post-graduate course in the celebrated New York polyclinic. Commencing active work in his profession in 1875 in Columbia, S. C., he continued there until 1892, part of that time associated with that celebrated physician, Dr. Dowling. In that year he removed to Americus, where, after a few months, he became associated with Dr. R. E. Cata. They occupy a large place in the confidence of the best citizens of Americus and do an extensive practice in the surrounding towns. Dr. Darley is also the surgeon for the Central railroad. The doctor has always taken a keen interest in everything looking to the advancement of his profession, and has frequently associated himself with medical societies. He was a member of the Alabama State Medical society while in that state, and is now connected with the Georgia society. As a railroad surgeon he is a member and secretary of the Central association of the state. As before stated, Dr. Darley wields a facile pen in matters pertaining to his profession, and is a frequent contributor to medical journals. Treatment of Transmatic Epilepsy, with Report of Cases, appeared in the "Medical Monthly" for May, 1893, and drew forth flattering comments from the medical press. Another on the treatment of shock appeared in the "Southern Medical Record." A paper read by the doctor before the State Medical association last year on Puerperal Septicaemia was copied in several journals and received marked attention, as did one on pneumonia the previous year. Fraternally Dr. Darley affiliates with the F. & A. M., the Royal Arcanum and the A. L. H. society. While a resident of Columbia he took quite an active interest in public affairs, serving as councilman several terms and in the mayor's chair. He is a democrat in politics and the Methodist church holds his membership and receives his support. Dr. Darley has been twice married—the first time to Miss Londie Espy, of Lawrence, Ala., Oct. 29, 1879. This lady was the daughter of a Mr. Espy, one of the most extensive planters in southeast Alabama, prominent as a Confederate soldier and legislator. She died March 10, 1883, leaving one daughter, Susie. The second marriage occurred Dec. 18, 1884, in Lawrence, Ala., to Lavonia, daughter of James R. Hill, a large planter and dealer in agricultural implements.

JUDGE ALLEN FORT, of Americus, Ga., ex-judge of the superior court of the southwestern circuit, and at present railroad commissioner of the state of Georgia, is the son of James Fort and Mary A. Belcher, and the descendant of a noble line of ancestors. Judge Fort was born near Lumpkin, Stewart Co., Ga., July 14, 1849. His early education was begun in the common "old field" schools of the neighborhood. His advancement in his studies was rapid and thorough, and at the age of seventeen years he entered the state university at Athens, Ga., and graduated in the spring of 1867, after a remarkable record—sharing the first honor of his class with Samuel Spencer, of Columbus, and receiving the A. M. degree. He began the study of law under the careful direction of Judge Willis Hawkins, of Americus, and shortly after was admitted to practice. His career has been a most eventful one, combining the sentiments of a great, noble heart, a generous, gentle disposition and forensic ability and general legal talent. His versatile powers have often been harnessed to the duties of the state, and yielded in every instance a harvest of valuable results. In 1872 Judge Fort was chosen to represent his county in the lower house of Georgia's general assembly, and while a member of this body, through untiring labor, gave to Americus her excellent public school system. For this alone he will be forever endeared to the citizens of that community. In 1876 he was appointed a delegate to the national democratic convention at St. Louis, which nominated the Tilden-Hendricks ticket. His service on this occasion has received unstinted commendation. He wielded a powerful influence among the southern democrats. While absent from his home, his name without his knowledge was presented for election to the legislature; and he was overwhelmingly re-elected in 1876. For the terms 1878-79-80 he was re-elected. During 1878-79 he served as chairman pro-tem. of the railroad and judiciary committees and for the administration of railroads provided state bonds that have saved Georgia large amounts of money. With W. R. Rankin, of Gordon county, he made a noted fight. Together they succeeded in passing the Fort-Rankin bill, which is to-day the railroad commission law of Georgia. In 1882 he resumed the practice of his profession and a few months thereafter was appointed judge of the superior court, southwestern circuit, and in 1887 was re-elected for a term of four years. He is an upright, fearless and capable officer. In 1891 Judge Fort was appointed railroad commissioner by Gov. Northen, and now holds that position. In 1894 he succeeded Hon. W. Y. Atkinson as chairman of the state democratic committee, and has occupied the offices of president and vice-president of the national convention of railroad commissioners. Judge Fort on Dec. 13, 1876, was united in marriage to Miss Floyd Hollis, a beautiful, accomplished young lady of Buena Vista, Ga. Judge Fort was a great favorite of Gen. Robert Toombs, then in the prime of his strong cultured manhood. He advocated the same principles on certain questions of great moment and was considered the successor of that eminent statesman.

DR. GEORGE TWIGGS MILLER, physician and surgeon, Americus, Sumter Co., Ga. The gentleman whose name introduces this sketch is a native of South Carolina, where he was born Sept. 8, 1853, in the county of Aiken. He is a physician of excellent practice and standing in the enterprising city of Americus, where he and his family hold a respected and esteemed place in the hearts of the best citizens. The father of Dr. Miller, Jonathan M. Miller, was a native of Edgefield district, S. C., to which his father before him, John Miller, had migrated from Virginia. This gentleman was a man of great force of character and of excellent financial thrift, owning immense landed property and an extensive and profitable shad fishery, which descended to his children. He was a captain in the war of 1812, and lived to a ripe old age. His son grew to manhood in Edgefield district, and became himself a man of ample means, and of the very highest influence and character. A zealous and firm believer in the tenets of the Baptist church, his influence was widely felt, and he became a power for good in his community. He married Miss Margaret Smith, the daughter of Wm. W. Smith, who was a native of Glasgow, Scotland, and who settled in Charleston, where he married a Miss Righton. He was for many years a banker and business man of that city, and died there at the age of eighty-five. His wife was of Huguenot extraction. One son, Wm. Francis Smith, was a graduate of West Point and rendered distinguished service in the Mexican war. To Jonathan and Margaret Miller were born twelve children, seven of whom are still living. At the ripe ages of eighty-four and seventy they still enjoy excellent health and now reside with their daughter, the wife of Hon. J. Pope Brown, of Pulaski county. Dr. G. T. Miller was given an excellent literary education and had the advantage of some of the best instructors, among them being the present ex-governor of Georgia, William J. Northen. In 1877 he graduated from the Augusta Medical college, and since then has been engaged in the pursuit of his profession in Dooly and Houston counties, and for the past eight years at Americus. He is a member of the Georgia Medical association, of which he has been first vice-president, and he and his family are Baptists. The nuptials of Dr. Miller and Miss Katie Karleen Killen were celebrated in Perry, Ga., June 23, 1887, Mrs. Miller being the daughter of John and Annie (Cox) Killen. Her father was a leading merchant of Perry. Her paternal grandfather, Col. Samuel Doddridge Killen, was a noted lawyer, and for years was judge of the county court of Houston county, a terror to evil-doers. Two sons and a daughter have come to add life and light to the doctor's household: William Cox, Alex. Lawton and Annie Margaret.

TALIAFERRO COUNTY.

HORACE M. HOLDEN, lawyer, Crawfordville, Taliaferro Co., Ga., son of William F. and Nancy (Moore) Holden—natives, respectively, of Warren and Taliaferro counties, Ga.—was born in Taliaferro county, March 5, 1866, the fourth of five children—four boys and one girl. His father was a man of prominence and large influence, and very popular. Mr. Holden's primary education was obtained at the common schools of the county, and then, when twelve years of age, he attended a classical school at Newnan, Ga. He next attended a school taught at Harlem, Columbia Co., Ga., by Otis Atmore, now widely and favorably known as the distinguished astronomical editor of "Grier's Almanac." He then entered the university of Georgia, Athens, from which he was graduated in 1885, with a class in which were William H. Barrett, Irvin Alexander, Joe Gross, Joe Burdett and Billy Osborne—some of the brightest of a very bright class. He immediately commenced the study of law in 1886, and when only nineteen years of age, was admitted to the bar. Such are the ability and geniality of Mr. Holden, combined with an inherited winning affability of character, that he at once gained a deep and strong hold on the popular heart and mind, and has grown wonderfully fast in public favor and professional reputation. During the congressional contest between Watson and Black, their first joint debate was held at "Liberty hall," the old Stephens homestead at Crawfordville, on which occasion Mr. Holden presided and introduced both speakers. And, on unveiling of the monument erected by the people of Georgia to the memory of Alexander H. Stephens—Georgia's great commoner-governor—Mr. Holden was the honored master of ceremonies, and his wife did the unveiling. Mr. Holden was happily married June 1, 1893, to Miss Mary, daughter of W. and Mary (Stephens) Cony, of Greene county, Ga., her mother being a niece of ex-Gov. Stephens. To them one child, a son, has been born. Mr. Holden is already one of the most popular men in the county, and unquestionably has a brilliant professional and political future before him.

TATTNALL COUNTY.

BENJAMIN BERRY BREWTON, farmer, was born in Tattnall county, about two miles from where he now resides—a half mile from Bellville—and was the son of Benjamin and Charlotte Brewton, of Tattnall county. His father and mother had several children, as follows: Nathan Brewton, deceased; Nancy, wife of D. H. Smith, deceased; Charlotte Asbury; Alexander, deceased; Matilda, wife of James H. Wilkinson; Martha, wife of William E. Tippins; Jonathan B.; Emanuel. Mr. B. B. Brewton married Candacy Tippins, daughter of William W. and Mary Tippins, of Tattnall county, Sept. 29, 1863. This marriage has been blessed with many children, viz.: Andrew Jackson, born July 6, 1864; William Henry, Dec. 21, 1865; Mary, born Sept. 17, 1867; Martha B., born June 20, 1869; Nancy, C., born May 27, 1871, died Oct. 20, 1872; David Giles, born Sept. 7, 1875, died April 3, 1889; Charley M., born Sept. 18, 1879, died Oct. 6, 1879; Robert B., born July 31, 1873; George Asbury, born Oct. 9, 1879; F. Theodore, born May, 1882. Mr. B. B. Brewton has been engaged in farming and the timber trade for many years. He is a member of the Methodist church at Brewton, named in honor of the family. He is very liberal, and, besides contributing freely to the support of the church, gave a large amount toward the building of the Bellville academy. When the town of Bellville was laid out, Mr. Brewton owned most of the property upon which it was built, and still holds many of the lots. His farm reaches the corporate limits of the town. When the war broke out he enlisted in the Confederate army, under Capt. Daniel Johnson, Col. John H. Lamar, and in Gen. John B. Gordon's brigade. He was in the battle of Gettysburg, battle of Fredericksburg, was at Richmond, the battle of the Wilderness, and in various other fights in Virginia. He was at Winchester, and there captured and sent to Point Lookout prison. He was also wounded in the battle of Gettysburg. Mr. Brewton is one of the most prominent citizens in this section of the county, and is very much interested in the improvement and development of Bellville.

DAVID JESSIE BREWTON, real estate dealer, Bellville, Ga., was born April 26, 1858, in Tattnall county. His father was Nathan J. Brewton, a farmer, born Dec. 6, 1828, and died Feb. 14, 1861. His mother was Jane Elizabeth, a daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth Durrence, who was born Nov. 4, 1833, and married to Mr. Brewton July 27, 1848. Upon his death, she married, Jan. 7, 1865, Allen Jones Sikes, and both are now living. Nathan J. and Jane Elizabeth Brewton had born to them several children: Charlotte Elizabeth, Joseph Chandler, William Baker, David Jesse, and two who died in infancy. There were six children by Allen Sikes, viz.: Frances Eugenia, Melville Thomson, Ida Lelia, Commodore Perry, Henry Allen, and Eugene Wilber. David Jessie Brewton married Miss Euzebia E. Hendrix, a daughter of S. A. and Rebecca Hendrix. She was born Feb. 13, 1861, and was married Feb. 16, 1879. They have several children: Allen Jackson, born Jan. 16, 1880, died May 24, 1881; Nettie Iola, born Sept. 9, 1881; Benjamin Lester, born Dec. 5, 1883; Rosa May, born Aug. 17, 1886; Minnie Neta, born 17, 1889, died April 25, 1894; Maudie Durean, born June 5, 1891. Mr. Brewton joined the Methodist church in October, 1871, at Brewton's church, and has belonged to that congregation ever since. He has been a steward for many years, and a teacher in the Sunday-school. His wife is also a member of the same church. Mr. Brewton left home in 1874 to attend school, and was given a good education. After he finished his schooling he ran a wagon train two years, hauling goods from Savannah into Tattnall and surrounding counties. He farmed for about ten years, and in 1890 located in Bellville and took hold to help build up the school there. In two years he placed this school in the front rank of Georgia high schools, and it was not surpassed by a like school in Tattnall county. About 100 pupils were in attendance. He was then induced to help the school at Hagan, and in connection with his school duties, conducted a merchandise store. So successful had been his educational services that he was in demand, and next year he started helping in a school at Claxton. There was no school at Bellville or Hagan when Mr. Brewton moved to these towns, and in three years there was an average attendance at the three schools of 238, and $2,500 in salary was paid for instruction. In 1894 he returned to Bellville, in order to help in the school, leaving the others in a prosperous condition. In addition to his duties in that respect he is engaged in dealing in real estate and stocks. He also owns an oyster farm and fisheries on the Atlantic coast, where he expected to make his home in the future, but, finding that he could not build up a school in that locality, has moved to the South Georgia college, in order to educate his children.

JOHN H. CLIFTON, planter, Lyons, Tattnall Co., Ga., son of William and Susan (Sharpe) Clifton, was born in Tattnall county, March 12, 1839. His grandfather on his father's side was Ezekiel Clifton, who, when a young man, came from Roanoke county, N. C., and was among the early settlers in this part of southeastern Georgia. He married Miss Elizabeth Roberts, a native of Screven county, Ga., and engaged in stock raising. William Clifton, father of the subject of this sketch, also made a life pursuit of farming and stock raising, but having developed under the instruction of Christopher Bowland, the famous Irish mathematician, unusual mathematical ability, made an enviable reputation as a surveyor. He was employed by the United States government to survey portions of the Cherokee country in north Georgia, and was very highly complimented by the then governor of the state for the excellence of his work. He served at various times as clerk of the court and as a justice of the inferior court, and represented the county in the general assembly. He died Dec. 21, 1873. His widow, born Feb. 1, 1820, still survives, and is living on the old homestead in the southern part of Tattnall county. His grandfather on his mother's side, Maj. John T. Sharpe, was the son of a soldier in the revolutionary war, a prosperous farmer and a prominent politician, having represented the county several times in the general assembly. Mr. Clifton's parents reared to maturity nine children, seven of whom are now living: Maria, born April 22, 1837, married Dr. John Rambo, of South Carolina, who spent the latter part of his life in Georgia and died at Valdosta. He was a surveyor in the Confederate army. They had one child, Willie, who is a teacher in Tattnall county. Mrs. Rambo died March 14, 1862; John H., the subject of this sketch; Harrison, born April 12, 1841, farmer, Tattnall county, married Miss Fannie Smith, has nine children; Thomas, born April 6, 1843, farmer, Tattnall county, married Miss Sallie Shepard, of Liberty county, Ga., has eight children, has represented the second senatorial district in the general assembly; Elizabeth, born April 5, 1845, married Capt. S. D. Bradwell; Ezekiel, born Dec. 7, farmer, Tattnall county, married Miss Viola Brannan, of Bulloch county, has had six children; Emma, born March 2, 1852, married John Diestel, born in Hamburg, Germany, now farmer, Tattnall county, has three children; William, born June 29, 1854, married Miss Helen Raymond, North Lyme, Conn., who died without issue, and he married Miss Wilhelmina A. Hilton, of McIntosh county, one child. He is a prominent lawyer in Savannah, Ga., and has represented Chatham county two terms in the general assembly; Benjamin Hill, born Aug. 9, 1856, died Oct. 19, 1890. Mr. Clifton was educated in the common schools of the country. He enlisted (as did his brothers Thomas and Harrison) in Company G, Fifth Georgia cavalry, state troops. The command was with Gen. Johnson's forces, and participated in the battles at Kennesaw Mountain, around and at Atlanta, Nashville, and at Bentonville, N. C., remaining in the army until the surrender. After the war he engaged in farming, and to a limited extent in the manufacture of naval stores. He represented the second senatorial district in the general assembly four years before the adoption of the constitution of 1877, and was elected to represent the same district in the first election held after its adoption. He was in the senate during the celebrated impeachment trial of Goldsmith and Renfroe, etc. These continued honors indicate a popularity and public confidence quite rare, and undoubtedly gratifying to the recipient. Mr. Clifton was married April 19, 1883, to Miss Amanda Coursey, born Aug. 13, 1868, daughter of T. J. Coursey, of Montgomery county, Ga. To them six children have been born: Olivia Robie, born Aug. 28, 1884; William Clisby, born March 6, 1886; Minnie Lou, born March 16, 1888; Benjamin Hill, born Feb. 8, 1890; Susan, born Feb. 21, died Dec. 27, 1892, and Minis Hunter, born April 14, 1894. Mr. Clifton is quietly enjoying the pleasures and comforts of a well-spent life, and of a bright and lovely family circle at his home in the western part of the county.

PETER CLIFTON, naval stores manufacturer, Tattnall county, Ga., postoffice, Lyons, son of Thomas E. and Mary (McGill) Clifton, was born in Tattnall county Jan. 19, 1851. The Cliftons came from North Carolina to Georgia, and Mr. Clifton's grandfather and father, farmers, were born in Tattnall county. His grandfather, on his mother's side, Peter McGill, emigrated from Scotland to North Carolina, and thence to Tattnall county, Ga. Mr. Clifton, whose father died in 1871, was the fifth in birth of nine children reared to maturity, and of whom five are now living. Mr. Clifton received a fairly good country school education, and, on reaching manhood, went to farming and engaged in the timber business. Continuing his valuable farming interests, he commenced the manufacture of naval stores on a large scale in 1881, at Appleton, in the eastern part of Montgomery county, Ga., and, in connection therewith conducts a general merchandise store. He has managed all these enterprises with the most satisfactory results. In 1892 he was elected from Tattnall to the general assembly, and was made chairman of the committee on internal improvements. Energetic and enterprising, he exercises no small influence in his immediate community and the county. Mr. Clifton has been twice married—first, to Miss Mary E. Gibbs, daughter of Hiram Gibbs, of Montgomery county. This union was blessed with six children, three of whom died in childhood. This wife died in 1884. His second wife was Miss Lottie E. Sharpe—born in 1865—daughter of Littleton and Caroline (McAllister) Sharpe, of Montgomery county, who has borne him two children: Lester, born in 1890, and Kate, born in 1892. Mr. Clifton is a royal arch Mason, and a member of Vidalia chapter, Vidalia, Montgomery Co.

D. V. COLEMAN, manufacturer and farmer, Ohoopee, Tattnall Co., Ga., was born in Columbus county, N. C., March 24, 1859. He moved to Montgomery county, Ga., in 1882, and three years later settled in Tattnall county. He was the son of B. V. and E. A. Coleman of Columbus county, N. C. The father died in 1892 in Tattnall county, Ga. His remains were carried back to Columbus county, N. C., and were buried in the cemetery at Porter Swamp Baptist church. The mother still lives and resides in Tattnall county. She was married first to J. A. McClosky, and after his death married Mr. B. V. Coleman. There were two children by Mr. McCloskey: J. R. and S. A., the first living in Florida and the latter at Vidalia, Montgomery Co. By B. V. Coleman there were four children: J. S., born Nov. 16, 1856; D. V.; Mary E., wife of W. H. Page, born Aug. 27, 1861; N. R., born March 1, 1864, and died July 14, 1888. Mr. D. V. Coleman married Miss Mattie Hayes, of South Carolina, Oct. 12, 1887. She is the daughter of A. G. and E. M. Hayes, of Marion county, S. C. To this union have been born four children: Lena O., born Sept. 22, 1888; Arthur W., born Feb. 16, 1889; Annie B., born Aug. 25, 1890, and Mattie V., born Dec. 1, 1894—all living. Mr. D. V. Coleman is engaged in the manufacturing of naval stores, and turns out at his still in Tattnall county about 700 barrels of spirits turpentine and 2,500 barrels of resin annually. He is also interested in another plant in Tattnall county which produces about 500 barrels of spirits and 2,000 of resin. He employs about sixty-five hands, and operates about 175,000 boxes on his individual farm and about 125,000 at the farm he is a partner in. He is also engaged in farming in North and South Carolina, and conducts a mercantile business in Ohoopee, Tattnall Co. He has been engaged in the manufacture of naval stores for about nine years. Most of his turpentine and resin are shipped to Savannah.

JIMERSON M. COLLINS, merchant, Quince, Tattnall Co., Ga., son of John and Mary A. Collins, was born in Tattnall county May 26, 1854. His paternal grandfather, Josiah Collins, was a native of North Carolina, whence, when a young man, he came to Georgia. Mr. Collins' father was a farmer all his life, was a member of the Primitive Baptist church, and died in 1885 aged seventy-nine years. His mother, still living, is a member of the same church, and is eighty years of age. They were the parents of fourteen children, of whom six survive: Joshua; Stephen; Jimerson; Julia, wife of Bryant Jones, Bulloch county, Ga.; Susan, wife of E. H. Hancock, Richmond county, Ga., and Eliza, wife of L. L. Hodges, Tattnall county. Mr. Collins was educated at the common schools of the county, and when twenty-one years of age was engaged as a clerk in the store of Mr. Jarrall, at Ohoopee, Ga. After six years' service as a clerk Mr. Jarrall advanced him to a partnership and two years later sold out to him, and Mr. Collins has continued the business on his own account down to the present time. He has been in business in Cobbtown since 1884, has been very successful, and has a splendid property in and near Cobbtown, where he has a fine residence. In addition to his store he has a good farm, and operates a ginnery. Absorbed in his business interests he has cared nothing for office, yet in 1894 the democrats cast about for a man popular enough to beat the populists. They decided upon Mr. Collins, nominating him over very strong opposing candidates, and electing him over the populist candidate by a handsome majority, although the state democratic ticket was defeated in the county. He started in life with a meager education, no capital except good health, uprightness of character, industrious and economical habits, and a determination to rise in the world. So far his youthful anticipations have been more than realized. His future is bright. Mr. Collins was married in October, 1886, to Miss Maggie, daughter of Jackson and Roxa Bird, and to them four children have been born: Mertie, Carl, Eva and Dean. Mr. Collins is a member of the masonic fraternity.

JOSEPH LUMPKIN COWART, farmer, Collins, was born Nov. 20, 1849, in Tattnall county, and was the son of James Cowart, a leading farmer of the county. James Cowart was sheriff of the county for a number of years, and was born in Tattnall in 1814, and lived there all his life. He had two sons and one daughter. The oldest son, Frank, was born July 11, 1847, and the daughter, Georgia, born July 11, 1847, married Joseph H. Buford, and lives in Nassau county, Fla. Joseph Cowart is a farmer by occupation, and is also engaged in saw milling. He has served as constable and road commissioner, and is a man highly esteemed by his neighbors. He has several living children and others dead, as follows: Kate, born in 1887; Lottie, born in 1888; Sophronia, born in 1891; James Benjamin, born Feb. 1, 1880; Thomas, born April 4, 1882; Cleveland Lamar, born March 3, 1884; Hix, born May 15, 1893; Oscar Napoleon, born May, 1874; the dead: Clara, born in April, 1876, and died March, 1888; Florida, born Feb. 26, 1878, and died Nov. 7, 1880. Mr. Cowart is a member of Mt. Horeb Primitive Baptist church. Frank P. Cowart, farmer and brother of Joseph L. Cowart, was educated in the schools of Tattnall county, and for several years was employed as teacher. He then engaged in farming which he has since continued. He is a teacher of the Primitive Baptist church and clerk of Anderson's congregation.

WASHINGTON MANASSAS FOY, merchant and manufacturer, Manassas, Ga., was born near Egypt, Effingham Co., Jan. 23, 1862. He was the son of George W. and Mary Jane Foy, the husband having been born Oct. 23, 1825, in Effingham county, two miles from Egypt, and has been a resident of that county all his life. He was a farmer, a lumber and timber dealer, and was the oldest of sixteen children. He is still living, and is a faithful member of the Baptist church, and a high Mason. He was married to Mary Jane Brinson of Screven county, Ga., a daughter of Simon Brinson. There were born to them five children, viz.: Entoil Tallulah; Geo. Brinson, deceased; Ida Gertrude; Washington Manassas; and Edward Jackson. Mr. W. M. Foy married Miss Maxie Poneta Olliff, of Excelsior, Bulloch Co., a daughter of W. W. and America Kenedy Olliff. They were married July 8, 1891, and have two boys, both dead, Geo. W., born Nov. 9, 1892, and died at fourteen months; and William Olliff, who died when nine months old. Mr. W. M. Foy first entered the turpentine and sawmill business when he began life on his own account. He sold out the latter and has in recent years been engaged in raising sea island cotton, in the manufacture of turpentine and resin, and in his mercantile interests. He came to the place where he now resides Nov. 18, 1889. It was just before the S. & W. railroad was built, and liking the location he laid out the town of Manassas and so named it, and built the first house. The neat little town now has over 250 people, and bids fair to increase for many years to come. The principal shipments from the place are naval supplies, lumber and sea island cotton. He has three places for manufacturing the former, and the past year produced two thousand barrels of spirits of turpentine and eight thousand barrels of resin, and employs about 125 laborers, which is the largest output in this section of the state. He operates about 525,000 boxes, which increased in 1895 about twenty per cent. Mr. Foy's merchandise trade in his store at Manassas is about $25,000 annually. Mr. Foy attended school for several years at a private institution situated near his father's home. He entered Mercer college in 1880, and graduated in 1883 at the state university at Athens. He is a member of the Kappa Alpha fraternity. He and his wife joined the Baptist church at Excelsior, Bulloch Co., and transferred their letters and helped organize the church at Manassas. The town of Manassas has a fine school, and in a business way is considered one of the best towns on the S. & W. railroad. The place is located with natural drainage, which is a great health protector. It is in the heart of the pine timber belt, and is surrounded by splendid farming lands. Near it is the largest saw mill in the county, which cuts about 40,000 feet per day. The town was commenced in 1889, and promises in the next decade to show a marvelous increase in population. Mr. Foy is regarded as one of Tattnall's best business men. He is progressive, and does not hesitate to go into any enterprise which will redound to the development of Manassas and his country.

J. D. HUGHES, farmer, Lyons, was born March 4, 1848, in Montgomery county, and is the son of Duncan and Catherine Hughes. The parents moved from North Carolina to Georgia. The mother has been dead nearly half a century but the father, though now seventy-eight years old, is hale and hearty and does a day's work with an ease equal to that of a quarter of a century ago. J. D. Hughes has all his life been a farmer and dealer in timber, and is now so engaged. He was married Sept. 17, 1869, to Nancy Adom, and by her has had one child, Sarah Catherine, born Sept. 4, 1870. The wife died Oct. 12, 1870, and his second marriage was to Martha Sharpe, daughter of Rev. John P. Sharpe. To this union seven children have been born: Mary Eveline, born Jan. 30, 1878; Duncan Robert, born Dec. 21, 1879; Agnes Z. Vizell, born March 15, 1882; James Thomas, born Nov. 5, 1884; Martha James, born Feb. 12, 1887; Perry W., born Sept. 9, 1889; John Stephens, born May 13, 1892—all living. Mr. Hughes has been successful in life and owns a nice farm and home, situated near Lyons. He possesses splendid business capacities, and displays excellent judgment in his business ventures.

JOHN HUGHEY, retired teacher, and county school commissioner, Riggton, Tattnall Co., Ga., son of John and Elisha (Perry) Hughey, was born in Tattnall county Sept. 1, 1837. His father was born in South Carolina in 1794, and when quite a young man came to Georgia and settled in Morgan county. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and was twice wounded. In 1820 he removed to Tattnall county, where, in addition to farming, he followed mill-wrighting. His mother was born in Virginia, and was the daughter of Dr. James Perry, who moved from Virginia to Tattnall county, Ga., early in the present century, and was the first practicing physician in the county. He was also clerk of the superior court from 1812 to 1828. Mr. Hughey's parents had ten children born to them, of whom four are now living, John, the subject of this sketch, being the youngest of the family. His mother died in 1838. Mr. Hughey's father married for his second wife Miss Hannah Pearson, daughter of John Pearson, who migrated from Pennsylvania to Tattnall county. This lady was the sister of John Pearson, now a citizen of the county, and is reputed to have been one of the most intellectual women ever born in the county. By this second marriage Mr. Hughey's father had eight children born to him, of whom five are now living. He removed to Orange county, Fla., in 1846, where he died in 1883. In early life—during childhood and youth—Mr. Hughey had the great benefit of the superior advanced instruction under his accomplished stepmother, and later attended an academy of high reputation in Heard county two years, whose then principal is now professor of Greek in the university of Wisconsin. Mr. Hughey began life as a teacher in Orange county, Fla., where he taught one year. He then engaged for a year in steamboating on the St. John's river. From that he embarked on a sea-faring life, and followed that until 1860, when he suffered shipwreck at Cape Canavarel on the Atlantic coast of Florida. He then came to Appling county, Ga., and engaged in teaching. When the war between the states began he enlisted (in 1861) in Company B, Fifty-fourth Georgia regiment, which was assigned to duty in the army of the west, and served successively under Gens. Beauregard, Johnson, Hood and others until the last gun was fired. After the surrender he returned to Appling county, and resumed teaching, adopting it as a profession. He taught in Appling and Tattnall counties nine years. Retiring from his profession he turned his attention to farming, in which pursuit his intelligent care and attention has been followed with most satisfactory results. Progressive farming and his public duties fully occupy his time and give employment to his mind, while gratifying his public spirit. In 1874 he was elected county commissioner of education and has continuously held it, unopposed, until the present time. He has the teachers and schools better organized and the schools under better discipline than is found in any other county in what is known as the "wire grass" portion of the state. Mr. Hughey was married Nov. 23, 1870, to Miss Nannie Tillman—born March 11, 1847—daughter of Col. Joseph Tillman, of Appling county. Seven children are the offspring of this happy union: Eliza, born in August, 1871, teacher, Tattnall county; Lena, born May, 1873, married to W. H. Faulk, Tattnall county—two children; Lillian, born June, 1875; Edna, born October, 1877; John G., born February, 1880; Virginia, born May, 1883; and Geneva, born November, 1890. Mr. Hughey is one of the most prominent and influential citizens of Tattnall county. He is held in high estimation, is public-spirited, and a useful member of the community—well up on all important topics of the day. With fine and extensive farming interests, comfortably situated monetarily, and surrounded by an interesting family and possessing the good-will and respect of his fellow-citizens, the down-hill of life bids fair to be pleasant to him.

ELISHA BUCKNER KENEDY, merchant, Claxton, was born March 20, 1850, in Tattnall county, and is the son of Stephen and Macy Ann Kenedy. His mother was a native of Bulloch county, and his father a native of South Carolina. He had six half brothers and three half sisters and one sister. The latter's name was Macy and she is now dead. His half brothers and sisters were: Jimerson, Edmond, William, Daniel, Stephen H., Eli, Mary Ann, Wealthy Ann, Mary and Sarah. Jimerson, William, Eli, and Wealthy are deceased. Elisha B. Kenedy married Miss Mary Moore, a daughter of William and Jane Moore, originally from county Clare, Ireland. Mrs. E. B. Kenedy was born in Bulloch county April 13, 1852, and she was married to Mr. Kenedy Feb. 7, 1872. They have had nine children born to them, all of whom are living. They are as follows: Edward Foster, born March 26, 1873, and engaged in the mercantile business with his father in Claxton, after having traveled three years for a wholesale drug house of Augusta, Ga.; Nellie Moore, born May 21, 1875; Stephen Bedford, born April 23, 1877, and agent for the Southern Express company at Claxton; James Daniel, born August 10, 1879; Thomas Barret, born Sept. 20, 1881; Della L., born Oct. 26, 1883; John Patrick, born Oct. 2, 1885; Katherine Isabella, born Feb. 17, 1888; William Elisha, born August 23, 1891. Mr. Kenedy has always been engaged in farming, and eight years ago opened up a mercantile business in Bulloch county. Two years ago he moved to Claxton, Tattnall Co., and there he and his son conduct the largest store in the town. They do a business of about $25,000 per annum. They also run the hotel and a livery business. Mr. Kenedy is a member of the town council and mayor pro tem. His wife and children are all members of the Catholic church at Savannah. Mr. Kenedy is one of the most prominent citizens of Claxton, and though only a resident of the place for two years has identified himself with the town, and shows great interest in its growth and prosperity. He is one of the best business men in Bulloch and Tattnall counties, and has a large acquaintance among the business men of Atlanta, Savannah, and Augusta.

JOSHUA S. LANIER, farmer, Altamaha, Tattnall Co., Ga., son of Lemuel S. and Rhoda (Hodges) Lanier, was born in Bulloch county, Ga., Feb. 24, 1846. His ancestors were Huguenot refugees from France, who came to this country and settled in North Carolina, where his grandfather was born. This is a branch of the same family from which the distinguished poet descended. Mr. Lanier's father was a successful farmer, and himself and wife, born in 1814, are both living. Her father was Joshua Hodges, whose family was among the earliest settlers in Bulloch county. The subject of this sketch is the oldest of eight children born to them. Mr. Lanier attended the best schools in the county, but the war between the states interrupted his advancement in this direction. He enlisted in Company E, Fifth Georgia cavalry, Anderson's division, and was in active service throughout the war. As a member of the dashing and daring Gen. Wheeler's cavalry force, he traversed nearly all the southern states, ending his military life with the surrender at Hillsborough, N. C., shortly after Gen. Lee's surrender. Returning home he taught school in Bulloch and Tattnall counties four years, after which he settled down to farm-life in Tattnall, and has industriously and profitably pursued it since. Recognizing his capability and public spirit, his fellow-citizens have called him into their service in various important and responsible capacities. They have made him road commissioner ten years, a member of the board of education twelve years, he being now president of the board, and he is also station reporter for the county for the United States weather bureau. He also represented Tattnall county in the first interstate cotton convention, held in Atlanta in 1885. Mr. Lanier married Miss Priscilla Lang, born in 1851, daughter of Mrs. Eleanor Lang, of Tattnall county, by whom he has had three children: Howson L., born March 15, 1873, a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, Md., in March, 1894, now located in San Francisco, Cal.; Walton, born in 1879; Roy, born in 1886. Mr. Lanier devotes his time and attention to the cultivation and improvement of his farm, and to his public duties, being esteemed and confided in by his neighbors.

BROWN M'COLLUM, manufacturer, Long Branch, Tattnall Co., was born Jan. 5, 1829, in Robeson county, N. C., and is the son of Dougal and Flora McCollum. Dougal McCollum was of Scotch parents, an elder for forty years in the Presbyterian church and was a prosperous farmer. He took great interest in educational matters and gave his three children a good education. These children were: Mary Ann, married Nathaniel McNair, of Robeson county; Martha Jane, wife of Edward Campbell, of Marion county, S. C., and Brown. Brown McCollum received his education from private tutors and in the common schools under able teachers. He taught school for two years and then commenced farming. In 1860 he married Miss Kate Newell McLean, of Robeson county. She was a daughter of Archibald McLean and was born in 1837, and was educated at Salem, N. C. There were born to this union two sons and two daughters, viz.: Jennie Brown, wife of R. P. Hamer, of Hamer, S. C.; Mary, wife of Dr. T. C. McSwain, of Marion, S. C.; Arthur Newell, graduated at Davidson college, North Carolina, has been engaged in farming and merchandising and is now agent in Houston, Tex., of the Equitable Life Insurance company; Dougal A. was educated in the common schools of Robeson county and then took a course in a business college. He is now engaged with his father in Tattnall county in the manufacture of naval stores. Brown McCollum has been a member of the Presbyterian church thirty years, and has always been a man temperate in his habits. He has been engaged in manufacturing naval stores for twenty-five years. He first operated seven years in Robeson county, N. C., then went to Marion, S. C., where he was in business twelve years; thence to Wilcox county, Ga., and in 1889 to Tattnall county. He manufactures five thousand barrels of resin and spirits annually, and employs from eighty to ninety men and produces two crops per annum.

ELIAS LAFAYETTE M'DILDO was born in Tattnall county, Jan. 7, 1863, and is the son of William and Sarah (McGill) McDildo. His parents were natives of Montgomery county and had nine children, two of whom died in infancy. The living children are all residing in Tattnall county and are: Annie, Mary, Victoria, wife of Benjamin Anderson; Amanda, wife of John Collins; Georgia Ann, wife of Daniel Lewis; Emma, wife of Robert Wilkes. Mr. Elias McDildo attended school until manhood and then engaged in the timber trade, a prominent industry of Tattnall county. He also farms, and owns a farm of about 400 acres, partly cultivated and well-timbered. This timber has never been affected by the manufacture of turpentine. Mr. McDildo is a pushing citizen and enjoys the respect and confidence of all who know him.

MANNING MILXER MOODY, farmer and postmaster, Long Branch, was born Sept. 8, 1844, in Tattnall county, and was the son of Dr. Manning James Moody and Penelope Moody. Dr. Manning J. Moody was an extensive farmer all his life, and for twenty years practiced medicine, ranking high in the esteem of his brother practitioners, and achieving great professional success. He was a high Mason and served one term in the house and one term in the state senate, as a representative from Tattnall county. He died in 1866, and his wife survived him but two years. Manning Miles Moody was educated in the common schools of Liberty county, and left these schools when seventeen years old to enlist in the Confederate army. He was in the Liberty guards, a cavalry company, under Capt. William Hughes and Col. N. H. Anderson. He was in a number of skirmishes and at the battle of Bentonville, N. C. He served through the entire war, and returning home took charge of his father's farm. He was married to Miss Mary Martin Bradwell, of Hinesville, Liberty Co., April 12, 1869. She was a daughter of Col. James and Isabella Bradwell. She was a sister of Ex-State School Commissioner S. D. Bradwell, who is now president of (Rock college) the state normal school. She was an active member of the Presbyterian church, a highly esteemed Christian lady. She is now deceased. Mr. Moody is a member of the Baptist church at South Salem, Liberty Co. He has been postmaster at Long Branch for twenty years and jury commissioner of Tattnall county for fifteen years. He was first appointed by Gov. Hirschel V. Johnson. He has always been a strong democrat, and never scratched that ticket in voting it in his life. He takes great interest in the cause of education, and is one of Tattnall's most prominent farmer-citizens.

ROBERT M. SHARPE, physician and surgeon, Perry's Mills, Tattnall Co., Ga., son of John T. and Rebecca (Lasseter) Sharpe, was born Nov. 20, 1836. His grandfather, John Sharpe, was a soldier in the revolutionary army, and came with his family from Halifax county, Va., to Georgia, early in this century, and settled in Burke county. Dr. Sharpe's father was born Nov. 1, 1795, and followed farming in Burke county. His wife was born in Burke county March 29, 1795, and to them eight children were born, the doctor being the youngest, and of them four sons are now living: E. F., Kissimmee City, Fla.; John T., farmer, Tattnall county; Henry R., farmer, Lowndes county, and Robert M., the subject of this sketch. Dr. Sharpe was educated at the county common schools, attended Burke county high school two years and then attended school one year in Princess Anne county, Va. With this preliminary preparation he entered the medical college of Georgia, Augusta, and was graduated in 1859, receiving his diploma from Hon. Ebenezer Starnes, president. He located at once in Tattnall county, but before he got fairly started the unpleasantness occurred, and he enlisted in the army. Considering afterward that he could be of more service at home among the people, he placed a substitute and practiced in the county during the war, there being only one other physician in the county. With the exception of three years—1869-1871, when he practiced in Lowndes county—he has continuously practiced in Tattnall county. He has been successful, has the confidence and esteem of the people and enjoys an extensive practice. Dr. Sharpe was married Feb. 16, 1858, to Miss Mary J. Kennedy, born March 28, 1841, daughter of Robert Kennedy, of Webster (originally from Monroe) county, Ga. This union was blessed with ten children, all living but the first-born, who died in infancy. They are as follows: Susan, born Aug. 26, 1860, married John Davis, Tattnall county, and they have five children: Thomas R., born Oct. 2, 1862, married Miss Luray Smith, and they have one child; Roberta A., born Aug. 6, 1865, married Jesse H. Little, of North Carolina, but now living in Tattnall county, and has four children; Anna, born April 28, 1868, married D. Armistead, Screven county; Claudius M., born Oct. 26, 1870, married Eliza Johnson, of Appling county, Ga., now living in Florida; Francis L., born Feb. 24, 1873; John H., born May 15, 1875; Emma L., born Dec. 19, 1877, and Robert M., Jr., born April 17, 1888. Possessing a fine estate, a competency, with an excellent practice that keeps him actively employed, and surrounded by his interesting family, Dr. Sharpe needs nothing to make life entirely enjoyable.

SHELDON P. SMITH, retired merchant and farmer, Perry's Mills, Tattnall Co., Ga., son of Nicholas and Urania T. (Aborn) Smith, was born in Rhode Island June 27, 1831. The family were among the early settlers of Rhode Island. Mr. Smith's father was born March 11, 1787, and his mother July 23, 1798. When Mr. Smith was about a year old (1832) his parents migrated to Georgia and settled in Tattnall county, where his father engaged in merchandising. They had eight children, of whom Mr. Smith was the fourth, five of whom are now living. Mr. Smith was given the best education the schools of the county afforded, and then was sent to the Hinesville (Liberty county, Ga.) high school, at that time in charge of Prof. Bradwell, father of Hon. S. D. Bradwell, the late able state school commissioner. He succeeded his father in his mercantile business, and has also been engaged in farming. About 1861 he was elected justice of the peace, and has been the only justice of the peace and notary public in the district since. Just after the war he was appointed postmaster at Perry's Mills, and has held the office from that time until now. He was not in active service during the war, but he represented Tattnall county (1863-65) in the general assembly. He was married

Dec. 5, 1853, in Tattnall county, to Miss Frances Bell, born Aug. 15, 1833, daughter of Joseph J. and Elizabeth (Johnson) Bell, of Tattnall county. To them thirteen children have been born, eight of whom are now living. Mr. Smith is spending his declining years at his plantation home in the southwestern part of Tattnall county, where he has lived since 1832.

CALEB W. SMITH, ordinary of Tattnall county, Ga., Reidsville, son of John C. and Mary (Jones) Smith, was born in Tattnall county March 8, 1843. His great-grandfather, Simon, and his grandfather, James Smith, were Georgia-born, and are buried on the same spot in Tattnall county. His father, John C. Smith, was a well-to-do, highly-respected farmer, born in Tattnall county March 8, 1812, died Oct. 26, 1858, and was buried near his father and grandfather. Mr. Smith's mother was a daughter of Daniel E. Jones, of Lumpkin county, born July 28, 1819, and died in 1885. Of seven children they had born to them, Caleb W. was the third born, and of them five are now living: Susan, wife of A. C. Moore, Tattnall county; Dicey, widow of S. B. Rogers, formerly of Tattnall county, deceased; M. A., farmer, and M. W., farmer, Tattnall county, and Caleb W., the subject of this sketch. Mr. Smith's educational advantages were limited to the country schools, and he was reared and entered upon active life as a farmer. He enlisted in 1861 in Company B, Sixty-first Georgia regiment, which formed a part of Stonewall Jackson's famous corps, and was in active service until wounded in the battle of Fredericksburg, December, 1862. The wound necessitated the amputation of his right leg above the knee on the field; he was then carried to the hospital, where he remained until May, 1863, when he returned home. He at once engaged in farming, a pursuit he has since followed. He served as tax collector two years by election, then by appointment under military rule, and was United States census enumerator in 1870. September following he was appointed ordinary by Gov. R. B. Bullock, and has continuously held the office since by election. Mr. Smith was married Oct. 31, 1871, to Miss Mary Slater, born in 1852, daughter of John Slater, of Bulloch county, by whom he has had nine children: Clarence L., born Sept. 15, 1872, student at Emory college, Oxford, Ga.; Rosalie, born Oct. 4, 1874; Daisy, born Feb. 3, 1877, and died Feb. 16, 1880; John, born Dec. 7, 1879; Mary, born April 11, 1882; Mattie M., born Jan. 6, 1885; Julia H., born Oct. 24, 1886; Fannie L., born Aug. 4, 1888; Ethel L., born June 30, 1891. Mr. Smith lives in Reidsville, county seat of Tattnall, where he has a nice and comfortable home, surrounded by his interesting family, and a county full of appreciative friends.

M. A. SMITH, farmer and postmaster, Hagan, was born in Tattnall county Nov. 10, 1848, and was the son of John C. and Mary Smith, life-long residents of Tattnall county, and respected citizens. John C. Smith was a farmer and a strong Methodist in his religious convictions. There were born to them the following children, viz.: C. W., ordinary of Tattnall county; J. D.; M. W.; M. A. All reside in Tattnall county, except James D., who died at Lynchburg. C. W. Smith lost a limb in the second battle of Manassas. Both of them were in the Sixty-first Georgia regiment, under Gen. John B. Gordon. Mr. M. A. Smith married Susan Hagan, of Bulloch county, a daughter of James and Keziah Hagan. Mrs. Smith's father is deceased, and her mother is still living at the age of eighty-eight years. The mother is a sister of Peter Cone, who represented Bulloch county in the legislature for thirty-two years. The brother has been dead about twenty years. To Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Smith have been born several children, viz.: Dr. J. C. Smith, a prominent dentist of Tattnall county, and a graduate of the Atlanta Medical college in the class of 1891; L. A., a farmer; Keziah; Frank, a telegraph operator; Ada, and two children, deceased. Mrs. Smith was married before her union with Mr. Smith. She was wedded the first time to Simon Brewton, lieutenant in the Confederate army, and killed while in service at a battle at Hanover junction, near Richmond, Va. They had two sons—Milton, who is a Methodist minister in Tattnall county, and L. B., who graduated in 1892 from the state university, at Athens, and who is now practicing law at Hinesville, in Liberty county. Mr. M. A. Smith was engaged in the fertilizer trade for fifteen years, being connected with the Baldwin Fertilizer company, of Savannah. He has been in the lumber trade for twenty years, and has been farming all his life. He was appointed postmaster at Hagan in 1890, which position he now fills. He owned all the real estate in the town when it was laid out, and has devoted a great part of his time recently to the improvement and the development of the place. The town is only four years old, and yet it has a population of 300, and is growing rapidly. Mr. Smith owns a large sawmill in Hagan, has been manufacturing naval stores for two years, is engaged in the buggy trade, handles improved stock and is a general business man, dealing in everything that is needed by the people of the town. Mr. Smith takes great interest in Hagan, which was named after his wife. He helped to lay off the place, which is one of the best on the S. & W. railroad, and bound to develop into an important town.

BUTLER WILKES, farmer and merchant, Lyons, was born Dec. 19, 1849, in Montgomery county, Ga., and was taken to Tattnall county by his parents when he was an infant. There he was reared to manhood, receiving his education in the common schools of Tattnall, and beginning life as a farmer. He was a son of John and Catharine Wilkes, of Montgomery county. The father was born in Robeson county, N. C., and the mother in Georgia. They were married in 1835, and to the union were born the following children: Martha, deceased; Jacob; Elizabeth; Duncan; Butler; Catharine; Mary Jane; Thomas, and Frank, deceased. They all live in Tattnall and Montgomery counties, except Thomas, who lives in Florida. Butler Wilkes married Miss Sallie Harden, of Tattnall county, Oct. 8, 1890, and has two children—Frank, born Dec. 3, 1891; and the baby, born Jan. 6, 1893. Mr. Wilkes is one of the old residents of Tattnall, and is prominent among the leading business men of the county. He has all his life-time been actively engaged in developing the resources of the county, and takes much interest in the advancement of the state.

TAYLOR COUNTY.

J. B. BARFIELD, farmer, Butler, Taylor Co., Ga., son of Jesse and Nancy (Thompson) Barfield, was born in Macon county, Ga., in 1839. His grandparents on his father's side were Bart. and Nancy Barfield. He was of Irish descent, born in North Carolina, moved to Georgia early in this century, and settled in Macon county. He was a farmer, and served in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Mr. Barfield's father was a native of North Carolina, migrated to Georgia in 1833, and settled in Macon county. He was a farmer, was a soldier during the Mexican war, and was a prominent and active member of the Primitive Baptist church. His grandfather on his mother's side was Redding Thompson, who was born in North Carolina, and lived there all his life. Mr. Barfield was raised a farmer, and enjoyed very indifferent educational advantages. In 1862 he enlisted in Company B, Capt. Frederick, Tenth Georgia battalion, and participated in the battles of Fredericksburg and Suffolk. After the war he worked on a farm until 1868, when he bought a small tract of land in the woods, on which he cleared a farm, improved it, and made himself a pleasant, comfortable home. Mr. Barfield was married in 1866 to Miss Rebecca Brooks—born in Macon county, Ga., in 1850—daughter of Benjamin M. C. and Eliza (Coleman) Brooks. He was a native of Virginia, removed to Georgia early in life, and settled in Upson county, whence, afterward, he removed to Macon county, where he is now enjoying life on his farm. He was tax collector of Macon county one term. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Barfield, eight are living: William B., John E., Berrie, Daniel W., Eliza, Jesse M., Nancy C., and Thomas. Mrs. Barfield, who was an exemplary member of the Methodist church, died in 1890.

JOHAN A. CAMERON, farmer, Butler, Taylor Co., Ga., son of Thomas D. and Nancy A. (Clark) Cameron, was born in Upson county, Ga., in 1829. His grandparents on his father's side were John D. and Jennie E. (Bone) Cameron. He was of Scotch descent, born in North Carolina, and lived there all his life. He was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Mr. Cameron's father was born in North Carolina, migrated to Georgia in early life, and settled near Thomaston, Upson Co., and reared his family there. He served as a soldier in the Seminole war. Politically, he was an ardent whig. He died in 1866. Mr. Cameron's grandparents, on his mother's side, were Gilbert C. and Jane Clark. He was born in North Carolina—of Scotch descent—and died there. He was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Mr. Cameron was raised a farmer, and the little education he received was at the old-time log school-house. He began life as a carpenter, and followed that trade until the unpleasantness was precipitated, when, in 1862, he enlisted in Company E, Capt. W. S. Wallace, Forty-fifth Georgia regiment. Among other hard-fought bloody battles he was in were those at Cedar run, seven-days' fight around Richmond, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Wilderness, Spottsylvania court-house, etc. He was wounded at the battle of Cedar run, and was in the hospital two months. Capt. Wallace was shot at the same battle, and Mr. Cameron took command of the company. After the war he engaged in farming, and has followed it successfully and prosperously. In 1866 Mr. Cameron was married to Miss Dora Murray—born in Houston county, Ga., in 1846—daughter of John S. and Judy A. (Roial) Murray. He was of Scotch descent, and born in Burke county, moved first to Houston county, Ga., and thence to Taylor county. He was raised a farmer and followed that pursuit through life. Of the children born to them, eight are living: Julia, John, Asa, Lena, James, Annia, Katie, and Murray. Mr. Cameron is an exemplary member of the Methodist church, and Mr. Cameron, his wife and family are held in high esteem by the community.

WILLIAM H. FICKLING, farmer, Fickling, Taylor Co., Ga., son of C. F. and Caroline E. (Hankinson) Fickling, was born in Crawford county, Ga., in 1834. Mr. Fickling's paternal grandfather was born in England, and migrated to this country before the revolutionary war, settled in South Carolina, and served seven years in the patriot army during the war for independence. His father was born in 1800 in Barnwell district, S. C., where he was raised a farmer, came to Georgia in 1832 and settled in Crawford county, where he reared his family. He was a Missionary Baptist, and took very great interest in everything pertaining to the affairs of the church. He lived to be eighty-seven years of age. His maternal grandfather Hankinson was a native of South Carolina, and lived there all his life. He was also a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Mr. Fickling was raised a farmer and received a good common school education.

In 1862 he enlisted in Company C, of which he was made captain, Fifty-ninth Georgia regiment. He was engaged with his command in many of the hardest fought battles of the war—Wilderness, seven days' fight around Richmond, Petersburg and Salisbury. He was wounded at the battle of Richmond, was made a major after the fight, and remained in service until the surrender. He was a justice of the peace for a number of years, and in 1875-76 represented Taylor county in the general assembly. He served on the following committees: Banks, counties and county lines, and penitentiary. Although farming has been his principal pursuit, he has been engaged to some extent in milling and merchandising. On his tract of 1,200 acres of excellent land he has a fine mill property, with a very valuable water power on Patsalega creek, with capacity for running a large factory. Maj. Fickling has prospered since the war, and is one of Taylor county's best farmers—one of its most substantial citizens. Maj. Fickling was married in 1858 to Miss C. E. Walker—born in Crawford county in 1837—daughter of Charles H. and Caroline E. (Jones) Walker. Mr. Walker was a native of Monroe county, Ga. Of the children born to this union there are living: William H., Thomas, Caroline, Charles F., Maude E., Walker, and Bessie. Maj. and Mrs. Fickling are exemplary members of the Methodist church. Socially, financially and politically Maj. Fickling and his family rank with the very best citizens of the county, and exert a wide and beneficent influence.

FRANK GLOVER, farmer, Reynolds, Taylor Co., Ga., son of John P. and Matilda (Vinson) Glover, was born in Crawford county, Ga., in 1841. His grandparents on his father's side were John and Drusilla (Paskell) Glover. He was of Irish descent, born in North Carolina, came to Georgia early in life, and settled in Putnam county. He afterward moved to Alabama and died there. Mr. Glover's father was born in Putnam county, Ga., and reared a farmer. He went to Crawford county when a young man, where he reared his family. He was a soldier in the Seminole war, and was a preacher in the Primitive Baptist church. His grandparents on his mother's side were Henry and Sarah (Graydon) Vinson. He was of French descent, born in North Carolina, migrated to Georgia and settled in Crawford county. Mr. Glover was reared on the farm, and like other youths at that period received but a limited education. In 1861 he enlisted and served six months in the state troops. Then the command was reorganized and he became a member of Company F (Capt. J. B. Fowler), Fifty-seventh Georgia regiment, and was engaged in many battles—Barboursville and Paris; and having been taken prisoner at the last named, was first sent to Camp Chase, Ohio, whence after seven days he was sent to Cairo, and afterward to Vicksburg, where he was exchanged. After his exchange he participated in the battle of Baker's creek near Vicksburg. Returning from the war he went to work on his farm, in cultivating which he has since spent his life. At present he is chairman of the board of county school commissioners. In 1866 Mr. Glover was married to Miss Pauline Christopher—born in Jasper county in 1845—daughter of W. H. and Martha A. Christopher. He was born in Walton county, Ga., was a surgeon in the Confederate army, and after the war settled in Taylor county, where he practiced his profession many years. Of the children born to this union three are living: Minnie P., Maggie A., and Emma. Mr. Glover and his wife are members of the Primitive Baptist church.

JONATHAN J. M'CAUTS, farmer, Butler, Taylor Co., Ga., son of Jeremiah C. and Tabitha (McCrary) McCauts, was born in Talbot county, Ga., in 1845. His grandparents on his father's side were natives of South Carolina, who lived in that state all their lives. Mr. McCauts' father was born in South Carolina, was a farmer and moved to Georgia early in life, and settled in Bibb county when Macon was little more than a village, and shot deer where the city now stands. He represented the county in the general assembly a number of times. Subsequently he removed to Taylor county, where he died. He gave his attention exclusively to farming. Mr. McCauts' grandparents on his mother's side, William and Polly (McCrary) McCrary, were natives of Ireland, migrated to this country when young and settled in Georgia. He was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain. He made farming the pursuit of his life. Mr. McCauts worked on the farm and had but little schooling while growing to manhood, on account of the war. In 1862 he enlisted in a battalion in Gen. Wheeler's command, was in the battles at and around Atlanta, and was in front of Sherman when he was marching through Georgia. With pluck and energy, and industry and frugal habits, as his only—and reliable—capital, he began life after he came home from the war. He started out for a life-success—and he has achieved it. He now owns 2,300 acres of choice farming land, and is the proprietor of a large grist and saw mill. In 1880 he was elected to represent his senatorial district, and afterward, for three sessions, to represent his county in the general assembly. In that body he was placed on the following committees: Educational, penitentiary, internal improvements, and asylum. These successes—financial and political—evidence his industry and sagacity, his popularity and influence, and the estimation in which his fellow-citizens hold him. Mr. McCauts was married in 1870 to Miss Jennie McCauts, born in Taylor county, daughter of Andy and Betsey (McCrary) McCauts. He was a native of South Carolina, came to Georgia when a young man, was a soldier in the Indian war of 1836, and represented his senatorial district in the general assembly. To Mr. and Mrs. McCauts nine children have been born: Clifford, Bessie, Lora, Clara, Jerry, Murray, Kate, John M., and Otis. Mr. McCauts is a royal arch Mason, and himself and wife are members of the Methodist church. No citizen or family in the community occupies a more enviable position in any respect than does Mr. McCauts.

JOEL E. MONTFORT, farmer, Fickling, Taylor Co., Ga., son of Theodrick and Elizabeth (Terrell) Montfort, was born in Greene county, Ga., in 1826. His paternal grandfather was John Montfort. He was a native of England, came to America and settled in Virginia just before the revolutionary war—during which he was a soldier in the patriot army—and afterward moved from Virginia to Georgia and settled in Putnam county. Mr. Montfort's father was born in Virginia, came to Georgia when a young man, and settled in Putnam county, where he engaged in merchandising. While living in this county he represented it a number of times in the general assembly. He afterward moved to Greene county, where, in addition to merchandising he engaged in farming. A few years later he removed to Crawford county, and thence to Talbot county, where he remained a number of years, and besides his other business ran a line of stages. His maternal grandparents were David and Mary (Munger) Terrell. He was a farmer, and his family was among the early settlers of Greene county. Mr. Montfort was raised on the farm, and received a limited common school education. Early in life he removed to Crawford county, farmed awhile and then went into general merchandise business in Knoxville. In 1851 he removed to Butler, Taylor Co., where he engaged in business until the war between the states was precipitated. During the war he was engaged in tanning for the Confederate government and soon after went into business at Reynolds, in Taylor county. After continuing this some years he sold out and retired to his farm, where he now lives, enjoying the fruits of his enterprise and labor. Mr. Montfort was married in 1847 to Miss Mary E. Dugger—born in Virginia in 1828—daughter of James and Elizabeth (Lucas) Dugger. He was a native of Virginia, a farmer, and migrated to Georgia and settled in Crawford county early in the century. Of the children born to them three are living: William T., Sarah E., married to Hugh Neisler, and Fannie T., married to William Neisler. Mrs. Montfort, who was an exemplary member of the Methodist church, died early in 1878. Mr. Montfort contracted a second marriage in 1878 with Miss Sarah A. Cates—born in Crawford county in 1836—daughter of Turner and Harriet (Walker) Cates. He was a native of North Carolina, moved to Georgia, and was among the early settlers of Crawford county.

HUGH NEISLER, farmer, Butler, Taylor Co., Ga., son of Hugh M. and Caroline (Howard) Neisler, was born in Lee county, Ala., in 1841. His great-grandfather, John Neisler, was born near Van Weil, kingdom of Wurtemberg, Germany. He migrated to America between 1730-40, and settled in Charleston, S. C., where he opened a shop and worked at his trade, shoemaking. As he prospered he invested his surplus earnings in negroes, and after some years went to Orangeburg district, S. C., where he ultimately became a large slave-owner and an extensive planter. His grandfather, Hugh Neisler (son of the above), was born in Cabarrus county, N. C. Having thoroughly prepared himself for the practice of medicine he migrated to Georgia and located at Athens, Clarke Co., where he married Miss Rachel, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Chiawing) Mitchell, established a fine practice, acquired a handsome competency, and reared and liberally educated his children—all of whom were born there. When Dr. Neisler settled in Athens there were Indians all around the town, and the few houses composing what was to become the leading classical city in the south, were clustered around the college buildings; the country around was sparsely populated and but small areas were under cultivation. There were then no artificial obstructions in the Oconee, and in their season shad were abundant, which the Indians caught and sold to the citizens at ten cents apiece. Mr. Neisler's father was born in Athens, March 4, 1804, was well educated, and graduated with honor from the university of Georgia. He then attended the medical lectures in Philadelphia, and graduated from one of the celebrated colleges at that city. As a science he held medicine in the highest appreciation, but he disliked the practice, and in a few years he retired from it and engaged in teaching. He taught in Columbus and at Summerville, Ala., with great success. He was a fine classical scholar, and could read many modern languages with ease. He also gave much attention to botany, and conducted an extensive correspondence with distinguished botanists in this country and Europe. He had a small farm and a delightful home about five miles from Butler, where he had a splendid orchard and vineyard, in attending which he took great delight. He lived to be seventy-nine years of age, and for thirty years before his death he had fully identified himself with, and taken the greatest interest in everything promising to promote the welfare of Taylor county. William Mitchell, great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was a son of William and Sarah (Letcher) Mitchell, and clandestinely married Miss Elizabeth Chiawing when but eighteen years of age. Coming to Georgia he settled in Clarke county and engaged in the practice of law, and died at the house of his father, four miles north of Athens, July 27, 1808. He left a son, William Letcher Mitchell (grand-uncle of Mr. Neisler), who attained to considerable distinction as a scholar and lawyer. He was born in Henry county, Va., in 1805, graduated from the university of Virginia in 1825 with the first honor, read law with Capt. John Semple—one of the most talented lawyers in the state—at Louisville, Ky., and was licensed to practice by Judges Perkle and Monroe. He returned to Georgia and taught in the academy of Hillsboro, Ga., in 1828-29, and in 1830 was appointed tutor of mathematics in the university of Georgia, a position which he held four years. He then returned to the practice of his chosen profession, in which he continued with success and distinction until he died. Mr. Neisler's maternal grandparents were John and Priscilla (Cheever) Howard. He was a native of England, but an eminent merchant of Salem, Mass., where he lived until he died in 1856. Mr. Neisler was reared on the farm, but received a good common school education; studied Latin and some of the higher branches of education. He enlisted in 1862 in Company E, Capt. W. S. Wallace, Forty-fifth Georgia regiment, participated in quite a number of important, as well as sanguinary battles, and experienced much hard service and many hardships. He was engaged in the following among other battles: Cedar Run, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Wilderness, Spottsylvania Court House, Jericho Ford, Turkey Ridge, Petersburg, etc. At Cedar Run he was wounded and sent to the hospital at Lynchburg, where he remained two months, and then returned to his command. He was taken prisoner near Petersburg and sent to Point Lookout, Md., where he remained three months. With considerable zest Mr. Neisler relates the following interesting incident: After the surrender, on or about June 1, 1865, Maj. Brady, in command of the post at Point Lookout, not satisfied with the hundreds of United States flags festooned and floating everywhere, while hundreds of prisoners were being paroled, conceived the idea of testing the loyalty of the ex-Confederates to the flag. So he proceeded to plant a lofty pole as a flag-staff in front of his office. The prisoners surrounding the office awaiting their parole papers, knowing the object, moodily and sadly watched the workers. In silence, and in some instances with bitterness, they looked on as the pole was raised, the flag hauled up and thrown to the breeze from its top. In silence they listened to Maj. Brady as he spoke eulogistically in praise of the stars and stripes and the Union they represent. Sorrowfully some of the utterances fell upon their ears, and with stern resolve and closed lips they resented his words and resisted his appeal. When he concluded and requested three cheers for the flag there was no applause—not a single response—the assemblage was as silent as the grave. The silence was absolutely painful—they disdained to display loyalty, however true, under apparent arbitrary military dictation. After the war he returned to his home, soon made money but lost it; made another start, and has since been as successful as he wished. In 1892, against his inclination and protest, he was nominated by the democrats to represent Taylor county in the general assembly, they asserting that he was the only man in the county who could defeat the populists. He was elected, and when the general assembly met and the name of Neisler was announced from Taylor, an unexpected whoop from the gallery startled the audience—Editor Wynne of the Fort Valley "Leader" couldn't repress his joy. In that body he was placed on the committees on the deaf and dumb asylum, general agriculture, and excuses of members. Mr. Neisler was married in 1873 to Miss Sarah Early Montfort, born in Taylor county in 1852, daughter of Joel E. and Mary E. (Dugger) Montfort. Of the children which have blessed this union four are living: Martha M., Hugh Mitchell, Willie E. and Sarah Letcher. Mr. Neisler is a royal arch Mason, and himself and wife are eminently exemplary and useful members of the Methodist church. He enjoys to the fullest extent the confidence and unaffected esteem of his fellow countrymen, and, socially, no family ranks higher than his.

JAMES J. RUFFIN, farmer, Reynolds, Taylor Co., Ga., son of James and Margaret (Veal) Ruffin, was born in Bertie county, N. C., in 1814. His grandfather was a native of North Carolina, and was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Mr. Ruffin's father was born in North Carolina and migrated thence to Georgia and settled in Jones county in 1814 for life. He was a carpenter by trade and was also a large slave owner. He was much respected. Mr. Ruffin's grandparents on his mother's side, Thomas and Margaret Veal, were natives of North Carolina, and spent their lives there. He was a soldier during the revolutionary war. Mr. Ruffin was reared on the farm, and received a fairly good education for the times at the old familiar log school house. In 1836 he enlisted in Capt. Russell's company, Col. Hardeman's regiment, for the Seminole war, and served three months. In 1864 he enlisted in the state militia under Capt. Beal and was principally assigned to post duty. After the war, without capital, he began merchandising in Butler, and succeeded beyond his most sanguine anticipations. Mr. Ruffin has been twice married. In 1837 he was married to Miss Sarah Everett, born in Hancock county in 1816, daughter of Drury and Elizabeth (Smith) Everett. He was born in Washington county, Ga., and when a young man moved to Taylor county, where he farmed all his life. Of the children which blessed this union four are living: Henry J., Margaret, Sarah and George T. Mrs. Ruffin, who was a member of the Methodist church, died in 1888. In 1889 Mr. Ruffin was married to Mrs. Carrie Lucas, born in Georgia in 1839, daughter of Thomas and Martha E. (Wright) Shines. He was born in North Carolina, moved early in life to Georgia and settled in Taylor county, where he lived and farmed until he died. Mrs. Ruffin is a member of the Methodist church, and Mr. Ruffin and his family are much respected in their community.

THOMAS L. WATERS, farmer, Butler, Taylor Co., Ga., son of Williford and Mary (Akin) Waters, was born in Abbeville district, S. C., in 1839. His grandfather on his father's side was Willis Waters. He was a native of Ireland, emigrated to America before the revolutionary war and settled in South Carolina, and was a soldier in the patriot army during the conflict. Mr. Waters' father was born in South Carolina, was a farmer, came to Georgia in 1847 and settled in Cobb county. His grandparent on his mother's side was Akin. He was born in South Carolina and was of Scotch descent. Reared on the farm and indifferently educated, he had just started in life when the war began. In 1861 he enlisted in Company G, Capt. Griffin, Sixth Georgia regiment. He was a participant in some of the most obstinately fought and most sanguinary battles of the war: Seven Pines, seven days' fight around Richmond, Manassas, Boonsboro, Sharpsburg, Fredericksburg, Second Cold Harbor, siege of Petersburg, Charleston, Ocean Pond, etc. On one occasion when on picket duty, he was taken prisoner, but escaped. With little cash ($1.25), but incalculable vigor and vim for capital, backed by courage and perseverance, he began anew life's battle. He embarked in a general merchandising business, made money and bought a farm. He has retired from mercantile life, and is now enjoying farm life and the good will and esteem of his fellow-citizens. Mr. Waters was married in 1866 to Miss Fannie McClendon, born in Talbot county, Ga., in 1844, daughter of Willis and Lucinda (Matthews) McClendon. He was born in Virginia, and when three years old came to Georgia with his father, who settled first in Washington county and afterward moved to Taylor county, where he died. No children were born to this marriage, and Mrs. Waters, an exemplary member of the Methodist church, died in 1868. In 1870 Mr. Waters married Miss Emma H. McLendon, born in Macon county, Ga., in 1851, daughter of Willis and Henrietta (Edwards) McLendon. Of the children which blessed this union four are living: Fannie, Emma L., Thomas E. and Roy S. Mr. Waters is a master Mason, and himself and wife are members of the Baptist church.

TELFAIR COUNTY.

REV. CHARLES D. ADAMS, McRae, Telfair Co., Ga., son of Dr. Samuel Adams, once an eminent physician of Thomasville, Thomas Co., Ga. (who died in 1888), was born in Thomasville, Ga., Jan. 30, 1855. He enjoys the distinction of belonging to a family which has been identified with the Methodist Episcopal church from its earliest history, some of whose members have not only sustained high and honorable relations to Methodism, but to the political history and official life of the nation. Mr. Adams himself has a natural fondness and aptitude for geology and agriculture. He was educated in the very excellent schools of Thomas county, particularly Fletcher institute. July 20, 1874, he was licensed to preach, was admitted to the South Georgia conference at its annual session the latter part of that year, and in 1878 was ordained elder by Bishop Holland N. McTyeire. He has been an itinerant ever since, and has been stationed at various important places, lastly at McRae, where, in addition to pastoral and other duties, he is acting as agent for the south Georgia college. Mr. Adams married Claudia B., daughter of Hardy Hodges, a prosperous farmer near Mill Ray, Bulloch Co., Ga., who has borne him seven children: Mary, fourteen years old; Lila, twelve years old; Samuel, ten years old; Wesley, eight years old; Belle, six years old; William, four years old, and Augusta, two years old. Mr. Adams is a master Mason, and was once a member of the Knights of Damon.

REV. JAMES DANIELLY ANTHONY, McRae, Telfair Co., Ga., presiding elder, Eastman district, south Georgia conference, M. E. church south, son of Rev. Whitfield and Lucinda (Miller) Anthony, was born in Abbeville district, S. C., Oct. 12, 1825. His father was a farmer and an itinerant Methodist preacher. His mother was a granddaughter of Thomas Miller, a native of Ireland, and her father held various offices of trust and responsibility in South Carolina. When Mr. Anthony was ten years old his parents moved to Georgia, where they died—his father at the advanced age of eighty-five years. Mr. Anthony was educated in the common schools and academies, principally at Vann's Valley academy, Floyd county, Ga. He was licensed to preach Oct. 26, 1846, and the following December was admitted to the old Georgia conference. He was ordained deacon by Bishop James O. Andrew, and ordained elder by Bishop Hubbard H. Kavanaugh. From the time he entered conference until now he has been actively engaged in the ministry, and during this eventful period he has traveled in the service of the Master nearly all over Georgia, from the Tennessee to the Florida line. With the exception of two years, when he was agent for the sustentation fund of south Georgia conference, he has been continued a presiding elder from the time he was first appointed. Mr. Anthony has traveled so long and so extensively in that portion of the state that people call him "bishop of the wire grass." His present district is one of the largest in the state. Mr. Anthony has been married three times. His first wife was Miss Emily, daughter of William and Elizabeth Baugh, of Gwinnett county, Ga., to whom he was married Nov. 23, 1847. Mr. Baugh was a well-to-do planter, and a prominent and zealous Methodist. By this marriage he had several children, all living and married: Tinnie, born in 1849; Mrs. H. A. Renfroe, merchant, Bridgeport, Ala.; William, born in 1851, planter, Johnson county, Ga., married Miss Isabella Sample, Cumming, Forsyth Co., Ga.; James F., born in 1853, graduate of the university of Georgia, journalist on the staff of the "Western Advocate," Asheville, N. C., married Miss Louisa Smith, of Tennessee; Bascom, born July, 1859, graduate of Jasper institute and Spring Hill institute, and now station preacher at Valdosta, south Georgia conference, married Miss Bessie McCullough, Mt. Vernon, Montgomery Co., Ga.; Lillie, born in 1860, first married Rev. O. W. Samples, north Alabama conference, who died, and is now the wife of Daniel McEachin, hotel-keeper, Ailey, Montgomery Co., Ga. His first wife died in 1865, and Mr. Anthony in 1866 married her niece, Miss Elizabeth J. Alexander, daughter of Thomas W. Alexander, a merchant, by whom he had six children: Mark, born in 1869, graduated at Atlanta Medical college and is located at Sycamore, Irwin Co., Ga.; Mamie, wife of Dr. L. W. Johnson, Baxley, Appling Co., Ga., who has represented the county in the general assembly; Marvin and Belle (twins), born in 1875; Mattie, born in 1878; Harry, born in 1880. His second wife died in 1888. His third wife was Mrs. Anna (Biggers) Wiggins, widow of Rev. L. G. Wiggins. Mr. Anthony is an advanced Mason, a member of a council of Royal and Select Masters and a member of the I. O. O. F. In addition to his religious and denominational labor, Mr. Anthony is an ardent and active worker in the temperance and educational fields, in which causes his powerful influence is extensively and influentially felt.

MAJ. GEORGE SMITH DAVIS, agent for the Standard Oil company, McRae, Telfair Co., Ga., was born in Somerton, Belmont Co., Ohio, Dec. 10, 1837. On his father's side he is of Welsh and on his mother's side he is of German descent, the Ball family being of the same lineage as that of Mary Washington. Although indebted to the common or public schools of Ohio for a good education in the rudiments, Maj. Davis' general literary and business proficiency is the result of subsequent study, observation and experience. In early manhood he taught common school and music about four years, and then engaged as clerk in a dry goods store at Malta, Ohio, one year. When hostilities began in 1861 and President Lincoln called for 75,000 troops, he was the first man in his county to volunteer. He served three months with the Seventeenth Ohio regiment, and then went home and raised a company for three years' service—Company D, Ninety-seventh Ohio regiment—of which he was elected captain, and with which he remained during the war. Early in 1864 he was commissioned major. He was in the army of the Cumberland and participated in all the battles fought by it. When Chattanooga was taken he was the first Federal to enter the town, and was made provost marshal. At the battle of Franklin, Tenn., he received four wounds, one of which took effect in the center of his forehead, causing the entire loss of the left and partial loss of the right eye. Sixteen days later, while still bandaged, he went into battle at Nashville, where he was wounded in the back of the head. On the termination of the war he was brevetted lieutenant-colonel for personal gallantry. In 1870 he embarked in mercantile business at Athens, Ohio, but abandoned it to accept a position with the Standard Oil company, which he retained three years. He was a member of the firm of Chess, Carley company, southern branch of the Standard Oil company. After conducting that business two years, he organized a company to construct a railway from Mobile, Ala., to Helena, Ark., which, after building fifty miles, failed. Re-engaging with the Standard Oil company, he has continued with them until the present time. He is a turpentine buyer for the state of Georgia. Maj. Davis came to Georgia in 1877, and in 1888 married Miss Beachum, of Appling county. The major is a master Mason and a member of the Baptist church.

EDWIN J. DORMINY, physician and druggist, McRae, Telfair Co., Ga., son of Willis Dorminy, was born in Irwin county, Ga., Feb. 8, 1867. His father is a well-to-do farmer, and has represented Irwin county in the general assembly. He received a good practical education at the county schools and then entered the medical department of the university of Maryland, Baltimore, in 1888, and was graduated in 1890. He then located in Irwin county, where he remained four years, then removed and settled in McRae. He has built up a good practice, and in connection with that established a flourishing drug store. Besides these he is interested in a general merchandise store in Irwin county which is doing an extensive business. Dr. Dorminy is very enterprising and with the energy and financial capacity he manifests will be sure to win success. Mr. Dorminy was married in 1893 to Miss Alice Campbell, of Telfair county. He is a master Mason.

D. A. GRAHAM, farmer, Towns, Telfair Co., Ga., was born in Gadsden Co., Fla., Nov. 8, 1830. His father was a farmer and moved from Florida to Georgia about 1860 and settled in Telfair county, where he died in 1867. Mr. Graham received a good common school education, and when he arrived at manhood began farming. During the war he was a member of Company B, Seventh regiment, Georgia militia. After the war he settled in Telfair county and resumed farming, which he has followed successfully since. He has served as justice of the peace to the satisfaction of the people many years, and in 1875-76 represented Telfair county in the general assembly. He has been on the board of county commissioners several years and rendered valuable service. He is a member in good standing of Lumber City lodge, F. & A. M., and has served as master of his lodge several years. Mr. Graham's life and character recommend him wherever he is known. He was married in 1851 to Miss Jemima, daughter of Archibald Campbell, of Telfair county. Mr. and Mrs. Graham had five children: John C., born in 1851, died 1868; Dr. Daniel W., born in 1853, died in 1882; Alex. B., born 1855; Andrew J., born 1858, deceased; Mary A., born 1860, was married to Jacob M. Clement, 1879, and was left a widow in 1883. She is now the wife of C. H. Smith, of Towns.

PROF. WILLIAM ALLEN HUCKABEE, president South Georgia college, McRae, Telfair Co., Ga., was born in Fannin county, Ga., July 2, 1857. His father, Patten M. Huckabee, was a Methodist minister, and died in 1864. His scholastic opportunities were so meager that, at the age of seventeen he could not read. Later he attended Nacoochee valley (White county, Ga.) high school, where he was prepared for college, and, going afoot sixty miles, entered Emory college, Oxford, Newton Co., Ga., in 1880, and graduated as an A. B. in 1884. Immediately after graduating he entered the ministry, and was admitted into the South Georgia conference, M. E. church, south; and was stationed at Columbus, Ga., two years. He was next on Brooks county circuit two years, and the year following was in Mitchell county. The next two years he was in Montgomery county; and, while on this work, delivered a series of lectures on education in that section, and projected the South Georgia college under the auspices of the South Georgia conference, M. E. church, south. After it was established he was made its president—a position he has filled with consummate ability, and has continuously held since. The institution is established on a firm basis, and is in a flourishing condition. The faculty consists of eight instructors of excellent reputation and adaptedness to their vocation. There are 233 students, from four states, enrolled. It ranks with the best schools in the state, is eligibly situated, with an extensive territory whence to draw support, and has before it a promising future of prosperity.

and usefulness. Prof. Huckabee was married to Miss Hassie Townsend, of Mitchell county, Aug. 17, 1887, by whom he has had five children: Thaddeus T., born July 10, 1888; Henry Guy, born Nov. 20, 1889; Bessie Lee, born Nov. 24, 1891; Leo Bennett, born Jan. 23, 1893; Atlas Haygood, born Oct. 30, 1894. The professor is a master Mason, and a member of the college fraternity of Phi Delta Theta.

JOHAN D. M'LEOD, merchant and real-estate dealer, Lumber City, Telfair Co., Ga., son of Alexander T. McLeod, was born in Montgomery county, Ga., June 7, 1846. His father was a farmer, but was clerk of the superior court twenty years, and represented the county in the general assembly two terms. He died in 1876, leaving eight living children, of whom the subject of this sketch was the fourth born. Mr. McLeod's education, like that of most youths growing up at the time, was limited, but it was the best to be obtained at the county schools at that time. When the war began he was too young to enter the service, but toward the close of hostilities he was in the "detached" service. On reaching manhood he entered the commercial world in Darien, Ga., and remained in business there until his father died, when he returned to take charge of his estate, finally settling in Lumber City, in 1878, where he is engaged in a general merchandise and real estate business. He represented the county in 1880-81, and the fifteenth senatorial district in 1886-87 in the general assembly, was chairman of the committee on corporations. Mr. McLeod was married to Miss Annie C., daughter of Matthew Sharp, of Montgomery county, Ga., Oct. 25, 1882, who has borne him three boys: Robert Burns, John D., Jr., and Alexander T. Mr. McLeod is a Knight Templar Mason, has filled various offices in master Masons' lodge, and is a member of St. Omar commandery, Knights Templar, Macon, Ga.

MAJ. DANIEL F. M'RAE, merchant and farmer, Lumber City, Telfair Co., Ga., son of Alexander B. McRae, was born in McRae, Telfair Co., Ga., April 22, 1822. His father was one of the early settlers of the county, and founded the town of McRae. He was a farmer and mechanic, and for many years a magistrate. He died in 1849, leaving thirteen children. Maj. McRae received a good common-school education, and when sixteen years of age entered upon mercantile life in Lumber City, Ga. He continued in business until 1882. In addition to the store he has always operated a large farm. In 1849-50 he represented the Sixth senatorial district in the general assembly, contemporary with ex-Gov. Joseph E. Brown. Maj. McRae was a member of the Fifteenth and Fifty-sixth regiments of Georgia militia, held three commissions as major, and was brevetted colonel. He was in command of the police brigade during the siege of Atlanta; was in front of the army marching through Georgia, and at the battle of Griswoldville, near Macon, Ga., he was severely wounded. Maj. McRae was married to Miss Christian F. McRae—not a relative—in 1854, but who died in 1858, leaving three children, all of whom are still living: Duncan L., broker, in Macon, Ga., partner of W. J. Solomon; Alexander Eliot, druggist, Lumber City, and farmer; and Christian Florence, married John H. Ryals, who died. She afterwards married Capt. John L. Day, Lumber City. She has one child fifteen years old. Maj. McRae, in 1862, married Miss Marion McRae, daughter of Judge Duncan, one of the most distinguished citizens in that portion of the state. Seven children were the fruit of this union: Glynn Preston, born November, 1862, deceased; James Henry, born Dec. 24, 1863, graduated from United States Military academy, West Point, N. Y., is first lieutenant, Third United States infantry, author of several military works on tactics, and was married to Miss Stow, of Montana; Janie, born March 24, 1866, married W. B. Folsom, merchant, McRae; Anna, born May 12, 1867, deceased; Claudia Ann, born July 31, 1869, deceased; Leon Quincy, born Jan. 26, 1872, official at Atlanta of the E. T., Va. & G. railway; and Max Lamar, born Oct. 4, 1875, reading law. Maj. McRae is a Mason of forty years' standing, and is a member of a royal arch chapter.

MALCOLM NICHOLSON M'RAE, merchant and farmer, Lumber City, Telfair Co., Ga., son of Alexander B. McRae (and brother of Daniel F.) was born in Telfair county, Ga., July 9, 1818. His father was one of the oldest settlers in the county, founded the town of McRae, and was one of the builders of the first steamboats that ran on the Ocmulgee and Oconee rivers. His educational advantages were limited to an ordinary business education, but he has made good use of what he had. In 1837—when nineteen years of age—he commenced merchant life in Lumber City, and continued it until the beginning of the present year (1894). After the war he embarked in the manufacture of turpentine at Towns, Telfair county. During the war he was commissary for the counties of Telfair and Coffee, and had charge of the steamer on the Ocmulgee for forwarding supplies to the army. In 1859-60 he represented the county in the general assembly, and for several years was a justice of the inferior court. He was also a member of the constitutional convention of 1877. Mr. McRae has been married twice. In 1840 he was married to Miss Catharine McCrimmon, of Montgomery county, who died in 1856, leaving five children. In 1868 he married Miss Catharine Clemmons, by whom he has had four children—but only one is living. His oldest daughter was married first to Frank Tillman, of Texas, who died of yellow fever. After his death she married Gen. Elias Earle, of Florida, who also died, leaving her a widow. His oldest son, Alexander C., who was a member of the Georgia Hussars, died in 1874. Thomas Jefferson married a daughter of Gen. Earle, and is prosperous merchant in Hawthorne, Fla.; John W., who was a prominent merchant in Melrose, Fla., died in 1888, leaving three children: Bruce, Thomas and Pearl. Charity Emma, an invalid, resulting from a fall from the arms of a careless nurse, is a graduate of Wesleyan Female college, Macon, Ga., and is a most excellent musician. Dr. Bartow McRae, his remaining son, is located in Atlanta. Mr. McRae is a royal arch Mason.

FRANK R. MANN, sawmill owner and farmer, Jacksonville, Telfair Co., Ga., was born in Tattnall county, Ga., Oct. 6, 1856. His father, born Sept. 10, 1804, was a thrifty farmer, highly esteemed as a citizen, and represented Tattnall county in the general assembly two terms. He died in 1886, leaving eight children, of whom the subject of this sketch was the youngest. Mr. Mann had the benefit of only a limited education, but was fortunate to have for instructor, part of the time, Hon. S. D. Bradwell, ex-state school commissioner. In 1876 Mr. Mann taught school in Appling county. He then went into the timber business in Tattnall county; but removed in 1880 to Jacksonville, continued his timber business, carried on a farm, and added sawmilling to his enterprises. In 1884 he engaged in the turpentine industry in Berrien county. He was a justice of the peace, in 1885-89, and represented Telfair county in 1890-91 in the general assembly, and served on the committees on finance, railroads and general agriculture, and on the special military committee. Mr. Mann was married in 1880, to Miss Henrietta, daughter of Sim Sikes, of Montgomery county, who has borne him three children: Aleph Victoria, born Aug. 6, 1882; Willie, born Jan. 7, 1884, and Frank, born Dec. 26, 1885. Mr. Mann is a master Mason, and was secretary of his lodge eight years.

JOSEPH W. NEAL, physician and surgeon, Scotland, Telfair Co., Ga., was born in Harris county, Ga., July 26, 1865. His father, Thomas J. Neal, is a large and prosperous farmer, and a very prominent and influential citizen. He represented the twenty-fifth senatorial district in the general assembly in 1882-3. Dr. Neal received a good academic education, preparatory to entering Atlanta Medical college, from which he was graduated in 1889. He at first located in Atlanta, but moved to, and located in Scotland the same year, where his success has exceeded his most sanguine expectations. In the spring of 1894 he took a post-graduate course at the New York polyclinic. He has already secured a large and remunerative practice, and is the medical examiner of the New York Life, Mutual Life, and Equitable Life Insurance associations, and for the Providence Savings, Knights of Honor, and others. Dr. Neal was married to Miss Sarah, daughter of D. B. Graham, of Scotland, in 1890. He is a Knight of Honor.

JOSIAH B. REYNOLDS, physician and druggist, Lumber City, Telfair Co., Ga., son of George and Mahala M. (Thrower) Reynolds, was born in Newton county, Ga., Sept. 5, 1849. His father was a merchant, was also engaged in farming, and was a railway contractor and constructionist. Dr. Reynolds was educated at Conyers high school and is a graduate of Emory college, Oxford, Ga. He entered Atlanta Medical college in 1876, attended two courses of lectures and was graduated in 1878. He located in Lumber City to practice his profession, and in connection with it established a drug store, and while building up a fine practice, has done a good drug business. Dr. Reynolds has been twice married. He married his first wife, Miss Fannie R. Baker, of Montgomery county, March 4, 1886, who died March 27, 1886. Aug. 6, 1890, he was married to Miss Mary E., daughter of John F. Gay, Conyers, Ga., by whom he has had three children: Nellie Daisy, born Oct. 25, 1891; Leila Josephine, born Jan. 19, 1893, and Lottie Erselle, born May 30, 1894. Dr. Reynolds was a member of the K. A. College fraternity.

JAMES C. RYALS, physician and farmer, Lumber City, Telfair Co., Ga., was born May 12, 1834. His father, John B. Ryals, was a farmer, an active and influential local politician and was a justice of the inferior court quite a number of years. He died in 1863. Though his education was limited to the common schools of his time and locality, Dr. Ryals attained fair scholarship and taught school four years, 1854-58, in Montgomery, Telfair and Tattnall counties, in the meantime preparing for his chosen profession. He attended his first course of lectures at the medical college of Georgia at Augusta and his second course at Savannah Medical college, whence he was graduated in 1860. During the war he saw no field service, but remained at home and practiced in soldiers' families, excepting some hospital service around Atlanta during the siege and toward the close of the war. At this time and after the war he had a very large country practice. In addition to meeting all the exacting demands of such a practice he has always conducted a large farm. In 1892 he removed to Lumber City. Dr. Ryals was married to Miss Anna, daughter of William Mann, of Tattnall county, June 24, 1860. This union has been blessed with eight children: John B., born Jan. 28, 1862, druggist, Cordele, Dooly Co., Ga., married to Miss Emma Bussy, of Telfair county, who soon died; he was next married to Miss Emma, daughter of Dr. John Mobley, of Montgomery county; William M., born Dec. 7, 1863, graduated from Atlanta Medical college, married Miss Alice Meigs, of Alabama, and located in Florida; Ella V., eldest daughter, born June 7, 1866, married Dr. L. Clements, Montgomery county; James W., born March 3, 1868, druggist, McRae, Ga.; Ophelia E., born April 18, 1870, wife of Dr. A. C. Clements, Adel, Berrien Co., Ga.; Mary J., born March 6, 1872, died Sept. 6 same year; Aleph A., born June 23, 1873, died June 1, 1875, and Charles H., born June 1, 1875.

Mrs. Ryals died April 21, 1895. Dr. Ryals is a master Mason and professionally and socially enjoys an enviable popularity.

THOMAS J. SMITH, farmer and stock-raiser, Nielly, Telfair Co., Ga., son of C. C. Smith, farmer, was born in Telfair county, March 31, 1842. His father was county tax collector a number of years, was popular and highly respected, and died in 1860. Mr. Smith was reared on a farm and was educated in the county schools. In 1862 he enlisted in Company B, Forty-ninth Georgia regiment, and served at the front during the war. Although thus in active service and often in exposed and perilous situations, he was so fortunate as to escape being sick or wounded. Returning from the war he resumed his farming operations, entered more largely into stock-raising, and about ten years ago invested capital in the manufacture of naval stores. He has been successful in all his undertakings. In 1872 he was elected to represent the county in the general assembly, and served one term. In 1880 he was elected to represent the fifteenth senatorial district in the general assembly two years (one term), and in 1892 was again elected to represent the same district; was made chairman of the committee on the deaf and dumb asylum, and appointed a member of several other committees. He has also been a member of the executive committee of the Georgia State Agricultural society. Mr. Smith has been twice married: first to Mrs. Nielly (McKay) Clemmons, by whom he had two children, yet living: Frederick A., born in 1875, now a student at Mercer university, Macon, Ga., and Eva May, born in 1877, a graduate of Wesleyan Female college, Macon, Ga. His second marriage was to Miss Eulah Peterson, of Montgomery county. Mr. Smith has been worshipful master of Lumber City Masonic lodge No. 199, Lumber City, Ga., and a member of W. T. McArthur chapter, royal arch Mason, also at Lumber City. He is at present vice-president of the eleventh congressional district for the State Agricultural society.

TERRELL COUNTY.

ANDREW JACKSON BALDWIN, merchant and manufacturer, Dawson, Terrell Co., Ga., son of Moses H. and Elizabeth (Miller) Baldwin, natives respectively of Georgia and North Carolina, was born near Cuthbert, Randolph Co., Ga., in 1847. His father was born in what is now Bibb county about 1814, and both parents dying he was left an orphan when he was about ten years old. He grew up as best he could, and educated himself. He engaged in business in Macon with an elder brother until the latter part of 1830, when he went to Randolph county, where, in 1841, he married and engaged prosperously in farming until 1850. Trading his farm for land in what is now Terrell county, he settled in January, 1850, where Dawson now stands, and continued farming. In 1856 the town was laid off and platted, and in 1858 was incorporated, and Mr. Baldwin's father built the first residence in the then new and now enterprising and prosperous city of Dawson. He now added a merchandise business to his farming, and operated a mill just over the line in Calhoun county. He was very successful in his various enterprises until the war between the states occurred, when, besides valuable real estate holdings, he owned 100 slaves. He was active and energetic in business, and a shrewd trader. In politics he was an old-line whig, and was postmaster at Dawson twenty years. He was a master Mason, and himself and wife were members of the Methodist church. He died in Dawson in 1885, aged seventy-one years, and his widow died Jan. 3, 1894, aged seventy-two years. They were the parents of nine children: Martha E., who married R. T. Spearman, who as captain went with the Panola Rifles, of Dawson, into the Confederate service, and died in Virginia during the war; later she married R. T. Harper, Atlanta, in which city she died; John Wiley, partner of A. J.; A. J., the subject of this sketch, and his twin brother, William R.; Lewis Spaight, deceased; Moses H., deceased; Mary Matilda, deceased; Sarah, widow of J. W. Turner; Mary Spaight, wife of D. S. Ferguson, Dawson. Mr. Baldwin was reared in Dawson and attended the schools there until he was seventeen years old, when he enlisted in the Fifth regiment, Georgia reserves, and joined Gen. Hood's army. He participated in the battle of Jonesboro, and was with the obstructionist forces in front of Gen. Sherman when he was marching through Georgia and the Carolinas. He was wounded at Rivers' bridge by having both bones of his fore-arm broken, was sent to the hospital and was afterward furloughed and came home. His regiment surrendered at Bentonville, N. C. Soon after his return home he engaged in a general merchandising business with his father, and in 1868 went into business for himself. In 1880 he put up a large gin-nery and mill, and six years later added a planing mill and machine shop. Besides these individual enterprises he is interested in the oil mill and compress companies at Dawson. In 1891 the Baldwin three-story brick block, modern architecture and appointments, one of the finest in that part of the state, and an ornament to the city, was built. Mr. Baldwin, of untiring industry, never still, personally looks after all his enterprises, even to the minutest details; does all his own buying, and as this recital demonstrates, is a far-seeing and eminently progressive citizen. The esteem in which he is held is shown by the fact that he has repeatedly been elected an alderman, was early in life elected mayor at intervals, and then in 1892 elected again and re-elected in 1893 without opposition. Mr. Baldwin was happily married in Dawson in 1871 to Miss A. E., daughter of John H. Crouch, formerly of Butler, Taylor Co., Ga., where she was born and reared. Nine children have blessed this union. Those living at home are: William R., Andrew W., Florence A., Wiley L., Earnest, Moses C. and Alberta E. Two are dead—Lizzie, first-born, who died when eight months old, and an unnamed infant. Mr. Baldwin is a Knight of Honor, a member of the Royal Arcanum and has taken all the degrees in masonry. Himself and family are members of the Methodist church, of which he is one of the trustees. He is one of the most influential citizens of the community, and his delightful home and interesting family are deservedly popular.

J. C. GUERRY, merchant and planter, Chickasawhatchie, is a son of J. P. and Mary A. (Lowry) Guerry. He was born July 6, 1836, and his early days were spent on the farm and attending school. When the civil war broke out he was among the first to volunteer and joined the Twelfth Georgia Volunteer infantry under Gen. Joe Johnston and remained in that command until he lost part of a hand and was badly wounded in the ankle. He then returned home and after farming awhile engaged in the mercantile business, which he still continues. He owns a farm of 300 acres, which he operates in connection with his business. Mr. Guerry was married to Rebecca A. Tison, a native of Georgia. They have one child, which was born in 1875, Jessie. Mr. and Mrs. Guerry are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. He has been justice of the peace for ten years, resigning in 1893.

ELI G. HILL, planter, Bronwood, Terrell Co., Ga., son of David B. and Matilda (Spencer) Hill, was born in Baldwin county, Ga., Jan. 2, 1820. His paternal grandfather, Robert Hill, was a son of one of three brothers who came from Ireland before the revolutionary war, settled in Virginia, and served as a captain in the patriot army. After the war the brothers separated and the Georgia branch of the family lost track of the others. Mr. Hill's grandfather came to Georgia when a young man, on business, and being favorably impressed with the country determined to make it his home. He was a great talker, and the mixture of the Irish brogue with his English only made him the more interesting and popular, and he became much in demand as an auctioneer at public sales. He was thrice married. The offspring of his first marriage were: Thomas, who served as a volunteer soldier in one of the earlier Indian wars; and Olivia, who married, and reared a small family. His second marriage was to a Miss Bailey—a relative of the Baileys at Griffin, Ga. By this marriage he had six children: David B.; Hiram H., who, after marrying, died leaving three children; James A., who served as sheriff of Baldwin county, and died in 1842, leaving six children; Eli S., who after his marriage settled in Walton county, Ga., represented that county in the general assembly, and, in 1848, went to Texas; Charles, who married and moved to Arkansas, and settled near Arkadelphia; Rebecca, who married Robert Brown and settled in Crawford county, Ga., and after living there twenty years moved to Macon county, Ga., where herself and husband died, leaving a small family, some of whom are living in California. His third wife was a Miss Phinney, by whom he had no children. In 1823 he was killed by being thrown from a horse when returning from a sale. Mr. Hill's father was born at what was then known as "Shoulder Bone," in what is now Hancock county (laid off in 1793), July 5, 1792, and was raised and educated in Hancock and Baldwin counties. He remained on the old home place—included in Baldwin county when laid out in 1803—as a planter and stock raiser, in which he was very successful. Besides a large body of land he owned 103 slaves at his death, which occurred Dec. 31, 1843, in his fifty-second year. Politically he was an ardent and active old-line whig, but not an office seeker, as he would never accept office. His wife was born in Louisville (then the capital of Georgia) in 1795. Her family, the Spencers, were old settlers and prominent; an uncle, Col. Mowbrey, being an officer of the state government. They were the parents of eleven children: Mary, married Col. R. S. Williams, both dead; Caroline A., married J. W. Lightfoot, who died in ten months—then she married T. A. Goodwin, both dead; Eli G., our subject; Elizabeth R., near Dallas, Texas, widow of L. D. Holstein; Melvina, Albany, Ga., widow of Thomas Godwin, formerly of Milledgeville; Olivia, Austin, Texas, widow of F. K. Wright; David B., on the home place, Baldwin county; Jane A., married Ned Millner, Titus county, Texas; Josephine Ann, deceased wife of William Ross, Dallas, Texas; Melissa A., Milledgeville, widow of Ed White; John L., enlisted in Fourth Georgia regiment, died of measles, Camp Jackson, Norfolk, Va., Aug. 1, 1861. Mr. Hill was principally reared and received his primary education in Baldwin county at the common schools; and afterward attended Oglethorpe university, then flourishing at Midway, Baldwin Co., one of his college mates being Gen. Phil Cook, secretary of state of Georgia, lately deceased. Returning home he was variously employed until 1839, when he moved to what was then Lee county, where, with two negro boys and 200 acres of land presented him by his father, he started in life for himself. He still owns the place, on which he lived until a few years ago, when he moved to Bronwood. In the Creek Indian war he was a member of Capt. Gaither's cavalry company, for which, in 1850, he received a land bounty. When mustered into the service he was only sixteen years old, the youngest member of the company, and is now one of only three survivors of the company—the other two being Judge A. H. Hansell, Thomasville, and Jacob Gunn, Milledgeville. He was a member—and chairman—of the first board of supervisors to look after jurors, continuing on the same eleven or twelve years. He was also a justice of the inferior court for many years. During the unpleasantness he was appointed one of five commissioners in the county to look after the soldiers' families in Terrell county; and in 1878 he was elected to represent the county in the general assembly. Mr. Hill has taken a great interest in every movement proposed which in his judgment would advance the county materially and morally, always supporting candidates best fitted for the position sought—himself neither seeking nor declining office. It has been the special solicitude and delight of his life so to educate his children that they would be intelligent, moral and useful members of society. Himself well educated, well informed generally, of refined thought and manners, he ranks high in all the walks of life. Mr. Hill was happily married Oct. 2, 1842, to Miss Annie V., daughter of P. O. Paris, Warrenton, Ga., where she was born in 1825, and received her early education. In 1841 she graduated from Wesleyan Female college, Macon, Ga. She was a life-long, exemplary and useful member of the Methodist church, and died April 17, 1889, having been the mother of thirteen children: Eugene B., enlisted in Sumter light guards, Americus, Ga., Fourth Georgia regiment, in 1861, and was killed July 18, 1864, at Snicker's gap, Shenandoah valley, on Early's retreat from Washington, D. C.; Sarah E., Mrs. Frank Gyles, Americus, Ga.; George O., merchant, Bronwood; Anna S., Mrs. M. A. Marks, died in Florida; Alma C., farming near Bronwood; David B., died in Americus, April, 1893, leaving a wife and six children; Mollie E., single, at home; Myrta V., a graduate of Wesleyan Female college, at home; James J., merchant, Bronwood, Ga.; Carrie A., deceased wife of G. C. Price, Macon, Ga.; John L., on the old home place, Terrell county; Inez, Mrs. Dr. N. B. Drewry, Griffin, Ga.; Jessie E., died when two years old. Delightfully domiciled, prosperous, highly and universally respected, and surrounded by an interesting family and appreciative friends, he is pleasantly passing his declining years, patiently awaiting the final summons.

ALMMA C. HILL, planter, Bronwood, Terrell Co., Ga., son of Judge Eli G. and Annie V. (Paris) Hill, was born on the family homestead in what is now Terrell (then Lee) county, in 1850. His boyhood was passed on the plantation, and he was educated in the common schools of the county and Rylander academy at Americus. The war between the states interfering, he failed to receive the thorough education intended for him. He remained at home until 1871, when he engaged as agent for the El Paso Stage company, continuing four years. In 1875 he returned and conducted a saw mill and lumber business for several years, and then located at his present home, about six miles east of Dawson, where he has since been engaged in farming. He takes considerable interest, and is very active in politics, but is very conservative. In 1890 he was elected to represent the eleventh senatorial district in the general assembly without opposition; was chairman of the committee on immigration and labor; was very active in his efforts in behalf of the bill placing the telegraph and express companies under the supervision of the railroad commissioners, and was made chairman of the sub-committee appointed on that subject. In 1894 he was elected to represent the county in the general assembly. He is a successful farmer, public-spirited and popular. Mr. Hill was married Jan. 18, 1882, to Miss Ella T., daughter of Dr.

M. G. Tenderich

S. B. Hawkins, of Americus, Sumter Co., Ga., where she was born and educated. Two sons—Cooper and David B.—have blessed this union. Mrs. Hill is a consistent member of the Presbyterian church.

JAMES J. HILL, merchant, Bronwood, is the son of E. G. Hill and Anna V. Paris. Mr. Hill was born Dec. 25, 1855, and was educated in the common schools of Terrell county. When twenty-one years of age he accepted a position with a mercantile firm in Americus, Ga., and was there employed two years. At the end of that time his experience and knowledge of the business led him to join hands with a partner, and the firm of Hill & Simpson was established. This partnership was continued to 1887, when it was dissolved, and Mr. Hill took in as his partner his brother, G. O. Hill. This firm conducts a large general merchandise and supply store in Bronwood. Judge E. G. Hill, father of the above boys, is living in Bronwood a retired life. He is one of Terrell county's leading citizens and best men. Mr. James J. Hill was married in 1886 to Willie Dozier, a daughter of L. P. Dozier of Quitman county. To this union have been born three children, the living being Ethel and Albert P. Mr. Hill was postmaster from 1878 to 1889, under a republican administration, though he is a strong democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Hill are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Hill is a wide-awake business man who believes in keeping in the swim, and takes great interest in the progress and recent development of manufacturing possibilities of Georgia.

W. C. KENDRICK, physician, Dawson, Terrell Co., Ga., son of James C. and Mary (Butler) Kendrick—natives, respectively, of Georgia and Virginia—was born in Morgan county, Ga., in 1831. His paternal great-great-grandfather came from England to America before the revolutionary war, and settled in Virginia, where his great-grandfather, Burwell Kendrick, was born, entered the patriot army and served as a captain through the revolutionary war. He was a large planter, and two of his sons—Burwell, Jr., and Jones—came to Georgia when young men and settled in Wilkes county as planters. His grandfather, Burwell Kendrick, raised a large family of children, of which Mr. Kendrick's father, James C., was the youngest, and was born in 1801. When he was sixteen years old he volunteered and served under Gen. Jackson in the Florida war. On his return from the war he married, at the early age of eighteen, Miss Mary Butler, who was only sixteen years of age. To them eleven children were born, of whom only two—Burwell J., Waco, Texas, and the subject of this sketch—are now living. Soon after his marriage he entered the ministry as a Baptist, but later in life became a Universalist preacher, and died in that faith in Dawson, in 1884, aged eighty-three years. Politically he was an old-line whig. His wife died in Terrell county in 1877, aged seventy-three years. Dr. Kendrick was the sixth born of his parents' children, and was principally raised and educated in Meriwether county, to which his parents moved when he was quite young. After living there fourteen years, they moved to Sumter county, where they also lived fourteen years, when they moved to Webster county, where they lived fourteen years. In 1853, while the family was living in Sumter county, Dr. Kendrick commenced the study of medicine under Dr. William J. Reese, of Buena Vista, Marion Co., Ga., subsequently attended lectures at the university of New York, graduating in 1856, and locating that same year in Talbotton, Ga. He remained there until the spring of 1858, when he went to Fort Smith, Ark. When the war between the states began he returned to Georgia and enlisted as a private in the Twelfth Georgia regiment. A few months later he was appointed surgeon, in which capacity he served until the surrender, under Gen. Bragg and his successors. After the war he returned to Webster county, and resuming the practice of medicine, remained there until 1880, when he moved to and settled in Dawson, where he has since resided and built up a large and remunerative practice, and soon became a potent social and political factor. In 1876 and again in 1878 he was elected to represent Webster county in the general assembly. In 1888 he was elected to represent Terrell county in the same body, and again, after an interval of a term, in 1892. In one respect Dr. Kendrick has been quite unfortunate—he has suffered three times by fire—and each time lost nearly everything he had. But by force of character and his recognized ability in his profession, he has surmounted all difficulties, and keeps well to the front. He has served six years as jury commissioner, also on the board of education, and as one of the trustees of the college. Dr. Kendrick was first married to a Mrs. Kendrick, by whom he had one son—Herschell—who died when twenty-one years old. His second wife was Miss Emma C. Foster, of Georgia birth, daughter of Newett Foster, by whom he has had five children: James B., Nita, Mary, Belle, and Lester. He is a stanch democrat, and a royal arch Mason, has been W. M. of the lodge in Dawson, and on the finance committee ten years. He is a member of the Baptist church, of which he has been a deacon nearly twenty years, and Mrs. Kendrick is a valued member of the Methodist church.

JOHN T. LAMAR, physician and planter, Dawson, Terrell Co., son of Nathan and Sarah (Brooks) Lamar, was born in Irwin county, Ga., March 10, 1832. The Lamar family descended from three brothers who came from France early in the history of the colonies, one of whom settled in Georgia, one in Maryland, and one in a northern state. His grandfather, James Lamar, was descended from the one who settled in Georgia, married Miss Alsanah Howard, Jan. 20, 1790, moved to Alabama, among its earliest settlers, and became one of its most prominent citizens. He was a successful planter and prospered, and lived in Alabama many years. Bereaved of his wife he returned to Georgia and settled in Columbia county, where he died at an advanced age, a consistent member of the Baptist church. They had the following children: Osborn, who died young; Elizabeth, married a Mr. Barnett, who became quite prominent in Georgia, and died in Greene county, Ga., aged ninety-six; Nathan; Alsanah, married a Mr. Hatter, settled in Columbia county and died Sept. 22, 1871. John H., died in Alabama when a young man. Dr. Lamar's father, Nathan, was born in Alabama, Oct. 13, 1796, was educated in the common schools and grew to manhood in Columbia county; and lived there afterward some years. Thence he moved to Irwin county among its earliest settlers—and settled in the woods. He continued his residence there until about the time the Cherokee Indians were removed, when he moved his family and lived in Crawford and Houston counties until his death, which occurred in 1847. His wife died in Terrell county at the home of the subject of this sketch in 1889—a consistent member of the Baptist church. Five children were born to them: John T., the subject of this sketch; Henry G., born in 1837, planter, Dooly county; Frances, deceased, married first to a Mr. Shria, who died soon after the war, when she married T. Swearingen, and died in Dooly county in 1878; Elizabeth, died unmarried during the late war; Alsanah, Mrs. Gilmore, Dooly county. Dr. Lamar was principally raised and educated in Houston and Crawford counties in the "old-field" schools—and what education he received was obtained before he was twelve years old. In 1848 his mother removed with her family to the Seventh district, Dooly county, where he worked on the farm until January, 1852, when he went to Americus, Ga., and worked as a mechanic a few months. In May that year he went to Starkville, Lee county, and worked at his trade until 1855. During all these years he employed his nights and all his leisure time in study and improving his education. Early in 1855 he began the study of medicine with Drs. C. P. Sutton and James

W. W. LEE.

A. Tilman, Starksville, and in the winter of 1855-56 attended a course of lectures at the university of New York. About May 1, 1856, he commenced the practice in Lee county, and in January, 1857, located in Dawson, then a small town, and succeeded in building up a fine practice. In 1858 he attended lectures at the Atlanta Medical college, and after his graduation continued his practice in Terrell and adjoining counties. In April, 1862, he enlisted in a cavalry company, of which Rev. Tom Jordan was captain. This company became a part of what was known as the Second Regiment, Georgia cavalry, Col. William J. Lawton, which was stationed at Atlanta a while, then transferred to Chattanooga, where, with a Tennessee and the Eighth Texas regiments it became a part of what was known as the Forrest brigade of cavalry, and was assigned to the western army. He served with this command until the surrender, a portion of the time as assistant surgeon. In May, 1865, he returned to his family, then living at Botsford, Sumter Co., Ga.—having gone there in the summer of 1861—and resumed the practice of his profession. With no money and no property, and a growing family of small children, the doctor alludes to this as the darkest period of his life. In 1870 he moved back to Terrell county, where he successfully pursued his profession until his health failed. He owns several farms ranging from 50 to 350 acres each, in the northern part of the county. Dr. Lamar is a member of the distinguished family bearing that name so prominent in the states of Georgia, Mississippi and Texas, and in the national congress and judiciary; and, in his own right, stands high in his profession. Dr. Lamar was married Aug. 13, 1856, to Miss Nancy, daughter of Silas Mercer, a niece of Rev. Jesse Mercer, the eminent and erudite Baptist divine, and founder of Mercer university. She died July 3, 1858, leaving one son—James N., who died when three years old. Mrs. Lamar was an exemplary member of the Baptist church. In 1860 Dr. Lamar married Miss Sarah A., daughter of Hon. John Lawhon, of Terrell county, who had several times represented the county in the general assembly. Seven children have blessed this union: John N., Terrell county; Henry F., died when sixteen years of age; Leonidas Perry; Theophilus Lawhon; Lucius, a graduate of Atlanta Medical college before he was twenty-one, and two years later, of Tulane Medical college, New Orleans, La.; Lavansia; and Lizzie who is highly accomplished. Dr. Lamar is a democrat, was a member of the I. O. O. F. until his lodge forfeited its charter, is a Master Mason, has been a Worshipful Master, and is a member of the Grand Lodge. Himself and family are prominent and useful members of the Methodist church.

W. W. LEE, Dover, Terrell Co. (postoffice, Dawson), Ga., merchant and farmer, was born in what is now Terrell county, Nov. 24, 1836, where he was raised and educated. He is the youngest son of Noah P. and Mary Ann (Woolbright) Lee, and brother of Dr. J. T. Lee, whose sketch is given above. For a year after reaching maturity he sold merchandise and then engaged in the leather and shoe business near Dover for a short time. Disposing of this business he bought a tannery in Dawson and carried it on until 1869. Buying a farm near Dover he farmed two years, and then removed to Dawson where for four years he engaged in the warehouse and commission business, and then returned to his farm where he has since remained with the exception of four years merchandising in Dover. Mr. Lee did not enter the Confederate service as he was exempt on account of being engaged in the tannery, and having a contract with the Central railway to supply 600 hands with shoes. He, however, volunteered before Gen. Sherman reached Atlanta, and was with a command in his front, but was taken sick with the measles and returned home before the surrender of the city. Mr. Lee married a Mrs. Fulton of Dooly (formerly of Terrell) county, by whom he has had nine children: James P., now living in Texas, Lula S., Mrs. W. S. Thornton, merchant, Dover; Charles S., Dover, married in May, 1895; Mary Willa, married in December, 1894, to Rev. L. J. Ballard, of South Georgia Methodist Conference; Thomas R.; Gussie A.; Thomas, deceased; Ida, and Willie. Mr. Lee is a staunch democrat, and himself and family are members of the Methodist church. He is progressive and prosperous as a farmer and merchant, and himself and family stand high socially and financially.

JOHN T. LEE, physician and farmer, Dover, Terrell Co. (postoffice, Dawson), Ga., son of Noah P. and Mary Ann (Woobbright) Lee, was born in Lee county, Ga., Aug. 29, 1835. His paternal grandfather, Solomon P. Lee, was a native of Virginia, where he lived until after his marriage. He married a Miss McGlochlin and moved to North Carolina; after remaining there a few years they migrated to Georgia and settled in Wilkes county, where he lived many years and then removed to Henry county, where he died during the late war, aged ninety-six years. (The day before he died he walked three miles.) He was a volunteer soldier during the war of 1812-14. His wife, who was a member of the Primitive Baptist church, died some years before he did. Of six children born to them, Dr. Lee's father was the second born and the eldest son, and was born in Wilkes county in 1803. He was reared on the farm and received a limited education in the common schools of the county, and after marrying a Miss Woobbright, a lady of Scotch-Irish descent, he removed, August, 1835, to Lee county, Ga., and farmed near Starkville, leaving his family near Chickasawhatchie, where his wife died about 1840. He afterward married a Miss Hayes and settled for a time above Dover, later at a place two and a half miles from Dover, where he died in 1885, aged eighty-two years. He held the office of justice of the peace many years, was a true-blue democrat, and served as a soldier during the Cherokee Indian trouble. He was a member of the Methodist church, of which he was a steward. His last wife died in 1887. By his first marriage he had four sons: Daniel S., died in Dougherty county, Ga., in 1878; James F., enlisted in the first company from Terrell county that entered the Confederate service, and died in the winter of 1861-62, at White Sulphur Springs, Va.; J. T., the subject of this sketch, and W. W., merchant-farmer, Dover, Terrell Co., Ga. Dr. Lee attained to manhood in Terrell county and was educated in the common schools of the county. When of age he commenced the study of medicine under Drs. Janes & Graves, Dover, and after a year's study attended a course of lectures at the university of Nashville, Tenn. While there he suffered with bronchial affection and came home. Subsequently he went to Savannah and attended Oglethorpe Medical college, graduating in 1860. Returning to Dover he formed a partnership with Dr. Janes, his old preceptor, and engaged in the practice until March, 1862, when he enlisted in Company F, Fifty-first Georgia regiment. In the fall of that year he was detailed as steward of the field hospitals, in which capacity he served until the battle at Knoxville, and when Gen. Longstreet fell back Drs. Lee, Cotton and Pickett were left in charge of the field hospitals. While in the discharge of this duty he was taken prisoner and sent to Fort Delaware, where he was imprisoned until March, 1865. During his service he had two narrow escapes—a shot on one occasion passing through the coat just over the shoulder, and on another occasion a shot passed through his hat. Returning home he farmed a few years and then resumed the practice of his profession. He has also been engaged in merchandising in Dawson and in Gordon county, Ga., and in saw-milling in Coffee county, Ga. In 1882 he returned to Dover, where he has since successfully practiced his profession. Dr. Lee was married to Miss Mims, who was a native of Gordon county, Ga., by whom he had nine children: Mary F., Mrs. A. J. Wall;

W. E. LUNDAY.

Minnie, Mrs. D. A. Bowen; Rosa, Mrs. G. C. Patterson; John Tilden, William C., Richard H., Della E., Roger Early and Dessie. Dr. Lee was a strong democrat and always voted that ticket, but for a few years past he has acted with the people's party. He is a master Mason. Mrs. Lee is a member of the Methodist church.

W. E. LUNDAY, physician and planter, Chickasawhatchie, Terrell Co., Ga., son of Robert and Mary F. (Courvoisie) Lunday, was born in Screven county, Ga., in 1832. His father was born in Mecklenburg county, Va., in 1798, where he was raised and educated and conducted a plantation. He migrated to Georgia and settled in Screven county about forty-seven miles above Savannah and engaged in planting. Later he went to Springfield, Effingham Co., Ga., whence he moved, about 1840, to Albany, Ga., where he lived until he died, in 1860, in the sixty-second year of his age. He was an old-line whig, was a member of the Baptist church, of which he was a deacon at the time of his death. His wife was born in Chatham county, Ga., daughter of John Francis William and Mary Courvoisie, of France, and he married her soon after coming to Georgia. She was a Catholic, well educated and highly accomplished, having been educated at the Ursuline convent in Canada. Seven children were born to them: Francis, who died in Albany, Ga.; W. E., the subject of this sketch; Robert, in the Indian Territory; Rebecca, widow of Spicer De Graffenreid, Albany, Ga.; Mary Josephine, widow of James Hill, Macon, Ga.; Catharine Stanley, Macon; Jane Elizabeth, Mrs. Thomas Frierson, Butler, Taylor Co., Ga. Dr. Lunday attained his majority in Albany, where he was educated and prepared for entering the university of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, from which he graduated in medicine in 1855. On his return from college he located in Newton, Baker Co., Ga., where he practiced his profession seven years. He then engaged in planting on a plantation adjoining that of Gen. Colquitt, whence he moved to his present location in Terrell county, where he has since practiced his profession and engaged in planting. He enlisted as a private in the Sixth Georgia regiment, which was assigned to Gen. Alfred H. Colquitt's command. A few months afterward he was detailed as surgeon of the Twelfth Georgia regiment. Just after the battle of Big Bethel in Virginia he was honorably discharged at Yorktown. Subsequently he joined and was surgeon of the Tenth Georgia regiment, state troops. Dr. Lunday owned fifty slaves during the war, for which, in 1864, Judge R. S. Lyons offered him $400 each. Dr. Lunday was married in 1856 to Miss Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Collier, of Butts county, Ga., by whom he had two children: Dollie, deceased wife of William Vincent, Arkansas, and Lula, wife of David Maghee, Floyd, Dooly Co., Ga. Mrs. Lunday, who was a member of the Baptist church, died Jan. 2, 1860, aged twenty-two years. For his second wife Dr. Lunday married Miss Mary Isabella, daughter of Rev. Churchwell Anderson Crowell, formerly of South Carolina, where she was born. Mr. Crowell, who was a minister of the Methodist church for fifty years, moved from South Carolina to Cass (now Bartow) county, whence, about the time Gen. Sherman entered Georgia, he moved to Terrell county and settled on the Chickasawhatchie, where Dr. Lunday married his daughter. Nine children have blessed this union: Annie, Mrs. J. D. Geise, Sasser, Terrell Co.; Willie, lives in Texas; Blanche, Mrs. Emmett Aicardi, Texas; Crowell, Terrell county; Mary Hill, Frank, Belle, Christine and Oliver, all home. Mrs. Lunday is an exemplary member of the Methodist church. Before the unpleasantness was precipitated the doctor was an old-line whig, but since the surrender he has voted with the democracy. There are few cozier or pleasanter homes in Georgia than this, no happier domestic circle. It is situated near breastworks constructed during the Florida war.

DUNCAN P. McLAIN, a prominent planter of Herod, Terrell Co., Ga., was born in Bladen county, N. C., in 1823, and was the son of James McLain, who was born in the same county in 1795. His father (grandfather of the subject of this sketch) was Peter McLain, a Scotchman from the Isle of Skye; came to America when a single man, about the time of the revolutionary war, in which he served as a soldier. He married a Miss Wethersby of North Carolina, and settled in Bladen county, where he engaged in farming. He was a strict Methodist and a man highly respected by all who knew him. He died about 1823. To this union three sons were born: James, the father of the subject of this sketch; Hugh, who died in Americus, Ga., about 1870, and John, who died in Clarke county, Ala. The mother of these children came to Georgia about 1829, and settled in Houston county. She died in Botsford, Sumter Co., Feb. 11, 1874. James McLain died in Dooley county some years before the death of his mother.

Duncan P. McLain grew to manhood in Sumter and Houston counties. He married Miss I. J. McDonald, who was the daughter of John B. McDonald, a native of Bladen county, N. C. Mr. McDonald's father was also a native of the Isle of Ski, and came to America about the time the original McLain did. John B. McDonald moved to Crawford county about 1829, where Mrs. Duncan P. McLain was born in 1836. She was the eldest child and was reared in Sumter county. Mr. and Mrs. McLain moved to Henry county, Ala., soon after their marriage, where they engaged in farming, continuing until the breaking out of the war, when the husband enlisted in the army and served till the close of the war. He was made a prisoner at Nashville, Tenn., and sent to Camp Chase, Ohio, where he was kept until the surrender of Lee. He then returned to his family, which had moved to Sumter county, Ga., where they lived until 1875, when he settled at what is known as Herod postoffice, Terrell Co., where he is extensively engaged in farming. He is a member of the Methodist church, of which he is a steward, and superintendent of the Sunday school. In politics Mr. McLain is a democrat, but his attention has been more given to business with the most successful results. He is a thoroughly self-made man and his large estate he has acquired entirely through his own efforts. By this marriage Mr. McLain had several children. Kennet McLain, the oldest son, went as a missionary to China, but owing to bad health had to return to America and was preaching in Atlanta when he sickened and died. Rev. McLain was a most promising young man, of a brilliant mind and possessing a fine education. His loss was deeply felt by many friends and the cause of religion. James J. McLain now lives in Herod; W. A. is a merchant at Dawson, Ga., and was married to Miss Fannie Barrow, of Madison, Ga., a daughter of Prof. S. Barrow. They have one child, William Kennet. George T., the fourth son, now deceased, was a partner with W. A. in the business at Dawson; D. F. is a merchant at Dawson; Anna Bell, the youngest child and only daughter, lives at home. The mother of these children, a consistent and highly respected member of the Methodist church, died in 1884. Mr. McLain married for his second wife Miss Lucy Rogers, daughter of David Rogers, of Sumter county, born June 26, 1854. They live in a beautiful country residence near Herod.

JAMES J. McLAIN, merchant-planter, Herod, Terrell Co., Ga., son of Duncan P. and Isabella J. McLain, was born in Henry county, Ala., Nov. 24, 1856. His father soon after his marriage, moved to Alabama, and purchased land in Henry county, where he lived until the war between the states began. He then enlisted in an Alabama regiment, which was subsequently consolidated with the Twenty-fifth Alabama regiment. During the war the family moved back to

D. P. McLAIN.

Georgia and settled in Sumter county. After some years his father removed to Terrell county, which has since been his home. Mr. McLain's boyhood and youth were spent in Henry county, Ala., and in Sumter and Terrell counties, Ga., where he was principally educated in the common schools of the county. His services being needed on the farm he attended school but little after settling in Terrell county. On attaining his majority Mr. McLain married and settled on a farm near the home place—where he still lives, and has prospered. He is now, in addition to his large farming interests, engaged in merchandising, as a member of the firm of Haas, Harris, Brim & McLain, who carry a large stock of general merchandise, and transact a large and profitable business. In 1892 Mr. McLain was appointed postmaster at Herod. Mr. McLain was married Nov. 9, 1879, to Miss Cannie Hood, daughter of John Hood, formerly of north Georgia. Her father died during the civil war, and she was a child when her family moved to Terrell county, where she was educated in the country schools, and at Dawson, and grew to womanhood. Their union has been blessed with seven children: Alma, Maude E., Ruby K., Mary Isabella, Bessie L., George K., James P. He is a working democrat, one of the leading men of the county, and a prominent member of the Methodist church. Mrs. McLain is a member of the Baptist church. They have a delightful home, and the family is popular in the social circles of the community.

MATTHEW MARSHALL, planter, Sasser, Terrell Co., Ga., son of Matthew and Margaret (King) Marshall, was born in Houston county, Ga., in 1834. Mr. Marshall's father was born in Ohio, and when a young man migrated to North Carolina and settled in Rockingham county, where not long afterward he married, came to Georgia, and settled in Jones county. Soon afterward he moved to Houston county, and after farming a few years on rented land settled on an unimproved place, where he died, about 1840, aged about sixty years. He was a consistent member of the Baptist church. In 1852 his widow moved with her family to Lee county, Ga., and settled a place on which she lived until after the war, when she came to Sasser and made her home with the subject of this sketch until her death, which occurred in 1873. To them eleven children were born, all growing to maturity, and four of whom still survive: James N., moved to Yazoo county, Miss., entered the Confederate service, lost an eye in the war, was a planter afterward, and died in 1887; Emily, deceased wife of R. E. Story, Houston county; Rhoda, Mrs. William Moreland, Terrell county; Levi enlisted in Company H, Thirteenth Georgia regiment, and died of sickness at Staunton, Va., in 1863; William moved to Yazoo county, Miss., enlisted in the Confederate service, and died in Holmes county, Miss., about 1864; Polly, deceased wife of Henry King, Lee county; Matthew, the subject of this sketch; Thomas J., a member of the Eleventh Georgia regiment, died in Richmond, leaving a family; Sarah J., died in 1853, unmarried; Rebecca, Mrs. A. J. McClendon, Terrell county; Margaret, married Jehu Davis, who was killed during the war; and she is now Mrs. W. S. Bowen, Terrell county. Mr. Marshall was raised principally in Houston county, where he received a fair common school education. When eighteen years old he accompanied his mother to Lee county, and assisted on the farm until 1861, when he enlisted in Company H, Capt. Spearman, Thirteenth Georgia regiment, and left Dawson July 5, 1861, for the army. He participated in the seven days' fight around Richmond, and the battles at Gettysburg and Fredericksburg, and was captured in the battle in which Stonewall Jackson was killed; was taken to and detained ten days in Washington city, then sent to Fort Delaware. After twenty days' imprisonment he was exchanged and immediately returned to Jackson's division, then under the command of Gen. Early.

He was a participant in the fight on the Susquehanna when the bridge at Wrightsville was burned; was at Gettysburg in the hottest of the fight; then in the Shenandoah valley, where there were engagements of more or less importance almost every day—receiving a severe flesh wound by being shot through the left thigh at Strasburg—and was at Petersburg when that city was evacuated. He was again taken prisoner there, and sent to Point Lookout, where he was held until after the surrender. He experienced many hardships, and suffered many privations while in the service, but endured it all as the faithful patriotic soldier that he was should. In the battle at Gettysburg he had his cartridge box on one side, his canteen on the other, and both were several times shot through with minie balls; and at other battles his clothing was many times perforated. After the surrender, and his release from Point Lookout, he returned to his mother's plantation in Lee county. Nov. 2, 1865, he married Mrs. Sarah Jane (nee King) McClendon, who died April 4, 1886. She was a consistent member of the Baptist church. September 15 following, Mr. Marshall married Miss Rebecca J. King (a cousin of his first wife), daughter of John King, of Houston county, where she was reared and educated, who has borne him five children: Sallie Maggie; Willie Irene; John Matthew, died in 1893; John M.; Marshallie. In 1865 he purchased a place on the Chickasawhatchie creek, about two miles from where he now lives, and which he still owns. In 1881 he settled on his present place about half a mile from Sasser, where he has about 700 acres under splendid cultivation, and a delightful home, where he is enjoying life surrounded by hosts of warm friends. He is one of the best, and one of the leading farmers in Terrell county. Himself and wife are exemplary members of the Primitive Baptist church, of which he has been a deacon for twenty years.

WILLIAM MORELAND, planter, Dawson, Terrell Co., Ga., son of Edward and Nancy (McClendon) Moreland, was born in Jones county, Ga., Nov. 18, 1822. Mr. Moreland's grandfather was a weaver by trade and went among the Cherokee Indians a great deal teaching them how to weave. Finally he went among them, and as he was never heard from, it was supposed he had died. He left two children—Edward and Sallie—who were thus made orphans, and were reared by an aunt Atkinson in Jones county. Sallie married Burrell McClendon, who, after living a number of years in Bibb county, moved to and settled in what is now Terrell county. Here Mr. Moreland's father married his wife, oldest child of John McClendon, formerly of South Carolina. He lived in Jones county until he had six children, when he moved, about 1832, to within four miles of where the subject of this sketch is now living. It was partially improved, and a portion of the tract forms a part of the estate of Gen. Phil Cook. He lived on this place until he died, in 1844, in the fifty-first year of his age. He became a cripple when a young man, but it did not affect his energy or determination of purpose. He was an old-line whig in politics, and a member of the Methodist church, of which he was a class leader many years. His maternal grandfather, John McClendon, was a native of South Carolina, whence, after he had considerable of a family he moved to Alabama. Not being pleased he shortly returned to South Carolina. Not long afterward he came to Georgia and settled in Jones county, whence, about 1830, he moved to Lee county and settled on land which is now a part of Gen. Phil Cook's estate, where he lived until he died, in his seventy-first year. In politics he was an uncompromising whig. His wife was Miss Dicey Blackwell, born in South Carolina, and they reared a large family of children. To Mr. Moreland's parents ten children were born, all of whom but one grew to maturity: John, who was a volunteer in the Florida war, died in 1891 while on a visit to that state; Bartley (deceased), moved to Arkansas, and served in the army during the late unpleasantness; William M., the subject of this sketch; Martha, deceased wife of George W. King, Alabama; Dicey, deceased wife of James Brown, Terrell county; Joseph went to Pike county, Ala., enlisted in the Confederate service, was taken sick at the siege of Vicksburg, and died on the way home; Newton was in the service with his brother Joseph, was taken sick and died at Vicksburg; Elizabeth, widow of Calvin C. Kersey, formerly of Lee, now of Terrell county; Dennis went to Alabama, entered the Confederate service in which he died; Sallie died when a child. The mother of these children died when about forty-five years of age—a consistent member of the Methodist church. For his second wife Mr. Moreland married Mrs. Polly (nee McClendon) Hawkins, by whom he had one child, Hugh, now living in Louisiana. Mr. Moreland was in his eleventh year when his father moved to Lee from Jones county, where he had enjoyed excellent school facilities. These were quite limited in his new home; and his father's crippled condition making it necessary for the older children to assist in the plantation work, he was deprived of further school advantages. But when he became of age he attended subscription schools several months, much to his advantage. In 1848 he moved to where he now lives, eight miles east of Dawson, in sight of which he has lived more than sixty years, and commenced farming, which has been his life occupation. When he located where he is the country was comparatively unsettled, and his nearest white neighbor was five miles distant, and very little clearing except along Middle creek. In 1863 he enlisted in the Sixty-fourth Georgia regiment under Gen. A. H. Colquitt, and served until the battle of Ocean Pond, Fla., Oct. 20, 1864, when he was seriously wounded by being shot through the right shoulder by a minie ball, fracturing the bone. He was sent to the hospital at Tallahassee, Fla., and soon afterward given a furlough and came home. While at home he was taken sick and could not re-enter the service, so he went to Virginia, where his command was and secured an honorable discharge. He then returned to his farm to which he has since given his undivided attention. His first purchase of land was sixty acres, to which he added from time to time until he owned 800 acres. Unambitious of office, and having no higher worldly aspiration than that of being a good citizen and neighbor, he has pursued the quiet life of a farmer, devoting himself exclusively to his farming interests. He makes plenty and to spare; possessing a pleasant home and the affectionate regard of his family and the unreserved esteem of his fellow-citizens. Mr. Moreland was married in Houston county, Ga., Dec. 16, 1847, to Miss Rhoda Marshall—born in Jones county, Ga., in 1827—by whom he has had seven children: Bartley, living on adjoining plantation; Nancy, deceased wife of Nathan Davis; Martha, Mrs. J. T. King, Terrell county; Sallie, deceased wife of J. T. Kitchens; Rebecca, Mrs. Dr. J. R. Kidd, Preston, Webster Co., Ga.; Victoria, Mrs. J. T. Kitchens, Terrell county; W. E., living on a part of the old homestead. Before the war Mr. Moreland was an old-line whig, but since the war he has voted with the democracy. Himself and wife are exemplary and revered members of the Primitive Baptist church.

W. D. MURRAY, farmer, Dawson, Terrell Co., Ga., son of Moses W. and Eliza B. (Warnock) Murray, was born in Charleston district, S. C., in 1828. His grandfather, Rev. Moses Murray, was a local Methodist preacher, was born and raised in Charleston district, where he planted and preached all his life, and died there at an advanced age in 1838. His wife, Margaret (Bunch) Murray, was of Dutch descent, was also born in Charleston district, and survived her husband many years. She was a very devoted member of the Methodist church, and was a regular attendant at the camp meetings held yearly at Providence camp ground, near Charleston, where they had a tent. To them six children were born: Ann, married Rev. John Bunch of the South Carolina conference, who died in Florida at the advanced age of ninety years, having been blind many years before her death; Moses W., father of our subject; Lovick Pierce, who went to Louisiana and farmed in early life, then returned to Georgia, and after farming awhile engaged in milling. He finally settled near Norcross, Gwinnett Co., leaving a good estate and a widow, who is still living; Dilla, deceased wife of John Durr, who came to Georgia and farmed awhile, then moved back to South Carolina, where she died; Margaret, deceased wife of John S. Wimberly, farmer and wheelwright, Calhoun county, Ga.; Mary Ann, married Joseph Inabnett and came to Georgia and settled in Baker county, where she died. Mr. Murray's father was the second child and oldest son of the family, and was born in Charleston district, S. C., in 1800, where he was raised and given a common school education. When attaining manhood he married Eliza B. Warnock, born in Charleston, only daughter of Gabriel Warnock, a native of England. His wife was left a widow with three sons and one daughter (the mother of our subject). The sons were: John, who died in Calhoun county, Ga.; S. C., who died near the old home place; Joseph, who was a prominent Methodist minister, lived to be quite old before he died. In 1843 Mr. Murray's father moved with his family to Georgia, by wagon, and settled on land in Baker county, now included in Calhoun county, on which he lived until 1872, when he died. He furnished a substitute during the Cherokee Indian trouble. In politics he was a whig, but took no active part as a partisan, devoting his time and attention to his farm and family. He was an active and exemplary member of the Methodist church, of which he was a steward, and a class leader from early manhood. His wife was also a devoted member of the same church, and died in 1878. They were the parents of eight children: James R. N., who died with pneumonia in 1861; W. D., the subject of this sketch; Elizabeth M., deceased wife of Dr. Walter T. Murchison, Arlington, Calhoun Co., Ga.; Mary, in Florida, widow of John Murchison; Moses H., died near Albany, Ga., March 11, 1894; Sarah, Mrs. L. M. Leonard, Terrell county; S. T. C., Cochran, Pulaski Co., Ga.; and Dorothy Selatha, Mrs. Larkin Johnson, Terrell county. Mr. Murray received his boyhood schooling in South Carolina, an interesting incident of which was, that one of his teachers, Peter Eggleston, an old Englishman, was also a teacher of his father. Although only a youth, he was mustered into the South Carolina militia before he left the state. He received some schooling after coming to Georgia. What he lacked in educational advantages when growing up he has largely supplied by close observation and practical life-experience. On reaching maturity he began farming for himself in Baker county. During the latter part of the civil war he served in Wheeler's cavalry, participated in the battle of July 22, 1864, in other fights, and skirmishes around Atlanta, in Wheeler's raid in Tennessee, covering Johnson's retreat, and at Aiken, S. C. He is an old-time democrat, and cast his first vote for George W. Towns for governor of Georgia. Although taking an active part in politics he never aspired to office, but served many years as a justice of the peace. In 1894 he was elected to represent his district in the general assembly. Mr. Murray when twenty-four years of age married Miss Elizabeth Jones, daughter of Bryant Jones, a prominent Early county farmer. She was born in Florida in 1833, and when she was a little girl her parents moved to Early county. They have no children, but have twin boys, nephews, sons of Moses H. Murray, whom they received into their family in 1875, when they were eleven months old. Mr. Murray is a master Mason, and has presided as worshipful master of his lodge. Mrs. Murray and family are exemplary members of the Methodist church.

W. B. OXFORD, planter, Dawson, Terrell Co., Ga., son of John and Jane (Baker) Oxford, was born in Lumpkin county, Ga., in 1836. His great-grandparents came from Europe and settled in North Carolina, where they raised a quite large family of children. His paternal grandfather, Jonathan Oxford—born in 1765—was one of eight sons of this family, no two of whom settled in the same state; one was killed at the battle of New Orleans. Jonathan married a Miss White, born in North Carolina, and settled in Buncombe county, that state, where four children—three sons and one daughter—were born to him. He then moved to Georgia, settled first in Lumpkin county, where he remained until 1845-46, when he went to Walker county, where he prospered as a farmer, and died in 1850, aged eighty-five years. He accumulated some property as a farmer and stock raiser, and was a democrat in politics. His wife died some years later very old. Their children were: Jacob, who first settled in Georgia, and later moved to middle Tennessee; David, died in Whitfield county, Ga., never married; Elizabeth, married James Owenby, who died, and then she married William Hall and went to Kansas; and John. The last-named was Mr. Oxford's father, who was born in Buncombe county, N. C., Nov. 24, 1799, where he was raised on the farm. He married Miss Jane Baker of Ashe county, N. C., and after living a short time in Buncombe, migrated to Georgia about 1825, coming in a four-horse wagon through the mountains (a pleasant and interesting trip, although the country was wild, mountainous and sparsely peopled), and settled in Lumpkin county. About the time of the Cherokee purchase he moved to Walker county, where he lived until after the battle of Chickamauga, when he refuged to Terrell county and located in Dawson, where he died in 1882. He assisted in removing the Cherokees from Georgia. His wife, born in 1804, died in Walker county in 1854. Himself and wife were members of the Missionary Baptist church. To them eleven children were born. Those living are: Amanda J., wife of W. R. Russell, Whitfield county; W. B., the subject of this sketch; John H., Terrell county; C. F., Terrell county; Josephine, Mrs. B. F. Commander, Fannin county, Tex. Those deceased are: James H., accidentally shot himself while hunting; Nancy, deceased wife of John Puryear, Walker county, Ga.; Sarah L., deceased wife of J. C. O'Neal, Walker county; Louisa, died when fourteen years old; Elizabeth, deceased wife of H. B. Cobb, Fannin county, Tex.; David W., accidentally killed in Dawson in 1870 while under a tent during Ames' show, by a shot fired outside. After the death of his wife he married Mrs. John Oxford (nee White) Ellis, by whom he had three children: Lee, Whitfield county; the other two died young. His widow is yet living in Whitfield county, Ga. Mr. Oxford was raised on the farm and educated in Walker county, where he lived until he reached maturity—1857—when he went to Texas and engaged in clerking until the war between the states began. He then enlisted in the Third Texas regiment cavalry, commanded by Gen. Ben McCulloch, and participated in the battle of Oak Hill—where Gen. Lyons was killed—and Pea Ridge, in the Missouri campaign. He was then transferred to east of the Mississippi river under Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, and afterward to Gen. Bragg's command. After the battle of Chickamauga he was in no important battle, but was in numerous minor engagements. In 1873 he moved to Terrell county and purchased the tract of land on which he now lives, then partially improved, to which he has added until his holding amounts to 800 acres, 500 in one body, most of which is under fine cultivation. He is one of Terrell's most prominent and substantial citizens. He was at one time tax collector of the county, and was one of the commissioners in charge of the building of the new court house. Mr. Oxford was married to Miss Mary Commander, daughter of John Wesley of Macon county, who has borne him nine children: Nancy J., deceased wife of John S. Jones, leaving four children; John T., on home place, married Miss Minnie Marshall and has two children; Mattie, Mrs. John M. Wall, Terrell county, one child; William H.; B. C.; Mary J.; D. M.; and J. H., at home, and a boy-baby, which died unnamed. Mr. Oxford is a strong democrat and a master Mason. Himself and wife are members of the Missionary Baptist church.

JAMES GUYTON PARKS, attorney-at-law, Dawson, Terrell Co., Ga., son of Wiley G. and Tabitha (Guyton) Parks—born, respectively, in North Carolina and Georgia—was born in Laurens county, Ga., June 28, 1853. His father was born in North Carolina in 1818, the youngest of a large family of children, some of whom became prominent in the professions and the ministry, one as pastor of Trinity church, New York city. He came to Georgia when a young man and settled in Floyd county, where he read law, and was admitted to the bar in Rome, Ga. About this time he made his home with Rev. Dabney P. Jones, a prominent Methodist minister, but more generally and popularly known throughout Georgia and Alabama as "Uncle Dabney," and as an influential temperance lecturer. The close association with "Uncle Dabney" growing out of this relationship, and the influence the beloved philanthropist exercised, resulted in Mr. Parks' deciding to become an itinerant Methodist preacher, and he applied for admission to and was accepted by the Georgia conference. He acceptably filled many important pastorates and the presiding eldership of districts. He was in charge of Terrell circuit when the war between the states began, when he raised a company, of which he was elected captain, and entered the Confederate service. After the war he was elected judge of the county court, which he held some years, and engaged in the practice of law. Later he was elected ordinary, an office which he held until the year before he died, in 1877, aged fifty-nine years. In early life he was an old-line whig, but late in life he became a democrat, and was an enthusiastic supporter of Samuel J. Tilden for the presidency. He was an exemplary member of the Methodist church, and exercised a wide and powerful influence. Mrs. Parks' parents were of eminent South Carolina families, who early in life came to Georgia, where she was born. She is still living, has been a life-long ardent and active member of the Methodist church, and makes her home with her son, the subject of this sketch. Their family of children consisted of six: James Guyton; William S., deceased, secretary Lamar Drug company, Atlanta, Ga., eminent as a pharmacist; Carrie, wife of F. E. Clark, cashier Dawson National bank; Lloyd B., of the George Muse Clothing company, Atlanta; Helen, wife of L. F. Cater, merchant, Perry, Houston Co., Ga., and Frank L. Mr. Parks was educated and prepared for college at the best schools in Dawson, then entered the university of Georgia, Athens, graduating in the law department in 1874. He was for a short time a professor in the South Georgia Male institute, Dawson, and subsequently a member of the board of trustees. He was chosen as a trustee of the Southwest Georgia Agricultural college, at Cuthbert, in 1880, and that same year was elected to represent the Eleventh senatorial district in the general assembly, and was re-elected in 1882, being elected each time without opposition. In 1881 he edited the "Dawson Journal," and in 1885 was appointed on the board of visitors to the university of Georgia. In 1888 he was appointed, and still continues to be, local attorney of the Central Railroad and Banking company of Georgia. Mr. Parks was married Oct. 19, 1875, to Miss Eola G., daughter of Prof. William H. Allen, by whom he has had three children: William Wiley, deceased; James Guyton, Jr., and Warren B. He is a gentleman of culture and ranks with the foremost in ability and in social, financial and political circles, and wields a far-reaching salutary influence.

J L. PARROTT, merchant-planter, Parrott, Terrell Co., Ga., son of James and Harriet (Dennard) Parrott, was born in Twiggs county, Ga. His paternal grandfather was a native of France, came to Georgia and settled in Washington county late in the last century. Mr. Parrott's parents were born in Washington county—the father in 1795, the mother in 1800. While they were yet children their parents moved to Twiggs county, Ga., where, when grown, they were married. In 1834, with three children, they moved to Stewart county (pioneers) and settled near Lumpkin. In 1834 a tract of improved land (then in Randolph county) was bought, where the subject of this sketch now lives, where his father died Jan. 19, 1865, and his mother in October, 1888. Mr. Parrott served as a volunteer in the Indian war. To them eight children were born, of whom there are now living: Laura, Mrs. Samuel Stokes, Terrell county; Mary A., same county; J. L., the subject of this sketch; Louisa Virginia, Mrs. L. M. Jumper, Parrott, Ga. Those deceased are: Benjamin, died when eighteen years old; Augustus, enlisted in the Thirty-first Georgia regiment, was captured, and the last seen of him was in Point Lookout (Md.) prison; Martha (Mrs. Whaley) and Harriet. Mr. Parrott was raised in the vicinity where he now lives, and was educated in the common schools of the county. At the age of nineteen he commenced farming for himself and was thus engaged when the war between the states began. He enlisted in Company K, Seventeenth Georgia regiment, under Gen. Henry L. Benning, formerly of Columbus. He saw much arduous service and participated in many hard-fought battles, among them second Manassas, seven days' fight around Richmond, Sharpsburg, Gettysburg, Fredericksburg, Wilderness, Cold Harbor, Petersburg and many minor engagements. In 1863 his command was ordered south and took part in the battles at Knoxville and Chickamauga and numerous small engagements and skirmishes. After two years' service as a private he was elected first lieutenant and held the office till hostilities ceased. He received two flesh wounds, one at Gettysburg and one at Chickamauga, during his service and was furloughed but once, and that was just before the surrender, which occurred after he reached Virginia, but before he reached his command. After the war he returned to his farm and is now very extensively engaged in farming and is also financially interested in various other enterprises. In 1889, about a year before the Columbus Southern (Columbus to Albany) railway was built, he laid out the town—named Parrott, in compliment to him—which has become a very considerable trading point. Mr. Parrott has taken great pride and a lively interest in the development and prosperity of the town, which now has the Parrott high school, sustained by subscription, a Methodist and Missionary Baptist church, seven stores, two ginneries, a planing mill, grist mill, variety works and hotel and livery stable, all doing a prosperous business. Soon after the town, which is located on the Columbus Southern railway nine miles northwest of Dawson, was founded, it was established as a postoffice. Mr. Parrott has been mayor of the town until within a year and is a member of the board of trustees of the high school. He is a solid democrat and is one of the large planters and one of the substantial citizens of the county. He has done himself and the county great injustice by remaining unmarried.

JAMES C. SIMPSON, merchant-planter, Bronwood, Terrell Co., Ga., son of William G. and Alice A. (Johnson) Simpson, was born within three miles of his present home Dec. 1, 1856. On his father's side he is of Irish descent—his great-great-grandfather coming from Ireland to America and settling in North Carolina. With his sons he engaged in milling near Fayetteville, in that state, and followed it many years. Mr. Simpson's grandfather, James Simpson, married Miss Priscilla Williams, of Duplin county, N. C., and died comparatively young, in 1826 or 1827, leaving his widow with three children. His widow married Daniel Kennedy, North Carolina born, who came to Georgia in 1830 and settled in that part of Lee county subsequently included in Terrell county. He was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, an old-line whig, and very highly esteemed as a citizen. He died in 1869, far advanced in years, and his wife died in 1885, in her eighty-fifth year. Both were devoted members of the Primitive Baptist church. The children she bore her first husband, James Simpson, were: John J., who was quite active and influential in politics subsequently to the late unpleasantness, was sheriff of Lee county many years, and afterward sheriff of Terrell county, dying while in the office, leaving a quite large family; Priscilla, unmarried and living at Bronwood, and William G. Mr. Simpson's father was born in North Carolina in 1825, and when the family came to Georgia and settled in Lee (on land now included in Terrell) county, was a small boy. He grew to manhood on the farm and was educated at the common schools of the county. He remained with the family until January, 1854, when he settled near the old homestead and engaged in planting. In 1862 he enlisted in the Fifty-first Georgia regiment, was made third lieutenant, and with his command participated in several important battles—Second Manassas (where he received a flesh wound from a spent ball), Gettysburg, Petersburg and many minor engagements. On account of ill health he was honorably discharged. After remaining at home a few months he went to the coast and made salt until a short time before the surrender, when he came home and joined the militia, but being taken sick with pneumonia, he was compelled to come home for good. Just before the surrender he was elected justice of the peace, and in 1874 was elected to represent the county in the general assembly. He was married in January, 1854, to Miss Alice A. Johnson, born in Barnwell district, S. C., Dec. 5, 1834, daughter of Haley Johnson, who with his family, including six children, came from South Carolina to Georgia in 1844, and settled first at Smithville, Lee Co., and later on a plantation near where Dawson now stands. He was a staunch democrat, took great interest in politics, and although exempt by age, did active service in the latter part of the war. His wife, a Primitive Baptist, died in 1863, aged fifty-three years, and he died in 1884, aged seventy years. Six children were born to them: James M., in Virginia; Sophia, deceased wife of James Lester; Alice A., mother of the subject of this sketch; George, killed in battle, Knoxville, Tenn.; Lizzie, deceased wife of Garrard Sasser, Shellman, Ga.; Edward, served through the war, now in Texas. Mr. Simpson's father was successful as a planter, saw-mill man and merchant, and died July 15, 1885, and his mother died June 27, 1894. She was a devout and exemplary member of the Methodist church. Five sons blessed their union, of whom three are living: John Haley, James C., the subject of this sketch, and William Lafayette, Bronwood. The two deceased are: Samuel Whitfield, died aged two years and six months, and Walter J., died when eleven months old. Mr. Simpson was raised in and was educated in the common schools of Terrell county, and in 1874-75 took a course in Moore's Business college, Atlanta. He afterward devoted his attention for many years to farming. Later he engaged in merchandising, first at Sasser and subsequently at Bronwood, where he is farming and conducting a general merchandise store, and prospering in both. His only interest in politics is to vote for the best qualified, upright candidate. He married Miss Belle, daughter of Col. R. F. Crittenden, of Shellman, Randolph Co., Ga., a graduate of Andrew Female college, Cuthbert, Ga. To them two children have been born: Alice P. and Robert C.

J. H. WILLIFORD, physician and druggist, Parrott, Terrell Co., Ga., son of Samuel and Martha H. (Dismukes) Williford, was born in what is now Webster county in 1852. His grandfather, William Williford, was a native of North Carolina, migrated to Georgia early in this century, and settled in what is now Madison county, where he raised a large family. Here Dr. Williford's father was born in 1810. Madison county was laid off in 1811, and his mother was born in Clarke county in 1821—yet living, and very robust for her age. His father was raised a farmer and educated at the country schools; was with the force which accompanied the Cherokee Indians to Indian Territory in 1836, read law and was admitted to the bar, and held a government position in Milledgeville. After his removal to what is now Webster county he taught school in connection with practicing law, conducting a planting interest and operating a saw-mill—using the first circular saw used in that portion of the state. He accumulated a valuable property, including large tracts of land, was one of the progressive men in his section, and kept fully abreast with the times in politics and general advancement. He was held in high estimation by his fellow citizens, a stanch democrat in politics, a master Mason, and a member of the Methodist church, of which he was steward for many years. During the late unpleasantness he served in the state militia and died in 1882, aged seventy-two years. Dr. Williford's mother was thirteen years old when her parents moved to what is now Webster county, where she was educated and grew to womanhood. Her father, William Dismukes, was one of the early settlers and encountered all the privations, hardships and danger from Indian depredations incident to frontier life. She is the oldest of four children yet living, the other three being: Dr. Dismukes, Weston, Webster Co., Ga.; Columbus W., near Weston, and Jane, widow of Augustus Parrott, also near Weston. Mrs. Williford is an exemplary and revered member of the Methodist church, and of the children born to her four are living: Samuel L., Webster county; J. H., the subject of this sketch; Mary (Mrs. Hardwick), Webster county; Ella V. (Mrs. Bowman), Bronwood, Terrell Co. Dr. Williford was raised and received his primary education in Webster county and at Hogansville, Ga.; then took his first medical course at Miami Medical college, Cincinnati, Ohio, and his second course at the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery, from which he was graduated before attaining his majority. He located near where Parrott now stands and practiced in Terrell county about five years, when he removed to Webster county, near his old home. He remained there until Parrott began to build up, when he moved to the new town and in connection with his practice engaged in merchandising under the firm name of Williford & Whaley. He continued this until the fire in 1892, when he was burned out and lost heavily. He continued his practice with satisfactory success and is the leading physician of his locality. In February, 1894, he established a drug store in Parrott and has secured a growing and profitable trade. He commenced merchant-life with his father and continued it after his father's death. He was also at one time engaged in saw-milling, but the mill was destroyed by fire, involving a loss of $3,000. He was postmaster some years at Chenubee, Webster Co., and is now postmaster at Parrott. Dr. Williford has been married twice. He was first married to Miss Eudora C. Gunnells, sister of Charley Gunnells, Bronwood, now deceased, leaving two children: Paula V. and Charley H., both at home attending school. His second marriage was to Miss Eula L. Whaley, who has borne him two children: Eudora Dodic and Mignon. The doctor and his wife are prominent members of the Methodist church.

THOMAS COUNTY.

W. P. CLOWER, M. D., the leading physician of Cairo and surrounding country, was born in Gwinnett county, Ga., July 27, 1831. The family came from Holland to this country. One of the brothers settled in Pennsylvania and the other in Tennessee. The last-named, Daniel Clower, grandfather of Dr. Clower, afterward removed to and settled in Gwinnett county. His grandfather, when a boy, served in the revolutionary army. He was a man of strong mind and convictions; was an early and very ardent member of the Methodist church, in which he was an exhorter, and as such was known almost all over North Georgia. The father of Dr. Clower was born, raised and married in Gwinnett county, and died there in 1845. His wife preceded him about a month. He was an enthusiastic Methodist, a steward in the church and a class leader. This couple left four children: John T.; W. P., the subject of this sketch; Mary E., Mrs. David Verner, Buford, Ga.; and Nancy J., Mrs. Cleburne Davis, Gwinnett county. At the age of fourteen, Dr. Clower was left an orphan, with an inheritance of about $500. Dr. D. S. Brandon, an uncle living at Thomasville, Ga., sent for him and gave him a home. He was educated at Fletcher institute, and studied medicine under his uncle. He next attended medical lectures; first during the winter of 1853-54, at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, and second at Pennsylvania Medical college in Philadelphia, graduating in March, 1855. Dr. Clower located at Troupville, Lowndes Co., but shortly afterward he removed to Duncansville, Thomas Co., where he practiced until 1861. Early in that year he enlisted as a private in the Thomasville Guards, Twenty-ninth Georgia infantry. Passing the medical examination, he was appointed surgeon for the regiment. Soon afterward he was appointed to be brigade surgeon, with the rank and insignia of major; his ambitious longings were thus met in less than a year. His was no holiday work, no "dress parade" display, no hospital service. Assigned to duty on the field, he was where the fight was fiercest, where the bullets flew and the shells burst fastest and thickest. Dr. Clower rendered four years of skillful, faithful and valuable service in the western army, retiring with the consciousness of having done full duty, and the respect of his brave, self-sacrificing compatriots. After the war, like many others, he made investments in Florida timber business, which resulted unfavorably. He also practiced his profession in the southern portion of Thomas county, whence in 1877 he removed to Cairo, where he located permanently and has established an extensive and well-paying practice. July 3, 1862, after his promotion to surgeon of brigade, Dr. Clower was married in Thomas county to Louisa V., daughter of Berry Jones of Lowndes county, by whom he had eleven children, six of whom are living: Malcolm D., in south Florida; Eugene; Louisa V.; John T.; Sarah E.; and Susan M. To the frugal and domestic qualities of his excellent wife, who to him has been a helpmeet indeed, Dr. Clower ascribes the cause of his escape from financial ruin consequent upon his Florida venture. Dr. Clower is a democrat and a "sound money" man, and is a master Mason. He is an ardent working member of the Methodist church, of which he is an efficient steward, and he rejoices especially in the fact that his beloved wife and his children are members of the same church.

JUDGE A. H. HANSELL of the superior court, southern circuit, is a familiar figure in, and one of the most prominent personages connected with Georgia jurisprudence; having been actively engaged in the pursuit of his profession for more than fifty-five years as advocate and judge. During all these years, whether pleading the cause of a client, or sitting in judgment on the pleadings of others, he has proven himself worthy of the highest commendation. Judge Hansell was the son of William Y. and Susan B. (Harris) Hansell, and was born in Milledgeville, Ga., Aug. 26, 1817. His father, William Y., was born near Greenville, S. C., and being left an orphan when two years of age, was raised by Capt. William Young of revolutionary fame. At the age of eighteen he came to Milledgeville, where he studied law and practiced for many years. Later in life he removed to Marietta, Ga., whence, retiring from the profession, he went to Oglethorpe, Ga., where he died in 1867. Mrs. Hansell came from a highly connected family, being a sister of Judge Iverson L. Harris, for many years circuit judge and for six years on the supreme bench of the state. She was also a sister of Mrs. T. H. Hall, mother of three very prominent members of the medical profession: Charles H. Hall, Macon, Ga.; Hansell Hall, Milledgeville, Ga., and Hartley Hall, Laurens county, Ga. Mrs. William Y. Hansell died in 1873. Mr. and Mrs. W. Y. Hansell had seven children born to them: Andrew J., for many years a leading lawyer at Marietta, Ga., and state senator from Atlanta district, now deceased; A. H., judge superior court; Cornelia, deceased; Fannie, deceased; Tallulah, Mrs. Pelham, Atlanta; Martha, Mrs. G. W. Fish, deceased mother of Judge G. W. Fish, Americus, Ga.; Susan E., Blacksburg, S. C., widow of W. H. Stockton. Judge Hansell was educated at academies in Milledgeville, in McDonough, Henry Co., and Powelton, Hancock Co. He studied law under his father, and Hines & Harris, Milledgeville, and in May, 1839, was admitted to the bar in Macon, Ga. In November following he located at Hawkinsville, Pulaski Co., where he remained until 1850, when, after a two years' residence at Scottsborough, near Milledgeville, for the health of his family, he located at Thomasville, which has since been his home. The public career of Judge Hansell has been long, continuously active, and exceptionally acceptable and honorable. When not yet nineteen years of age he enlisted in a Baldwin county cavalry company for service in the Creek war, in 1836, and by Gen. John W. A. Sanford was appointed his military secretary. In 1838 Gov. G. R. Gilmer appointed him military secretary for the state and in 1839 as auditor of military claims against the state. In 1845 he was the whig candidate for the legislature in Pulaski county, and although the county was two to one democratic, he was elected and served one term. In 1847 the general assembly elected him to the solicitorship of the same circuit, and to the judgeship in 1849. As the general assembly was democratic on both occasions by a decided majority, and as Judge Hansell was an ardent, uncompromising whig, his election supplied the strongest possible testimony as to his personal popularity and official integrity and ability. Presiding over the circuit until 1852, Judge Hansell resigned and removed to Thomasville and entered into partnership with James L. Seward, at that time one of the most distinguished men in that part of the state, under the firm name of Seward & Hansell. Mr. Seward was soon afterward elected to congress; but the partnership continued until 1859, when he was appointed judge by Gov. Joseph E. Brown, and held the office until 1868. In January, that year, he had been re-elected for the full term of four years, but reconstruction intervened and he was deposed the following July. Resuming practice he continued it until 1873, when Gov. J. M. Smith appointed him judge of the same judicial circuit, and since he has enjoyed the distinguishing honor of being elected his own successor without opposition on the expiration of each term. He watched events closely, and took great interest in the discussions which preceded secession, and as a delegate to the convention voted in favor of it. His last appearance in a public body was as a delegate to the constitutional convention of 1877. Judge Hansell was married in Milledgeville May 20, 1840, to Mary A., daughter of Dr. Charles J. Paine, a prominent physician, who still lives to bless and cheer him in his declining years. The children of Judge and Mrs. Hansell are: Susan, Mrs. Rev. B. L. Baker, Monticello, Fla.; Charles P., lawyer, Thomasville; Mary, Mrs. J. S. Denham, Monticello, Fla.; Frances, Mrs. James Watt, Thomasville; and Sallie, single, at home. Judge Hansell was made a master Mason in 1839 and is a Knight Templar, so he may claim to be a life-long Mason. In 1835 he united himself with the Presbyterian church, of which he has remained a devoted and devout member, and is now and has been an elder of the church in Thomasville ever since its organization. Judge Hansell is now acting under his eleventh commission as judge of the superior court of the southern circuit.

CHARLES P. HANSELL, lawyer, Thomasville, Ga., is the son of Hon. A. H. Hansell, for nearly half a century judge of the superior court, southern circuit of Georgia, and was born at Milledgeville, Ga., Sept. 14, 1844. He was prepared for the legal profession under the able instruction of his distinguished father, admitted to the bar in November, 1865, and practiced law for the next ten years. He then entered upon editorial life as editor of the "Southern Enterprise," Thomasville, Ga., which he conducted with marked success until 1883, since which time he has given almost his entire time to the practice of his profession. In 1887 the present firm of Hansell & Merrill was formed. The firm are the city's attorneys and enjoy the patronage of a wealthy clientage and an excellent reputation. "Capt. Charlie," as he is familiarly called, is one of the best known men in Georgia, as he has been connected with the legislature in different capacities since 1877. In that year he was appointed calendar clerk, and served in that capacity and as journal clerk until 1883, since which time he has been assistant clerk of that body. Capt. Hansell was married to his first wife, Margaret, daughter of Judge R. M. Charlton, in Savannah, Ga., Jan. 14, 1869, who bore him one child, Mary H., and died Oct. 5, 1889. On Nov. 4, 1891, Capt. Hansell was married in Atlanta, to Mary E., daughter of John H. Glover, by whom he has had one child, Sarah G. Capt. Hansell is a member of the A. O. U. W., of the Royal Arcanum, and of the Presbyterian church, of which he is an elder. He is a member of Confederate Veterans' association of Thomas county, having served as a private in the Twentieth Georgia battalion cavalry from May, 1862, to the surrender of Johnston's army at Greensboro, N. C.

G. W. HERRING, one of the substantial business men of Thomasville, Ga., is the son of Henry and Bathsheba (Garland) Herring, and was born in Lenoir county, N. C., Sept. 11, 1834. His great-grandfather, Matchett Herring, emigrated from Ireland to this country before the revolutionary war and settled in North Carolina. He was a skilled silversmith and many articles of interest of his manufacture, such as knee-buckles, tea-spoons, etc., are in possession of the family and cherished as mementoes. About the time Mr. Herring reached manhood he visited a brother in Florida and was so well pleased with the country that he determined to make his home there. Returning to North Carolina, he settled up his affairs and migrated to Florida, and bought land on Lake Miccosukee, on which the town of that name was afterward built, he being one of its founders. He conducted a general merchandise store in connection with farming very successfully. In August, 1868, he removed to Thomasville, where, until a few years ago, he was engaged in general merchandising. Closing that out he entered upon the business of an undertaker and funeral director. So delicately and considerately has he performed these sad duties that he has elicited universal commendation, and his firm is given the direction of nearly all the funerals in the city and surrounding country. Appreciating Mr. Herring's excellent business ability and irreproachable private life and uprightness of character, his fellow-citizens in 1891 elected him a member of the board of aldermen, and was continued by re-election until January, 1895, when he was elected mayor. Few persons are less self-seeking, none held in higher esteem for all the characteristics of good citizenship. Mr. Herring was married in Early county, Ga., Nov. 16, 1854, to Mattie, daughter of Matthew Perryman, who was born and raised in Early county. Mr. Perryman had formerly lived in Henry county, Ala., of which he was a prominent pioneer, and which he had represented in the legislature. Mr. Herring is, of course, a democrat in politics; he is also a valuable member of the Methodist church, and a chapter Mason, a past-master.

P. A. M'INTOSH, M. D., Thomasville, Ga., son of John A. and Mary A. (Irvine) McIntosh, was born in Thomas county, Ga., May 28, 1853. Daniel McIntosh, his grandfather, was one of seven brothers who came from Scotland to this country, he settling first in Charleston, S. C., subsequently removing to McIntosh county, Ga. He was possessed of great wealth in land and slaves. Here John A., Dr. McIntosh's father, was born and reared; but went to Alabama, where he remained a few years, then returned to Georgia, and settled in Thomasville, where he married. His mother's family, Irvine, were of English extraction. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh: Duncan (deceased); Daniel W., killed in battle, Atlanta, July 22, 1864; Henrietta M., deceased wife of J. W. Price, Suwanee, Fla.; S. J., dentist, Dallas, Texas; Susanna Jane, single, Luraville, Fla.; Thomas I., merchant, Luraville, Fla.; Margaret, Mrs. Ashley Peek, Luraville, Fla.; P. A., M. D., Thomasville, Ga.; and Charles A., merchant, Luraville, Fla. Mrs. McIntosh died in 1856, and Mr. McIntosh in 1864. Dr. McIntosh was educated in the common schools at Boston, Thomas Co., Ga., and under the private tutorship of Rev. Daniel Comfort. He entered the medical department of the university of Georgia, in the fall of 1873, and was there three years, graduating in 1875. Locating in Luraville, Fla., he remained there fifteen years and built up a large and remunerative practice. In 1892 he spent the summer at the New York polyclinic, taking a post-graduate course. Returning to Georgia, he located at Thomasville, where he is achieving a splendid success. Dr. McIntosh was married in Luraville, Fla., in 1876, to Miss Ella P., daughter of Rev. William Ivey, who, during the war, fled from middle Georgia to Luraville, where Mrs. McIntosh was born and reared. To them two children were born: Paul F., fourteen years old; and Nellie C., three years old. The doctor is quite wealthy as, in addition to property accumulated in the practice of his profession, he has large interests in five phosphate beds in Florida, and is president of the Luraville Phosphate company. He is a democrat in politics, and himself and wife are members of the Presbyterian church.

HON. A. T. MACINTYRE, SR., Thomasville, Ga., is one of the oldest and most distinguished citizens of southern Georgia, and one of the oldest members of the bar in the state. His continuous practice at one point for fifty-two years is probably without a parallel; and as he is yet hale, hearty and vigorous and applies himself as assiduously as ever to his cases and his books, he bids fair to add many more years to his already lengthy service. These many years of varied experience, conjoined with a real love of and aptitude for the profession, have made him almost invincible, and have given the law firm of MacIntyre & Son a reputation not surpassed in the state. A. T. MacIntyre, Sr., son of Archibald and Hannah (Lawson) MacIntyre, was born in Twiggs county, Ga., Oct. 27, 1822.

The attempt of an English king to force the Episcopal faith upon the Scotch people determined many of the Presbyterians to migrate to America, among whom were the ancestors of Col. MacIntyre, who settled in North Carolina. His father, Archibald MacIntyre, the first member of the family to come to Georgia, settled in Jefferson county, where he married in 1805. After the last war with Great Britain, in which he participated, he, having a knowledge of surveying, was appointed to survey a large body of land in southwest Georgia. This was in 1818. Being particularly well pleased with the country in the southeastern part of what is now Thomas county he noted the numbers, and when it was allotted secured a considerable tract. In 1826 he sent hands to get in a crop, and in 1828 removed to it with his family, consisting of himself, wife, and the following named children: Daniel (deceased); Catharine, deceased wife of T. C. Wyche; John L. (deceased); Hannah L., deceased wife of J. S. Wyche; A. T., lawyer; and Jane, Mrs. Adoniram Vann, Boston, Thomas Co., Ga. Col. MacIntyre's father died Feb. 10, 1830, and his mother died Oct. 9, 1842. Being only six years old when the family settled in Thomas county, Col. MacIntyre was reared in the pine woods and educated in Thomasville. He began the study of law with Pope & Harrison, Monticello, Fla., and finished under Tracy & Gresham, Macon, Ga. On March 9, 1843, he was admitted to the bar at Dublin, Laurens county. He immediately settled in Thomasville, where, as already remarked he has continuously practiced since—a term of nearly fifty-two years. His practice has been large and varied, covering the entire field of litigation, and including a vast number of important cases, involving many hard-fought battles and correspondingly and conspicuously brilliant legal triumphs. Col. MacIntyre has been but little in public life, his taste and ambition seeming not to run in that direction. His introduction was when, in 1849, he was elected as a whig from Thomas county to the representative branch of the general assembly, in which there were but few whig members—the democratic majority was overwhelming. An incident occurred during the session which illustrated the character of Col. MacIntyre and disgusted him with politics. It was a period when acquisition of territory consequent upon the Mexican war had provoked intense agitation of the slavery question, and many leading minds thought it advisable to call a convention. A resolution was introduced declaring that a convention should be called in the event of any one of four contingencies, namely: the admission of California; the abolition of slave trade between the states; the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia; and the forbidding of slaves to be carried into the territories. No opposition was made to the resolution; but when it came to a final vote each member as called voted for the resolution until Col. MacIntyre's name was reached, when he refused to vote, giving as his reason that, while he acquiesced in the last three, he held that the constitution was explicit concerning the admission of a state and that California could not be denied the right. A storm of denunciation quieted him, but he remained firm. It was finally moved that he be allowed to vote under protest, which he accordingly did the next day, being joined by a number of his whig colleagues and one democrat. This one legislative term disgusted him with politics. In the interval between this experience and the adoption of the ordinance of secession, he was a firm adherent to the Union, but when the agitation culminated in actual war he cheerfully fell into line with his state and gave support to his section. In 1865, Col. MacIntyre was selected as one of the delegates to the constitutional convention. He was not in favor of repudiating the war debt, but as a telegram came from President Johnson, giving no alternative, he voted to return to the Union. The following day, however, he demanding the right to have spread on the journal his reason for so voting—that of compulsion—which, after determined opposition, was granted. In 1870 the democrats of the First congressional district in casting about for a candidate hit upon Col. MacIntyre as good material, as his disabilities had been removed by having been a member of the convention of 1865. Although this occurred during the heated and exciting reconstruction period, he was elected and served his constituents faithfully. He positively declined being a candidate for re-election, preferring to remain in private life. Col. MacIntyre was married in Thomasville, June 26, 1845, to America Young, who is but six months his junior and was reared in Thomasville. He still enjoys her congenial and cheering companionship. To them six children have been born: Hugh J. (deceased); A. T., Jr., lawyer; America (deceased); M. Y., commission merchant, Savannah; W. R., railway contractor, Thomasville; and Daniel J., president Thomasville Exchange and Banking company. Col. MacIntyre is a Presbyterian in faith, and a demitted Mason.

JOSEPH HANSELL MERRILL, the youngest son of Joseph S. and Susan Ann (Hall) Merrill, was born in Thomasville, Ga., Oct. 12, 1862. On his father's side he is descended from the New England Puritans, and on his mother's side from the Halls of Hall, Devonshire, England, 1450; and Col. Thomas Hartley, a prominent soldier of the revolution, and member of the first American congress under the constitution, whose daughter married Dr. James Hall of Philadelphia, one of the Hall family above mentioned. His early education was acquired at Fletcher institute, Thomasville; then he attended the university of Georgia (Athens), whence he graduated before reaching his eighteenth year, and with an A. B. degree—having been honored with a speaker's place in both junior and senior years. The first year after graduation he kept books for a cotton buyer, and then for three years taught in the institution where he passed his boyhood school days. During this time he studied medicine two years, but was dissuaded by friends, and entered upon the study of law under the preceptorship of Arthur Patten. In July, 1884, he was admitted to the bar and formed a partnership with his preceptor under the firm name of Patten & Merrill. He continued associated with Mr. Patten until 1887, when that partnership was dissolved and he connected himself with Capt. Chas. P. Hansell, the firm being Hansell & Merrill. The firm is considered one of the best in the city, in fact, one of the best in that section of the state. They are attorneys for the city, and counselors for several important Thomasville interests. Mr. Merrill is conceded to be one of the most conscientious and clear-headed of the practitioners in that place, and is highly esteemed in other walks of life. He has been president of the Thomasville Real Estate and Improvement company for a number of years, and managed its affairs with consummate skill and sagacity, with great benefit to the city. He is also president of the Thomasville Public Library association, and always evinces a patriotic public spirit by being connected prominently with all enterprises for promoting the prosperity of his city and county. He is a devoted, working member of the Presbyterian church, in the Sunday school of which he is a teacher and takes great interest. In politics he is aggressive and outspoken and to him is given a large share of the credit of crushingly defeating the opponents of democracy in the elections of 1892 and 1894. He was married Dec. 30, 1885, to Mattie Pittman, who died in July, 1888. He was married again Nov. 12, 1890, to Blanche Tarterwater, his present wife. By his first marriage he had one child, Mattie, born Dec. 25, 1886, and by his second marriage two children: Katherine, born May 4, 1892, and Elizabeth, born June 30, 1894.

EDWARD F. RICHTER, mayor of Cairo, fourteen miles west of Thomasville on the Savannah, Florida & Western railway, is a planter and merchant of no little prominence in that enterprising community, and has a life history quite interesting. He was born near Bayreuth, in Upper Franconia, Germany, Nov. 15, 1822, his parents being Charles Frederic and Margaret (Greiner) Richter, who reared three sons and one daughter: Edward F., Cairo, Ga.; John, forest-master, near Beyreuth, Germany; Joseph, planter, Colquitt county, Ga.; and Margaret, deceased. Ancestors of Mr. Richter's family for generations have held the office of forest-masters under the government. The eminent German author, Jean Paul Frederic Richter, to whom King Ludwig of Bavaria erected a monument at Bayreuth, was a grand-uncle of the subject of this sketch. Mr. Richter received a liberal education at the gymnasium at Bayreuth, where he imbibed democratic principles, propagated in the schools among the scholars, and which led to the uprising in Germany in 1848, so that when he reached manhood he hated monarchy and resolved to emigrate to the United States. He contracted for passage from Bremen to Baltimore on the ill-fated ship "Johannes," which was never more heard of after leaving Bremen, but being detained, the vessel sailed without him and he took passage on the "Copernicus," Capt. Haeslop, which left port on April 17, 1844, and after a terribly stormy voyage of fifty-one days arrived at Baltimore. During the passage the "Copernicus" rescued Capt. Hall Robson of the brig "Peace," bound to Merimachi in Canada, from an ice-bank on which he and his crew had taken refuge after their vessel had foundered in the ice. He remained in Baltimore one year as bookkeeper for a wholesale house, when he was sent to Wytheville, Va., to take charge of a branch store. When war was declared by the United States against Mexico, an intense desire for an adventure impelled him to enlist in the navy, and he shipped on the "Potomac," Capt. Aulick, at New York. He was present at the bombardment and capture of Vera Cruz, and with the blockading forces. Being taken sick, he was sent to the navy hospital in New York on the line-of-battle ship "Ohio;" after his discharge from the navy he enlisted in the Ninth New York regiment of volunteers, but was transferred to the Tenth, but owing to ill-health kept on recruiting service in New York city under Lieut. Moore. The war being closed, he was employed as clerk in New York city; but being promised a very lucrative position in Crawford county, Ga., he embarked for Savannah for the new field, but the house had failed when he arrived in Crawford county, and he was disappointed. His education enabled him to meet the emergency, and he taught school at Oakchumpka academy, in Upson county; after this he accepted the charge of the Flint River manufacturing company in Upson county, which position he held until the company shut down on account of repairs and the high price of cotton. He now concluded to follow the independent occupation of a farmer, and removed to Troup county, but finally settled in Thomas county in 1852, on the west side of the Ochlockonee river. That country at that time was an almost unbroken pine forest, abounding in game. Finally, in 1884, he engaged in merchandizing in Cairo, in connection with his farm. During the civil war he served as a non-commissioned officer in Campbell's siege artillery, and was stationed the entire time at St. Mark's, Fla. Mr. Richter was married in Crawford county in 1849 to Miss Amanda F. Christie, an orphan living with her grandfather, the Rev. Dolphin Davis, a Methodist minister, by whom he had two sons, John F. D., a Baptist minister residing near Chipley, Fla., and Amandus F., a planter near Cairo. The mother of these children died in 1852 in Thomas county. He afterward married Miss Mary Ann Allgood, born in Laurens county, Ga., but residing with her sister in Thomas county, who bore him three sons: Edward M., deceased; Augustus F., farming near Pelham, Ga., and Franklin A., in Cairo, engaged in business as a general manager. In 1854 Mr. Richter was converted and baptized by Rev. Lacy J. Simmons, into the Missionary Baptist church at Big Creek. After the war, feeling called to the ministry, he was ordained, and for about twenty years he preached in Thomas, Mitchell and Decatur counties, but becoming afflicted with throat trouble, he was forced to retire from this active work. He was elected clerk of the Bowen association in 1874, and served a number of years until Cairo church withdrew from that association and joined the Mercer association. Mr. Richter is a master Mason and was raised by Jackson lodge No. 48, in Crawford county, Ga., in 1848, and is now secretary of the Cairo lodge. He has always voted the democratic ticket.

SEABORN A. RODDENBERY, M. D., is one of the most important personages in the thriving village of Cairo, in the western part of Thomas county, Ga., being a physician, merchant, planter, and since President Grant's administration, postmaster. George Roddenbery, his grandfather, came from North Carolina to Bulloch county, Ga., many years ago. The doctor's parents, Robert and Vacey (Anderson) Roddenbery, came to Thomas county and settled in the northern part early in the 20's, where they raised ten children to maturity, of whom the following are living: Margaret, Mrs. Robert Tuggle, Thomas county; Nancy, Mrs. Nathaniel E. Turner, Thomas county; Georgia Ann, Mrs. W. B. Hamilton, Thomasville; and Seaborn A., physician. The deceased are: Louisa, John K., Mary Ann, Elizabeth Jane and Sarah. Mr. Roddenbery was a planter and quite wealthy; he died in 1879 and Mrs. Roddenbery died in 1886. Seaborn A. Roddenbery was born in Thomas county Feb. 18, 1836. He studied medicine under Dr. Robert Bruce, Thomasville, and then attended lectures at Savannah, Ga., paying his own expenses, graduating in 1860. Dr. Roddenbery then located near Cairo, but removed to the village in 1872, which has since been his home. July 31, 1862, the doctor was married in Decatur county, Ga., to Martha A. Braswell, whose parents formerly lived in Thomas county, where she was born and raised. To them were born ten children: Walter B., manager of father's business in Cairo; Bertha, deceased; Cora L., deceased; Robert S., Eufaula, Ala.; Seaborn A., teacher, Thomasville, Ga.; John W., deceased; Katie and Charles D., at home; and McIntyre and Blanche, twins, deceased. Dr. Roddenbery is a progressive citizen and is regarded as an important factor in all movements to promote the development of this section. He is a democrat, a member of the Baptist church, and a master Mason.

N. R. SPENGLER, planter, Boston, Thomas Co., son of Abraham and Rebecca T. (Wyche) Spengler, was born in Thomas county, Sept. 5, 1835. His great-grandfather emigrated from Germany to America and settled in York county, Pa., where the family resided when his father, then unmarried, came to Georgia, about 1810. His father married in Thomas county. Littleton Wyche, his mother's father, was one among the first settlers in this part of the state, before the county was organized, and where for safety and protection from the Indians the families lived in the forts. They had four children: Virginia, deceased; N. R.; Charlotte, Mrs. Graham, Sabine parish, La.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Williams, De Soto parish, La. When Capt. Spengler's father first came to Georgia he taught school and then sold goods in Thomasville. Leaving Thomas-ville, he went to Tallahassee, Fla., where he continued merchandising until he died of yellow fever in 1841. His mother afterward married a Capt. Newman, and died at her daughter's, in De Soto parish, La., in 1867. Thrown upon his own resources when young, he began business when sixteen by clerking for Denham Palmer, Monticello, Fla., and remained with him during 1854-5. The next two years he worked and went to school. In 1861 Capt. Spengler enlisted as a private in Company A, Fifty-seventh Georgia infantry, and served twelve months on the coast, when he put in a substitute. He enlisted again as second sergeant of Company E, Twelfth Georgia regiment, and served during the Atlanta campaign; was in the siege of Atlanta, and was in front of Sherman's army when "marching through Georgia," and again when that army was in Carolina, finally surrendering near Augusta. In consequence of the loss of superior officers he led his company very much of the time, valiantly winning the title of captain by which he is honorably known. The war over, he returned to the piney woods home he began in 1860, near where Boston now stands, and starting with nothing now owns a 600-acre plantation. In 1882 he was elected from this county a member of the house of representatives and served two years, which, he remarked, "was enough for me." Capt. Spengler was married Dec. 5, 1858, in Thomas county, to Mary, daughter of James English, of Lowndes county, by whom he has had five children: Joseph T., planter, Thomas county; Dora, Mrs. James Taylor; Rebecca Wyche, Mrs. Rushin; N. L., and Mattie, at home. His married children are all settled near him. Capt. Spengler is a home-staying, practical, fore-handed farmer. He is of the too few who believe farming in this country can be made to pay. While he has not become a millionaire (in purse), he has by industry, close attention, practicing economy yet avoiding niggardliness, and cultivating intelligently, accumulated a fair competency—a real, practical independence the millionaire (so called) never experiences. He has made money ever since the war, not excepting the most unfavorable years. He does it by staying at home, working in the field with his hired help, and selling and buying for cash. Capt. Spengler is a democrat and a member of the Baptist church.

TOWNS COUNTY.

JESSE MILES BERRONG, merchant, Hiawassee, Towns Co., Ga., son of Jesse and Susan (Chastain) Berrong, was born in Towns county, March 14, 1860. His paternal grandfather, Henry Napoleon Berrong, whose history partakes largely of the romantic, was born in France toward the close of the last century. In early youth he was placed in a school at Bordeaux, where he was kidnapped and carried on board a merchant vessel and brought to America. On his arrival in port he escaped from his captors, and was subsequently adopted into an American family, and given an excellent education. He devoted the greater part of his after-life to teaching, and was regarded as one of the best educators of the locality and period. He was one of the best instructors that ever taught in Towns county, and there are many living, now advanced in years, who remember him and revere his memory. He was married three times, and raised quite a large family of children; was of an extremely benevolent disposition, and to the day of his death remembered, and fluently expressed himself in his mother tongue. He was a soldier during the war of 1812, and died some years ago, in Towns county, aged one hundred. Mr. Berrong's father was born in South Carolina, where he grew to manhood. He married Miss Susan, daughter of Benjamin Chastain, formerly of North Carolina, by whom he had fourteen children, of whom ten survive: William J.; Henry N.; John P.; Leander J.; Joseph M.; Sumner J.; (all in Towns county); Nancy A., wife of Elihu Denton, Rabun county; Lydia, wife of Solomon S. Corn, Tahlequah, Ind. Ter.; Isaac W., Clay county, N. C., and Jesse M., the subject of this sketch. The father died in Towns county in 1884, and the mother in 1885. Mr. Berrong was raised in Towns county, where he received his primary education, and completed his literary education in 1878 at Tallulah academy. After teaching school several years he engaged in merchandising at Burton, and also at Clayton, Rabun Co., which he continued three years. For a year following he engaged in farming near Hayesville, Clay Co., N. C., after which he came back to Hiawassee, where he has been engaged in general merchandising ever since. He is a man of strong and forceful personality, very energetic and persevering, and whatever he undertakes he does with all his might. Add to these characteristics a pleasing address, affability and courteousness, and the product is a man of influence, likely to secure any office or distinction. He is a striking type of a class of young men coming to the front in Georgia, and the south, who will control the future of the state. He is already a conspicuous figure in the politics of his section, and makes his influence felt. He is an ardent, working democrat, a recognized leader, has frequently represented the county in democratic conventions, and is prominent in the councils of the party in northeast Georgia. As a partial recognition of his merit and services he was appointed in May, 1893, United States commissioner at Hiawassee, an office he has creditably and acceptably filled and retains. Mr. Berrong was happily married March 12, 1885, to Miss Kittie, daughter of William R. McConnell, an old and highly esteemed citizen of the county. To them three children have been born: Fielding Pope, Olive Christine and May Belle. His brothers, William J., Leander J., John P. and Henry N., served through the late war, and Leander was taken prisoner and confined in the military prison at Elmira, N. Y., for a period of two years.

JOHN H. DAVIS, lawyer, Hiawassee, Towns Co., Ga., son of Pinkney and Susan (Gurley) Davis, was born in Union county, Ga., Feb. 9, 1869. His great-grandfather on his father's side was a native of Virginia, and removed to North Carolina, where his grandfather, John Smith Davis, was born. The latter moved to Georgia, and died in Fannin county, Nov. 11, 1892. His grandfather on his mother's side, Henry B. Gurley, of English descent, was a native of Habersham county, Ga., is yet alive, and lives in Union county. His wife, Rebecca, who died about 1880, was of German extraction, and a cousin of Hon. Joseph E. Brown, lately deceased, ex-governor and ex-United States senator of Georgia. Mr. Davis' father was born in Fannin county, where he grew to manhood, when he was married to Miss Susan Gurley of Union county, by whom he had six children: Rebecca Jane, school teacher; Mary E.; Joseph T.; Benjamin Franklin; John H., the subject of this sketch, and one, who died quite young. Both parents are still living in Union county. Mr. Davis grew to manhood on the farm in Union county, and was educated in the common schools of the county. When in his twentieth year he attended the high school at Mineral Bluff in Fannin county, and completed his literary education at Hiawassee high school in 1892. During this period he alternately taught and attended school; and, having decided to adopt the legal profession, began the study of law. In 1892 he entered the office of Hon. John J. Kimsey, Cleveland, White Co., Ga., where he finished his law studies, and at the September term, 1892, of Towns county superior court, Hon. C. J. Wellborn, presiding, was admitted to the bar. He at once located in Hiawassee and entered upon the practice of his profession, and has already secured a good general practice throughout the northeastern circuit in which some of the leading attorneys of the state practice. What he has accomplished so far, considering that he has but just crossed the threshold of manhood, under adverse conditions, and by his own unaided exertions, are the proof of natural abilities and strong manly characteristics, which guarantee professional distinction and political preferment. Self-made and self-reliant—one of the people—he will excite admiration, awaken enthusiasm, and command respect, where one attaining the same position through favoring and encouraging advantages would not; so that it may be regarded as a certainty that he has a bright future before him. In 1893 he was appointed assistant postmaster at Hiawassee by President Cleveland; and the spring of the same year he was appointed county administrator, a position of trust and great responsibility, whose duties he satisfactorily performs, and which he still retains. Mr. Davis was married May 28, 1893, to Miss Callie, daughter of Thomas J. Hooper, a prominent merchant, and now the postmaster at Hiawassee. To them one child, Lennie May, has been born.

ASBURY B. GREENE, principal Hiawassee high school, Hiawassee, Towns Co., Ga., son of J. C. Greene, was born at Plenitude in Jones county, Ga., Nov. 14, 1867. His paternal grandfather, James T. Greene, deceased, was born in Wilkes county, Ga. His father is a native Georgian, and was born March 1, 1831. He entered the Confederate service at the beginning of the late unpleasantness and was taken prisoner at Savannah and confined two years at Point Lookout, Md. He was married in 1856 to Miss Henrietta Hawthorne, a union which was blessed by eleven children: J. T. Greene, Atlanta; Nannie S., wife of A. C. Robey; J. E., Macon, Ga.; B. M. and C. L., Gray, Jones Co., Ga.; Asbury B., the subject of this sketch; Fannie; W. M., Macon, Ga.; and Mamie, Minnie and Julia, at home in Plenitude. Prof. Greene received his early education at Plenitude academy, and grew to manhood in his native county. He then entered Mercer university, Macon, Ga., from which he was graduated with second honor, and the degree of B. A. in 1889. Having determined to adopt the profession of teaching he accepted the principalship of Sumner high school, Sumner, Worth Co., Ga., where he remained a year. He resigned this position to accept a like one in the Jackson county normal school at Marianna, Fla., bearing with him the very highest testimonials from Mercer university and the patrons of Sumner high school. In September, 1891, he was chosen principal of the Stephens high school, Crawfordsville, Ga., and one year afterward was elected principal of the high school at Hiawassee. Here his labors have been crowned with phenomenal success; the institution under his administration has made long strides in reputation and prosperity, and bids fair to take a front rank among the educational institutions of Georgia at no distant day. In the primary and intermediate departments and in the grammar school the usual English branches are taught, while in the high school proper, rhetoric, the higher mathematics and Greek and Latin are taught. A normal course has been added for the benefit of such as propose to make teaching their profession, and a music department established. In 1894 the total number of enrolled students was 222, showing that Prof. Greene has already established an enviable reputation as an educator, and that the people of that section are taking an increased interest in education. He has a large and magnificent field, and it is gratifying to him to know that his versatile talents and scholarly attainments are so substantially appreciated.

WILLIAM J. HAYNES, physician, Young Harris institute, McTyierre, Towns Co., Ga., son of John L. and Rebecca (Brown) Haynes, was born in what is now Towns county, Feb. 14, 1841. His paternal grandfather, Ephraim Haynes, was a native of Haywood county, N. C., and late in life, migrated to Texas, where he died. Dr. Haynes' father was born in Haywood county, where he grew to manhood, and by his enterprise, industry and thrift, accumulated a fortune. In 1839 he moved to Georgia and settled on land then in Union, but now included in Towns county. He had a very extensive acquaintance in the border counties of the two states, and being a man of ability and great force of character, attained to and wielded a wide and strong influence. He was married three times. By his first wife, Rebecca Brown, he had the following-named children: Henry H.; Rachel L.; William J., the subject of this sketch; Nancy L.; James L.; Sumner R., and Augustus L. She died in 1857, and he married Amanda Scott of Cherokee county, N. C., by whom he had one child, a daughter. This wife died in 1872, and he subsequently married Mrs. Miriam Moore of Clay county, N. C., by whom, also, he had one daughter. He died in Towns county, July 25, 1893, aged seventy-nine years. Dr. Haynes was raised and educated in Union and Towns counties. At the beginning of hostilities during the late unpleasantness he enlisted in the Georgia state troops, and was in active service on the coast, principally at and around Savannah. In 1863 he enlisted in Thomas' legion, and in the latter part of that year was honorably discharged at Greenville, Tenn. He then began the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. J. G. Stephens, with whom he was afterward associated in the practice for eight years. He has ever since been engaged in the general practice, though he has made a special study of obstetrics and fevers. He has achieved a high reputation and established a large practice, not only in Towns, but in adjoining counties. Faithful and skillful, conscientious, and a man of the highest sense of honor, he has the implicit confidence of the people. As a physician and a citizen he is held in the highest esteem. Dr. Haynes was married in July, 1867, to Miss Sarah M., daughter of Tilman H. and Mary E. Bryson of Towns county, by whom he has had seven children: Mary R., Sarah L., Henry H., Lena E., William J., Beulah E. and Edna I. He is a master Mason.

GEORGE W. JOHNSON, farmer, Hiawassee, Towns Co., Ga., son of John B. and Lowis (Grigg) Johnson, was born in Macon county, N. C., April 17, 1841. His paternal grandfather, Robert Johnson, was a native of North Carolina, came to Georgia, and settled in Lumpkin county, where he engaged in mining and died some years before the late civil war. Mr. Johnson's father was born in Burke county, N. C., about 1815. He was raised in that county, and later moved to Macon county, where he lived some years; then in 1853 came to Georgia, and is now living in Union county. His wife was a daughter of Woody Grigg of Burke county, N. C., and died in Union county, July 11, 1894, aged eighty-four years. To them eleven children were born: James H.; Martha C.; Asaph W.; George W., the subject of this sketch; John O.; William M.; Robert G.; Alfred B., and three who died in infancy. Mr. Johnson lived in the county of his birth until 1853, when he came with the family to Union (now Towns) county, where he was principally reared, and educated in the common schools of the county. Since attaining to manhood he has been mostly engaged in agricultural pursuits with satisfactory success. In 1861 he was commissioned first lieutenant of a militia company in his county, and in the spring of 1862 he enlisted in Company A, Smith's legion, which afterward became the Sixth Georgia regiment, Col. Sumner J. Smith. The July following, his health being impaired, he came home on leave of absence, and saw no more service in the Confederate army. The next August he accepted from Gov. Andrew Johnson of Tennessee a commission as first lieutenant in the Second regiment, Tennessee cavalry, United States of America, and saw very active service throughout the war. With his regiment he participated in the battles of Stone River, Chickamauga and Nashville, and in innumerable fights and skirmishes which preceded the most important battles, rendering efficient and valuable service to the Union army. After the war he returned to his farm. Being a man of ability and activity, and possessing great force and independence of character, he gained great influence in the county. In 1868 he was elected to represent Towns county in the general assembly, in which he served on the committee on military affairs, and auditing committee, and supported with his utmost energy and ability the legislation in aid of the Georgia Air Line railway, and represented his county with conspicuous efficiency and faithfulness. He was a member of the county board of education fifteen years, and served many years as one of the jury commissioners. He has also filled several Federal offices—particularly that of United States commissioner in the internal revenue service under President Harrison—with conspicuously good judgment and fidelity. Mr. Johnson was married July 6, 1861, to Miss Frances A., daughter of John and Alvira Johnson of Towns county, by whom he has had fourteen children: Thomas S., Mary L., John M., Ada M., Lillie L., William M., James O., Alfred E., Edwin A., and Bessie B. (twins), all living; and George B., died in 1863; Ida V., died in 1874; Henry H., died in 1893; and one died in infancy.

SYLVESTER M. LEDFORD, lawyer, Hiawassee, Towns Co., Ga., son of Jason W. and Mary (Holden) Ledford, was born in Clay county, N. C., July 30, 1864. His paternal grandfather, Jason Ledford, was a native of North Carolina, and married Elizabeth Bradley, by whom he had eleven children, all of whom are now living: Alfred, Rabun county; E. Mc., Eli, Daniel, all of Clay county, N. C.; Joseph, Union county, Ga.; Jason W., Towns county; Mary, wife of Jason Ledford; Nancy, wife of Thomas Henson; Lery, wife of Cicero Ledford, all of Clay county, N. C.; Sallie, wife of Miles Fulbright; Matilda, wife of David Crumley, both of Tennessee. He died in Clay county, N. C., in 1885, where his widow is still living. Mr. Ledford's father was born in Macon county, N. C., about 1833, and married Mary Holden, who was born in Towns county. Eight children were born to them, of whom five survive: Sylvester M., the subject of this sketch; Ida A., wife of George W. Bradley, Towns county; Ellen, wife of L. L. Berrong, Towns county; Lillie, wife of E. H. Kinney of New Mexico, married Feb. 3, 1895, in Hiawassee; and James E., unmarried. He entered the Confederate service at the beginning of hostilities and remained until the surrender. He returned to his farm after the war and now lives in Hiawassee, Towns county. His wife died in Clay county, N. C., Aug. 12, 1876. Mr. Ledford's maternal grandfather, James Holden, of direct Irish descent, was born in North Carolina and lived in Clay county. He married Nancy Motes, and of the children born to them four survive: Richard; William; Sallie, wife of Riley Jones, all of Clay county, N. C., and Jackson, De Kalb county, Ala. The parentage on both sides are purely of Irish, Dutch and English descent. Mr. Ledford grew to manhood in Clay county, receiving his early education in the common schools, then attended Hayesville college, same county, and completed his literary course in 1891 at the Hiawassee school. During this period he alternated between attending and teaching school, thus earning the means to pay his educational and other expenses preparatory to entering the legal profession—which he had determined upon. Under the preceptorship of Hon. John J. Kimsey, Cleveland, White Co., Ga., he studied law, and in November, 1892, was admitted to the bar in Blairsville, Union county superior court, Judge C. J. Wellborn presiding. He soon afterward located in Hiawassee and has already secured an extensive and valuable clientage in the northeastern circuit. He is a good lawyer and safe counselor, and is increasing in reputation and patronage, with flattering prospects of a splendid success professionally and politically. He stands well with the people of the county, and his professional brethren. For two years he has been clerk of the superior court—an office he still holds—having entire charge of the affairs of the office. He is a devout and prominent member of the Baptist church. James E. Ledford, brother of Sylvester M., was born in Clay county, Nov. 5, 1866. After receiving a primary education at the common schools of his native county, he attended the Hiawassee school, where, in addition to the usual English branches, he took a course in Latin and Greek. He is now successfully engaged in teaching; and being ambitious, studious and persevering, and possessing unquestioned talent, he is making rapid strides toward a front position as an educator.

WILLIAM R. M'CONNELL, retired merchant, Hiawassee, Towns Co., Ga., son of John and Mary (Kimsey) McConnell, was born in Macon county, N. C., in 1825. His paternal grandfather, William McConnell, was a native of South Carolina, and the youngest of four sons of a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war—the other three being David, Miles and John; the last named also being a soldier in the army. During the war his grandfather—then a mere boy—and his mother were driven by the tories into North Carolina and across the Tar river, and the family settled in Iredell county. When his grandfather, John, returned from the war to his home in South Carolina, he killed the tory captain who had driven his mother and brother from their homes. He subsequently migrated from North Carolina to Georgia, and settled near Gainesville, Hall Co., where he reared a family. Of his sons, one, Eli, was for many years principal keeper of the penitentiary, and another, John, became the proprietor of extensive milling interests in pioneer days, in what was then known as Cherokee Georgia. After the revolutionary war Mr. McConnell's grandfather moved to Macon county, N. C., where his father was born and reared. When grown he went to Cherokee county, N. C. (adjoining Macon, then on the west), of which he was a pioneer settler. He married Mary Kimsey of Tennessee, and reared the following named children: William R., the subject of this sketch; Elijah E.; Thomas Newton; Charles B.; Irene; James H., who served as a captain during the late civil war, and died from the effects of wounds received; Joseph J.; John; and Elisha, the last named also a Confederate soldier who died while a prisoner at Chicago, Ill. He was a man of great energy, and enterprise, and for many years lived in the North Carolina counties of what was then Cherokee and Macon counties, which bordered on what are now Fannin, Union, Towns and Rabun counties in Georgia, in all of which he was well known as a successful farmer, trader and stock-raiser. He died in Macon county, N. C., in 1867, and his widow about 1869, both quite aged. Mr. McConnell was raised on the farm, and educated in Macon county, N. C., and on reaching his majority came to Union (now Towns) county, Ga., and taught school a year, and then kept store near the present site of Hiawassee the next two years. He then went to Cherokee county, N. C., where he engaged in merchandising until 1856, when he came to Hiawassee, the county site of the then new county of Towns, which since then has been his home. He at once engaged in general merchandising, to which he added a hotel business, and conducted them for thirty years. Few, if any, citizens are more widely or more favorably known all over north Georgia and western North Carolina than William R. McConnell. Before the war between the states was precipitated, he was a pronounced Union man; but after the ordinance of secession was passed he followed Mr. Stephens and supported the Confederate cause, a step which nearly ruined him—his home, buildings, and other property having been destroyed by incendiarism. In 1864 he was commissioned to raise a company for the Confederate service, of which he was made captain; and shortly afterward was appointed regimental quartermaster of Col. Ledford's regiment, Gen. Wofford's brigade, retaining the office until the surrender. Returning to his home he resumed merchandising, which he followed until 1890, and accumulated a large estate—particularly in lands. As far back as 1853 his attention was directed to mining, and the mineral resources of his section. He studied mineralogy, and practically acquainted himself with the country, and invested all the money he could spare from his general business in mineral lands; thereby becoming the possessor of large tracts containing deposits of mica, asbestos, copper and iron pyrites, sulphates of iron and corundum and gold. He is now engaged more especially in developing and disposing of a large portion of his large and valuable mineral properties. He has always taken an active and prominent part in all enterprises calculated to advance the development and permanent advancement of the town and county materially, educationally and religiously. It was due to his push and energy, and largely to his very liberal contributions that Hiawassee high school was established, and has become so flourishing an institution. Few men have exhibited a more enlightened judgment and liberality along these lines than he. In 1872 he was elected county school commissioner, and was consecutively re-elected twenty years—until age and ill health compelled him, in 1892, to positively decline longer incumbency. He was by far the most active, unselfish and popular official the county ever had, and declined preferred compensation. He has been an ardent politician, and has frequently represented the county in democratic conventions, always taking a prominent and leading part in their deliberations and campaigns. Mr. McConnell was married in 1848 to Miss Jane C., daughter of Benjamin C. Jameson, of Tennessee, a niece of Col. J. Y. Jameson, for many years, and at the time of his death, a distinguished member of the general assembly of Georgia. To them eight children have been born: Lucius D. (deceased), Feb. 16, 1868; John C., merchant, Gainesville; Aletha, wife of Thomas A. Capps, Toccoa, Ga.; E. Rose, wife of Dr. I. A. Kitron, Clarkesville, Ga.; Fernando C., born in 1856, D. D., now of Lynchburg, Va., and one of the most distinguished divines in the south. He studied theology at the Baptist Theological seminary, Louisville, Ky., and afterward graduated at Mercer university, Macon, Ga. He is a ripe scholar, and is richly endowed by nature intellectually and physically, and is widely known throughout the south; Amelia I., wife of O. C. Wyly, merchant, Hiawassee; Kittie L. J., wife of J. Miles Berrong, United States commissioner, Hiawassee; and Samuel, merchant, Gainesville, Ga.

JESSE M. RICE, teacher, Hiawassee, Towns Co., Ga., son of Jesse and Mary L. (Deaver) Rice, was born in Cherokee county, N. C., in 1864. His paternal grandparents, Isaac and Melinda (Rice) Rice, were natives of Washington county, Tenn., where they were raised and married, and whence they moved to Cherokee county, N. C., about 1831. They had nine children: Jesse; Spencer (deceased); Joseph (deceased); Alfred; Isaac; Samantha, married William Phillips; Sallie, married Jesse Tilson; Cordelia, married J. C. Jenkins; Emeline, married R. A. Kline—all living in Cherokee county, N. C. His maternal grandparents, Rev. Reuben and Lydia (Thomas) Deaver, were natives of Buncombe county, N. C., and raised eleven children: Shepherd, Ephraim, John, William, Miles, Varianna, Mary L., Alley, Samantha, Nancy and Susan. Of these Shepherd, Ephraim and William were soldiers in the Union army; Ephraim serving to the close of the war, was wounded, but with his brother Shepherd still lives in Cherokee county. William died since the war. Mr. Rice's father was born in Washington county, Tenn., and married Mary L. Deaver, born in Buncombe county, N. C., by whom he had two children: William H., now in Missouri; and Jesse M., the subject of this sketch. He died in 1864; but his widow is still living. Mr. Rice was raised and received his early education in the common schools in the county of his birth; and on attaining to manhood engaged in farming. Inspired by a desire for learning, and acquiring a taste for literature, he determined on securing a better education, and preparing himself for the vocation of a teacher. He accordingly left the farm, came to Hiawassee and entered the high school, where he finished his studies in the English branches and mastered Latin and Greek. He is now engaged in teaching in Towns county with unusual success, bidding fair to take high rank among educators. With natural gifts of a high order, he is assiduously cultivating them; add to these a rare intelligence, courteous bearing and pleasing address, and a happy faculty for imparting instruction, and we have conditions that insure success. Mr. Rice was married in 1886 to Miss Emily Deaver, daughter of T. S. Deaver, of Cherokee county, N. C.

WILLIAM S. SNYDER, farmer, Hiawassee, Towns Co., Ga., son of George L. and Margaret E. (Haynes) Snyder, was born near Waynesville, Haywood Co., N. C., June 30, 1847. His great-grandfather, Adam Snyder, was born in Pennsylvania about the middle of the last century, was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war; and after the war migrated to North Carolina, where he settled in Haywood county among the Indians, and raised a family. He died at a very advanced age about 1857. His grandfather, John Snyder, was born about the close of the last century in Haywood county, N. C., where he lived all his life. He married Catharine Smothers, who was born in the same county, by whom he had eleven children: George L.; Nelson; Leander; Daniel; Taylor; Betsey, wife of William Davis; Pollie, wife of Jacob Shuke; Barbara, deceased wife of Joseph Sorrells; Margaret, wife of Wilson Allman; Ellen (deceased); and Catharine. He died in 1868; but his widow, aged ninety-two, is still living in the county of her birth. Mr. Snyder's father was born in Haywood county, N. C., in 1828, where he married Margaret E., daughter of Rev. William Haynes, and by whom he had fourteen children: William S., the subject of this sketch; James L.; John L.; Humphrey R.; Mary Elizabeth, wife of William Hanson; Thomas N., and Charles Burton, who died in infancy; Robert G.; Sarah Jane, wife of William J. Fisher; George W.; Kizar E., wife of Elbert Ensley; Ulysses G.; Doctor S., and Henry, all of whom live in Macon and Jackson counties, N. C. He was a successful farmer and stock-raiser in Jackson county, where he died in 1882, and where his widow now lives. Mr. Snyder lived in Haywood county, N. C., until 1855, when his parents moved to Jackson county, same state, where his father spent the remainder of his life excepting two years, 1864-5, when he refuged to Knoxville, Tenn. The family is of good old revolutionary and Union-loving stock; self-reliant, and self-sustaining; and here, where his family had cleared and settled farms when the Indians roamed the forests, and lived and prospered for generations, Mr. Snyder grew to manhood, and married, and had children born to him. Indulging the laudable ambition to give his children the best educational advantages at his command, he removed to Hiawassee in 1892 that they might have the benefit of its most excellent school and instructors, thus manifesting his high appreciation of a liberal education, and of the facilities for bestowing it afforded by the institution located here. He is one of the most widely, as well as one of the most favorably known citizens in the border counties of Georgia, North Carolina and Tennessee. Mr. Snyder was married in 1867 to Miss Margaret J. Bryson, who has borne him nine children: George H., Clay county, N. C.; Robert L., and William L., Knoxville, Tenn.; Odius Erastus; Norah Florence; Claude M.; John L. W.; Arthur H.; Walter Evart, with "the old folks at home."

HOWELL C. STANDRIDGE, ex-teacher and farmer, Hiawassee, Towns Co., Ga., son of Henry B. and Satirah (Kimsey) Standridge, was born in what is now White county, Ga., in 1851. His paternal grandfather, Samuel Standridge, was a native of South Carolina, and was born about 1774. After his marriage he came to Georgia and settled in what is now White county—a pioneer—where he died in 1876. Mr. Standridge's father was born in Habersham county in 1830, where he was reared a farmer, and where he married his wife—a daughter of the Rev. Thomas Kimsey—by whom he had four children: Howell C., the subject of this sketch; Junius H.; Martha C., wife of Samuel Brown, White county; and Mary A., wife of A. Stringer. He enlisted as a private in the Forty-third Georgia regiment, assigned to the western army, and was present at Vicksburg, where he died at the close of the siege. His widow died in Douglas county, Ga., in 1892. Mr. Standridge received his primary education in the common schools of the county, and completed his literary studies at the North Georgia Agricultural college at Dahlonega, Ga. After leaving college, he taught school twenty years with great success and profit, establishing an enviable reputation as an educator. In the meantime he read law, and about 1880 was admitted to the bar at Cobb county superior court. In 1885 he was appointed postmaster at Hiawassee, and served until 1889, discharging the duties of the office with fidelity and acceptability. He is a gentleman of culture, of extensive reading and information, and varied literary attainments. For the past three years his secular pursuit has been agriculture, in which he takes a special pride and interest. Mr. Standridge was married in 1878 to Miss Mattie, daughter of Rev. Elisha Hedden, an old settler of Hiawassee, and a Baptist minister for sixty-two years. Of the children born to them five are living: Agnes, Branson, Gordon, Mamie, and Pink. Mr. Standridge has been a consistent and active member of the Baptist church for eighteen years; and in 1888 was regularly ordained as a minister, and in which capacity he has devotedly and usefully served the church since.

TROUP COUNTY.

A. D. ABRAHAM, banker, La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., son of A. D. Abraham, was a native of Virginia. His father was also a native of Virginia and followed farming all his life. Mr. Abraham was reared and educated in Virginia, and came to Georgia and settled in Meriwether county in 1855, where he engaged in farming. In 1861 he enlisted as a private in Company F, Forty-first Georgia regiment. He was elected captain of the company, but after serving a short time he was appointed inspector of field transportation for Hood's corps; a position he held and whose arduous duties he acceptably discharged until the surrender. He was a participant in the first battle of Manassas, and afterward, though not in the ranks, was in many hard-fought battles, and shared in the hardships and privations of soldier life. He was in the siege of Vicksburg forty-eight days; and was in the battles of Franklin, Perryville and Chickamauga, and on duty with Hood's command all the way to Atlanta, and during the siege of that city, then went with him to Nashville; and, finally, to North Carolina, where, when hostilities ceased, he was paroled. Only a short time ago he had in his possession the first order issued by Gen. Stephenson for the fattest mules to be killed for commissary purposes. The war over he returned home and resumed his farming operations. In 1871 the La Grange Trust and Banking company was organized with H. S. Wimbish as president, and Mr. Abraham as vice-president. He sustained this relation to the bank until 1874, when Mr. Wimbish died, and Mr. Abraham was elected president; which position he held until 1892, when, on account of ill-health, he resigned—after eighteen years' service. He is a thorough business man; a man of the highest sense of honor; financially strong and an able financier; and no person in Troup county is more highly esteemed as a citizen than he. Mr. Abraham was married Dec. 5, 1855, to Miss Mary A., daughter of Robert M. and Sarah (Collier) Porram, formerly of Virginia, and among the pioneer settlers of Meriwether county. To them six children have been born: Carrie, Robert P., Nannie H., Mary L., Lillian, and Florence. Mrs. Abraham is an exemplary and useful member of the Methodist church. Mr. Abraham has a delightful home not far from the public square; his beautiful mansion being built on a natural elevation, the land gently declining on all sides, giving perfect drainage—the building itself of attractive architecture, and finished and furnished interiorly with all modern conveniences—surrounded with shrubbery and every variety of flowers. Mr. Abraham is a gentleman of very great affability of character, with a cordial handshake and pleasant greeting for all—so much so, that the school children covet his courteous recognition of their salute.

G. V. BODDIE, farmer, Mountville, Troup county, Ga., son of Nathan V. and Elizabeth W. (Battle) Boddie, was born in Warren county, Ga., in 1828. His paternal grandparent, Bennett Boddie, was a native of North Carolina, and lived and died in his native state. He was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Mr. Boddie's father was born near Raleigh, N. C., on a farm which had passed from father to son for generations. He came to Georgia in 1819, and settled in Warren county, where he remained until 1828, when he moved to Troup county. The country was sparsely settled, and main roads far apart, so that before he could get to his proposed home he had to cut a road to it through the woods. A rude double log cabin was the home of his family for years. His maternal grandfather, William Battle, was a native of North Carolina, and was a soldier in the revolutionary war. Mr. Boddie was raised on the farm, and after attending school when a boy in the old log school house, he was sent to a boarding school. He then engaged in farming. When the civil war began he sent a substitute to the army, but subsequently, in 1863, he enlisted in a state cavalry company and served eighteen months. The war over he returned to his farm. He settled on the farm where he now lives in 1858, has taken great pride in it, and made it one of the very best improved farms in that part of the state. He is one of the progressive farmers, and one of the most substantial and reliable citizens in Troup county, and, when occasion calls for it, exercises a great and salutary influence. Mr. Boddie was married in 1860 to Miss Rebecca A., daughter of Henry F. and Rebecca (Moss) Scott. Her parents were natives of Virginia, and soon after their marriage came to Georgia. Mr. Scott was a soldier in the Creek Indian war of 1836. Mr. Boddie is a royal arch Mason; connected himself with the fraternity in 1850, is a quite prominent and useful member, and has served in many offices. Himself and wife are valued and influential members of the Methodist church.

H. D. BRAZELL, farmer, Hogansville, Troup Co., Ga., son of Henry D. and Susan (Heath) Brazell, was born Feb. 16, 1845. His grandfather, Nathan Brazell, was born in Virginia, came to Georgia about the close of the last century, and settled in Wilkes county, among its earliest settlers. Mr. Brazell's father was born in Wilkes county in 1822; and his mother was a daughter of James Heath. Mr. Brazell was raised in Meriwether county and received a limited education. In 1863 he enlisted in Company D, Capt. J. D. McClusta, Sixty-fourth Georgia regiment, Col. Evans, and entered the service under Gen. Flanagan. He participated in the battle of Ocean Pond, also on Appomattox river, Va., when the Union troops blew up the breastworks at Petersburg, and at Drury's Bluff, or Chafen's farm, where he was captured, kept a prisoner seven months and then released on parole, when he came home to Meriwether county, soon after which hostilities ceased. When that occurred he was without money and went to work on a farm, working at first, for some time, for half a gallon of molasses a day. When he came to Troup county in 1869 he was a poor man; but he went to work in earnest, worked early and late, and hard, and now has a good 510-acre farm with a good home on it, with substantial farm improvements, and a large body of land under good cultivation. He is a good farmer and a model citizen; himself and family highly respected. Mr. Brazell was married in 1867 to Miss Eliza C. Humpkins, born in Meriwether county, who bore him two children: James W., and Leonard B., and died an exemplary member of the Methodist church in 1872. In December, 1863, he contracted a second marriage with Miss Permelia F. Culpepper, born of an old Georgia family, in Meriwether county, by whom he has had three children, two of whom, Susan P. and Hugh, are living. Himself and wife are influential members of the Methodist church.

CHARLES S. BROOK, farmer, Hogansville, Troup Co., Ga., son of Joshua and Sarah (McGlochlin) Brook, was born in Meriwether county, April 9, 1842. His grandfather, Jarvey Brook, was one of the early settlers of Wilkes county, Ga., and served as a soldier in the last war with Great Britain. Mr. Brook's father was born in Wilkes county in 1809, where he was reared a farmer, and was schooled at the "old-field" school of the day. When he attained manhood he went to Meriwether county, of which he was a pioneer settler. His maternal grandfather was Mack McGlochlin. Mr. Brook was raised on a farm, and was educated at the common schools, taught in the dirt-floor log house with puncheon seats, etc. In 1862 he enlisted in Company A, Capt. Du Bose, Sixtieth Georgia regiment. The company was captured soon after entering the service, and paroled, when Mr. Brook came home and made a crop, after which he returned (the same year), and joined a company under Capt. John Tucker, in a regiment commanded by Col. Burris Jones, which was assigned to the command of Gen. J. B. Gordon. With this command he was in some of the bloodiest and most important battles of the war, Gettysburg, Wilderness and Hatcher's Run, where he was wounded in the hand, and in a muscle of the right arm, which was struck by a shell. He was sent to the hospital at Richmond, and three weeks afterward was sent to Lynchburg, where he was at the time of the surrender. From Lynchburg he walked home, beginning life anew, with nothing but poor health and a determined spirit. By hard work and good management he has become the owner of a fine 275-acre farm just west of Hogansville, well-improved, and himself comfortably circumstanced; enjoying the good-will and respect of everybody. Mr. Brook was married in 1870 to Miss Fannie S. Griggs, born and raised in Troup county, daughter of Edward and Amanda (Jenkins) Griggs. He was a soldier in the late civil war, and lost his life in the service. To them eight children have been born: Ada; Eddie, died aged seventeen; Buena; Dora; Jesse; Roy; Charles S., and Cecil H. Mr. Brook and his wife are members of the Baptist church.

JAMES M. BUTTRILL, farmer, Hogansville, Troup Co., Ga., son of Thomas and Lurania (Bonner) Buttrill, was born in Heard county, Ga., in 1831. His paternal great-grandfather, Thomas Buttrill, was a native of England, who came to America and settled in Virginia before the revolutionary war. His grandparents, William and Mary (Williams) Buttrill, were natives of Virginia—his grandfather was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war—came to Georgia about 1816, and settled in the woods in Jasper county, where he cleared a farm and raised his family. He also built a store-house of logs and engaged in merchandising. Mr. Buttrill's father was born in Virginia in 1796, and came with his parents to Georgia when he was about twenty years old. His maternal great-grandfather, Bonner, was a native of Ireland, who came to this country and settled in Georgia before the revolutionary war. His maternal grandparents, Whitnall and Alice (Sellman) Bonner, were citizens of Jasper county, where his mother was born July 4, 1807. Mr. Buttrill was reared in Heard county, and what schooling he had was obtained in the primitive dirt-floor log school house, with split-log seats, stick-and-mud chimney, and lighted by square holes made by sawing the logs in the sides. After graduating from one of these "old-field" schools he taught school two years; teaching orthography from the old "blue-back" speller. In 1861 he enlisted in Ferrell's battery of artillery, with which he participated in many battles, and saw much arduous service. He was in the battle at Nashville, was then assigned to Gen. Breckinridge's command; afterward was transferred to north Alabama with cavalry. With his command he was in the engagements at Tuscumbia, Courtland, Town Creek—where they fought from early morn until 2 p. m.—and then pursued and captured Gen. Strait. Returning to Alabama his command was in the fights at Decatur and Selma, and many minor engagements. He was in charge of the warehouse at Selma when the Union forces came in, and narrowly escaped capture. Soon afterward his command was disbanded at West Point, Ga. After the war he returned to Heard county and resumed farming, which he has followed so successfully as to have accumulated a large and very valuable property. He owns 2,000 acres of good well-improved land in Heard county, from which he moved to Hogansville, Troup Co., in 1893, where he owns considerable real estate in the town, and is a stockholder in the Farmers' and Merchants' bank, located there. He is one of the land-marks, and one of the real solid and substantial citizens of the county. Mr. Buttrill was married in 1878 to Miss Alice Schley—born and raised in Alabama—who has borne him four children, of whom only two—Tommie and Lillie—survive. Mrs. Duttrill is a prominent member of the Baptist church.

J. N. CARLETON, ex-educator, now developer, Mountville, Troup Co., Ga., son of Dudley and Sarah (Carter) Carleton, was born in Vermont in 1829. His great-grandfather on his father's side, Dudley Carleton, was a native of England, migrated to America early in the last century, and settled in Massachusetts. His grandfather, Dudley Carleton, was born in Massachusetts, where he married Miss Mehitabel Barker, and then moved to Vermont, before the revolutionary war, and settled in the woods. He was a captain in the patriot army, served under Ethan Allen, and continued through the conflict until independence was proclaimed, and lived to be ninety years of age. Mr. Carleton's parents were both born in Vermont, where they lived all their lives; his father was a soldier in the war of 1812 with Great Britain. His grandparents on his mother's side, William and Polly A. (Woodman) Carter, were also natives of Vermont, their parents having been pioneer settlers. Both his grandfathers were deacons of the Congregational church. Mr. Carleton received an excellent primary and preparatory education at his Vermont home, and then, in 1853, entered Wesleyan college, in Connecticut. After attending a part of two courses there he came south, stopped awhile, first in Tennessee, and then went to North Carolina, where he lived two years and then, in 1855, he came to Georgia. He was an expert in telegraphy, and was in the office in Augusta when connection with Atlanta was completed, and transmitted the first telegram from Augusta to Atlanta. In 1856 he settled in Mountville and embarked in the manufacture of carriages, buggies, etc.; and about the time he was getting successfully established the unpleasantness developed into war, causing him heavy loss. He at once set about preparing to enter the service, but the people learning he had been a successful teacher, circulated a petition asking him to remain in the community and take charge of the school. He taught some time and then joined the state troops, known as "Joe Brown's Pets," with which he served about eighteen months, participating in the defense of Atlanta and was at West Point, Ga., just after the last battle. At the close of the war he taught school a few months, and again in 1874-75. In the meantime he engaged in several enterprises which helped to develop and utilize the resources of the locality. He established a steam saw-mill and ginnery, operating the first steam-driven gin in that section; engaged in building houses, and along with all this he conducted a small farm—just to employ his leisure time. He served as justice of the peace at Mountville twenty-five years, and in 1888 was elected to represent Troup county in the general assembly. He is unquestionably versatile in business qualifications, and a promoter of enterprises and developments, and is recognized as one of the most useful citizens of Troup county. Mr. Carleton was married Dec. 31, 1857, to Miss Angelette Evans—born in Meriwether county—daughter of Thomas and Martha (Harmon) Evans. Her grandparents, Thomas and Martha (Brooks) Evans, were born of Welsh parentage in North Carolina, where they lived and died. Her grandfather was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Her parents were born in North Carolina, came to Georgia in ox-carts in 1828, and stopped in Pike county and made a crop. In 1829 he moved to Troup county, his wife, who is yet living, walking most of the distance, and settled about a mile from Mountville, where they built little log cabins. He helped to blaze out the road between Greeneville and La Grange. One child only—Olin, a son—has been born to this marriage. Mr. Carleton was made a master Mason in 1856, and himself and wife are active and exemplary members of the Methodist church, south.

H. H. CARY, retired physician, state fish commissioner, La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., son of Dennis and Elizabeth (Cady) Cary, was born in Vermont in 1820. His father was a farmer, and both parents were natives of Vermont. Dr. Cary was raised on the farm, and educated in the common schools of the rural districts. He entered and graduated from Norwich university in 1843 with the degree of A. B. He then took another course and three years later graduated with the degree of A. M. This institution was at this time under the presidency of Capt. A. Partridge, who was the first superintendent of the West Point Military academy. After his graduation Dr. Cary was elected principal of the Norwich institute, a school of very high reputation, and continued as such for some considerable time. He then came to Georgia and settled in Jasper county, where he taught school two years, meantime continuing his own studies with a view to professional life. Subsequently he attended the lectures and graduated from the medical college of Georgia, Augusta, now constituted the medical department of the university of Georgia. Some years afterward, on motion of Dr. H. V. M. Miller, he was elected an alumnus of the university. After graduating from the medical college he taught one term in response to the earnest solicitation of the patrons of the school. In January, 1847, he located at Antioch, Troup Co., entered upon the practice of his profession, and lived there nearly a quarter of a century, all the time steadily gaining in reputation and extending his practice. His profession exempted him from military duty during the war, but he rendered some valuable service towards the close. In 1868 he was elected ordinary of Troup county and held the office five years. That same year he brought before the State Agricultural association the matter of fish culture, which resulted in the appointment of a committee on the subject, of which he was made chairman. He then prepared a bill which passed the general assembly, and is now a law of the state, in accordance with which he was appointed fish commissioner, and has been continued in the office from that day until this. For about ten years he has been an enthusiastic member, and is now an officer of the American Fish society. Dr. Cary takes an active, an almost absorbing interest in the fish industry in the state, and bestows upon it a great deal of attention. He has been an active and ardent member of the Georgia Agricultural society since 1872; and is a member of the Georgia Horticultural society. While actively engaged in the practice of his profession he was conducting extensive farming interests, and is now connected with the banking and manufacturing enterprises of La Grange. He is eminently progressive and foremost in all movements promising to promote the material, social and moral advancement of the community. He began life with nothing, but by close attention to professional duty and judicious management, has accumulated a large property, and is regarded as one of the richest, as he certainly is one of the most useful citizens of the county. Dr. Cary was married Jan. 15, 1849, to Miss Mary J. Prouty, a native of Massachusetts, by whom he had the following children: Ella; Earnest, in the bank at Millen; Ida, wife of Col. J. A. Broome; Lula; Ashton, manufacturing business, La Grange. The mother of the above-named children died June 6, 1872. Dr. Cary is a prominent member of the Methodist church.

JOHN DANIEL, farmer, Hogansville, Troup Co., Ga., son of John and Deva (Plaster) Daniel, was born in 1841. His paternal grandparents, Littleton and Elizabeth (Hinds) Daniel, were native North Carolinians. His father was born in North Carolina in 1802, came to Georgia when sixteen years of age, and settled in Jones county. He lived there one year and made a crop, and then went back to North Carolina for his parents, when the family came in ox-carts to Georgia and settled in the virgin forest, living in tents until they could build cabins. His maternal grandparents, Benjamin and Sallie Plaster, were natives of North Carolina, who, early in the present century came to Georgia. Mr. Daniel was raised on the farm and received his meager education in the common country schools. In 1862 he enlisted in Company K, Capt. Speerman, Fiftieth Georgia regiment. He was in the battle of Baker's Creek (where he was wounded in the side), in the battles of Missionary Ridge and Rocky Face Gap. May 18, 1864, he was wounded in the knee and disabled for service. He, however, so far recovered as to return to the army, and remained with it until the surrender. He returned home after the war and began life anew, his only capital being good health, a resolute and upright character, and thirty-five cents. He owns now a paid-for, well-improved 1,000-acre plantation, and as a prosperous and reliable citizen is the peer of any man in Troup county. Mr. Daniel was married in 1868 to Miss Susan E. Philpot, born in Heard county in 1843, daughter of David A. and Litha (Modesty) Philpot. To them five children have been born: Andrew, Allen, Edmond, Ecton and Dove. Himself and wife are devoted members of the Methodist church.

JAMES DANIEL, farmer, Lovelace, Troup Co., Ga., son of Edmond and Julia A. (Wilburn) Daniel, was born in Greene county, Ga., in 1831. His paternal grandparents were Henning and Hannah (Asbury) Daniel. The grandfather was a soldier in the revolutionary war; the grandmother a daughter of Thomas Asbury. Mr. Daniel's father was born in Greene county, Ga., in 1800, and was raised a farmer and educated in that county. In January, 1840, he moved to Heard county, Ga., settled in the woods and cleared a farm, on which he died May 25, 1879. He was a sturdy, practical farmer, and had no ambition to be anything but a good one. Himself and wife were devoted members of the Missionary Baptist church; and when on his death-bed he was engaged in prayer, in singing the praises to God, and exhorting his family and others around him to meet him in heaven. Mr. Daniel's grandparents on his mother's side were Jerry and Sarah (Hudson) Wilburn, who were natives of South Carolina, migrated to, and were among the early settlers of the upper part of Georgia. Mr. Daniel was raised partly in Greene and partly in Heard county; and went to school in the much-written about dirt-floor log cabin, where he was taught and disciplined by James Thornton, Tom Whitaker and Talbot X. Reese. During the late civil war himself and four brothers enlisted. He was detailed to duty in driving a team and bringing in supplies, but the three brothers lost their lives in the service. The other one is still living. After the war Mr. Daniel returned to Heard county, where he lived two years, and then moved to Troup county and settled on the farm he now owns. When he bought it it was said to be the poorest farm in the county; but now, under his well-directed cultivation and improvements, it is one of the best in appearance and yield, and he ranks among the best of farmers and of citizens. Mr. Daniel was married in 1854 to Miss Virginia Jennings, born in Troup county in 1837, daughter of Robert and Eloise (Brown) Jennings. Her grandparents, Robert and Elizabeth (Arnold) Jennings, were born in Virginia. He was a revolutionary soldier, and after the war came to Georgia and settled in Oglethorpe county. Thirteen children blessed this union, of whom eleven are living: Mary, Lula, Julia W., Martha A., Edmond D., Robert, James B., Allen H., Thomas A., Leon B. and Cordelia. Mr. Daniel and his wife are prominent and influential members of the Missionary Baptist church.

W. P. EDMONSON, retired farmer, La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., son of William and Dinah (English) Edmonson, was born in Greene county, Ga., in 1829. His paternal grandfather, Philip Edmonson, was a native Virginian, came to Georgia in an ox-cart in the latter part of the last century, and settled in Greene county. He settled in the woods, and the family lived in tents until cabins could be built. He was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain. Mr. Edmonson's father was born in Greene county in 1802, was reared on the farm, and was a soldier during the Indian troubles of 1836. Mr. Edmonson was reared a farmer, and was educated at the common schools of the county, and taught school himself for five years. Soon after attaining manhood he married, and moved to Heard county, Ga., and settled on a farm. In 1862 he enlisted in Company K—Capt. Speer—Fifty-sixth Georgia regiment, and served until the siege of Vicksburg, during which he was taken sick and sent home. In 1863 he was elected sheriff and held the office four years, much to his pecuniary disadvantage, as no fees or costs could be collected, and he received nothing for his services. In 1868 he removed to Troup county and settled at Antioch, where he engaged in merchandising, established a good business and was very prosperous. Five years afterward he moved to La Grange, and bought the farm he now owns and lives on. He was elected justice of the peace during his residence at Antioch and served as such nearly all the time he was there. His farm, one of the best improved in the county, lies partly within, but mostly outside the corporate limits; his residence, a very elegant one, being within the city limits. He began life after the war with nothing; has been remarkably successful both in his farming and mercantile business, and has accumulated quite a large property. Mr. Edmonson was married in 1857 to Miss Sarah A. Birdsong—born and raised in Oglethorpe county, Ga.—daughter of George W. and Serena (Jackson) Birdsong, by whom he has had six children: Edwin B., Lola, Frank, Anna M., George R., and Albert O. Mr. Edmonson was made a Mason as soon as he attained manhood, and himself and wife are devoted members of the Baptist church.

W. S. EVANS, farmer, La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., son of Thomas C. and Rhoda B. (Swanson) Evans, was born in Georgia in 1838. His father was born and raised in Edgefield district, S. C., and came to Georgia sometime in the twenties, when a young man. He was a captain during the Indian war of 1836, and was with the forces which escorted and guarded the Cherokees on their way to their new home. He was a party to the contract to convey the Indians from Georgia; and after the treaty he was selected to settle with and pay the Indians for their lands. While thus engaged he ate, and held councils with them in their wigwams, securing their friendship and confidence. He was fond of military display and life, and for years was a general of the local militia, when to hold the office was no insignificant local distinction. In 1843 he came to Troup county, soon after which he was elected sheriff, holding the office several years to the entire satisfaction of the people. In 1856 he was elected ordinary of Troup county and held the office until he died, in 1857. He was a member of the masonic fraternity. Mr. Evans was reared and educated at the common schools in Troup county, and had entered the university of Georgia when his father died, and he had to abandon his college course. In April, 1861, he enlisted as a private in the La Grange Light guards—the first company that left La Grange—which afterward became Company B, Fourth Georgia regiment. Not long after the regiment went to the field he was elected lieutenant; and the officers of the Twiggs county volunteers and the West Point guards having been captured, the command of these forces devolved on him. He was in all the engagements in which his company bore an honorable and conspicuous part, among them—King's School-house; Malvern Hill; Sharpsburg; Second Manassas; Morton's Ford; the Gettysburg campaign; the fights around Richmond; Cold Harbor, and Monocacy, where he lost his right leg. At one time during his service he crossed the Potomac three times with his company, and was wounded each time. At Sharpsburg he was shot in the head and left on the field for dead; but he recovered consciousness and rejoined his command. At the battle of Monocacy, July 9, 1864, when he lost his leg, he was captured, but was soon exchanged and came home, and as soon as he was able resumed farming. In 1888 he was appointed postmaster at La Grange by President Cleveland, and retained the office several months during President Harrison's administration. Mr. Evans stands very high with his fellow-citizens as a man of stern integrity and uprightness of character. Mr. Evans was married in 1866 to Miss Maggie, daughter of Walker and Margaret (McCalley) Dunson, native Georgians. To them seven children have been born: Lucy Lee, Mary Virginia, Maggie, Ruth, Willie, Thomas C., and Frank T. The mother, who was an exemplary member of the Methodist church, died Aug. 10, 1891. It is a singular coincidence that all their children were born on Sunday but one, and that one was born on Saturday night. Mr. Evans is a Knight of Honor—was made a master Mason as soon as he was of full age, and is now a royal arch Mason. Himself and all his children are members of the Methodist church.

W. H. FINCHER, SR., merchant, Mountville, Troup Co., Ga., son of Isaac and Elizabeth (Brooks) Fincher, was born in Troup county in 1839. His paternal grandfather, Benjamin Fincher, was a native of North Carolina, whence he migrated at the beginning of this century to Georgia, and settled in the woods in what is now Jasper county. His father was born in Jasper county in 1811, was raised on the farm, and educated in the common schools of the county. His mother was also born in Jasper county, in 1815, and was the daughter of Thomas and Martha Brooks, North Carolinians, who were among the early settlers of Jasper county. Mr. Fincher was raised on the farm, and received a fair education at the common schools. During the war he did duty with what is popularly known as "Joe Brown's pets." At the close of the war he reached West Point, Ga., just in time to not participate in the engagement. After the surrender he engaged in farming awhile; but in 1869 he established a general merchandise store in Mountville, which he has continued to this time with success and profit. Beginning with very little after the war, he has accumulated capital, and is now regarded as one of the richest men in the county. Upright and scrupulously honorable, he has won and retains the confidence of the people. Mr. Fincher was married in 1859 to Miss Arabella Cox, born in Troup county in 1840, daughter of Charles and Elizabeth Cox. To them six children have been born: Betsey B., wife of Rev. W. E. Dozier; Lula I., wife of J. N. Trippe; Maggie M., wife of T. J. Kinnard; Charles B., Robert B., and William D. Mr. Fincher is a master Mason, and himself and wife are influential members of the Presbyterian church.

A. J. FULLER, farmer, Mountville, Troup Co., Ga., son of Bryant and Elizabeth (Galloway) Fuller, was born in Troup county in 1840. His grandfather, Crawford Fuller, was born in North Carolina, where he lived and died. His father was also born in the "old north state," where he married, came to Georgia in ox-carts and on horseback in 1830, and settled in the woods in Troup county, where he cleared a farm. There was such a scarcity of food in the country that he had to go to Macon and work a month to get a supply of provisions for his little family. Mr. Fuller's mother was a daughter of Henry and Livia (Buck) Galloway, both of whom were natives of North Carolina. They came to Georgia about 1835, remained a brief period, and then went to Alabama, where they lived until they died. Mr. Fuller was reared on the farm and got his limited education at the primitive dirt-floor, puncheon-seated log school house, with stick-and-mud chimney. He enlisted in Company B, Sixtieth Georgia regiment, Col. Jones, which was assigned first to the command of Gen. John B. Gordon, and afterward to that of Clement A. Evans. Mr. Fuller certainly has a remarkable record, as the following recital shows. He was in the following battles, some of which were the most stubbornly contested and bloodiest and most important fought during the war: Port Royal, Cold Harbor, Malvern hill, Cedar run, Bristow station, second Manassas, Chantilly farm, Harper's ferry, Sharpsburg, Shepherdstown, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Winchester, Wrightsville, Gettysburg, Kelley's ford, Brandy station, Mine run, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Mechanicsville, Turkey ridge, Martinsburg, Monocacy, Snicker's gap, Kernston, Bunker hill, Fisher's hill, Cedar creek, Hatcher's run, Fort Steadman, Petersburg trenches, Sailor's creek, and Appomattox—and was in the Lawton-Gordon-Evans brigade. Although he was in all these hard-fought battles, and bravely and faithfully performed his duty as a soldier, he was never sick, never wounded nor captured. He began life after the war without a dollar; but now, as the result of his hard work and superior management, he owns 550 acres of fine land in Meriwether county, an elegant home in Mountville, and an ample income; and he made it all farming. Few persons are better conditioned to happily pass through life—none more highly esteemed than Mr. Fuller and his family. Mr. Fuller was married in 1875 to Miss Mary Daniel—born in Troup county—daughter of James and Virginia (Jennings) Daniel, by whom he had three children: Bryant, Jennie L., and Daniel. Himself and wife are members of the Missionary Baptist church.

J. H. GLANTON, retired planter, La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., son of Abner and Tavia (Hardy) Glanton, was born in Monroe county, Ga., in 1829. His parents were natives of South Carolina, whence they came in an ox-cart to Georgia in 1827, and settled first in Monroe, in the woods, and dwelt in tents until cabins could be provided. After a stay of a year or two in Monroe they removed to Troup county, where they made a permanent home. About 1830 two of Mrs. Glanton's brothers, Thomas and James Hardy, came from South Carolina and settled in Troup. These were all pioneer families. Thomas was a soldier in the war of 1812. Mr. Glanton was reared on the plantation, and was educated at the old-time "old-field" school, taught in the historic dirt-floor log school house. He has been a farmer all his life, and has devoted his time and attention to his agricultural interests. In consequence of this, when the "unpleasantness" began he sent a substitute to the army; subsequently enlisted in two different companies, but was detailed for local service in the commissary department. He started in life with but little, but by strict attention, keeping abreast with improved methods and implements, and judicious management and investment, has become one of Troup county's solidest and most substantial citizens. Mr. Glanton was married in 1852 to Miss Louisiana L. Anderson—born in Meriwether county, Ga.—daughter of James R. and Caroline (McQueen) Anderson. Mr. Anderson was also a pioneer settler of Troup county, and felled the timber to make his home. This wife bore him eight children: Anderson, Mattie, Abner, Tavia C., Mollie H., and Julia, and two who died in infancy. Mrs. Anderson died in 1872. In 1874 Mr. Glanton contracted a second marriage with Mrs. Martha E. Hall, born in Meriwether county, daughter of John L. Dixon, who bore him one child, Henry Dixon, and died in 1887. Mr. Glanton enjoys the respect and esteem of all who know him.

W. T. GODWIN, farmer, La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., son of William H. and Mary H. (Flewellen) Godwin, was born in Pike county, in 1825. His paternal grandfather, Jeremiah Godwin, was a native of Virginia, was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, and came to Georgia in 1820. After a short stay he returned to Virginia, where he died. Mr. Godwin's father was born in Virginia, and about 1817, accompanied by two brothers, came to Georgia on horseback. When a young man he taught school and served as a clerk in a store in Eatonton, Ga. Mr. Godwin's mother was the daughter of Alexander and Katie (Peeples) Flewellen, and Mrs. Flewellen was the only daughter of Henry Peeples of Warren county. Mr. Flewellen was a soldier in the war of 1812 under Gen. Floyd. Mr. Godwin was raised on the farm, and educated at the old-time "old-field" dirt-floor, log school house, and has followed farming all his life. During the war he manufactured leather shoes for the Confederate government. He is a member of the alliance, takes a very great interest in it, and in 1888 organized the Sixth congressional district of Georgia. He is considered one of Troup county's best citizens, and stands high in all the relations of life. Mr. Godwin was married in 1844 to Miss Sarah Traylor—born in Troup county—daughter of Wiley and Elsie (Vardaman) Traylor. Mr. Traylor was one of the early settlers, a large stock-raiser, and died in the county. To them seven children were born, three of whom are living: Mary J., wife of W. C. Cotton; Louisa L., wife of M. L. Whitman; Martha, wife of William Stratford of Ft. Michael, Ala. Mrs. Godwin, who was an exemplary member of the Methodist church, died early in 1858; and late in the same year Mr. Godwin contracted a second marriage with Miss Balsora A. Carlisle—born in Troup county—daughter of W. W. and Rowena (Walker) Carlisle. Of five children with which this union was blessed, four are living: W. H.; George T.; Frances, wife of J. R. Roberts; and James B. Mr. and Mrs. Godwin are prominent members of the Methodist church, and he is a council member of the masonic fraternity.

CHARLES H. GRIFFIN, president Troup factory, La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., son of Charles H. and Mary A. (Ashford) Griffin, was born in Troup county in 1845. His paternal grandparents were natives of South Carolina, came to Georgia about the year 1800, and settled in the woods in Wilkes county, where they cleared a farm. Mr. Griffin's father was born in Wilkes county in 1809, where he was reared and educated, and whence, on reaching manhood, he went to Alabama. He was married in Montgomery county in that state, and in 1833 returned to Georgia and settled in the woods in Troup county, where he cleared a farm and reared his family. He was a soldier in the Indian war of 1836; was a member of the masonic fraternity, and himself and wife were members of the Baptist church, to whose support they devoted much time and money. He died in 1855, but his wife survived him many years. She was a woman of uncommon industry, and so devoted to labor that she may be said to have died at her work. The day she died she came from her garden, where she had been engaged, to get a drink of water, when she suddenly dropped down and expired, aged seventy-two years. Her parents, William and Charlotte (Andrews) Ashford, were natives of South Carolina, came to Georgia, and settled and cleared a farm in the woods. Mr. Griffin was reared on the farm, and received a common school education. In 1863 he enlisted in Company B, Fourth Georgia regiment, successively under the command of Capt. Robert S. Smith, Miles H. Hill, J. A. Norwood, and A. C. Gibson, Col. (later Gen.) Phil Cook, and served until the battle of the Wilderness, where, May 5, 1864, he had a thumb shot off, was shot through the hand and also through the hip, which last-named wound permanently disabled him for further service. His company went into that battle with thirty-three men, and came out with only six, the others, excepting four captured, having been killed and wounded. After the war he came to La Grange, his only capital being his war record, personal integrity, and a $100 Confederate note, and entered a general merchandise store, where he clerked twenty-two years; then, in 1872-73, establishing a business of his own in La Grange. In 1891 he was elected president of the Troup Factory company. This company, organized fifty or more years ago by Robertson, Leslie & Co., manufactured goods for the Confederate government during the war, but failed in 1879. A stock company, of which Mr. Griffin was a member, was organized and bought the plant, which has since been operated successfully and very profitably. Since his election as president he has devoted his entire time and attention to its management. The mill employs about fifty-five hands, and has a capacity of 3,500 yards of sheetings per day.

Coming out of the war a poor, penniless, wounded soldier, he has made an enviable reputation for business capability and integrity, and ranks among the most esteemed of the citizens of the county. Mr. Griffin is a master Mason.

J. B. HARALSON, farmer, Long Cane, Troup Co., Ga., son of J. B. and Beulah (Smedley) Haralson, was born in Troup county in 1841. His paternal grandfather, Elijah Haralson, was a native of Virginia, came to Georgia about 1795 in ox-carts, and settled in Greene county. There being but few public roads at that time, and they far apart, he had to cut a road-way to his lands--virgin forest, where he cleared a farm. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. Mr. Haralson's father was born in Greene county in 1803, and was reared on the farm. He remained in Greene until 1827, when he removed to Troup county, making the journey in ox-carts, and settled in the woods on the western side of the Chattahoochee river. There was but one other family in that part of the county at that time. His life-pursuit was farming, but he supplemented that by working as a carpenter, and he served many years as a justice of the peace. He was also a soldier in the Creek Indian war of 1836. Mr. Haralson attended school at first under a bush arbor; he did this two seasons, and then a log house was built, where he finished his limited education. In 1861 he enlisted in Company F, Capt. Bodkin, Twenty-first Georgia regiment, Col. John T. Mercer, assigned to Gen. Smith's command. He saw much hard service, and was in many important hard-fought battles, among them Winchester, and from there to Gettysburg, Cold Harbor and others. He was wounded and in the hospital when Second Manassas was fought. At the time of the surrender he was on duty in Selma, Ala. He entered the service as private, and in 1863, he was promoted to a lieutenancy, which commission he held at the close of the war. After the war he engaged earnestly in farming, with the pursuit of which he has been content, and his success has satisfied his highest ambition. In 1886 he was appointed a gauger and storekeeper in the internal revenue department and held the office some considerable time. Mr. Haralson was married in 1860 to Miss Mary J., daughter of Warren and Mary (Edmonson) Cofield. She died in 1883, and in 1884 he married Miss Anna V. Wilkinson, born in Troup county, who has borne him three children: Thomas B., Florence R. and Beulah. He is a master Mason, and himself and wife are members of the Baptist church.

WILLIAM F. HINES, farmer, Gabbettville, Troup Co., Ga., son of James H. and Nancy (Horton) Hines, was born in Chambers county, Ala., in 1852. His paternal grandfather, Thomas Hines, was one of eleven brothers who came from England and settled in Maryland before the revolutionary war. In the latter part of the last century he came to Georgia and settled in Greene county. Mr. Hines' father was born in that county in 1804, was reared a planter, and educated there, and in 1827 moved to and settled in Troup county, of which he was a pioneer settler. He settled in the woods and cleared a farm, on which he lived till he died, in 1878. He was a devoted member of the Methodist church. His mother was a daughter of Thomas Horton, who was a native of Virginia, whence he came to Georgia and settled in Greene county, where he lived until 1840, when he moved to Troup county, and cleared a farm in the northern part of the county. Mr. Hines was reared in Alabama, where he received a good common school education. His father's health failing he had to leave school. He began life with but little, but by industry and good management has increased his possessions, until now he has a fine 700-acre farm, and is one of the most successful and substantial farmers in the county. Mr. Hines was married in 1879 to Miss Lillie J. Potts, born and reared in Troup county, daughter of Morne and May (Reed) Potts, by whom he has had seven children: Robert P., James C., William F., Mary L., Eloise P., Charles and Ravia. Mr. Hines is a Knight of Pythias, and himself and wife are prominent members of the Methodist church.

W. H. HODNETT, farmer, Long Cane, Troup Co., Ga., son of William and Caroline (Findley) Hodnett, was born in Troup county in 1844. His paternal grandfather was William Hodnett, who was a native of Virginia, a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, came to Georgia by ox-cart conveyance in 1795, and settled in the woods in what is now Putnam county, where, that same year, Mr. Hodnett's father was born. His father was a soldier in the war of 1812, and having secured a land warrant he came to Troup county in 1827, settled in the woods, and cleared a farm. He became a quite prominent citizen, and died in 1863. Mr. Hodnett was raised on the farm, and received a very limited education. In 1862 he enlisted in Company K, Capt. Long, Thirtieth Georgia regiment, Col. Ector, and was assigned to Gen. Clement A. Evans' command. Among other very important battles he was in those of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville and Winchester. He was sick with fever at Winchester when the battle of Gettysburg was fought, and was on a wounded furlough when the battle of Strasburg occurred. He was in all other general engagements in which his command participated until they stacked arms at Appomattox. He stood guard from about ten o'clock until daylight the night before the surrender. Mr. Hodnett was present at Taccoon Ford when Gen. Lee said to Gen. Gordon, "Take your original position at Mine river," whereupon Gen. Gordon said, "Our entire trains are at stake and it is impossible to get them out. Let me try my brigade; they never fail." He was wounded at Smithfield, on account of which he was off duty ninety days, and at Winchester. One of the wounds was in the hip by a ball from a shell. He escaped all other injury and capture. He was in the battle in which Gen. Evans was shot from his horse, and was very near him at the time. He came to the old homestead after the war. All he received from his father's estate was $62.25, and he had his afflicted mother and three children to provide for. He has done this fully and faithfully, and is now the possessor of 1,000 acres of good land, and the farm is as well improved as any in the county. He has forged his way to the front as a good farmer and worthy citizen, deserving and having the confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens. Mr. Hodnett was married in 1876 to Miss Amanda Roberts, born in Troup county, daughter of Wiley P. and Sara (Wilson) Roberts, formerly of Greenville district, S. C., who came to Georgia in 1844 and settled in Troup county. One child, Sallie Fannie, has blessed this union. Mr. and Mrs. Hodnett are members of the Methodist church.

R. M. HUDSON, farmer, Long Cane, Troup Co., Ga., son of Roland W. and Telitha C. (Bennett) Hudson, was born in Troup county in 1841. His paternal grandparents were Richard and Susannah (Parrott) Hudson. He was one of eleven brothers who came from England to America just before the revolutionary war, and settled first in Maryland and afterwards moved to Virginia. From Virginia his grandparents migrated to Georgia about the year 1800, and settled in what is now Jasper county, in the woods, where he cleared a farm and reared his family. He remained there until 1827, when he moved to Troup county, driving his cattle, hogs and other stock, settled in the woods and cleared another farm. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. Mr. Hudson's father was born in Jasper county in 1809, was reared on the farm and educated in the backwoods schools of the period and locality. He accompanied his parents to Troup county in 1827 and was a soldier in the Creek Indian war of 1836. Mr. Hudson was reared on the farm and received a limited education in the common schools of the county. In 1861 he enlisted for six months in the state troops, and at the expiration of that time re-enlisted in Ferrell's battery under Col. Montgomery. His first engagement was at Tuscumbia, Ala., where he was taken prisoner, but in a short time he was paroled. On his return to the service he was transferred to the command of Gen. Forrest, and under that dashing commander participated in the battles at Harrisburg, Miss.; Athens, Ala., and Pulaski, Tenn. In 1864 he contracted measles and was in the hospital at the time of the surrender. During a part of the time he was in the service he held the office of sergeant. After the war he returned to his farm, to which he has given his undivided and unremitting attention, and has been rewarded with abundant success and prosperity. He is very popular and highly esteemed by his fellow-citizens, and in 1894 was elected tax collector of the county, which office he now holds. Mr. Hudson was married in 1863 to Miss Fannie V. Famby, born and reared within three-fourths of a mile of her present home, daughter of Matthew B. and Mary (Meadows) Famby, of a family of early settlers. To them four children have been born: Richard B., Cornelia E., wife of W. F. Stinson; Mary F., wife of Robert L. Hart, and John A. He is a member of the masonic fraternity and himself and wife are members of the Missionary Baptist church. They both united with the church at the same time, and were married by the minister that received them into the church by baptism.

JOHNN TURNER HUDSON, farmer, Long Cane, Troup Co., Ga., son of Roland and Telitha C. (Bennett) Hudson, was born in Troup county in 1844. A sketch of his immediate progenitor will be found in these memoirs. Mr. Hudson was reared on the farm and educated in the common schools of the county. In 1862 he enlisted in Ferrell's battery, which formed a part of Gen. Roddy's command, and while with it saw much hard service and participated in very many engagements of more or less importance, among them that at Bear creek. Later he was transferred to Gen. Forrest's command, and was with it in the battles at Tupelo, Miss.; Athens, Ala., and Pulaski, Tenn., and at the capture of Gen. Straat at Round Mountain. He remained in the service to the end, enduring all the hardships and privations of soldier-life, but was so fortunate as to escape both capture and casualty. When the war closed he had not attained to manhood, the youngest of six brothers in the same company, but returned without a dollar to the old homestead where he was born and which is now his home. He is now the possessor of a good farm, well-improved and under good cultivation, a nice home, and the good will and sincere esteem of his neighbors and fellow-citizens. Mr. Hudson was married in 1872 to Miss Dora Boyd, born in Troup county, daughter of Henry and Susan (Heard) Boyd, by whom he has had four children: Idus, Bennett, Susan and John Turner. Himself and wife are members of the Baptist church.

L. T. C. LOVELACE, farmer, West Point, Troup Co., Ga., son of Lucius C. and Obedience (Robinson) Lovelace, was born in Troup county, on the farm where he now lives, in 1839. His paternal great-grandfather was a native of North Carolina, moved to and lived in South Carolina a short time, and then came to Georgia and settled in Columbia county, among its earliest settlers. His grandparents, James and Mary (Stapler) Lovelace, were natives of South Carolina, came to Georgia in ox-carts and settled in the woods. He was one of the pioneer school teachers in Columbia county, was excellently well educated, served as a soldier in the war of 1812 and died in 1860. Mr. Lovelace's father was born in Columbia county Feb. 6, 1806, where he was reared on the farm, and received his education. He came to Troup county in 1831 and settled in the woods when they were full of Indians and wild animals and began life in a little log hut. His mother was a daughter of Leggett and Elizabeth (Bennett) Robinson, who were natives of South Carolina, came to Georgia and settled in what is now Henry county in 1820. He served as a volunteer in the Creek Indian war of 1836. Mr. Lovelace was reared on the farm where he now lives, and was educated in the "old field" schools and at Bowdon college. In 1861 he enlisted in Company D, Capt. Matthews, Fourth Georgia regiment, Col. George Doles, Gen. Blanchard, and participated in many hard-fought battles, among them: King's Schoolhouse, Malvern Hill, Fredricksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg and Wilderness. At the last-named battle he was wounded in the shoulder, which disabled him for service and crippled him for life. He was sent to the hospital, where he remained until the surrender. He then came home and conducted the farm about five years, when he went to West Point, Ga., and embarked in manufacturing. At the end of five years he sold out and returned to the old homestead, where he has since remained, content with the enjoyments of an intelligent and delightful home circle. He has been a jury commissioner sixteen years and a county commissioner two years. No citizen of Troup county is held in higher esteem, none of more unbending integrity, or who more fully commands the public confidence. Mr. Lovelace was married in 1866 to Miss Amanda Davidson, born in Troup county, daughter of Elias and Lucretia (Leverett) Davidson, native Georgians. Four children have blessed this union: Samuel, Amanda O., Lula, and Lucius B. He is a master Mason and himself and wife and all the children are members of the Methodist church.

ELEAZER MOBLEY, one of the prominent farmers of Troup county, is a grandson of Jethro and Sarah Mobley. The former was a native of South Carolina and a man of somewhat adventuresome nature; he served in the war of 1812, at an early day he came to Georgia, but after a short time moved to Alabama, where he remained until 1847, when he returned to Georgia. His son, Eldridge H., was born in Georgia in 1809 and served in the Indian war of 1836. He was a teacher in the common schools in those early days and was especially noted as a penman, being regarded as one of the best in this section of the country. His wife was Miss Eliza Finney, and their son Eleazer was born in Chambers county, Ala., in 1845, and reared upon the farm, attending school in the comfortless old log schoolhouse of the period. Though scarcely out of boyhood he enlisted in 1861, joining the Newnan guards, First Georgia regiment, under Capt. James M. Harvey. Among the hard battles in which he was engaged was Carrick Ford, Laurel Hill, Greenbrier river, Perryville, Ky., Richmond, Ky., and numerous skirmishes. He served throughout the war, being captured at Fort Steadman in 1864, and held a prisoner until the surrender. He was present at the battle of Monocacy Junction, Md., at the time when Gen. Evans was shot from his horse, being within ten feet of the general at that moment. It was in this battle that young Mobley was made captain of his company and served until his capture. He had served as corporal for a long time previous. During his imprisonment the Yankees made him captain of a company. After his return to his Georgia home at the close of the war Mr. Mobley began life by cutting cordwood and railroad ties, and has been able by his own industry and care to accumulate quite a property and stands high in the estimation of the community. For two years he served as mayor of Hogansville, but though often solicited to run for other official positions would never consent. He has always been a democrat. He is a prominent member of the order of Masons, having been for many years worshipful master. Mr. Mobley in 1872 married Miss Aldora Moreland, daughter of Benjamin T. and Mary (Buttrill) Moreland, born in Heard county, Ga., in May, 1852. Both Mr. Mobley and his wife are members of the M. E. church. Their union has been blessed with ten children, nine of whom are living: William P., Benjamin E., Judson Gordon, Roy M., Eleazer C., Robert T., Reda S., Minnie M. and an infant.

H. E. NEWTON, farmer, Long Cane, Troup Co., Ga., son of John T. and Sarah (Loyd) Newton, was born in Troup county in 1856. His paternal great-grandfather, John Newton, was a prominent Presbyterian clergyman in Virginia. His paternal grandparents, Ebenezer and Ann (Strong) Newton, were born in Virginia, whence they migrated to Georgia about 1800 and settled in what is now Clarke county. Mr. Newton and a neighbor bought a whip-saw, with which they sawed lumber to build a two-story house, and he made the nails needed in its construction. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and a member of the Presbyterian church, of which he was an elder. Mr. Newton's father was born in Athens, Ga., in 1821. He was reared in the town and received a good education, his father being a teacher, and in 1841 removed to Troup county, where he made farming his life-occupation. He was a soldier in the Confederate service during the late war, was a Presbyterian and an elder in the church. Mr. Newton's mother was a daughter of James Loyd, a pioneer settler of Troup county. Mr. Newton received a good common school education, and then taught school himself two years. In 1882 he settled on the farm where he now lives, which is one of the best appointed and best improved in the district. Mr. Newton is a progressive and very prosperous farmer, a model citizen and an active and able promoter of all improvements calculated to advance the community materially and morally. Mr. Newton was married in 1884 to Miss Willie Cunningham, born in Troup county, daughter of Dr. William and Martha (White) Cunningham. He was a native of Tennessee and a Presbyterian, and she was a native of Virginia. Three children: Irene, Mattie and Jeannette, are the fruit of this union. Himself and wife are members of the Presbyterian church, and when his father died he was elected to succeed him as elder.

J. M. OWENS, farmer, Mountville, Troup Co., Ga., son of Daniel and Mary (Prather) Owens, was born in Troup county in 1847. His paternal grandfather, Henry Owens, was a native of Ireland, and came to America before the revolutionary war, in which he served as a soldier in the patriot army. Mr. Owens' father was born in South Carolina, came to Georgia in ox-carts, in 1832, and settled where Mountville now stands; and the next year moved to the place on which Mr. Owens now lives. His mother was also born in South Carolina, and was the daughter of John and Mary Prather, of Scotch descent, born in South Carolina. When the family came to Georgia his mother rode the entire distance on horseback. Mr. Owens was reared a farmer, and farming has been his life-occupation. His limited schooling was restricted to the common schools of the rural districts. In 1864 he enlisted in Company A, Thirty-seventh Georgia regiment, but as hostilities ceased soon afterward, his service was of short duration, and not extra arduous. After the war he resumed farming operations, in which he has been prosperous, and is considered one of the best farmers in the county.

JAMES F. PARK, LL. D., was born May 17, 1834, in Hall county, Ga. He was the son of John and Sarah T. (Robertson) Park. His paternal great-grandfather was a native of Virginia and a soldier in the war of 1812. His paternal grandparents were also from the state of Virginia. The Park family came originally from County Donegal, Ireland, in 1744, and settled in Chester county, Penn. Dr. Park's great-grandfather was a revolutionary soldier, killed at the battle of Cowpens. Dr. Park received his early training from his father, a teacher by profession and thorough and capable in his work; he completed his education at the university of Georgia, where he graduated with the highest honors of his class. He early chose the profession of teaching as his life work, and followed it without interruption for over thirty years. He was beyond question a great teacher and a master in his profession, and the high characters and intellects of many professional and business men, prominent and many of them eminent, in the several southern states testify to the powerful influence for good and usefulness wrought into them by his care and guidance as an educator. Few ever entered the educational field better equipped for its useful and arduous labors, and none ever reaped greater success in its truest sense. He was founder and principal of the famous Park high school of Tuskegee, Ala., and during his active labors was honored with the degree of Ph. D. by the university of Alabama, and of LL. D. by the college at Auburn, Ala. In 1883, from failing health, Dr. Park retired from his profession and removed to his native state, settling at La Grange, Ga. Here he has lived a quiet, retired life with the exception of two years' service as alderman and two years as mayor of La Grange. During his mayoralty he was largely instrumental in the inauguration of a system of electric lights and water works for the city of La Grange, which only needed these two additional marks of progress to render it first among the smaller cities of Georgia. In 1863 Dr. Park married Miss Emma Bailey, daughter of William and Octavia (Holt) Bailey. Six sons are the result of this marriage: Frank, Edward Douglass (deceased), Robert Emory, Walter Gordon, Henry Earle, and Raleigh Park. Dr. Park is to-day retired from active life and spends a quiet time at his beautiful home in La Grange, varied with occasional travel.

J. O. PERRY, retired merchant, Troup Factory, Troup Co., Ga., son of Thomas A. and Amelia (Earp) Perry, was born in Troup county in 1848. His paternal grandfather was John Perry, South Carolina, a soldier in the war of 1812. His parents were natives of South Carolina, who early in life came to Georgia and settled in Troup county. His father served in the state militia during the late unpleasantness, and was a justice of the peace many years. His maternal grandparents were natives of South Carolina—the grandfather named Lew Earp. They migrated to Georgia and settled in Floyd county in 1845. From there they went to Harris county, Ga., where they lived a year and then moved to Troup county. Mr. Perry was reared in Troup county, received a fair common school education, and served some time in the state troops. He began life with $125, by opening a general merchandise store at Troup Factory in 1871, which he continued until 1891, when he retired, having more than realized his most sanguine expectations as to success and prosperousness. While engaged in merchandising he conducted a quite large farming interest, which he still carries on; in which also he was prosperous. He owns nearly 800 acres of good land, which is well improved; and having demonstrated his business ability by his great success as a merchant, he is now engaged in the laudable work of proving himself to be a good farmer, which it is thought he is doing with his usual success—and he is enjoying among his wide circle of friends and acquaintances the confidence and esteem which follows success. Mr. Perry was married in 1877 to Miss Anna E. Estes—born in Troup county—daughter of John A. and Margaret F. (Hall) Estes. Her father was born in Virginia and came to Georgia a few years before his marriage. Margaret F. Hall was born and reared in Troup county. Thirteen children—of whom ten are living—were the fruit of this union: Anna O., Chara B., John A., Lula M., Ira and Iris (twins), Lillie, Henry Grady, Rosa V., and Julian G. Mrs. Perry, an exemplary member of the Methodist church, died Oct. 15, 1894. Mr. Perry is a master Mason, and a prominent member of the Methodist church.

JAMES L. SIMS, farmer, Hogansville, Troup Co., Ga., son of William G. and Permelia (Cheatham) Sims, was born in Meriwether county, Ga., Oct. 10, 1837. His paternal grandparents, John and Fannie (Garr) Sims, were natives of Virginia and came to Georgia early in this century and settled in the woods near Athens, Clarke Co., Ga. Mr. Sims' father was born on this farm July 7, 1811, was reared there, and educated in the "old-field" schools of the locality and period. In 1829 he went to Meriwether county, Ga., and settled in the woods, living in tents until they could build cabins—minus floors—in which the family lived in that condition for some considerable time. In 1837 he moved to Troup county, where he very nearly repeated his pioneer experience in the county he left. He was married Dec. 15, 1836, to Miss Permelia Cheatham—born near Athens, March 8, 1815—daughter of Josiah and Permelia (Jones) Cheatham, pioneer settlers near Athens. Mr. Cheatham was a soldier in the war of 1812, and lived to be more than 103 years old. To Mr. Sims' parents the following children were born: James L., the subject of this sketch, born Oct. 10, 1837; Emeline, born Sept. 17, 1838; William N., born July 13, 1840; Cynthia E., born Oct. 20, 1841; Fannie, born Feb. 26, 1843; Mary, born July 5, 1845; John I., born Sept. 6, 1847; Josiah G., born April 25, 1849; Jones C., born Jan. 22, 1851; George R., born June 15, 1853. He began life very poor, but he was industrious and energetic, and being progressive, with exceptionally good business judgment, he became quite wealthy. Mr. Sims was reared on the farm, and his limited education was obtained in the old log school house. In 1862 he enlisted in Company B, Capt. James McCalla, Thirteenth Georgia regiment—Col. Ector—which command served in the Virginia army under Gen. John B. Gordon. He was in battles at Savannah and Shepherdstown, and numerous skirmishes; but his health not being good he was a great deal of the time in hospitals. He began life with one mule and a cow, and settled in the woods where he now lives. Beginning with but little and a small farm, he has gradually increased his land holdings until now he owns nearly 600 acres of excellent land, with a good residence and good outbuildings, and his cleared land under the best of cultivation. He is now one of the solid and substantial citizens of one of the best counties in Georgia. His thriftiness is worthy of imitation—his success an inspiration to young farmers of small outfit. Mr. Sims was married Dec. 15, 1868, to Miss Jane Powledge—born in Meriwether county April 27, 1845—daughter of John M. and Fannie (Foy) Powledge, whose families were among the early settlers near Savannah, Ga. The following children have been the fruit of this marriage: Robert F., John M., James O., Laura F., Irene J., and Foy P. Himself and wife are prominent members of the Methodist church.

JOHN I. SIMS, farmer, Hogansville, Troup Co., Ga., son of William G. and Permelia (Cheatham) Sims, was born in Meriwether county, Ga., Sept. 6, 1847. (For sketch of parents and grandfather see that of his brother, James L. Sims, in these Memoirs.) Mr. Sims was reared on the farm, and between the urgent necessity for farm work and indifferent school advantages on account of the unpleasantness, he received a very limited education. He began life with sixty dollars, settled in the woods and cleared his farm. He now has a fine 150-acre farm, well-improved, and is recognized as a good, progressive and successful farmer, and is a prominent member of the alliance. Mr. Sims was married in 1870 to Miss Sarah E. Reed, born in Heard county, daughter of Zack. and Elizabeth (Kendrick) Reed, whose families were among the early settlers of this portion of the state. To them nine children have been born: Lula, wife of Andrew Daniel; John P., Clo. V., Lizzie P., William E., Emma B., Sallie B., Edgar and Leta. Mr. Sims and his wife are prominent members of the Methodist church.

JOSIAH G. SIMS, farmer, Hogansville, Troup Co., Ga., son of William G. and Permelia (Cheatham) Sims, was born in Troup county April 25, 1849. (For sketch of parents and grandparents see sketch of his brother, James L. Sims, in this volume.) He received only limited schooling in the common schools of the county, and started in life without a dollar. He has been industrious, economical, attended exclusively to his own business, which he has carefully managed and now owns 725 acres of good land, well-improved, with a good home and outbuildings, and enjoys the esteem and the confidence to the fullest extent of his fellow-citizens. He belongs to a family of good farmers and is the peer of any in the county. Mr. Sims was married in 1874 to Miss Lucy Burdett, born in Wilkes county, Ga., daughter of Thomas J. and Almeda (Murphy) Burdett, of a family of early settlers. To them seven children have been born: William T., Effie, Etta, Raymond, Fannie G., Lurline and Franklin. Mrs. Sims is a member of the Missionary Baptist church.

JONES C. SIMS, farmer, Hogansville, Troup Co., Ga., son of William G. and Permelia (Cheatham) Sims, was born in Troup county Jan. 22, 1851. He is a brother of James L. Sims, in a sketch of whom in this volume will be found a sketch of his parents and grandparents. Mr. Sims was reared on the farm, work on which and the troublous times consequent upon the war being waged while he was growing up, interfered with his schooling, so that his education was exceedingly limited. He began farm-life, however, with one mule and has made farming a life-pursuit. He now owns 230 acres of fine land, well-improved, under the best of cultivation, with ample and substantial buildings. He ranks very high as a farmer, and as an upright and much esteemed citizen. He is a leading and influential member of the alliance. Mr. Sims was married in 1879 to Miss Cordelia Thornton, born in Harris county, Ga., daughter of Turner and Lucy (Castleberry) Thornton, whose families were among the pioneer settlers of Georgia. Three children have blessed this union: Turner, Charles W. and Minnie V. Himself and wife are exemplary members of the Missionary Baptist church.

RUFUS W. SMITH, president of La Grange Female college, La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., son of Ebenezer and Cynthia (Lewis) Smith, was born in Greene county, Ga., March 4, 1835. His paternal grandfather, George Smith, came from North Carolina to Georgia about 1788 in ox-carts and settled in the woods in what is now Lincoln county, when the Indians roamed the virgin forests hunting wild animals and other game with which the woods then abounded. Here he cleared a farm and made a home, encountering and enduring the privations, hardships and dangers incident to frontier life. Some years later he removed to Greene county, and lived to be one of its most substantial and respected citizens. The following interesting incident in the life of his grandmother Smith is not unworthy of permanent record here: When she was fifty years of age she gave birth to twin daughters, both of whom lived to be mothers of families, and on her one hundredth birthday were present at the family dinner. She lived to be one hundred and ten years. President Smith's father was born in Lincoln county in 1791, where he grew to manhood. As work on the farm under the circumstances was an absolute necessity, his education was extremely limited. His maternal grandparents, Walker and Mary (Young) Lewis, were natives of Virginia, came to Georgia about the beginning of this century, and settled in Greene county, where, besides farming, he taught school many years. President Smith was reared on the farm, and what schooling he received was obtained at the "old field" log schoolhouse of the period. When thirteen years old—in 1848—he went to school to Miss Frances A. Culver, walking three miles. It is a remarkable fact that this lady is still engaged in teaching in Hancock county, which has been her vocation during the entire interval. In 1850 he attended the Longstreet institute in Coweta county, and in 1852 the academy at Greenvboro, Ga. In 1853 he entered Emory college, Oxford, Ga., from which he was graduated June 6, 1856, and on June 9 commenced teaching in Haygood academy, Atlanta. With the exception of one year, when he was in the Confederate service, he has been engaged in teaching ever since. He next taught seven months in Barnesville, Ga., which was followed by seven years' service as professor at a leading college. Later he was elected to a professorship in Emory college, where he remained a term of years, and was then elected professor in Dalton Female college. In 1886 he was elected president of La Grange Female college, an institution owned by and under the immediate control of the north Georgia conference, M. E. church south. Since his incumbency, and under his wise administration, the college has been wonderfully prosperous. When he assumed the presidency there were only seven boarding pupils, since which time the number has gone as high as 240. President Smith has devoted his entire life to teaching; no one in Georgia—if in the south—has done more for the cause of education, none excel him and none stand higher in the public estimation as an educator than he. Mrs. Smith also is a highly accomplished lady and teacher, who with her husband has an honorable and exceptionally successful experience of thirty-eight years. President Smith was happily married Dec. 2, 1856, to Miss Olean, daughter of Rev. Jeremiah D. and Mary J. (Jernigan) Mann, her father at the time one of the leading ministers in the state. Eight children have blessed this union: Euler B., professor of English in the college, possesses rare classical and linguistic attainments, has acquired distinction in Texas as a teacher and besides his profound knowledge of English and Latin, mastered the Spanish language during a year's residence in Mexico; Cecil H., lawyer, Sherman, Tex., for many years county attorney; Hubert M., professor literary department; Alwyn M., vocal director; Clifford L., principal high school, La Grange (for six years teacher of natural science in the college); Leon P., professor Latin and chemistry; Meidee, teacher instrumental music; Claire L., also teacher of music. Alwyn, vocal director, spent fifteen years and thousands of dollars to acquire proficiency and his wife (nee Laura B. Crain), also a teacher, took the second honor at the Boston conservatory. Euler B. has been president of the Georgia Teachers' association, and his wife teaches geometry. The following orthographical triumph stands to the professor's credit: At a spelling match in La Grange a word was given out from Webster's Blue Book Speller; he did not follow its orthography, and was called out. He seated himself under protest, afterward investigated the matter, corresponded with the publishers, and since 1886 the word has appeared as he spelled it. La Grange Female college is now equipped equal to any in the state, is located in a city of unsurpassed healthfulness and under the administration of such eminent experienced educators as President and Mrs. Smith, aided by a family of such wonderfully endowed children and other excellent teachers, cannot but

SETH TATUM, farmer, retired lawyer, La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., son of Peter and Nancy E. (Sledge) Tatum, was born in Putnam county, Ga., in 1822. His father was born in North Carolina, came to Georgia when a young man, married in Hancock county, and settled in Putnam county. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. His wife was born in Hancock county, Ga., in 1795, and to them these children were born: Mius S.; Holmes; Seth, the subject of this sketch; A. J.; Matilda; Risilla, and Elizabeth. Of these, Mius S. and Seth served in the late civil war. Mr. Tatum's maternal grandparents, Mius and Rasilla (Hamlet) Sledge, were natives of North Carolina, migrated to Georgia the latter part of the last century, and settled in the woods in Hancock county. He was born in 1767 and died in 1847, aged eighty years, in Troup county. Mr. Tatum was reared in Troup county, and educated in the common schools of the county until he was thirteen years old, when he went to La Grange and attended the high school, of which Otis Smith was principal. In 1841 he went to Mercer university, where Mr. Smith was president, and when the president came back to La Grange, he came also, and finished his preparatory course under him. In 1844 he entered Harvard college and took a law course, graduating in 1845. While there he boarded at the same house with ex-President Rutherford B. Hayes. In 1847 he was admitted to the bar in La Grange, and formed a partnership with N. G. Swanson, which continued until the beginning of the civil war. In 1862 he enlisted in Company E, Capt. J. C. Cutright, Forty-first Georgia regiment, and was assigned to Gen. Bragg's command. He was made ordnance sergeant in the regular service, and received notice of promotion to a lieutenancy, but the commission never reached him. He participated in several hard-fought battles, being in those of Perryville, Baker's Creek, and the siege of Vicksburg, where he was captured and paroled. At the end of three months he returned to the army, reaching it just after the battle of Chickamauga. He was in the battle of Missionary Ridge, and was more or less engaged from there to Atlanta and in defense of the city. He then went with Gen. Hood into Tennessee and was in all the fights in that campaign, and followed the fortunes of the army until the last battles of the war at Bentonville and Smithville, N. C. Returning from the war to Troup county he engaged in farming, and has since made that his life-business. Mr. Tatum is a man of extensive information and progressive ideas. Unambitious of political preferment he has been content to enjoy undisturbed the quiet pleasures of domestic life. In 1890, however, he was elected to represent his senatorial district in the general assembly without opposition, a significant indication of the esteem in which he is held. Mr. Tatum was married in November, 1865, in Troup county, to Miss Sarah E. Stinson, born in Warren county, Ga., in 1837, daughter of Michael F. and Martha A. (Hardaway) Stinson. Her grandparents, Michael and Elizabeth (McKinley) Stinson, were North Carolinians; and her father, born in North Carolina, came south early in life. Her great-grandfather Hardaway was killed in the war of the revolution in Virginia and her great-grandmother died in Virginia nine days after giving birth to her grandfather, her death being caused by exposure in consequence of having to be removed beyond the range of the guns of the British. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Tatum: Frank S.; Seth S., civil engineer; James M.; George H.; Mary K., and Mattie E. Mrs. Tatum is a consistent member of the Methodist church. Mr. Tatum has through life endeavored to observe the parting injunction to him of Judge Joseph Story, "When you stand well, stand still."

J. J. THRASH, farmer, Mountville, Troup Co., Ga., son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Roe) Thrash, was born in Putnam county, Ga., June 12, 1820. His paternal grandparents were Jacob and Martha (Stubblefield) Thrash, and the grandfather was born in Wilkes county. His maternal grandparents, Shadrach and Elizabeth (Hudson) Roe, were natives of North Carolina, came to Georgia on horseback and in ox-carts, and settled on the Oconee river in Hancock county about the time the county was organized. There was a ferry at the point where he settled, which he bought and operated a number of years. He had a brother, John Roe, who, when a boy, was taken by the British in 1812 and sold to the Indians. He made several attempts to escape but was recaptured. Finally the Indians determined to burn him alive. They made all their preparations and had actually gathered and piled up the faggots, and had everything ready to execute their horrible design. Fortunately for him they got drunk, and while they were besotted he made his escape, after having been in worse than slavery for seven years. Mr. Thrash was reared and educated partly in Putnam and partly in Troup county, his parents having moved to the last-named county when he was fourteen years old and settled on the farm where he now lives. When grown he engaged in farming, a vocation he has followed through life. He has been a successful farmer, is comfortably fixed, and has an excellent, well-improved farm. During the late unpleasantness he was in that state military organization known as "Joe Brown's Pets," and was captain of his company. Mr. Thrash was married in 1864 to Miss Nellie Evans, born in Meriwether county in 1837, daughter of Thomas and Martha (Harmon) Evans, who has borne him eleven children: John W., George E., Martha E., Leroy T., Mary, Scott, Charlotte, Isaac, James, Joseph and Rebecca. Mrs. Thrash is a devoted member of the Methodist church.

JOHN H. TRAYLOR, farmer, Lovelace, Troup Co., Ga., son of Rev. John C. and Tabitha (Bailey) Traylor, was born in Virginia in 1824. His paternal great-grandparents, William C. and Elizabeth Traylor, were natives of England, and came to America before the revolutionary war. He had a crown grant for 6,000 acres of land near where Petersburg, Va., now stands. He was born in England in 1674 and died in Virginia in 1753. His grandparents were Humphrey and Sarah (Pegram) Traylor. He was a large planter, and was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. In religion he was a pronounced and devout Episcopalian. Mr. Traylor's father was born in Dinwiddie and his mother in Henry county, Va. He was well educated, and was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain. When he joined the Methodist church, in which he afterward became an able and useful ordained preacher, his father, who was, as already stated, an uncompromising Episcopalian, manifested great indignation, and declared he had disgraced the family. He came with his family to Georgia in 1842 and settled in Troup county, where he lived until his death, which occurred in 1855. Mr. Traylor's maternal great-grandparents were Parks and Mary (Cabaniss) Bailey, who were native Virginians, and he was a soldier in the revolutionary war. Her father, Charles Cabaniss, was the first man who put up a package (plug) of manufactured tobacco. His maternal grandparents were John and Sarah (Allen, nee Smith) Bailey. She was a widow Allen, and great-grandmother of Private John Allen, the distinguished ex-representative in congress from Mississippi. John Bailey served as a soldier during the war of 1812. Mr. Traylor was reared in Virginia, and received a very good primary education in the common schools taught in the old-time log house, and then went a year to Emory and Henry college. In 1842 he came with his parents to Georgia, and settled in Troup county, where he has lived and been engaged in farming ever since. In 1884 he was elected to represent Troup county in the general assembly, and served one term.

Mr. Traylor inherits more than usual intellectual capacity and business ability from an ancestry distinguished for love of independence and progressive characteristics, and is himself a progressive man, keeps abreast with the advanced thought and improvements of the times, and takes an active and prominent part in all movements promising development and advancement of resources and people along all the lines of human endeavor. Col. Traylor was married in 1844 to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Charles C. and Martha H. (Roland) Bailey. Her father was born in Tennessee, and was the son of Parks and Mary (Cabaniss) Bailey, who were natives of Virginia. Parks Bailey was a soldier in the revolutionary army, and Charles C. Bailey was with Gen. Jackson at New Orleans, in 1815, a soldier in the Tennessee volunteers. Her mother was a daughter of Baldwin Roland, of Virginia. Of nine children born to Col. and Mrs. Traylor seven survive: Robert, married Miss Virginia, daughter of Eulam and Sarah A. (Traylor) McDonald; George, married Mary H., daughter of William and Eudora (Harper) Couper; Thomas H.; Jerry R.; Elizabeth; Martha T., Mrs. Thomas H. Northen (son of ex-Gov. W. J. Northen), and Marshall E. Col. and Mrs. Traylor are prominent and influential members of the Methodist church.

OROON D. WHITAKER, farmer, West Point, Troup Co., Ga., son of Samuel T. and Maria L. (Thornton) Whitaker, was born in Troup county in 1849. His paternal grandfather, Oroon Whitaker, was a native of Virginia, a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, came to Georgia in 1820, and settled in Putnam county. Mr. Whitaker's father was born in Putnam county, Nov. 7, 1825, and two years later came to Troup county with his parents, where he grew to manhood. For many years he was a large and prosperous merchant at West Point, with which he conducted a banking business. He was an enthusiastic politician, but never allowed his name to be used for office. He was a master Mason, and reputed to have been one of the brightest in the state. He was also an ardent member of the Baptist church. His mother was a daughter of Reuben and Mariah L. (Winston) Thornton, natives of Virginia, who were among the pioneer settlers of Greene county, Ga. Her father was the first white man to run a boat on the Chattahoochee river, which he did conducting trade with the Indians. When he died he left a large and very valuable estate. Mr. Whitaker was reared and received a good common school education in West Point. With no patrimony he began life there as a clerk in a drug store, and in 1870 engaged in the dry goods trade, in which he continued two years. Abandoning mercantile life he turned his attention to farming, which he has followed since with satisfactory success, having a fine, excellently well-improved farm of 450 acres, and ranking high as a farmer and citizen. Mr. Whitaker was married in 1870 to Miss Dona Holston, born in Chambers county, Ala., daughter of Stanmore and Satira (Grigsby) Holston, natives of South Carolina, and pioneer settlers of Chambers county. Ten children have blessed this union: Wm. D., Reuben T., Carrie D., Mary J., Stanmore, James H., Samuel H., O. D., Ira L. and Maria L. Himself and wife are members of the Baptist church, and he is a member of the Royal Arcanum.

JOHAN T. WHITE, farmer, O'Neal's Mills, Troup Co., Ga., son of W. M. and Louisa S. (Owens) White, was born in Jasper county, Ga., in 1826. His grandfather, Samuel White, was born in Ireland, and came to the United States in 1795 and settled in the woods in Georgia, where he cleared the ground for a farm. He was six months crossing the ocean. Mr. White's father was born in what is now Jasper county, in 1806, and his mother was born in what is now Putnam county in 1805. His maternal grandfather, John N. Owens, was born in Virginia, where he married a Miss Childs, and then came to Georgia and settled in what is now Putnam county, where he lived until 1829, when he removed to Meriwether county. He was a volunteer soldier in the Creek Indian war of 1836. Mr. White was reared on the farm, schooled in the old-time "old field" dirt-floor log schoolhouse of that period. He followed farming until 1861, when he enlisted in the Fannin guards, afterward Company B, Sixtieth Georgia regiment. With his command he was in many hard-fought battles, served through the entire war and surrendered at Appomattox. Although he did arduous service and experienced the dangerous exposures and hardships incident to war, he escaped being wounded or captured. Of seven other brothers who entered the service only four returned. He returned from the war without a dollar, but went to work at blacksmithing and worked at it for thirty years, and farmed in connection with working at his trade. His industry, economy and good management have worked out for him a good competency. He is now the owner of nearly 850 acres of good land, enough of it cleared to give him a splendid farm, whose good condition and substantial improvements will favorably compare with the best in the county. He is considered one of the best blacksmiths, a careful and successful farmer and as a citizen held in high esteem and worthy of the fullest confidence in all respects. Mr. White was married in 1863 to Miss Nannie Smith, daughter of J. A. and Mary (Thompson) Smith. Her father was born in Ireland, emigrated to this country and settled in what is now Putnam county, Ga. When he married he went to housekeeping on a dirt-floor log cabin. His first bedstead was made by driving a forked stick in the ground. On this rested one end of the foot and side-rails, the other end of each inserted in holes bored in the logs of which the cabin was built. Boards were then laid on the rails and the bedstead was complete. Mr. Smith moved to Troup county in about 1832, and Mr. White's wife was born within a mile of where she now lives. To Mr. and Mrs. White four children have been born: Elizabeth, Mary L., John W. and Virgil A. He has been a member of the masonic fraternity forty-five years and his wife is a member of the Primitive Baptist church.

A. C. WILLIAMS, farmer, West Point, Troup Co., Ga., son of David and Tabitha (White) Williams, was born in Meriwether county, Ga., in 1834. His grandfather on his father's side, Gabriel Williams, was a native of Wales, came to this country after the revolutionary war and was a soldier during the war of 1812. Mr. Williams' father was born in Virginia, where he married and migrated to Edgefield district, S. C., where he lived until 1820, when he came in ox-carts to Georgia and settled in the woods in what is now Monroe county. He remained in Monroe county until about 1829, when he moved to Meriwether county, settled in the woods and cleared a farm. He was a blacksmith by trade and a skilled workman. Although he has been dead thirty-five years, there are axes of his make now in the surrounding country. Mr. Williams' mother was a daughter of Jonathan White, of a family of early settlers in this state. Mr. Williams was reared on the farm and educated in the common schools of the county, and on arriving at manhood engaged in farming. In 1862 he enlisted in Company E, Capt. Andrew, Forty-sixth Georgia regiment, Col. Colquitt. In 1863 he came home and not long afterward was elected captain of one of Gov. Brown's special companies. Subsequently he enlisted in the Third Georgia cavalry, which was under the command of Gen. Joe Wheeler, of Alabama. He was in many obstinately contested engagements, including the battles around Atlanta, but was so fortunate as to escape being wounded or captured. After the surrender he resumed farming in Harris county, not far from West Point, in which he has been prosperous. He is enterprising and progressive, fully alive to the public interests, and a promoter of every movement which promises development and improvement. Mr. Williams was married in 1856 to Miss Sarah Lovelace, born and reared in Troup county, daughter of Lucius C. and Obedience (Robinson) Lovelace, by whom he has had five children: Lucius, Mary, Dora, Lizzie and Leila, who died soon after her marriage. Himself and wife are active and influential members of the Methodist church.

JAMES G. YOUNG, farmer, La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., son of Leonard H. and Rebecca (Leftridge) Young, was born in Talbot county, Ga., in 1830. His paternal grandparents were natives of Virginia, whence they came to Georgia the latter part of the last century and settled in the woods in that portion of Wilkes, now Oglethorpe county, where his father was born in 1793. His maternal grandparents were also natives of Virginia, who came to Georgia about the beginning of the present century. Mr. Young was reared on the farm and went to the schools kept in the historic log schoolhouse of the period. In 1862 he enlisted in Company C, Ferrell's battery of artillery, which was assigned to service under Gen. Roddy, of Alabama. He remained in the service through the war, and was in many hard-fought battles and numerous skirmishes. He was in the battle at Resaca, and almost continuously on duty in front of Gen. Sherman from there to Atlanta. At the close of the war he came to Troup county and commenced farming, doing his first work in the old uniform he came out of the Confederate service with. Beginning in this way without a dollar he has by steady hard work, economy and a judicious use of his surplus earnings, become the owner of 1,200 acres of good land on the Chattahoochee river, and is one of the leading prosperous and progressive farmers of the county. Mr. Young was married in 1867 to Miss Martha J. Freeman, born and reared in Troup county, daughter of Jacob and Martha (Birdsong) Freeman, by whom he has had ten children: Emma C., James L., Clem J., Chas. W., Martha R., Anna S., Frank R., Mary L., and Ethel and Estella (twins). Mr. Young is a master Mason and Mrs. Young is a member of the Baptist church.

TWIGGS COUNTY.

ALLEN FRANKLIN BECKCOM. Among the most widely known and highly respected of the earlier settlers of Twiggs county stands the name of Wm. Beckcom, the grandfather of the above-named gentleman. A native of Washington county, he came to Twiggs when quite a young man and bought large tracts of unimproved land, all of which he merged into one plantation. In time his possessions became very valuable, for in addition to his landed estates, he owned numerous mercantile establishments. Though not soliciting political favor he was largely instrumental in bestowing the same on many of his friends, among whom were numbered some of Georgia's most distinguished men. His death occurred April, 1839. His wife, who was Miss Dolly Nusum, a member of an old and prominent family of Georgia, died in 1829. Their family consisted of nine children: Sherwood, Amanda, Mary, Sarah, Allen and Solomon G., all deceased. Those living are: Simon N., removed to Texas, 1859; Susan, Mrs. Hardin T. Smith, and Laban. The last-named, the fourth child and twin of Sarah, is the father of Allen F. Beckcom, and was born Dec. 4, 1808, in Washington county, Ga. He was reared on the old family plantation and received such education as the schools of that time afforded. Like his father, he followed the occupation of planter, and going to Twiggs county, he located on a plantation there. Married to Sarah, daughter of John Faulk, they became the parents of the following children: Amanda H., Mrs. Dr. Richardson; Allen F., W. H., Thomas and Susan, who are dead. Allen F. was born in Twiggs county Dec. 23, 1837. His school days were spent at Griffin, where he acquired a good education. At the age of twenty-four he enlisted in James M. Folsom's company, Twiggs volunteer infantry, but soon after active service began, illness caused his return home. After his recovery he became a member of the state troops and took active part in many engagements, having had command of a company at the battle of Griswoldville. The battle was particularly fierce, many being killed or wounded. However, good fortune attended Mr. Beckcom and he escaped without a wound. Returning from the war he settled on the plantation, and in 1868 was united in marriage to Mrs. Ella Johnson (nee Wiggin), daughter of Mary S. and W. W. Wiggin. One daughter came to bless the union, Ella G. Mr. Beckcom is a true democrat and a member of the M. E. church. He devotes his entire time to the cultivation of his large plantation of 2,500 acres. He is spoken of as one of the most successful agriculturists in the county.

JAMES CLEMENTS BURNS was born March 7, 1840, and died Jan. 8, 1894. He was the son of James C. and Belle Burns. His father's death occurred in 1861, and his mother, whose maiden name was King, died in 1869. They left four sons and two daughters. Two of the sons, Joseph K. and Francis M. Burns, and the two daughters, Mrs. G. A. Glover, and Mrs. F. B. Floyd, still survive them. The boyhood days of James C. Burns were passed on his father's plantation in Twiggs county, where he received a common school education. When older he attended school at Hot Springs, Miss. On returning home he became actively engaged in farming, which he followed up to the time of his death, at which time he was farming on an extensive scale, and was one of the most prominent and successful planters in Twiggs county. In 1861 Mr. Burns married Mrs. Mary Ellen Hall, a daughter of Joseph Williams, a prominent planter of South Carolina. To this marriage no children were born. At the time of his death he had accumulated quite a large property, the result of a life of honesty and industry. Though not a professed member of any church, he lived an upright, exemplary life, ever ready to contribute liberally to any charitable project, never turning a deaf ear to the appeals of the poor and needy, but always acting in a liberal but unostentatious spirit; charitable and generous to a fault; a staunch defender of the right, and always frowning down and spurning corruptions and immorality in any and all places. In politics he was a lifelong democrat, and took an active interest in political matters, though he was in no way considered a politician. His wife, two brothers and two sisters survive him.

CAPT. WM. E. CARSWELL, planter, Jeffersonville. This prominent citizen of Twiggs county is a descendant of a family always, and wherever found, of wide influence and of fine character. The above gentleman's paternal grandsire, Matthew Carswell, was a native of Jefferson county, Ga., his father before him having emigrated from Ireland. He was a planter of large means, his chief moral characteristic having been his intense loyalty to the Methodist church. He married and reared five children: James, Alexander, Wm. E., Samuel M., and Sarah. Of these Wm. E. was the father of Capt. Carswell. He was born in Jefferson county in 1807, received a superior education for those early times, and was for many years a prominent educator in his section. He married Elizabeth J. Gilbert of Wilkinson county, who bore him five children: John, Rufus, Eugenia, James, and W. E., four of whom died in infancy. William E. Carswell was a man of fine intellect and during his lifetime accumulated a fine property. He was in political belief a disciple of Henry Clay, and a devoted member of the Missionary Baptist church. He died in Wilkinson county, where he had passed his life, in 1887. Capt. William Edward Carswell was the youngest child and was born Nov. 5, 1836, in Wilkinson county. He was educated at Jeffersonville academy, and has passed his life as a planter. In 1861 he enlisted in the Carswell guards, a company so called in honor of his father, who equipped them at his own expense. Third lieutenant at the outset, promotion soon came to him and he led the company as its chief officer during the major part of the war, participating in a number of engagements, and received several serious wounds. The principal engagements were Malvern hill, Roan station, Gettysburg, where he received a ball in his left leg, Petersburg, where he was again wounded, Sharpsburg, Cold harbor, Wilderness, Chancellorsville, and many minor engagements. His marriage was consummated while on a furlough in 1863, Dec. 16, with Miss Anna, daughter of John Chapman, of Twiggs county. He located in Twiggs county after the surrender, but soon returned to Wilkinson, where he remained until 1875, when he settled on the plantation he now cultivates. This consists of 1,200 acres of choice land, which, together with his other real estate interests, will aggregate thousands of acres. A democrat, but not a politician, Capt. Carswell affiliates in religion with the New Providence Baptist church. A large and interesting family of children have been and are being reared about his hearthstone, in whom the captain feels a just pride. Their names are: Eugenia, married; Laura L.; Mattie M., Mrs. Dr. W. A. Daniel, state physician during Gov. Northen's administration; Anna T.; Iverson C.; Elizabeth; Wm. R.; and William E., Jr., deceased.

BENIAH S. CARSWELL, Jeffersonville, for many years a practicing physician of this place, who devoted a lifetime to the amelioration of the ills of mankind, died June 1, 1895, mourned by all who were fortunate to know him. Dr. Carswell was born in Telfair county, Ga., Nov. 26, 1830, the son of Alex. Carswell. The latter gentleman was born and reared in Louisville, Jefferson Co., while that town was the capital of the state. He became a planter and later in life moved to Twiggs county, where he died in 1853. Dr. Carswell was but six years of age when his parents removed to Twiggs county. This was in early days, indeed, for Jeffersonville at that time had not even entered the mind of man. The town was afterward laid out, and an academy established, the site being called Jeffersonville in honor of a noted teacher of the county, Jefferson Bryant. The academy was a marvel in its day. Here Dr. Carswell was reared and educated, and selecting medicine as a profession, began its systematic study. He graduated at Jefferson Medical college, Philadelphia, in 1851, but being conscientiously opposed to entering upon the active practice of so important a profession as that of medicine without thorough training, he continued in post graduate study until 1856, when he located at a point now known as Allentown. After three years he removed to Jeffersonville, and afterward practiced from that point. The doctor was twice married and reared an interesting family of children of whom he was justly proud, they having received readily and creditably an excellent education. The doctor's first consort was Carrie C. Sears, of Allentown, whom he married Aug. 26, 1858, while she was not yet fourteen, and who became the mother of five children: Carrie Lela, Mrs. Jas. Evert; Eli S. (deceased); De Witt, Twiggs county; Robert, (deceased at fifteen); and Cornelia, Mrs. Wm. Booth, Pulaski county. The mother of these children was called to her reward Nov. 19, 1880, and on Dec. 15, 1881, Miss Mattie R. Harrell became the doctor's wife. Although reared in the principles of whigism the doctor bowed with the best grace possible to the inevitable, and entered the democratic party after the war, and with which he affiliated till his death. Profoundly religious from his youth, he early united with the M. E. church, of which he was a faithful working member from his fourteenth year.

IRA E. DU PREE, a prominent physician of Twiggs county, comes of excellent lineage, of French extraction, and of a family conspicuous for estimable social and mental characteristics. His father, Ira E., Sr., was born in Washington county, Ga., April 26, 1800. Not having the advantages of a good school he yet applied himself with such assiduity as to perfect himself in several languages, being able to converse fluently in French, German and Latin. Strange to say, he also became noted as a mathematician, two branches in which one mind very seldom becomes proficient. He studied medicine, and in a continuous practice from 1825 to 1869 became widely and most favorably known. He took great interest in public questions and was a great admirer and defender of the principles of the great commoner, Henry Clay. He was elected to the senate in 1860, and in that body was the opponent of Joshua Hill for congress. A dead-lock ensued, which was at last broken by one vote, giving the election to his opponent. He was for many years the president of the State Medical association, a fact which evidences the value set upon him by his peers. He was a man of superior oratorical attainments, of most commanding presence, standing six feet two inches in his stocking feet and weighing 220 pounds. He died March 17, 1869, after a long and well spent life. His life was complemented rightly by the presence of a noble woman, Miss Travis Bryan, who was a daughter of John C. Bryan, a prominent member of the state legislature of North Carolina. She bore him children as follows, and died June 9, 1885: Ellen, now Mrs. M. J. Carswell, of Irvington, Ga.; James, a leading attorney and ex-member of the state legislature at Macon; Mattie, who became the wife of H. A. Snetting, of Atlanta; and Dr. Ira E. This last named gentleman was born Oct. 20, 1854. At twenty he was graduated from the Louisville Medical college, immediately after which he returned home and established himself in Twiggs county, where he rapidly gained in reputation, and built up a practice limited only by his powers of physical endurance. Ambitious of being complete master of his profession he went to New York in 1884 and attended a course at the Post Graduate Medical school in that city; and in 1889 attended a course at and was graduated from the New York Polyclinic. With his early and subsequent equipment he has practiced his profession for twenty-three years in a rural region, and had the rare success of accumulating a fortune. He is now located at Danville, where he also cultivates a large plantation. The doctor was happily married to Fannie C., daughter of Dr. Richard D. Moore, of Athens, Ga., to whom have been born two bright children: Daniel Hughes, and Elliott Moore. In the matter of religion the household is somewhat divided, the doctor being a Baptist, while his wife is an Episcopalian. Though not a politician, the doctor takes a lively interest in the welfare of the democratic party, which elicits his hearty support.

WILLIAM JOEL HARRISON, farmer and state senator from Twiggs county, where he was born Jan. 17, 1841, is the eldest son of Zachariah Harrison. He was reared on a plantation and had just reached manhood's estate when the great civil war broke out between the states. He enlisted as a private in Capt. Jas. Folsom's company, Company C, Fourth Georgia regiment, and left for the front in the latter part of April, 1861. His first serious engagements were the seven days' fight about Richmond, after which he participated in most of the hard-fought battles engaged in by the army of Virginia: Fredericksburg, Antietam, South Mountain (where he received a wound Sept. 7, 1862, crushing the right shoulder), Chancellorsville (where his clothing was riddled with balls, and where he received a saber wound across the forehead), Gettysburg, Hagerstown, Mine Run and the Wilderness. In this latter battle he received two severe wounds in the same leg at the same instant, which disabled him from further service, he having to use crutches the remainder of the war, and from which, indeed, he has never fully recovered. Like thousands of other brave soldier boys, Mr. Harrison at the end of the war found himself penniless and with a shattered constitution to take up the battle for bread. But with that dauntless spirit exhibited on many a battlefield he took hold with a will and gradually gathered the competency which now makes him comfortable. He has always confined his attention to agricultural pursuits, and now cultivates a 500-acre plantation, well stocked and housed. Mr. Harrison has manifested a keen interest in the interests of the democratic party, and in season and out has given it his hearty and intelligent support. This service was rewarded in 1891 with an election to the legislature to fill an unexpired term and by re-election for the full term in 1892. In 1894 he was elected to the senate. The marriage of Mr. Harrison and Georgia Ann Martin, daughter of W. J. and Mary F., was solemnized in Twiggs county Oct. 5, 1865. But one child resulted from this union—a daughter—Mary, who lived but three years. The Harrison family is from North Carolina, where Zachariah Harrison was born and reared near Smithfield. Elizabeth, daughter of Hardy Avery, became his wife, and in 1832 they removed to Wilkinson county, Ga., locating near Gordon. Subsequently they moved over into Twiggs, where they lived out a useful life, the father dying in 1852, and the mother in 1857. The living children are: Wm. Joel, Zachariah, Richard L., Frances—Mrs. W. J. Hardison and Mrs. Stevens. Mr. Harrison is a man of genial social qualities and has that intelligent apprehension of the questions before the public which secures to him the suffrages of his people whenever he comes before them. He is unquestionably one of Twiggs' best citizens.

DUDLEY M. HUGHES. Any mention of the leading men of middle Georgia would be incomplete without a sketch of this stirring and successful promoter, for such he must be known to an appreciative posterity. Col. Hughes is probably best known in connection with the successful engineering of the M. D. & S. railroad to completion, though he has been equally as active in other lines. To him is due a large amount of the favorable advertising his section has received as a fruit-growing country, and his efforts have secured a large amount of the northern capital which of late years has been so liberally invested in middle Georgia. In connection with his duties as vice-president of the M. D. & S. railroad, it is due him to say that while he has placed this new institution on a firm basis, he is also actively interested in a large naval store and turpentine farm in Laurens county, a 1,200-acre, 90,000-tree fruit orchard and has at his home at Danville station, Twiggs Co., a large and thrifty nursery. As a promoter and general hustler, Col. Hughes has few equals. He is a very thorough business man and a gentleman whose social qualities make him deservedly popular. He is the son of Daniel G. Hughes and was born Oct. 10, 1848, in Twiggs county. His youth was passed on his father's plantation, his education being received in the country schools and later at the university of Georgia, Athens. He began his business life in 1870 and has since conducted large agricultural interests. Nov. 25, 1873, he wedded Mary Frances, daughter of Capt. Hugh L. Dennard, mention of whom is made elsewhere. Three children have come to their home: Hugh Lawson, Daniel G., Jr., and Hennie Lou, all of whom are living.

H. W. M'C'REARY, merchant, of Jeffersonville, was born March 28, 1858, in Talbot county. He is the son of Wm. McCreary, who was born in Jones county, Ga., in 1813, and married Nancy Cox, of the same county. Their family consisted of Burgess, who was killed in the war; Josephine; W. Augustus, deceased; Nannie, deceased; J. W., Butler, Ga.; Lee, now Mrs. Gus Cook, Talbot county, Ga.; H. W.; Emmett S.; Alice A., and Charles. H. W. McCreary was reared on a plantation and at the age of eighteen began his business career as a clerk in a mercantile establishment. In 1879 he embarked in a business of his own, which he has continued with varied success and at different places to the present time. He located at Jeffersonville in 1886 and has since conducted a mercantile business. Mr. McCreary is a democrat, but takes only a voting interest in politics. The marriage of Mr. McCreary was celebrated in Twiggs county, Jan. 8, 1880, when Martha J. Chapman became his wife. Mrs. McCreary is a member of an old and honored family, a brief outline of which is appended: She is the daughter of John and Mary (Carleton) Chapman. John Chapman was the grandson of William Chapman, a centenarian soldier of the revolutionary war, and of Edmund Burke, an emigrant from Ireland, was born in Twiggs county, Ga., Jan. 6, 1820, and died Oct. 8, 1892. He was among the most prosperous and successful planters in his county, both before and subsequent to the civil war, as well as one of her most useful and esteemed citizens. Perhaps not one was more esteemed for energy, industry and integrity of character by business men with whom he had dealings. His home was and is one of culture and refinement, the mothers of his children (for he was several times married) showing the deepest and most active maternal interest in the education and training of his children, for which they were nobly fitted. John Chapman was the father of nine children, to the most of whom he gave a liberal education. Those surviving are William T. Chapman, of Whigham, Ga.; Mrs. W. E. Carswell and Mrs. H. W. McCreary, of Twiggs county; Prof. C. B. Chapman, principal of the boys' and girls' high school, Macon, Ga.; Dr. G. E. Chapman, of Pulaski county, Ga., and Paul Herbert and Lucy Carleton Chapman, who reside with their widowed mother at the old homestead. Paul H. ably illustrates his father's business qualities. Of the deceased children, John Iverson died a youthful soldier in the civil war and John Edwards in the beginning of a promising business career, for which he received his preparation and training at the Eastman Business college, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Mrs. McCreary descends from distinguished colonial and revolutionary stock, her great-grandfather on her mother's side, Jeremiah Carleton, of Vermont, having participated in the French and Indian and in the revolutionary wars, and of three great-grand-uncles one was killed in the battle of Bunker Hill, a second was a member of Gen. Washington's life guard, and a third, Capt. Osgood Carleton, was employed by the government to transport about $40,000,000 between Philadelphia and New England. And a first cousin, Judge Hiram Carleton, Montpelier, Vt., is president of the Vermont Historical society. Five bright and interesting children crowned the union of Mr. and Mrs. McCreary, three of whom—Walter H., Mattie L. and Lucy A.—are living, and two—Anna L. and John W.—are deceased.

ISAAC NEWTON MAXWELL, merchant and planter, Danville, Twiggs Co., Ga., is clearly entitled to representation in these volumes. From poverty and obscurity as a young man he has, unaided, taken position both financially and socially among the best men of his county. His people were from the old tar-heel state, where his father, Uriah, was born in 1806, the son of Wm. Maxwell, he being of Irish-Swiss extraction. Uriah married Mary A. Walkins and moved to Twiggs county, where a family of eight children were reared. A daughter and three sons died in youth, the latter during the war, either in battle bravely defending their southland, or of disease contracted in the service. The four children living are: Mrs. Lucinda Kennington, Charity, Susan and Isaac, all in Twiggs county. The last-named was born Sept. 22, 1847. The war found him still in his "teens" with a limited education, but loyal to his section, and anxious to do battle for an idea. He became a member of Capt. B. D. Lusman's company, which went out from Macon, and served faithfully to the end of the war. With naught but his two hands and a willing heart, in 1865, he began the new battle, this time with the world, which is yet on, though he has long had the enemy on the run. As a tiller of the soil on rented land, then as overseer of the large plantation of D. M. Hughes, and subsequently as an owner himself, he has continued to prosper, has reared and is educating an interesting family, and as before remarked, has taken position in the front rank of the best families of his section. He added merchandising to his farming interests in 1890, and has met with good success in the venture. He is in politics a democrat and in faith a Baptist. Is a great reader of good literature and has thus added to the limited education received in his youth. In 1865 Mr. Maxwell was joined in matrimony to Mary J. Champion, to whom has been born the following children: Lula, Mrs. J. C. Johnson, Leona, John T., Harvey H., Oscar N. and Edgar E.

SARAH M. NEWBY. The grandfather of the above-named lady came to Georgia in 1791. He was a farmer and a native of Maryland. Married to Elizabeth Goss, of Elbert county, Ga., he became the father of sixteen children, eleven of whom reached maturity—five sons and six daughters. His death occurred in 1843. The fourth daughter, Nancy, born in 1813, became the wife of William H. Andrews, of South Carolina. Mr. Andrews was born in 1803, and when quite a young boy entered the Baltimore navy yard as an apprentice. After serving his full time, in 1824 he came to Georgia, locating in Twiggs county. From there he went to Dooly county, where he erected a large saw and grist-mill. He died in 1844, and his widow married John G. Overtree, both now deceased. Four children were born to the first marriage: I. R., Gadson county, Fla.; Elizabeth and Mary J., deceased, and Sarah M., Mrs. Newby. Mrs. Newby was born Feb. 3, 1836, in Houston county and reared in Twiggs county. In 1856 she married William E. Hunter, of Ft. Valley, who died at twenty-eight. To this union two children were born: William E. and William J., a daughter. The last-named married Jackson Newby and at her death left seven children, five of whom Mrs. Newby reared. A second marriage was solemnized, Mrs. Newby becoming the wife of Bryant Asbell, son of John and Abigail Asbell, of South Carolina, who were among the early settlers of Twiggs county. He was a man well known and of most excellent character. By this union four sons were born, three of whom are living: Clayton M., Bartow F. and Bryant. Mr. Asbell was born in 1813, was a democrat in politics and died at the age of sixty-one. He was a man of deep religious convictions and of a singularly perfect character as regards morals. Mrs. Newby's third marriage, which occurred Oct. 31, 1869, was to Hilliard A. Newby, who died March 13, 1890. His father came to Georgia in 1814 and reared three sons: H. S., T. R. and Josiah Newby. To Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Newby were born the following children: Jessie J., Benjamin S., James C., Sarah M., Mary E., Maud N. and Rose L., the last-named killed in an accident when three years old. Mr. H. S. Newby had ten children by a first marriage and eight by his marriage to the subject of this Memoir. Sixteen of these lived to be grown. There are living thirty-nine of his grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. Mr. Newby was converted at seventeen years of age and lived in religious faith for eight years. He afterward strayed from the fold, but before his death found hope in forgiveness as did he who came in at the eleventh hour and received full wages, and died perfectly happy trusting in our Lord as his savior. Mrs. Newby has assisted in rearing forty-two children, nineteen of whom were step-children and fifteen of her own. She has reared six sons—three Asbells and three Newbys—all married but two. One of these, F. B. Asbell, is a Baptist preacher, given to her, she says, in answer to her prayer. Mrs. Newby is grandmother of fourteen children and great-grandmother of one son. A large plantation of 2,000 acres is conducted by her boys. It is not an uncommon thing to hear of a double wedding, but in Mrs. Newby's family occurred a singular wedding, two of her daughters and one son being married on the same day. The members of the family are Baptists. Mr. Newby was a Methodist and a democrat.

WILLIAM O'DANIEL. Well-known to the medical profession of Georgia as a man and physician, for his good qualities and high mental attainments, is Dr. William O'Daniel, of Twiggs county. He was born May 2, 1839, in that county, and has always lived there, excepting four years' residence in Atlanta, when holding a public position. His grandfather was born in Ireland and settled in Georgia when Daniel O'Daniel, his father, was born. Daniel O'Daniel lived all his life in Twiggs county, dying there, aged sixty-five years. Dr. O'Daniel received his education in the "old field" schools of Twiggs county, and at Auburn institute, taught by James E. Crosland, located near his home. He then taught several years in Marion academy in Twiggs county. In 1862 he laid down the ruler and the rod and enlisted in the Confederate service as a non-commissioned officer in the commissary department, in Col. D. G. Hughes' regiment. After the war he continued the study of medicine, which he had begun when officiating as an educational instructor, and in 1866 was graduated from the Atlanta Medical college. He returned to his old home in Twiggs county, where he has since practiced his profession. Dr. O'Daniel is a member of the State Medical association, of which he is ex-president; a member of the American Medical association, of the Tri-state (Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee) Medical association, member of the National Association of Railway Surgeons, was a member of the Ninth International Medical congress, and was a delegate from Georgia in 1893 to the Pan-American Medical congress, which met in Washington, D. C. He has frequently been a delegate from Georgia to the meetings of the American Medical association, and is a member of the Macon Medical association. Dr. O'Daniel has been a frequent contributor to medical journals, principally the "Atlanta Medical and Surgical Journal," and has read many valuable papers before the State Medical association. He received the honorary degree of A. M. some years ago from Emory college of Oxford, Ga., and the degree of M. D. from the medical department of the university of Georgia, located at Augusta, and the honorary degree of M. D. from the Kentucky school of medicine in 1885. Dr. O'Daniel for many years solicited by friends to permit his name to be used for public office, always declined, but finally gave in in 1875, when he was elected state senator from the twenty-first senatorial district, serving during the sessions of 1875-76-77. He also served two years as clerk of the superior court of Twiggs county. In April, 1891, Dr. O'Daniel was appointed by Gov. Northen principal physician to the state penitentiary, which position he held until the spring of 1895, when he resigned and returned to his farm. The compliment of his selection was of the dignity of an honor, as there were a number of candidates for the position. Dr. O'Daniel gave an excellent administration, his wide experience and professional skill, together with his kind nature, enabling him to effect several reforms which have long been commended by humanitarians and the national prison reform congress. He is a Knight Templar Mason and for many years was worshipful master of Twiggs lodge No. 164, F. & A. M. He also belongs to Constantine chapter No. 4, royal arch Masons, and St. Omar commandery No. 2, Knight Templars. He is a steward of Beech Spring Methodist church in Twiggs county. Dr. O'Daniel was wedded Nov. 4, 1860, to Elizabeth M., daughter of Henry Sand, a leading farmer of Twiggs county, and to them were born two sons and one daughter, who now survive. His sons are Dr. Mark H. O'Daniel, of Macon, who was for eight years assistant physician in the insane asylum at Milledgeville, and Dr. William O'Daniel, who succeeded his brother to the place mentioned. His daughter is Miss Mollie L., who was graduated from the Wesleyan Female college at Macon. A fine country residence is the home of this eminent citizen and physician who, when desirous of freeing himself from the exactions of a public career, can find retirement by his fireside and the enjoyment of all the pleasures and contentment of a happy domestic life.

JOHN CAREY SHANNON, planter of Jeffersonville, Ga., was born in Columbia, Mo., July 22, 1853. His father, James Shannon, was born in 1799 in Ireland, and in 1821 came to Liberty county, Ga. He there began a career which proved to be one of exceptional usefulness, through a period of years ending in 1859. He had been well educated in the Royal institute at Belfast, and at the time of his coming to America was preparing for the ministry in the Presbyterian church. He is described at that time as being "quite youthful in appearance, very affable and refined in manners, and deeply pious. He was fond of company and took great pleasure in vocal and instrumental music, being an excellent performer on the violin." He was very popular as a preacher and teacher. He acted as assistant at the Sunbury academy the first year and in the fall of 1822 took sole charge. As stated, he was preparing for the ministry of the Presbyterian church, and the presbytery had set the time for his ordination. It had been suggested to him by his pastor, Dr. McWhir, to select for his ordination sermon "Was John's Baptism Christian Baptism?" In his study of this theme, and in his preparation for the sermon, the young professor succeeded in thoroughly convincing himself that he should be ordained to the Baptist ministry, rather than the Presbyterian, and so announced his determination, much to the surprise of his friends. He was baptised soon after, and was received regularly into the Baptist ministry. He taught and preached until 1825 in Liberty county and then took regular work in Augusta, where he preached four years, receiving the largest salary ever given to a Baptist minister of Georgia up to that date, and also taught as principal of Richmond academy. He was then elected to the chair of ancient languages in Franklin college, Athens, Ga., being the first Baptist to hold a position in that institution. Serving in that capacity several years, he was then made president of the state university of Louisiana at Jackson, and later of Bacon college at Haroldsburg, Ky. From this place he removed to Columbia, Mo., where he acted as president of the state university until his death, which occurred in February of 1859. Of him the Rev. J. H. Campbell, who knew him intimately, says: "He was the best general scholar I have ever known. He took most pleasure in the dead languages, but there was no field of literature, nor a branch of science, with which he was not familiar." In the fall of 1823 he was married to Evelina Dunham, in Liberty county, and they became the parents of three children, only one now living, Mrs. Ann M. Douglass, of Columbia, Mo. His wife died at Jackson, La., November, 1836, and in the following June of 1837 he was married to Miss Frances Carey Moore, daughter of Alsa Moore, of Athens, Ga., and by this union are the following living children: Dr. Richard Shannon, of Joplin, Mo., eight years state superintendent of public schools of that state; John C., Jeffersonville, Ga.; L. D., of Jeffersonville, Ga.; and Mrs. W. N. White, of Centralia, Mo. The mother of these children died in March of 1865, and both parents lie buried at Columbia, Mo. John C. Shannon was reared in Columbia. After his mother's death he came to Georgia, and entered the employ of Col. Daniel Hughes, of Twiggs county, with whom he remained a number of years, finally settling on the beautiful plantation he now cultivates. Dec. 1, 1878, he married Virginia F., daughter of Wm. Faulk. This gentleman now lives with Mr. Shannon. He was born in Twiggs county Aug. 1, 1822, and is the son of Mark Faulk. During the late war he served in the state legislature, and relates many incidents of that stirring time. He married Virginia Solomon, a daughter of Henry Solomon. She died in 1861, the mother of three children, of whom Mrs. Shannon and another sister survive. To Mrs. Shannon have been born six children, of whom there are five living: J. C., Jr., Ethel B., Wm. F., Jas. S., and Laura. Mr. Shannon is one of the most extensive planters in the county, and also a leading factor in its public life; is a democrat in politics, and a member of the Christian church.

LENOIR DOUGLAS SHANNON, lawyer, Jeffersonville, Ga. This gentleman is the son of Dr. James Shannon, for long years a leading educator of the south and later of Missouri, mention of whom is made elsewhere, and was born in Canton, Mo., April 30, 1860. He was reared in Columbia, Mo., and there received his early education at Christian college. Later he attended the academy at Cabaniss, Monroe Co., Ga., and the state university of Missouri, and thence came to Jeffersonville, where he was admitted to the bar in 1886. He has since pursued his profession with a marked degree of success. Though not a politician in the sense of seeking office Col. Shannon is looked upon as a man of note in his county and with a future before him. In 1888 he was chosen by the democratic electors to represent his district in the senate of the state, and did so in the following sessions with marked ability. He later served on the state democratic executive committee; the senatorial democratic executive committee; and also on the county executive committee. He, however, displays greater interest in the practice of his profession, and is rapidly acquiring a state-wide reputation. He bids fair to honor the name of his illustrious father.

JOHAN GEORGE SLAPPEY. Robert Rutherford Slappey, the father of the above, was a native of Jasper county, Ga., and was born May 5, 1813. His mother soon after the death of his father moved to Twiggs county, and here Robert R. was reared and received his education. He married Miss Martha, daughter of Matthew Exum, who, having borne him two children, one of whom is living and resides in Twiggs county, died. To his second marriage eight children were born, four of whom are living: R. R., Mark F., Henry Hubbard, and John G. The wife of the second marriage was Mary, daughter of Mark and sister of Wm. Faulk. Mr. Slappey took an active interest in politics, and was for several years a member of the state legislature. He was among the foremost men of his county and assisted in the development which made Twiggs county among the most prosperous in the state, prior to the war. He was an old time whig, and for many years the only citizen of Twiggs county who was the son of a revolutionary soldier. By economy and industry he amassed quite a property during his life, and at the time of his death, which occurred Nov. 15, 1890, he was considered one of the wealthiest men of his section. John George Slappey was born in Twiggs county February, 1854. He had the best educational advantages the state afforded, and is a graduate of the Atlanta Medical college. In 1875 he located in his native county and began the practice of medicine, which profession he still follows. He is a very successful practitioner, and has established an enviable reputation for himself both as a physician and a citizen. Aside from his practice he has the care of a plantation of some 300 acres. Married to Anna, daughter of Henry Carter, he became the father of three children: Mark F., Henry C., and John G. The mother died November, 1892. A second marriage was solemnized—the wife of this instance being a daughter of Capt. John A. Coffee (see sketch elsewhere). One child has been born to this union, Mary Anna.

ROBERT R. SLAPPEY. This gentleman is the eldest of eight children of Robert R. Slappey, and was born in March of 1845. He was reared in his native county of Twiggs and received but an ordinary schooling. In 1861, when the call came for men to fight for the rights and protect the homes of the southern people, he was among the first to respond by enlistment. A member of the Twiggs guards under Capt. Barclay, he participated in some of the most hotly contested battles of the war, Yorktown, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Richmond, Malvern Hill and Fredericksburg being among the most important of these. In 1863, on account of ill health, he was discharged, but again enlisted after four months as a member of Company E, Hampton cavalry of Bibb county, and served till the close of the war. After the surrender he returned home, and in November of 1865 he accepted the position of agent of the Southern Express company, and of the then E. T., V. & G. railroad, in which capacity he still serves, much to his credit and the satisfaction of his employers. He also conducts a plantation of 2,500 acres. By the good management of Mr. Slappey, his father's estate, which at the close of the war was in an impoverished condition, was saved to the family. He is one of the substantial democrats of his county, and in faith a Methodist. His wife was Miss Virginia Nelson of Twiggs county. She is a daughter of John A. Nelson of that county, who is very highly esteemed as a citizen and neighbor. To the marriage, which occurred in January of 1865, six children have been born: Mary Lou, Wm. F., John Nelson, Robert R., Virginia P., and Jarrot M., who died in infancy.

WM. L. SOLOMON. This gentleman is justly regarded as among the leading citizens of Twiggs county, having been for years intimately associated with all movements intended to promote its prosperity. The family were originally from North Carolina, from which state they located in what is now Twiggs county in the latter part of the last century. James, the father of Wm. L., was born here in 1800 and reared on a plantation. At eighteen he packed his all in a bandana handkerchief, and started out to see what the world contained for him. Going to Marion county, he entered a store as a clerk, of which he later became a part owner. He merchandised for some sixteen years, then bought a farm in Twiggs county and passed the remainder of his days in cultivating the soil. He married Frances, daughter of William and Mary E. Crocker, and reared a family of five children: James C., died during the late war; Cindarilla, deceased wife of Paul Tarver; William L.; Josephine, widow of C. R. Faulk, Perry, Ga.; Carey E., Montgomery county, Ga. The father died while still in his prime, the mother subsequently marrying H. L. Denard, by whom she had two children: Ervin and Mary. Mrs. Denard was a woman of shrewd business sense, and by her energy and good judgment quite a competency was accumulated. She died in 1888. William L. Solomon was born in Twiggs county, Jan. 31, 1834. He was educated at Emory college, attaining to the senior class, but not finishing the course. He began farming the year before his majority and has been true to his first love with such persistency and intelligence as to place him in the front rank of the agriculturists of middle Georgia; but as to theory and practice he cultivates some 1,600 acres at present, and owns lands in adjoining counties aggregating some 3,000 acres. Politically Dr. Solomon favors the democratic party, but cares nothing for the emoluments of office. He is a stanch Baptist, being a deacon in his local organization—Richland church. The marriage of Wm. L. Solomon and Miss A. E. Fitzpatrick was happily consummated in Twiggs county. Mrs. Solomon is a daughter of John Fitzpatrick and was reared in the county of her birth. They became the parents of four children: John F., Jeffersonville, a farmer; Jones C., a Baptist minister, South Macon; William W., superintendent gin factory, Marseyville; Mary, wife of E. Jones (deceased). These children were all given the advantage of a collegiate course of study, and are filling honored positions in society.

WM. B. TARVER. Twiggs county does not contain within her borders representatives of a more illustrious name than the one here mentioned, this gentleman being the son of the noted Gen. Hartwell Hill Tarver, who was a prominent military officer of the state during the 40's. Gen. Tarver was born and reared in Old Dominion state, Brunswick county, and was a descendant of a family of seven brothers and two sisters who came to America in colonial days, the seven brothers participating in the revolutionary war on the patriot side. In young manhood Gen. Tarver became a resident of Twiggs county and rapidly accumulated an immense property in lands and slaves. Always of a military turn of mind, it was not until 1842 that he took any prominent part, at which time his ability was recognized by his election by the legislature of the state to be general of all of the militia of Georgia, then a very prominent and important factor in the public life of the state. Gen. Tarver continued in the public eye with acceptability from that time until his death, which occurred in 1852, in Twiggs county. Gen. Tarver was twice married, his first wife having been Miss Ann Wimberly, a sister of Dr. Henry Wimberly, of Jeffersonville, of whom mention is made elsewhere. Their children were Dolly, whose romantic marriage to the late Gen. Colquitt is well remembered; Paul; Henry; Fred, and John. All of these are deceased save Henry, who lives in Albany, Ga. The second marriage was to Harriet, daughter of Henry and Nancy Bunn, who had emigrated to Georgia from North Carolina. Two children blessed this union: William B., the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch, and Benjamin M., a resident of Chattanooga, Tenn. This wife outlived the general some seventeen years, dying in 1879. Both lie buried in Twiggs county. Wm. B. Tarver was born May 23, 1844, in Twiggs county. He was in college in Virginia when the war cloud burst, and hastening home he enlisted as a volunteer when but seventeen years of age in Gen. Hampton's cavalry command, in which he served the entire four years. He participated in nearly every pitched battle of the war, and surrendered at High Point, N. C., with Wade Hampton's brigade. In 1863, while home on a furlough, he was joined in matrimony to Miss Laura Wimberly, a daughter of Dr. Henry W., before mentioned. But one child resulted in this union, Caroline, now the wife of G. W. Jordan, Jr., of Pulaski county. Mr. Tarver's first wife died in 1868, his present consort having been Annie P. Weaver, daughter of Wm. M. and Lucia F. Weaver, of Selma, Ala., descended from Gen. Weaver of revolutionary fame. Six children blessed this union: Lucia H., Hartwell Hill, Benjamin M., Jr., Wm. B., Jr., Roseline

T. and Ann W. Mr. Tarver is a worthy son of a worthy father, being held in high esteem in the community where he has long resided. He cultivates a plantation of 2,600 acres, and does it in such a manner as to secure him the reputation of being one of the best planters in the county. Democracy secures his suffrage, and the Methodist church his moral and financial support.

JOHN S. VAUGHN, an ex-representative of the legislature, and at present postmaster, merchant and farmer at Vaughn, postoffice, Twiggs Co., was born in the same county Feb. 11, 1852. He has spent his entire life in agricultural pursuits, and deserves much credit for the success which has attended him. He operates landed interests aggregating 1,000 acres. In 1894 he became the nominee of his party for the legislature, and was easily elected over his populist opponent. He is a democrat of the old school, and is doing himself and his county credit in the important position to which he was chosen. Mr. Vaughn has been twice married. Emma J. Armstrong, daughter of J. H. of Pulaski county, became his wife March 11, 1875, and to them were born six children, four of whom are living: John H., Herschel J., Sallie E. and Wm. T. The mother of these children died March 25, 1889, and Jan. 13, 1891, Mr. Vaughn married his present wife, Susie E., daughter of Felix Johnson, of Twiggs county. Surrounded with an interesting family, with political honors and financial success attending him, Mr. Vaughn has much to look forward to in life.

J. R. WIMBERLY is a native of Twiggs county, was born in November of 1843, and is the son of J. R. Wimberly, Sr. His earlier education turned toward a course in civil engineering, but at the opening of the civil war his father entered the service and he remained at home with his mother. However, in 1863, he too enlisted in the state militia. At the close of the war he became a physician, his father having been a very successful practitioner. In 1869 he located in Jeffersonville and has since resided there. His wife Adelaide was the daughter of Rev. W. R. Steely and granddaughter of James Steely, a revolutionary patriot. Their marriage took place in November, 1866. To them were born eight children: Fred C.; J. R.; Albert; Lucy G., now Mrs. Wall; and Mary; three died in infancy. The mother of these children died Oct. 6, 1890. She was a woman of many virtues, a devoted wife and indulgent mother, and a kind neighbor. Her loss was felt by all who knew her. Mr. Wimberly is a consistent member of the Baptist church, of which he is a deacon. He was elected ordinary of the county in 1885, and has held the office for ten years, much to the satisfaction of the people of Twiggs. Mr. Wimberly comes of an old and highly respected Georgia family, whose different members have occupied positions of honor and trust throughout the state. He himself is a man of the most unbending integrity, and does much to refute that oft-repeated old expression that "the good men died with the demise of our fathers."

CAPT. FREDERICK DAVIS WIMBERLY, deceased, was born in Houston county, March 23, 1840, and removed with his parents to Twiggs county when he was four years old. He was graduated from Mercer university, and in 1860 was married to Miss Isrelene Minter, a daughter of Col. Wm. F. Minter, who was sixty years old when killed in the last battle of the late war. Capt. Wimberly responded to the first call for troops in South Carolina and was elected second lieutenant in Gen. Tarver's command. He served through the entire war and was promoted after the battle of Sharpsburg to captain for gallantry on the field. Six children were born to them: Col. W. M. Wimberly, Dr. Warren Wimberly, Mrs. Richard D. Campbell, of Atlanta, Miss Clara, Isrelene; Fred, Jr., died in youth. Capt. Wimberly died July 16, 1893. Mrs. Wimberly is a lady of intelligence and considerable literary ability.

DR. HENRY S. WIMBERLY. Fred Davis Wimberly was a native of North Carolina. He was the father of the following children: Ezekiel, Henry, Moses, J. R., Fred Davis, Betsy A., Allie L., all of whom are dead. Ezekiel was born Jan. 4, 1781, and died in 1825. He settled in Washington county, Ga., when a young man of twenty-three years and became a planter. He married Dorothy B., daughter of Henry Slappey, who was a revolutionary soldier and a native of Holland. To this union there were born Annie R., who became the wife of Gen. Tarver of Twiggs county; Fred D., Henry S., Eliza R. and Dorothy M. The last two died in youth. The mother of these children died in February of 1817. The wife of his second marriage was Miss Rebecca C. Jones, who became the mother of six children, all of whom are dead. The father of these and our subject, Henry S., located in what is now Twiggs county in 1808. He started in moderate circumstances and very rapidly accumulated vast wealth. He lived a very quiet life, was of a religious turn of mind, and very highly respected. He was captain of militia and in politics an old-time whig. He died Aug. 5, 1825, of yellow fever. Henry S. Wimberly, the gentleman whose name heads this sketch, was born March 26, 1812. His education was obtained in Jasper county, where was located the only academy in the surrounding country. After his father's death he resided for one year at Tartersville with Gen. Tarver. He then attended the medical college at Augusta, Ga., and was one of seven pupils. In 1832 he graduated from the medical college of Philadelphia, Penn., and located in Twiggs county. He at once began the practice of medicine, but after two years he turned his attention to farming in Houston county, where he owned a large plantation and a number of slaves. After a few years he disposed of this plantation and purchased 1,500 acres in Twiggs county, where he resides. His wife was a daughter of Hardy and Sabra Durham. To her were born the following: John R., of Arkansas; Fred Davis, of Pulaski county; Mary Eliza, of Wilcox county; Henry of Telfair county; Lula P. resides at home. The mother of these children died in 1864. His second marriage was to Mrs. E. L. Wharton. Their children are Wm. F. and Ezekiel P., who died Nov. 6, 1892, and two others died in infancy. The doctor has retired from active life and is enjoying the result of a life of industry and well-directed agricultural effort. A democrat of the old school he is in sectarian belief a Methodist, of which denomination he has long been an honored member.

SAMUEL WADE YOPP was born May 12, 1854, and is a native of Laurens county, Ga., where he was reared. His education was such as to enable him to become a successful planter, and he was received at the Dublin academy. When a young man he and his brother conducted the large plantation of their grandfather for many years. Afterward he became identified with the milling industry in Twiggs county. Having for some time successfully conducted a plantation for D. M. Hughes, he removed to his own, which he has since profitably managed. In August of 1886, he married Ellen Elizabeth, daughter of Robt. A. Hill, of Twiggs county, a native of North Carolina. To this marriage have been born three children: Nellie Francis, Myrtle and Robert Hut. Mr. Yopp is a thorough democrat and was in 1894 a candidate for the legislature, the opposing candidate being elected by a very small majority. He and his wife are members of the Missionary Baptist church, and stand well in the church and community in which they live. The grandfather, Samuel Yopp, was a native of North Carolina, and when but a young man located on a plantation in Laurens county, near Turkey creek. He married Elizabeth Hausly, who was also a native of North Carolina.

They became the parents of four children. By industry and good management he became a man of great wealth—one of the “southern lords” of ante-bellum days. His hospitality was known throughout southern Georgia. John W. Yopp, the eldest of his children, and father of S. W. Yopp, was born in Laurens county in 1823. He had superior educational advantages and became a prominent planter. He passed his entire life a citizen of his native county. For a number of terms he represented his county in the legislature and during the war was state senator from that district. He was a Mason and in politics an old-time democrat and a member of the Baptist church, of which he was a most faithful worker for the society. He was a man of influence and died in 1868, honored and respected by all who knew him. His wife, a native of Laurens county, is the daughter of Wade Hampton, of that county, he being a member of that distinguished family in Virginia. She is the mother of the following children: J. H., of Laurens county; Ellen Frances, widow of A. E. Corbett; S. W., whose name heads this sketch; Carroll H., Laurens county, and Elizabeth F. and Samuel, both deceased. Mrs. Yopp is still living and is a resident of Laurens county.

UPSON COUNTY.

WILLIAM B. ADAMS, a prominent farmer, Upson county, Ga., son of W. L. and Frances (Dumas) Adams, was born in Monroe county, Ga., in 1849. His great-grandfather, Nipper Adams, of English descent, was a citizen of North Carolina during the revolutionary war and a soldier in the patriot army. While he was thus absent a tory neighbor abused his family. When informed of it by his wife on his return he lost no time in seeking and killing the tory, and not long thereafter migrated to Georgia and settled in what is now Monroe county. His grandparents, William A., son of Nipper Adams, and Statia (Lucas) Adams, farmers, were born in North Carolina and came to Monroe county in the latter part of the last century. William A. Adams served his country in the Mexican war, and W. L. Adams, the father of the subject of this sketch, served through the late war. Mr. Adams' grandfather on his mother's side was of French descent; the family settled first in Jones county and later removed to Monroe county. Mr. Adams was educated at the common schools of the county, which at that time had not the best of educators, and whilst going to school he had to help on the farm. As a consequence of the war his father lost about all he had—negroes, stock, etc., except his land, and he and his family had to begin life anew on the farm. He worked awhile for his father on shares, and then bought a farm of his own and has operated it with the greatest success and placed himself in independent circumstances. He is now county commissioner. In 1870 he married Miss Sallie Willis, born in Upson county in 1853, daughter of Annon and Mary P. (Means) Willis. Mr. Willis came from North Carolina, where he was born, and settled first in Jones county, and afterward moved to Upson, where he died. Mrs. Adams' grandparents on her father's side, Joel and Sallie Willis, were of English descent, and he was a Primitive Baptist preacher. Of her grandparents on her mother's side, James and Mary Ann McKenzie, her grandfather was of Irish descent, and came from North Carolina to Georgia. Mr. and Mrs. Adams have living eleven children: W. E., Thaddeus, Luke, John W., Claude, Ethan A., Ethel, Annie, Henry G., Sallie L. and Louis. Mr. and Mrs. Adams are both members of the Baptist church.

J. M. BLALOCK, dentist, Thomaston, Upson Co., Ga., son of Thomas and Mary (Mann) Blalock, was born in Meriwether county, Ga., in 1844. His grandfather, John Blalock, was a native of South Carolina, and was a soldier in the revolutionary war. After the close of that war he removed to Lincoln county, Ga., where he died, and where Thomas, Dr. Blalock's father, was born. Thomas Blalock removed from Lincoln to Upson county, where he lived about two years, and then removed to Meriwether county, where he died. He served in the Indian war and bought some of the land from which the Indians had been removed. Dr. Blalock's mother was of German descent and was the daughter of Baker and Mary Mann. Mr. Mann was a revolutionary soldier and one of the first settlers of Meriwether county. Dr. Blalock was reared on a farm, but educated in Greenville, Ga. In 1861 he enlisted in Company A (Capt. Black), First Texas regiment. Capt. Black was killed in the first battle and Dr. Blalock succeeded him as captain, and was a participant in many of the bloodiest battles of the war: First Manassas, Seven Pines, seven days' fight around Richmond, Second Manassas, Spottsylvania Court House, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Sharpsburg, Gettysburg, Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Knoxville, Wilderness and Cold Harbor. He was captured at the battle of Spottsylvania Court House, but made his escape and joined the army. He was wounded at the battle of Cold Harbor and went home, but as soon as he recovered he returned to his command. He was again wounded in the engagement before Fort Harris, in which his entire company was either badly wounded, killed or captured. When Dr. Blalock returned from the war he had nothing but his land. He went to work on his farm to make the money to defray the expenses of acquiring a profession. He then attended lectures at the college of dentistry, Baltimore, Md., from which he graduated in 1868. Locating in Greeneville, Meriwether Co., he practiced his profession there until 1873, when he removed to Thomaston, Ga., where he is now enjoying a good practice and the confidence of the people. Dr. Blalock was married in 1867 to Miss Olive Millan—born in 1849—daughter of John and Olive (Branchford) Millan. Mr. Millan was a farmer, was born in Upson county, and served in the war between the states. Dr. and Mrs. Blalock have two living children: John J. and Edna M. Himself and wife are members of the Methodist church, and he is a master Mason and a member of the Royal Arcanum.

J. W. BROWN, farmer Waynmanville, Upson Co., Ga., son of Benton and Martha (Shakleford) Brown, was born in Pike county in 1824. His father was a farmer, born in Georgia. He removed to Talbot county in 1830 and settled in the woods, and died one year afterward. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. Mr. Brown received only such education as the county schools could give, and began life young and poor on the thirty-acre farm on which his father settled. He remained a number of years with his mother, and then bought a farm in Upson county, to which he moved, and on which he has since lived. In 1864 he enlisted in a company of the state troops under command of Capt. Sherman, and afterward of Capt. Atwater and served three months. He has served the county as justice of the inferior court and represented the county in 1877 in the general assembly, and did good service as a member of several of the committees. In 1890 he was elected, without opposition, to represent in the legislature the senatorial district which comprises Upson county. In 1850 Mr. Brown married Miss

May Holmes—born in Houston county—who bore the following-named children now living: Peter, Edwin T., John W., J. C., Charlie M. and Mattie. Mrs. Brown died in 1864. In 1865 Mr. Brown was married to Miss Rusia Stewart—born in Upson county—who bore him the following-named children now living: Elizabeth, Tema, Joseph E. and Willie B. This second wife died in 1879. She was a daughter of David and Sarah (Allen) Stewart, farmers and native Georgians. Mr. Stewart was a soldier in the war of 1812. In 1879 Mr. Brown contracted a third marriage with Miss Nancy Stewart, who was born in Upson county. Mr. Brown is a member of the masonic fraternity, is a prosperous farmer and is highly respected by his fellow citizens.

JOHN B. BROWN, farmer, Rowland, Upson Co., Ga., son of Baswell and Lucy (De Loach) Brown, was born in Upson county in 1828. His grandparents on his father's side, William and Elizabeth (Simmons) Brown, were farmers, and natives of Jones county. They had four children: A. H., Franklin, Baswell and Eliza. The husband died in Tennessee and the wife in Upson county, where she had passed her life. His parents, also, were natives of Jones county, and farmers. They removed to Upson about the time the county was laid off and organized, and lived there during their lifetime. His grandparents on his mother's side were Joe and Lecy (Johnson) De Loach. He was a native of Jones county, and was of French extraction. Mr. Brown was reared on a farm and his limited education was obtained at the country schools. Starting in life with nothing, he has plodded along until by well applied hard work and careful management, he has accumulated a comfortable competency. In 1863 he enlisted in Company A (Capt. Hancock), Forty-sixth Georgia regiment. He was very severely wounded at the battle of Chickamauga, and was sent to the hospital where he remained a considerable time. He has been justice of the peace for the last thirty years. In 1848 Mr. Brown was married to Miss Sarah Jane Worthington—born in Houston county, Ga., 1833—daughter of Julius and Penelope (Hooks) Worthington. Mr. Worthington was born in North Carolina, came to Georgia when a boy and lived awhile in Greene county, and then in Houston. Later he went to Upson county and established a home and spent his life there. Mrs. Brown died in 1887, leaving four children: Missouri F., George W., Elza C., and Mary A. Mrs. Brown was a member of the Baptist church. Mr. Brown in 1887 married Mrs. Penelope Burson—born in Talbot county, 1839—and daughter of Green and Mississippi (Gunn) Martin. Mr. Martin was a native of Greene county, Ga., but removed to Talbot county. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are both members of the Primitive Baptist church. Mrs. Brown was the widow of William Burson, a native of Talbot county, who was killed in the late war near Charleston, S. C.

JAMES M. DANIEL, physician and surgeon, Swifton, Upson Co., Ga., son of Martin B. and Carrie B. (Oliver) Daniel, was born in Upson county in 1844. His parents were respectively of Virginia and Georgia parentage. His father, a farmer, came to Georgia when young and made his home in Jasper county, and then moved to Upson county. His mother's parents were Terry and Susan (Tate) Oliver. He was of Irish descent and a farmer in Warren county, Ga. Dr. Daniel was reared a farmer boy, and was educated in the county common schools. In 1862 he enlisted in Company D (Capt. Thomas Sherman, later Capt. Hartsfield), Thirteenth Georgia regiment, and was in every fight in which that regiment bore a part, notably South Mountain and Gettysburg, and at the last-named battle was wounded. For three years after the war he engaged in farming to earn the means to defray college expenses; and read medicine under Dr. Cook a year preparatory to going to college. He attended the lectures in Atlanta and graduated in 1870. He located in Upson county, where he remained, where he enjoys the confidence of the community and has secured an extensive and remunerative practice. Dr. Daniel was married in 1872 to Miss Rebecca Gibson—born in Upson county in 1858—daughter of Sylvina and Mary (Hunt) Gibson. Mr. Gibson was a native of Upson county, and remained a citizen of it until he died. To Dr. and Mrs. Daniel seven children, all living, have been born: Luna, Orman, Estelle, Pearl, Clyde, Emma and Lillian. Dr. and Mrs. Daniel are members of the Methodist church.

CULLEN DAVISON, farmer, Hickory Grove, Upson Co., Ga., son of Talbot and Nora (Hartison) Davison, was born in Jones county in 1825. His parents were farmers, and born in North Carolina, whence they migrated to Georgia and settled in Jones county. In 1835 they removed to Upson county; and, some years afterward, to Pike county, where they remained till they died. Mr. Davison was reared on a farm, and educated in the county common schools. He began life with nothing but a knowledge of farm work, industrious habits, and energy and integrity of character. In 1862, he enlisted in Company C (Capt. Whitaker), Thirtieth Georgia regiment, and remained in the service to the end of the war. He was in the memorable battles of Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Lookout Mountain, and Atlanta. He was captured once, being placed under guard of two Irishmen, who, fortunately for him, got drunk and fell asleep; and while they were asleep he made his escape. In 1844 he was married to Miss Eveline Miller—born in Jones county, 1826—daughter of Mason and Mary (Hammock) Miller, farmers, and natives of North Carolina. Mrs. Miller died in 1892, leaving seven children: Catharine C., Mary E., Melvina, Isadora, Green T., Cullen D., and Martha. Mr. Miller stands high as a farmer and as a citizen.

THOMAS D. FERGUSON, farmer, Thomaston, Upson Co., Ga., son of Grief H. and Elizabeth (Hunt) Ferguson, was born in Baldwin county, Ga., in 1828. His father was born in Virginia, of Irish descent; came to Georgia and settled in Baldwin county in 1820, where he remained until 1829, when he removed to Talbot county and settled for life. He was a justice of the peace for many years, and served in the Indian war of 1836. His mother was a daughter of Curtis Hunt, whose family was among the early settlers of the county. Mr. Ferguson's boyhood and young manhood were spent on the homestead, and he received only the education common to youths at that time. He has been overseer and farmer all his life, and a hard-working, industrious man. In 1862 he enlisted in the state militia for home protection and defense, and served throughout the war. Mr. Ferguson was married in 1851 to Miss Martha A. Thompson—born in Baldwin county in 1830—daughter of John and Mary (Harp) Thompson. Mr. Thompson came to Georgia from Virginia in 1820, in company with Mr. Ferguson's father, on horseback—both settling in Baldwin county. Eight children, the offspring of this union, are living, namely: John H., W. G. H., Mary, Martha, Francis, Virginia, Alfred A., A. S. In 1873 Mrs. Ferguson, who was a Missionary Baptist, died. In 1874 Mr. Ferguson was married to Mrs. Sarah E. Johnson (nee Thompson, a sister of his deceased wife), born in Heard county, 1832. Mrs. Ferguson is an active member of the Methodist church. Mr. Ferguson is a master Mason, and is much esteemed as a thorough-going farmer and upright citizen.

JAMES F. LEWIS, merchant, Thomaston, Upson Co., Ga., was born in Upson county, in 1840, and was the youngest of the four children of James F. Lewis and Nancy McCoy. His father, born in Maryland, of Maryland ancestry, was left an orphan when quite young. In 1818 he came to Georgia, and made his home in Upson county. He was married in 1830 to Miss Nancy McCoy. Four children were born to them: John F., Abner McCoy, Dora and James F. He was a farmer and served in the Indian war of 1836. On his mother's side his grandfather, Abner McCoy, came from North Carolina and was one of the first settlers in the country; but his grandmother, Miss Matilda Lowe, was of Georgia stock. Mr. Lewis was reared on a farm, was educated at the high school in Thomaston, chose medicine as his profession, but at the end of one year's reading his study was interrupted, and his career as a physician cut short by the outbreak of the civil war. In 1861 he enlisted in Company B (Capt. Harris), Second Georgia regiment, was subsequently elected to a lieutenancy and served three years in this position. During the war he participated in many of the hardest fought battles: Second Manassas, Seven Pines, seven days' fight around Richmond, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Sharpsburg, Gettysburg, Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Knoxville, Wilderness, Petersburg and Richmond. He was wounded at Sharpsburg and Seven Pines; was captured at Richmond and sent to Fort Delaware, where he was imprisoned eight months. Mr. Lewis returned from the war penniless, but went to work at once and soon erected a merchant mill at Delray, Ga., where he resided a number of years, conducting a successful mercantile and milling business. He subsequently moved to Thomaston, where he has since remained and where he has built up a profitable business, and established an enviable reputation in the mercantile world for unimpeachable integrity. Mr. Lewis was married in 1872 to Miss Florence, daughter of Thomas R. and Caroline (Brown) Harris of Stewart county. Mr. Harris was a native of Oglethorpe and his wife a native of Clark county. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis have had four children: John H., James L., Thomas A., and Florence Courtney. Mr. Lewis has an untarnished reputation for morality and has been an active member of the Methodist church for a number of years.

J. H. MARCHMAN, merchant, The Rock, Upson Co., Ga., son of C. P. and S. G. (Hightower) Marchman, was born near La Grange, Troup Co., Ga., in 1839. His grandparents, William R. and Mary A. (Woodward) Marchman, were natives of North Carolina, whence they migrated to Georgia and settled first in Jasper county, and then, in 1827, removed to Troup county, where they died. Mr. Marchman's father was born in Jasper county in 1814, was a farmer, and went to Thoup county with the family—among the first of the county's settlers, where they made their home in its recently rescued virgin forests. His grandparents on his mother's side were Presley and Patsey (Powell) Hightower, natives of Virginia, whence they came to Monroe county, Ga., and afterward removed to Troup county. Mr. Marchman received the ordinary common school education boys were then favored with while working on the farm. In May, 1861, he enlisted in Company I, First Arkansas regiment, and served under Gen. Cleburn. He was in the battles of Manassas, Shiloh, Corinth, Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chattanooga, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, and the last battle fought by Johnston's army. He was wounded at Murfreesboro, and also at Atlanta. After the war he returned to his farm in Troup county, where he remained two years; then removed to Upson county and farmed three years. He next bought an interest in Mr. Stephens' store at The Rock, and has continued in the business since, which is conducted at this time under the firm name of J. H. Marchman & Bro. He enjoys an excellent reputation as a business man, and a public-spirited citizen, and in 1894 was elected on the democratic ticket to represent Upson county in the general assembly. Mr. Marchman was married in 1867 to Miss Savilita I. Stephens—born in Upson county, and a daughter of William and

Ann Stephens. She died, leaving no issue, in 1874. In 1880 Mr. Marchman was married to Miss Mary Stephens—born in Upson county—daughter of Jesse and Elvira (Powell) Stephens. Her father was a native Georgian and a farmer. He served in the Indian war. Mr. and Mrs. Marchman have four living children: Cornelia, Nettie R., Dovie I., and Carrie. Mr. and Mrs. Marchman are prominent members of the Methodist church, and he is a member of the Knights of Pythias fraternity.

ROBERT M. MCFARLIN, farmer, Yatesville, Upson Co., Ga., son of Thomas J. and Mary (Gibson) McFarlin, was born in Upson county in 1837. His grandparents on his father's side were William and Lavinia (Wagner) McFarlin, natives of North Carolina, who migrated from there to Georgia, and settled in Wilkinson county, where they lived a number of years, and then removed to Upson county—among its earliest and wealthiest settlers. Mr. McFarlin's father was born in Wilkinson county, went from there to Jones, and moved thence to and settled in Upson county. He was a soldier in the Indian war, and continued his residence in Upson county until he died, in 1884. His grandparents on his mother's side, James and Mary (Martin) Gibson, were natives of North Carolina, whence they removed to Upson county about the time it was organized, and where he lived until he died. Mr. McFarlin was reared on a farm, and received a very limited education. In 1861 he enlisted in Company D, Capt. Thomas Sherman, Thirtieth Georgia regiment. Of the many hard-fought battles in which he bore a soldier's part may be mentioned: Cotton Mountain, Seven Pines, second Manassas, Sharpsburg and Fredericksburg. At one time he fought for eighteen days in succession. In the battle of Sharpsburg he was wounded twice. After the battle of Fredericksburg he returned home, but soon returned and re-entered the army as a lieutenant in a cavalry company. After the war he resumed his farming operations, to which he has devoted his time and attention, resulting in ease and competency after a life of hard work and exposure. No one stands higher in the scale of industry and integrity. Mr. McFarlin was married in 1864 to Miss Mattie Lyon, born in Upson county, 1847, daughter of James P. and Elizabeth (Cherry) Lyon. Mr. Lyon was a native of Monroe county and a Baptist preacher. Of the children born to them four are living: Lizzie, Francis, Mattie and Sallie. She was a member of the Primitive Baptist church, and died in 1875. That same year Mr. McFarlin married Miss Etta V., born in Upson county, 1856, daughter of Thomas J. and Elizabeth Nelson, natives of Upson county. The following-named children blessed this union: Emma, Willie F., Robert Carlton, Lola, Thomas J. and James F. Mrs. McFarlin was a member of the Baptist church and died in 1891.

T. J. NELSON, farmer, Upson county, Ga., son of Thomas and Millie A. (Trice) Nelson, was born in Upson county in 1834. His grandparents on his father's side were Thomas and Jane Nelson. His grandfather was a farmer, born in North Carolina, of English descent. Early in this century he removed to Georgia from North Carolina. His father was born in Talbot county, Ga., in 1810, and moved to Upson county in 1831. He was a soldier in the Indian war. His grandparents on his mother's side were William B. and Jane (Tamplin) Trice, and were reared in Baldwin county, Ga.; but early in life removed to Upson, where they lived until they died. Mr. Nelson was left an orphan when quite young, was reared on a farm and received an ordinary school education. On arriving at manhood he engaged in farming. In 1861 he enlisted in Company I, Capt. J. F. Lewis, Thirty-second Georgia regiment, and remained in the army until the close of the war. He was engaged in sixteen hard-fought battles and many skirmishes, among them: Honey Hill, Fort Sumter, Fort Wagner, Rivers' Bridge, etc. He was wounded at Lake City, Fla. He was promoted to be orderly sergeant, and to a lieutenantcy. An interesting incident of his war experience was that a quite large shell struck a tree above his head, and he caught a fragment as it fell. On his return from the war he found himself almost ruined; his plantation improvements and stock all gone, nothing left but his naked land, about 400 acres. But he went to work, and as the result of patient, well-directed labor and good management, he has now a well-ordered 1,200-acre plantation and a fine mill property, and is as prosperous as any of his brother farmers. He is very highly esteemed, is at present clerk of Trinity church, and is a director of the Farmers' and Merchants' bank, Thomaston, Ga. In 1867 Mr. Nelson was married to Miss Frances Holloway, born in Upson county in 1840, daughter of Gibson and Martha (Param) Holloway, old Upson county settlers. She was a member of the Methodist church, and died in 1864, leaving two children: Emma and T. P., now living. In 1865 he married Miss Minta Param, born in Meriwether county in 1842, daughter of Stith A. and Catherine Param, early settlers in Meriwether county. She also was a Methodist, and died in 1871, leaving one child, Pierpont. That same year he married Willie Param, born in 1843, a sister of his last wife. Five children, now living, blessed this union: May C., Clifford F., Effie, James and Alva J. She died in 1888, and in 1889 Mr. Nelson married Miss Nannie Chipley, born in Bibb county, Ga., in 1860, daughter of James S. and Nancy (Hunt) Chipley, early settlers in Laurens county. He was born in 1816; a railroader. The children, living, the fruit of this union, are: Mozelle, Edna R. and Esther. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson are Primitive Baptists, and take an active interest in the welfare and advancement of the church.

C. A. NORRIS, farmer, Thomaston, Upson Co., Ga., son of William and Narcissa (Respass) Norris, was born in Meriwether county, Ga., in 1830. His grandparents on his father's side, William and Nancy Norris, were natives of South Carolina, and removed to and settled in Meriwether county early in the history of the county. His parents were also natives of South Carolina, and came to Georgia and settled in Meriwether county about the same time his grandparents did. He was tax collector of the county two years. His grandparents Respass on his mother's side were farmers, and were among the early settlers of Jasper county, Ga. Mr. Norris was reared on the farm and received only a limited education; such as could be had at the "old-field" log school house of that day. Before the war he was an overseer, and was getting along finely. In 1862 he enlisted in Company A, Capt. Strickland, later, Capt. Trammell, First Georgia regiment, and was in many hotly-contested battles, notably London, Ky., Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Atlanta, etc. He lost all he had by the war; but, coming out of its battles undismayed though battered, he began again the battle of life and is in comparatively easy circumstances, well-to-do, prosperous and happy, and is tax collector of Upson county. Mr. Norris was married in 1859 to Miss Laura A. Snelson, born in Meriwether county in 1840, daughter of John and Polly (Reeves) Snelson, early settlers in the county. To them were born ten children, now living: Sallie, Hattie, Will, Gertrude, Estelle, Robert, Aubra, Mattie, Maud and Earnest. Mrs. Norris died in 1882. The next year, 1883, Mr. Norris married Mrs. Mary (Snelson) Redney, born in Meriwether county in 1828, daughter of John and Polly (Reeves) Snelson. She died, a member of the Primitive Baptist church, in 1891. Mr. Norris is a member of the same church, and also a Knight of Honor.

WILLIAM STEPHENS, farmer, Upson county, Ga., son of James and Mary (Arthur) Stephens, was born in Jasper county, Ga., in 1810. His grandfather, George Stephens, was a native of England, came to the United States when young, settled in Hancock county, Ga., and married Miss Elizabeth Dannell, and afterward moved to Jasper county, where he died. Mr. Stephens' father, James Stephens, was born in Hancock county, and with his father was one of the early settlers in Jasper county. His mother's parents—Arthur—were natives of South Carolina, whence they came in early life to Hancock county, Ga. Mr. Stephens was reared a farmer and attended schools taught in the log houses of those times. He remained in Jasper county and worked on the farm until 1825, when the family removed to Upson county, bought a farm and settled. Afterward he began working for himself and purchased a farm of his own. In 1834 he married Miss Georgia A. Powell, born in Jasper county in 1818, daughter of George and Nancy (Downey) Powell. Of the children born to them only one, Francis M., is living. Mrs. Stephens was a devoted member of the Methodist church. In 1869 Mr. Stephens went into the general merchandise business at The Rock, which he continued until 1881, when he sold out and has since confined himself to superintending his family interests.

E. B. THOMPSON, liveryman and trader, Thomaston, Upson Co., Ga., son of Jennings and Virginia (Embry) Thompson, was born in Green county, Ky., in 1837. His grandparents, William and Judith (Pickett) Thompson, of Scottish descent, were natives of Virginia. He was a farmer, migrated in early life to Kentucky, and died there. Jennings Thompson, his son, was born in Kentucky, was a farmer and trader, and went to Cuba, where he died. Mr. Thompson's grandparents on his mother's side were William and Elizabeth (Brockman) Embry; he was a Virginian by birth; his wife was of Scottish lineage. He went to Kentucky in his young manhood, where he passed his life and died. Mr. Thompson was reared on a farm, and what education he was favored with was obtained in an old-time log school house. In 1861 he enlisted in Company D, Capt. James M. Smith, in the Thirteenth Georgia regiment, and was in many hotly-contested battles, among them: Richmond, Malvern Hill, second Manassas, Sharpsburg, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Wilderness, Spottsylvania Court House, Petersburg, Gettysburg—where he was made a lieutenant—and Winchester. He remained in the service to the close of the war, and with Gen. Lee, surrendered at Appomattox. He was wounded at Winchester and at Monocacy. He lost heavily by the war, and began life, after it, loaded down with debt. By industry, enterprise and good management, he is now, financially, one of the strongest men in Upson county. He was sheriff of the county a number of years. In 1867 Mr. Thompson was married to Miss Sallie Matthews, born in Upson county in 1847. Mr. Matthews was a native Georgian, and had represented the county in the general assembly. Of the children born to this union, the three living are: Nathan, Julia and Fryar. Mrs. Thompson, who was a member of the Methodist church, died in 1888. Mr. Thompson contracted a second marriage in 1892 with Mrs. Anna (Green) West, born in Upson county, and is a daughter of Charles and Martha A. (Barrett) Green. Mr. Green was a native of Concord, N. H., came to Georgia when a youth, and was manager of a cotton factory. Mr. Thompson is a member of the Baptist church, and his wife is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Thompson is a master Mason, and a member of the Royal Arcanum and of the Knights of Honor. He is public-spirited, and himself and family are highly esteemed.

E. G. C. WILLIAMS, farmer, Yatesville, Upson Co., Ga., son of Duke and Lany (Powell) Williams, was born in Upson county in 1827. His grandparents on his father's side, Wilson and Patsy (Driver) Williams, were natives of North Carolina, farmers; came to Georgia early in this century and settled in Washington county. They soon afterward removed to Jones county, thence to Troup, and finally went to Chambers county, Ala., where he died. He was a volunteer soldier in the last war with Great Britain. Mr. Williams' father was born in North Carolina, in 1802—reared a farmer, went to Jones county, Ga., where he married, and thence to Upson county in 1825, where, one of the early settlers, he built his log hut in the woods then infested with wolves, and Indians on the opposite side of the river. He was a justice of the peace, and represented the county in the general assembly in 1841-42, and in 1851-52. He was first lieutenant of a volunteer company during the Indian war. His grandparents on his mother's side were Jesse and Patsey (Winnbush) farmers, who migrated from North Carolina to Georgia, and settled in Washington county, whence they removed to Pulaski county, and had to live in the fort as a protection against the Indians. From there they removed to Monroe county, where they died. Mr. Williams was reared on a farm, and graduated from one of the log school-houses of that day. He was yet farming when the war between the states began. He enlisted in 1863, in Company E (Capt. Jack White), Third Georgia battalion. He was in the battle of Murfreesboro, Tenn. After the battle he was taken sick and was sent to the Gate City hospital, Atlanta, Ga. On recovering his health he returned to the state troops and remained with them until the war closed, when he returned to his farm, to which he has since given his undivided attention and enjoyed enviable prosperity. Mr. Williams was married in 1849 to Miss Mary Middlebrooks—born in Jones county in 1832—daughter of Madison and Malinda (Stroud) Middlebrooks. Mr. Middlebrooks was born and reared in Jones county, but early in life removed to Upson county. Benjamin Haygood, great-grandfather of Mrs. Williams, was a revolutionary soldier. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have eight children living: Frances A., Mattie, Jesse W., Leila, Sarah, Josie, May and Emma. Mr. and Mrs. Williams are pious, consistent members of the Baptist church and highly esteemed.

ALLEN J. WILLIAMS, farmer, Yatesville, Upson Co., Ga., son of Duke and Lany (Powell) Williams, was born in Upson county, in 1834. (For outline of lives of parents and grandparents see sketch of life of E. G. C. Williams.) Mr. Williams was reared on a farm and received a very limited education in a county log school-house. In 1862 he enlisted in a company commanded by Capt. A. J. White, Thirty-seventh Georgia regiment, and was engaged in many battles, among them Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, and Atlanta, where he was captured and sent to Camp Chase, where he was imprisoned eight months. He received a wound at the battle of Chickamauga. He represented the county in the general assembly in 1886-1888, and was on the committees on agriculture, manufactures, enrollment, and ways and means. In 1860 Mr. Williams was married to Miss Sallie Hartsfield—born in Jasper county, Ga., 1842—who died, leaving one child, Elizabeth, in 1863. She was a member of the Primitive Baptist church. In 1865 he married Miss Mary A. Persons—born in Monroe county, 1843—daughter of Lovett and Melinda (Lyons) Persons, Georgians by birth. Mr. Persons was a soldier in the Indian war of 1836. Two children now living are the offspring of this union: Allen and Alma. Mrs. Williams is a member of the Baptist church. Returning to his farm after the war, Mr. Williams went to work to retrieve his fortune, in which he has been very successful. He belongs to the masonic fraternity.

WALKER COUNTY.

FRANCIS W. COPELAND. This well-known lawyer, a member of the Walker county bar, residing at La Fayette, was born in Walker county, Ga. In that county he was reared on the farm and received his preliminary education. In 1873, he entered the university of Georgia at Athens, and pursued a course of study in that institution during two years. He acquired an enviable reputation in his classes for diligence, and at an oratorical contest was awarded a medal by the Demosthenian society for his achievements in the oratorical art. At the close of his collegiate studies he returned to his home in Walker county, and after working on the farm for eight months he entered upon the study of law. He went into the office of Hon. J. C. Clements of La Fayette, and in August, 1876, he was admitted to practice in the superior court of Walker county. Here it is proper to mention that Mr. Copeland in his successful efforts to obtain, first, a literary education, and second, a scientific knowledge of the principles of jurisprudence, was sustained entirely by his own resources, obtained by his own labor and perseverance; and his success in his profession is an excellent example of what perseverance, diligence and business integrity may accomplish. He commenced the practice of his profession at La Fayette, with little influence or means of his own. At first he had a hard struggle, but by hard work and constant application to study and the duties of his profession he soon won the confidence of the public and the courts of his circuit; business and retainers came to him in a measure commensurate with his zeal, and recognized legal ability. To-day he is justly considered one of the most successful lawyers on the Rome circuit. His practice is of a general character, but he has given much attention to the consideration of corporate law, and those branches of equity, jurisprudence, peculiarly applicable to that system. Before a jury Mr. Copeland is certainly, and justly esteemed a very able advocate, a cogent reasoner, and a brilliant and convincing speaker. In 1892, he formed a co-partnership with Earl Jackson of the La Fayette bar, and under the firm name of Copeland & Jackson. This firm ranks among the strongest in the Rome circuit, and represents some of the leading and important corporate and commercial interests in that section, among others, the C., R. & C. railroad, as local counsel and acts as general counsel for the Chickamauga & Durham Railroad company. This firm also represents the Georgia Ore company, and the Chickamauga Coal and Iron company. In the field of politics Mr. Copeland has never sought notoriety, wrapped in the active engagement of his professional life, he has given no attention to politics, with a view to obtain office. But for many years his services have been at the disposal of the political managers of his party, and he has ever been ready to take the stump in its behalf, and has never failed to do so in all the campaigns of recent years. He has also served two terms as mayor of La Fayette to the satisfaction of the people of that town. Mr. Copeland married in 1883, Miss Carrie Hunt, daughter of Benjamin F. Hunt, a soldier of the Confederacy, who served as major in the Confederate army, but resigned his commission and entered the First Georgia cavalry as a private, and was killed at the battle of Chickamauga. By his marriage Mr. Copeland has six children: John A., Benjamin F., Susan M., Hunt, Francis W. (deceased), and an infant, Lois R. The Copeland family is of Scotch-Irish descent. Alexander Copeland, the great-grandfather of the subject of this Memoir, was born in Ireland, and emigrated to America prior to the war of the revolution. He settled first in York, S. C., and on the commencement of hostilities he entered the colonial service under Gen. Morgan. He fought at the battle of the Cowpens, and at King's Mountain, and after the war settled in Spartanburg, S. C. He married a Miss Gilmore, also of Irish descent, and of this marriage his son, Joseph Gilmore Copeland, grandfather of Francis W., settled in McMinn county, Tenn. He married Miss Sarah Chapman of Spartanburg, S. C., and reared ten children, of whom Alexander, the father of Francis W., was one. Alexander Copeland was born in McMinn county, Tenn., in August, 1824. He settled in Walker county, Ga., about 1845. He married Miss Melissa Sartin, born in Spartanburg, S. C., and daughter of John Sartin. They reared eight children: Mrs. Sally L. Wall; Mrs. Elsie A. Fuller; Mrs. Panelopy C. Perry; Mrs. Fannie R. Little; James M., residing in Gordon county; Jefferson D., deceased in 1886; and William P., residing with his parents in Walker county. Alexander, the father of Francis W., served in the Confederate army during the late war and participated in the campaign of the western forces. He fought in the First Georgia state troops infantry, and took part in all the engagements between Dalton and the Chattahoochee river, when he was made a prisoner of war, sent north and he afterward effected his escape, and after a perilous journey reached his home, shortly previous to the surrender of Lee and Johnston. His brother, Joseph H., also fought on the Confederate side, and was killed at the battle of Jonesboro, in August, 1864. Mr. F. W. Copeland represents an element in the population of the south, rapidly acquiring influence in southern affairs, and distinguished by its active progress in the management and control of social, industrial and commercial interests. He is an avowed advocate and champion of every movement designed to enhance the prosperity of north Georgia and its people, and to which by example and practice he has been and is a liberal contributor.

JOSIAH M. HENRY, Cooper Heights, one of the substantial farmers of Walker county, Ga., was born in Haywood county, N. C., May 4, 1826. His father, Lorenzo N. Henry, was a native of York district, S. C., and was born on March 1, 1800. His parents moved to North Carolina in 1804, where he spent the remainder of his life, and died in 1868. His paternal grandfather, John Henry, was born in South Carolina, and was the son of an Irishman who migrated to that state in the last century. John served in the war of the revolution, was captain of a company in the American army, and fought at the battle of Cowpens, where he was made prisoner, and was afterward exchanged. He also fought at Kings Mountain with distinction. He died in North Carolina about 1835. The father of Mr. Henry married Mary M. Moore, daughter of Josiah Moore of Yorkville, S. C., by whom he had thirteen children: Nancy A., who married John H. Evans of North Carolina, a veteran of the late war, and the commander of a company of artillery. He was present and actively engaged in the battle of the French Broad river, where he won marked distinction; Josiah M.; Mary E., wife of David Byers; Eliza J., wife of Jeremiah Evans, a soldier in the Confederate army; Lucinda A.; Margaret M., wife of Henry Lee of North Carolina; Emily I., who married James W. Cooper of North Carolina, a captain in the Confederate service, and now a prominent lawyer, Murphy, N. C.; Amanda M., wife of Albert Keeler of Sever county, Tenn; Harriet E., who married Robert Moody; John R., who died in his ninth year; Lorenzo H., a farmer in North Carolina; William L., and James R., who live in Texas. Mr. Henry was reared and educated in Haywood county, N. C., where he resided until 1855. He next taught school two years in Madison and St. Francis counties, Mo., after which he returned to North Carolina. He then went to Tennessee, and after teaching school in Sevierville a year, settled on his present plantation in Walker county, Jan. 31, 1858, where he has since resided.

On Jan. 1, 1863, he enlisted in Company F, Fourth Georgia cavalry, commanded by Col. I. W. Avery. He served as a courier, and also in the commissary department, and participated in several active skirmishes. Before the war he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel of militia in his county. On April 20, 1858, he married Miss Eliza Dickey, of Walker county, a daughter of Joshua T. Dickey, and to this union have been born thirteen children: Mary, wife of John M. Malicoat; John R., deceased; Hannah E. and James R., deceased; George D., residing in Texas; Rachel, a teacher at Pond Spring; Randolph, deceased; Hayden, of Wayne county, Ill.; Beatrice; Rex; Burton, Bishop M., and Thomas T. Mr. Henry is recognized as a man of worth in his community, a gentleman of education and refinement. He is also a man conversant with the history and resources of North Georgia. He found the district in which he settled in Walker county destitute of schools and teachers, and barren of all systems and methods usually in vogue in the art of teaching. He introduced new methods and new books, and rejoices in knowing that his efforts were appreciated by the people of Walker county. Some of his former pupils have risen to honor and distinction in social and business circles, in the profession of law, and in the field of literature.

M. K. HORNE is one of the leading planters and stock-raisers in Walker county, Ga., and the representative of one of the distinguished families of this state. He was born in Whitfield county, Ga., Nov. 27, 1862, and was reared and educated in that county, completing his studies at the Dalton high school. His father, Pearce Horne, was born in Milledgeville, and was the son of James U. Horne, a native Georgian born in 1812 and still living. Pearce Horne married Miss Tallulah Johnson, daughter of that distinguished statesman, Herschel V. Johnson, and the issue of their marriage was several children: M. K., the subject of this sketch; Emmett J.; James U.; Gertrude, wife of Frank F. Baker of Dalton; Arabella K., wife of William W. Johnson of Atlanta; Annie F.; Pearce Horne, Jr.; Tallulah; Caroline Walker; William W., and John B. The father of Mr. Horne entered the Confederate service and was commissioned captain. He served in the army of northern Virginia during the four years' struggle for southern rights. He was wounded at the first battle of Manassas, and later participated in the seven days' fight around Richmond, the Wilderness, second Manassas, Petersburg and at Appomattox. At the close of hostilities he returned to his home and engaged in planting, and is now one of the most prosperous agriculturists in Whitfield county. Mr. Horne was married in June, 1888, to Miss Mary Marsh, daughter of Dr. J. J. Marsh of Walker county. They have four children: Adaline Marsh, Annie Ruth, M. K., Jr., and Marsh Johnson. Mr. Horne is an ideal representative of the aggressive and progressive element in the business growth of north Georgia. He occupies one of the finest improved plantations in West Armuchee valley, and devotes his time chiefly to farming and stock raising. For some years he has made a specialty of breeding and raising for the Georgia and southern markets a decidedly superior quality of jacks and jennets. His stock has been selected from the best blood of Tennessee and Kentucky. Of these he has a large selection, not less than 100 thoroughbred Spanish animals in his stables and pastures. He has expended large sums in purchasing and replenishing his stock. For one of these fine animals, I. X. L., by Flambard, No. 29, imported from Spain in 1888, he paid the sum of $2,000. His dam, Viola, No. 101, was exhibited at Rome, Lebanon and Dixon Springs, and at each place was awarded the premium. I. X. L. is registered, and is a large and elegant animal, sixteen hands high, and weighs 1,200 pounds—a magnificent type of his kind. He carried off the first prize at the Dixie interstate fair in 1894. The jacks and jennets were exhibited at the Augusta exposition and were awarded the first prize. The aim of Mr. Horne is to introduce the largest and best species of Spanish jacks to the people of the south, and to convince southern planters of the superior advantages of this stock for all and every purpose for which they are intended.

WILLIAM D. JENKINS, M. D., an able physician, and a highly esteemed citizen of Rock Spring, in Walker county, was born June 23, 1856. He was the son of Samuel Jenkins, a native of Marion county, Tenn., who migrated to Hall county, Ga., in his youth, with his parents. He was reared in that county, and married Bertie Caroline Johnson, daughter of J. J. Johnson, and had nine children, seven of whom attained majority, as follows: James A.; Silas L.; Josiah; Mary E., deceased, who married Nelson Black; William D.; Georgia A., wife of Robert Waters; Julia, wife of Napoleon Privett; Thomas J., deceased; and Hettie, who married Joseph Turner. The father of Dr. Jenkins followed agricultural pursuits during life, and died in Dade county, this state, Dec. 3, 1891. His wife still survives. Dr. Jenkins was chiefly reared in Walker county, where his parents resided during many years. His literary education was completed in Trion academy. He acquired a taste for the study of medicine, and prepared himself for the practice of that profession. He commenced the study of medicine and surgery under that eminent physician, Dr. R. Y. Rudicile at Trion, and in the autumn of 1881 he entered the Atlanta Medical college, where he continued his studies and investigations until 1883, when he graduated from that institution. He began the practice of his profession at La Fayette, Ga., and in 1884 removed to Rock Spring, where he has since resided, and where he enjoys a good and very lucrative practice, extending through Walker, Chattooga and Catoosa counties. He is a physician of high and merited reputation, of extensive learning in the science of his profession, and has by his successful treatment of the different forms and phases of disease, won the confidence of the public. He is a member of the Tri-State Medical association, and is a master Mason. He was married Oct. 18, 1886, to Maude Alsobrook, daughter of T. J. Alsobrook of Walker county. They have one child, Thomas Grady. The paternal grandfather of Dr. Jenkins was a native of Ireland, born in 1761. He emigrated to America about 1775, enlisted in the continental army, and served through the war of the revolution, and afterward settled in Georgia. At an advanced age he again entered the service of the United States, and fought under Gen. Jackson at Horseshoe Bend, against the Creeks, and participated in the battle of New Orleans. He was a scout and guide for Jackson's army in the Florida war through the state of Georgia. He died in Catoosa county in 1859 at the advanced age of ninety-eight years.

HON. THOMAS GORDON M'FARLAND. This distinguished representative and progenitor of an old and well-known family of that name in north Georgia, was born in Richmond county, N. C., Oct. 21, 1803. He was the son of John Buie McFarland, a native of Cumberland county, N. C., who married Miss Sally Gordon, Jan. 3, 1779. The issue of this marriage was ten children: John Johnson, Abigail C., Xanders Gordon, Thomas Gordon, Sophronia, Robert A., William B., Sally Ann, Columbus D. and Marion Gordon. The paternal grandfather of Thomas G. McFarland was John McFarland, a native of Scotland, who married Mrs. Margaret McNair, whose maiden name was Margaret Buie, and reared four sons and one daughter: John B., Duncan, Dougald, Daniel and Margaret, who married Alexander Graham. Sally Gordon died in Tattnall county, Ga., Feb. 28, 1816. Her husband died at Rossville, Walker Co. Mr. T. G.

McFarland migrated to Tattnall county with his parents about 1812. He was educated in North Carolina, where he received a thorough classical training, and mastered the Greek and Latin languages. He also acquired a knowledge of the art of surveying, which in after years proved of infinite value to him. In 1832 he was appointed by the governor of Georgia to make a survey of the Ninth land district, Fourth section, then in the heart of the Cherokee country. This district included part of what is now Walker county, and in that wilderness young McFarland pursued his vocation for several months, and there he formed the acquaintance of John Ross, the leading chief of the Cherokee nation. He familiarized himself with pioneer habits and customs, and with the different phases of Indian life. Very early in life he became the confidant as well as the peer of men prominent in the management of state affairs. In 1833-34 he represented Montgomery county in the senate of Georgia, where he became associated with some of the ablest statesmen Georgia produced during the past generation. In 1835 he removed from Mount Vernon, Montgomery Co., to Rossville, and settled on the estate still in the possession of the family. The old house occupied by John Ross, which still remains a monument of pioneer days and advanced Indian civilization, became his property about 1838, and he soon acquired a large estate in Walker county. From 1835 to 1863 he served as postmaster at Rossville and up to 1845 he conducted a mercantile business at that place with his brother, X. G. McFarland. Being a man of indomitable energy and probity he prospered in business. He was a member of the convention of 1850 and for years he represented Walker county in the legislature, and in all matters affecting or enhancing the public welfare he took an active part. He was through his long and active life a man of strong convictions, marked individuality, and tenacious of his views concerning men and measures of public policy. He was a life-long whig, and prior to the secession convention of 1861, like his friend Alexander H. Stephens, a pronounced Union man. The resolution adopted by that body having established the status of Georgia as a member of the Confederacy, Mr. McFarland as a strong believer in the doctrine of state rights, determined to stand by the action of his state, and proceeded to do so unto the bitter end. He was too far advanced in age to take an active part in the field, but he gave the Confederacy his entire confidence and support, together with very much substantial aid throughout the war. His avowed advocacy of southern rights and institutions made him a marked man. He was compelled to abandon his home at Rossville, and with his family became a refugee in Thomas county, on the approach of the Federal forces in September, 1863, and was absent until February, 1866. With countless others Mr. McFarland suffered severely in his property and estate from the war, but he survived it all. In 1877 he was elected to the constitutional convention, and took his seat in that body among many associates of his early legislative career, including Toombs and Stephens. He took an active part in advancing and supporting some of the most popular and valuable features of our present constitution, a duty for which his long legislative experience and acute knowledge of public affairs eminently qualified him. This was his last public service to Georgia and to Walker county. His closing years were spent at Rossville, and surroundings of his early manhood, and of his business success and political achievements. Surrounded by his family, he expired at his summer home on Lookout mountain, Sept. 12, 1887, beloved and esteemed by a wide circle of friends and one of the best known men in Georgia. In 1846 Mr. McFarland married Elizabeth Anderson, daughter of Col. Josiah M. Anderson of Sequachee county, Tenn. Col. Anderson was of Scotch-Irish descent. The issue of this marriage was six children: Anderson; Martha, wife of Arthur Thomas; Thomas Foster; Sally Gordon, who died in Thomas county in 1864;

John McNair, and Ann Elizabeth, wife of James Morrison. Mr. McFarland was an active and consistent member of the Methodist church. His wife died Oct. 9, 1862, in Walker county.

WILLIAM D. ROSSER, an old resident of Walker county, is a native of Walton county, where he was born in 1835. His father was James R. Rosser, born in Jasper county, Ga., in 1812, who was the son of Rev. Isaac Rosser, a native of Virginia, who migrated to Georgia during the first years of the present century, and settled in Wilkes county. He reared five sons and four daughters: James R., Jane, Matilda, John Wesley, Moses, Elisha, Aelsi, Elifjah and Elizabeth. Isaac Rosser was a minister of the Protestant Methodist church, and died in Atlanta in 1860, after spending many years of his life in preaching the gospel. James R. was reared in Jasper county and spent his life chiefly engaged in teaching. He married in 1833 Miss Emily Bagby of Newton county, and had eleven children: William D.; Franklin A., who entered the Confederate service and died during the war, a soldier in the Ninth Georgia infantry; Mary Ann, deceased; Nancy E., wife of D. N. Purcly of Walker county; Sarah F., wife of W. L. Beard of Brown county, Tex.; Margaret E., wife of Dr. Beard of that county and state; Elijah V. Rosser of Walker county; Cordelia, wife of S. M. Shaw of La Fayette, Ga.; James R., John I. and Lillia, deceased. William D. was reared and educated in Fulton county, and was engaged in merchandising until the commencement of the war. In 1862 he enlisted in Company E, Sixth Georgia cavalry, and was immediately afterward ushered into active service, and fought in the campaign of that year in Tennessee and Kentucky. He was engaged at Taswell, and Perryville, besides participating in numerous skirmishes and spent the winter of 1862-63 at Knoxville. In the summer of 1863 his command was ordered to Chickamauga, and he was engaged in that celebrated battle in September, 1863. After the victory at Chickamauga, his regiment was attached to Wheeler's command, and returned to Knoxville and was present at the siege of that city. Early in 1864 Mr. Rosser accompanied his command to Dalton, and supported Johnson from that place to Atlanta, being engaged in every battle fought between Dalton and the capital. After the capture of Atlanta he accompanied Hood's supply train as far as Franklin, Tenn., returned through Mississippi, and later saw further service in Georgia until the close of the war. He then returned to his home in Chattooga county, where he settled in 1856, and engaged in farming, which he has followed ever since. In 1871 he settled in Walker county. In 1858 Mr. Rosser was married to Miss Lucy Jane Stewart, daughter of William Stewart of Chattooga county. They have reared seven children: Lucius C., engaged in school teaching in Walker county; Florence Alice, wife of J. D. Sigler; William A., also engaged in teaching; Lucy A., wife of Lee Deck; James E.; Harry E., and Mark E. The mother of Mr. Rosser died in 1871. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist church. The Rosser family emigrated from Wales in the early part of the eighteenth century, and settled in Virginia.

JAMES T. SUTTLE, a prominent citizen and leading planter of Walker county, was born in that county in 1848. He was the son of John B. Suttle, one of the first settlers of that section, who was born in Rutherford county, N. C., in 1810. The latter was a son of George Suttle, who was born in Shenandoah valley, Va., a soldier of the revolutionary war, and fought in the continental army for the establishment of American independence. He married after that war, and settled in North Carolina, where he reared a family. His son, the father of James T., grew to manhood in North Carolina, was educated in the pioneer schools of that day, and settled in Walker county in 1838. He married Miss Jane Young of Spartanburg district, S. C., and to them were born nine children: Margaret, who married J. D. Walker (now deceased); John C. (deceased); Sarah J.; Susan M.; Lou J., wife of J. A. Clements; James T.; Medora C.; Emma B., wife of J. L. McCulloch; and Georgia A., wife of H. Y. Hunt. John B. Suttle devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, and became the proprietor of one of the largest and best plantations in Walker county, where he resided until his death in 1875. His widow survived him three years, dying in that county in 1878. James T. Suttle was reared in Walker county. At the commencement of the war he was too young to take an active part in the contest. His family, however, were pronounced in their advocacy of the cause of the Confederacy, and in July, 1864, at the age of sixteen, he entered the First Georgia cavalry, commanded by Col. Devett. His regiment was attached to Cruse's brigade, Martin's division of Wheeler's corps, and was immediately ushered into active service without receiving any military training. He fought at the battle of Decatur, and next participated in the capture of Stoneman, near Macon, after which his command was ordered to Tennessee, and there he followed Wheeler, penetrating that state nearly to Nashville, engaging in numerous skirmishes and returning to Georgia by way of Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee river, through Huntsville, Ala., to Dalton, destroying the railroad in rear of the enemy. His command finally reached Macon and proceeded to South Carolina by way of Augusta, and entered winter quarters at Mathews Bluff on the Savannah river. On the approach of Sherman from the south his command moved in advance of the Federals to Raleigh, S. C., engaged daily in active skirmishing, and fought at the battle of Smithfield, N. C., soon after which the news of Lee's surrender was heralded in the camp. Mr. Suttle surrendered under Gen. Wofford at Kingston, Ga., and returned to his home. At the close of the war he was still a mere youth, and resolved to complete his education. He attended the schools of his neighborhood, and prepared himself for admission to the university of Virginia, which he entered in 1871, and afterward finished his course at the university of Georgia at Athens. He taught school for a short period, and on the death of his father the management of the estate devolved upon him. For many years he has continued to reside upon the family plantation in West Armuchee valley engaged in planting and stock-raising. He is one of the most prosperous planters in Walker county, and his home, on a beautiful slope on the eastern confines of the valley, is most pleasantly situated. He has filled, creditably, various positions of trust and responsibility in Walker county, and has served as commissioner of roads and revenues. He is at present a member of the board of education. For many years he has taken an interested part in the consideration of public questions, and is interested in active politics as a means to the accomplishment of public good. The use of his name was frequently solicited by the leaders of the democratic party in his county as a candidate for the legislature, but he declined the honor. However, his political views, which are in strict accord with the teachings of Jefferson, having been approved of by the populist party; he was, without his consent or knowledge nominated by that party for the office of representative in the general assembly. He made no canvass and was defeated. He became the active candidate of that party in the autumn of 1894 for the office of representative, and obtained a very large vote. Had he resorted to the usual methods and practices to obtain political strength and secure his election, there is little doubt that he would have been successful. He is a member of the Baptist church, and enjoys the sincere friendship of the best citizens of Walker county.

WALTON COUNTY.

JOHN ADAMS, farmer, Gratis, Walton Co., Ga., was born in Walton county in 1820. His grandparents, Reuben and Nicey (Simpson) Adams, were natives of South Carolina, who, early in life migrated to Georgia and settled in what is now Walton county. He was a farmer, and served as a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Late in life he moved to Randolph county, Ga., where he died in 1846. Mr. Adams was reared on the farm, and the limited education he received was obtained at the old-time log school-house. He began life a very poor boy, and has had a trying struggle; but has worked hard and long until he has placed himself in easy and comfortable circumstances. In 1849 he made his first small purchase of land, to which he has steadily added and now owns nearly 1,000 acres of good farming land, a large farm under profitable cultivation, and operates a superior cotton gin of large capacity. During the late war he made shoes for the Confederate government. Mr. Adams was married in 1844 to Miss Patsey Shepard—born in Elbert county in 1814—daughter of James and Susannah (Hilley) Shepard. He was a native of Elbert county and reared a farmer, was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, and moved to Walton county early in life, where he lived until he died. Five of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Adams are living: Richard S., Sallie F., Amanda J., Judy S., and Eugenia T. The mother of these, who was a member of the Methodist church, died early in 1876, and late in that year Mr. Adams married Miss Ellen Park—born in Jackson county, Ga.—daughter of Russell J. and Sarah (Stokes) Park. He was born in Madison county, was a farmer and also operated a blacksmith shop. He moved to Jackson county, and in 1854-55-56 and '58 represented his county in the general assembly. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died in 1885. Eight of the children born to Mr. Adams by this marriage are living: Robert P., Willie B., Ruvie M., Dovie O., Ezra B., Pearl V., Ellen V., Troy H. He is a member of the masonic fraternity, and himself and wife are members of the Universalist church.

JOSIAH BLASSINGAME, merchant and capitalist, Jersey, Walton Co., Ga., son of W. T. and Matilda M. (Barrett) Blassingame, was born in Walton county, in 1855. His paternal grandparents, Powell and Phoebe (Stark) Blassingame, were natives of South Carolina, and early in life moved to Georgia and settled in Walton county. He is still living, and still follows farming. Mr. Blassingame's father was born in Walton county and was reared a farmer. In 1861 he enlisted in a company commanded by Capt. J. T. Mitchell, and went to the front. He was taken sick on a march to Vicksburg and died two months after reaching that city. Before the war he was a large slave and land-owner, and during his life was an ardent member of the Methodist church. His maternal grandparents were Josiah and Mary (Raines) Barrett. He was born in Morgan county, the son of a Primitive Baptist minister of English descent. Mr. Blassingame was reared on the farm, and having grown up during war time, did not receive a very good education. At the age of twenty-two he entered the store of T. M. Abercrombie, and three years later—Aug. 1, 1880—he became a partner, under the firm name of Abercrombie & Blassingame. He is still a member of the firm, but its name has been changed to T. M. Abercrombie & Co. Besides his merchandise business he is a stockholder and director in the bank, and oil mills, and a stockholder in a guano company at Social Circle. His farming interests are very large, he owning 1,300 acres of excellent land, of which a large portion is under cultivation. He is a wide-awake, progressive farmer and financial operator, solid, substantial and progressive. Mr. Blassingame was married in 1880 to Miss Amanda E. Mobley—born in Walton county, Sept. 23, 1857—daughter of Thomas M. and Harriet (Coleman) Mobley. He was a native of South Carolina, whence he came with his parents to Walton county when seven years old. He was a prosperous farmer, and served as a volunteer in the Seminole war. Of the children born to them the following are living: Edna K., Josiah B., Adell, Effie E., Willie G., and Amy. He is a member of the masonic fraternity and also of the Baptist church, and his wife is a member of the Methodist church.

J. M. BRADLEY, farmer, India, Walton Co., Ga., son of Thomas and Susan (Oliver) Bradley, was born in Walton county in 1845. His paternal grandparents were natives of North Carolina, whence they migrated to Georgia in 1820, and settled near Jefferson, Jackson Co., Ga. Mr. Bradley's father was born in North Carolina, came to Georgia in 1820, and settled near an old Indian fort in the woods in what is now Walton county. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and lived to accumulate a quite large estate. He was an ardent member of the Primitive Baptist church. His maternal grandparents, Elijah and Sarah (Wise) Oliver, were natives of Virginia and migrated to Georgia and settled in Jackson county. Mr. Bradley was reared on the farm and received a limited education in the country schools. In 1861 he enlisted in Company F and was afterward transferred to Company B (Capt. Reynolds), Sixteenth Georgia regiment. Among the battles in which he with his command were engaged were Malvern Hill and South Mountain, and in the last-named battle he was wounded and captured and remained a prisoner about a year. After the war he engaged in farming, and in 1866 made his first purchase of land. Since then he has added to it until now he owns 400 acres of good land, and besides operates a cotton gin. He is a progressive and prosperous farmer and public-spirited citizen and is highly esteemed. Mr. Bradley was married in 1865 to Miss Mary Lochlin—born in Clarke county, Ga., in 1843—daughter of Samuel C. and Rebecca (Stevens) Lochlin. He was one of Walton county's early settlers, but late in life moved to Madison county, Ga. Seven children, who were the fruit of this marriage, are living: Oscar L., Sallie A., Thomas B., James M., Mollie, Samuel and Rhodelle. He is a royal arch Mason and himself and wife are members of the Missionary Baptist church.

SAMUEL HOUSTON BRODNAX, ex-merchant and farmer, Walnut Grove, Walton Co., Ga., son of Samuel and Margaret (Aycock) Brodnax, was born in Newton county, Ga., in 1844. His paternal grandparents were Edward B. and Vivian (Brookin) Brodnax. He was of English descent, born in Virginia, and raised a farmer; was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, and also in the Seminole war during which he was wounded. Migrating from Virginia to Georgia he settled in Hancock county. Mr. Brodnax's father was born in Virginia and came with the family to Georgia when he was young. He made farming his life occupation, was a good farmer and manager, and accumulated quite a large property, the value of which was heavily reduced by the emancipation proclamation. The maternal grandparents of Mr. Brodnax were Joel and Elizabeth (Bradford) Aycock. He was a native of North Carolina, whence he moved to Georgia and settled in Oglethorpe county and afterward moved to Newton county. Mr.

Brodnax was raised on the farm and received a high school education. At the age of eighteen he espoused the cause of the Confederacy and in January, 1863, enlisted as a private in Company A, Second regiment state troops, and served in that company till July, 1864, when he was transferred to Company D, Second regiment, Georgia cavalry, under Gen. Joe Wheeler, and served till the war closed. He was engaged in a number of battles and skirmishes during the time he was a soldier. In 1866 he commenced merchandising, making his first purchases on a credit. After continuing in this business for ten years with very great success he retired from mercantile life and engaged in farming. Here his business methods, careful oversight and good management and progressive ideas have resulted in continued prosperity, so that he is now one of the solid men of Walton county. He owns about 2,000 acres of choice farming land and a profitable milling property. In 1890 he was elected to represent Walton county in the general assembly and did efficient service on the committees on finance, agriculture, lunatic asylum, excises of members and mines and mining. Mr. Brodnax was married in 1871 to Miss Edda Selman—born in Walton county in 1851—daughter of Benjamin F. and Mary (Colley) Selman, whose families were early settlers of the county. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Brodnax three are living: Joel C., Samuel E. and George H. He is a member of the masonic fraternity, and himself and wife and three sons are members of the Christian church. Two sons of Mr. Brodnax, J. C. and S. E., are engaged in the mercantile business at Walnut Grove, his home.

HUGH A. CARITHERS, merchant-farmer, India, Walton Co., Ga., son of William C. and Mary (Griffith) Carithers, was born in Madison county, Ga., July 14, 1827. His paternal grandparents were native South Carolinians and lived and died in their native state. Mr. Carithers' father was born in Abbeville district, S. C., came to Georgia when a young man and settled in Madison county. He accumulated considerable property farming and died in 1855. His maternal grandparents were Robert and Sarah (Bronner) Griffith. He was a farmer and an early settler of Madison county. Mr. Carithers was raised on the farm and the limited education he received was obtained at the historic log school house. During the war between the states he served in the militia or home guard. He is very enterprising and energetic, possessing superior business and financial ability, has been successful in all his undertakings, and is one of the most popular as well as among the most solid and substantial citizens of the county. He resumed farming immediately after the war and made money. Then, in 1869, he engaged in general merchandising, which he has continued ever since. In addition to his extensive farming and mercantile interests he built a very large grist mill on the Appalachee river, which does a very heavy business, and also operates a cotton ginnery on the same stream. He started in life with comparatively nothing, and lived many years in a log cabin; now he owns between 4,000 and 5,000 acres of valuable land, and is conducting the large interests already mentioned. He served many years as a justice of the peace and in 1880 was elected to represent Walton county in the general assembly, and so much appreciated were his services that he was re-elected three successive terms. In that body he was assigned to the committees on banks, finance and agriculture, etc. Mr. Carithers was married in 1848 to Miss Mary A. Griffith—born in Clarke (now Oconee) county in 1831—daughter of James L. and Asyneth (Eberhart) Griffith. He was an early settler in Madison county, was a large farmer, and for many years a justice of the peace. Early in life he moved to Oconee (then Clarke) county, where he died.

Of the children which blessed this union three survive: James Y., Robert L. and Hugh A., Jr. His wife is an exemplary member of the Baptist church, and he is a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity.

J. W. CARTER, farmer, Walnut Grove, Walton Co., Ga., son of John and Judia (Auslin) Carter, was born in Walton county in 1828. His paternal grandmother was Elizabeth (Nash) Carter, a native of Virginia. His grandfather was of English descent, was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war and subsequently moved to Georgia and settled in Elbert county. Mr. Carter's father was born in Virginia and was fourteen years old when his parents moved to Georgia. At the age of sixteen his father died and he had to assume the grave responsibilities and duties of the head of the family, and ably discharged them. He was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, was an unusually good manager and accumulated a large property. Although the emancipation proclamation deprived him of forty-seven slaves, the close of the unpleasantness left him in good circumstances. He was a devoted and exemplary member of the Methodist church. His maternal grandfather, John Auslin, was of Irish lineage and was among the early settlers of Elbert county, whence, after a short stay, he moved to Alabama. Mr. Carter was raised on the farm and received such education as could be obtained at the country schools during his boyhood. Farming has been the pursuit of his life, and he was satisfactorily successful before the war, during which he served with the state troops eighteen months and participated in the defense of Atlanta. The result of the war left him comparatively poor, and he had to begin life anew. But by push and energy and good management he has become the owner of 1,850 acres of good land, on which he has a good home, and in addition owns valuable cotton-ginning interests. In 1875-76 he represented Walton county in the general assembly and did valuable service on the committee on manufactures. No citizen of the county is more highly esteemed. Mr. Carter was married in 1856 to Miss Laura Q. James—born in Henry county in 1839—daughter of David and Sarah (Saunders) James. He was born in North Carolina and was a farmer and trader. Eight of the children born to them are still living: Sylvanus, Ida, Robena E., John J., Marcus L., Mollie, Sallie and Carl. His wife is a consistent member of the Baptist church and he is a master Mason.

N. J. DAY, farmer, Social Circle, Walton Co., Ga., son of Nathaniel and Hannah (Mindenhall) Day, was born in Taliaferro county, Ga., in 1826. His paternal grandparent, David Day, was an early settler of what is now Columbia county, Ga. Here Mr. Day's father was born in 1775, spent his boyhood and grew to manhood. He was a farmer and school teacher, and had Hon. Alexander H. Stephens for a pupil—he being the first teacher of that remarkable man and eminent statesman. In 1833 he moved to Walton county, where he died in 1855. His maternal grandparents, Marmaduke and Alice (Benson) Mindenhall, were also natives of what is now Columbia county. Mr. Day was reared on the farm, and farming has been his life occupation. Unambitious, he has been content with farm-work and the yield of his land in response to well-directed, honest labor. He owns between 800 and 900 acres of good land and a good saw-mill, is of unquestioned reliability and held in high esteem. Mr. Day was married in 1855 to Miss Martha E. Tucker—born in Newton county in 1834—daughter of McKenzie and Eliza (Rakestraw) Tucker. He was a native of North Carolina, was a farmer and preacher, and early in life came to Georgia and settled in Newton county. Late in life he moved to Alabama, where he died. Of the children which blessed this union five are living: James M., Milton B., Robert L., Julius B. H. and John T. Mrs. Day is a member of the Baptist church and he is a master Mason.

E. R. FLOYD, farmer, Loganville, Walton Co., Ga., son of Edwin G. and Jane (Robinson) Floyd, was born in Newton county, Ga., in 1850. His paternal grandfather, Richard Floyd, was a native of Virginia, migrated to Georgia early in life, and settled in Oglethorpe county, whence he afterward moved to Newton county. He followed farming all his life, and served as a soldier in the war of 1812. Mr. Floyd's father was born in Oglethorpe county and was raised a farmer, and continued to be one through life. About the time he reached manhood he moved to Newton county, and late in life to Walton county, where he died in 1888. He served in the state militia during the late civil war, and was a working member of the Baptist church, of which he was a deacon for thirty years. His maternal grandfather, Robinson, was an old and much-respected native citizen of Oglethorpe county. Mr. Floyd was reared on a farm, received a very limited education, and started in life very poor. After cultivating rented land three years he bought a small farm, to which he has gradually added since, until now he owns a fine 600-acre body of land. His hard-working habits, and neighborliness of disposition have made him deservedly popular in his community. Mr. Floyd was married in 1878 to Miss Ella Hammond, born in Walton county in 1858, daughter of John J. and Elizabeth (Rambo) Hammond. Of the children born to them, four are living: Rossie, Edna, Leila and Lottie. Himself and wife are members of the Baptist church.

GEOERGE M. FOSTER, farmer, Wesley, Walton Co., Ga., son of John and Margaret (Furlow) Foster, was born in Clarke county, Ga., in 1818. Mr. Foster's father was born in Ireland and came to the United States with his parents, who settled in Clarke county, Ga. He was a hatter by trade and died in Clarke county in 1855. His grandfather on his mother's side was David Furlow, an early settler and farmer in Greene county, Ga. Mr. Foster was reared on the farm, and his educational advantages were of the most limited character. Farming has been his life occupation. In 1836 he was a volunteer soldier in the Seminole war in a company by Capt. Ligon, under Gen. Standiford. In 1843 he married Miss Mary Fielding, born in Athens, Clarke Co., Ga., in 1824, daughter of Samuel and Deodamia (Bows) Fielding. He was a native of Connecticut, a tailor by trade, and came to Georgia in 1819. Of Mr. Foster's children the following survive: Margaret, Mollie, Nancy, John, Samuel, Fannie, Annie, George, Ella and James. The mother, an exemplary member of the Methodist church, died in 1869. Mr. Foster is a master Mason, and a member of the Christian church.

D. A. GIBBS, physician and surgeon, Social Circle, Walton, Co., Ga., son of Thomas A. and Martha (Maddox) Gibbs, was born in Greene county, Ga., in 1824. His paternal great-grandfather was born in England, and migrated to this country and settled in Virginia before the revolutionary war. His grandparents, Herod and Lucy (Anderson) Gibbs, were natives of Virginia. He was a planter, and served seven years in the patriot army during the revolutionary war under Col. Washington. After independence was proclaimed he migrated to South Carolina and settled in Pickens county, whence he afterward moved to Morgan county, Ga., and followed farming until he died. Dr. Gibbs' father was born in Pickens county, S. C., in 1786, was reared in Morgan county, Ga., and married in Greene county. In 1825 he moved to Walton county, where he conducted extensive planting interests until his death in 1861. He was a poor boy, was a soldier in the war of 1812, and later in life accumulated property. His maternal grandparents were Claiborne and Jane (Marrow) Maddox. He was born in Virginia, migrated to Georgia and settled in Greene county, where he was an extensive planter, and for many years a justice of the inferior court. Dr. Gibbs was raised on the farm, was educated at Social Circle academy and for a while attended Mercer university at Penfield. He began the study of medicine in 1845 under his uncle, Dr. C. C. Gibbs, and then attended a course of lectures at Jefferson college, Philadelphia, then attended a course at the university of New York, from which he graduated in 1847. He soon afterward—that same year—located in Social Circle and commenced practice, and has remained there ever since. He has been very successful in his practice and financially; his ability and skill creating a demand for his services for miles around in Walton and adjoining counties. Besides his practice, which he still actively pursues in company with Dr. Spence, he conducts a drug store in the town and supervises extensive farming interests. During the late civil war Dr. Gibbs was surgeon of a battalion of state troops. Dr. Gibbs was married in 1852 to Miss Margaret A. Browning, born in Morgan county, Ga., in 1835, daughter of J. A. and Margaret (Means) Browning. Her father (son of W. M. and Isabel (McAlpin) Browning), was a Georgian by birth and a large planter. Of the children which blessed this union, four are living: Margaret C., Martha L., Minnie I. and Myrtle A. Dr. Gibbs is a prominent and valued member of the masonic fraternity.

DAVID HAMILTON, farmer, Monroe, Walton Co., Ga., son of Isaac and Elizabeth (Turner) Hamilton, was born in Gwinnett county, Ga., in 1832. His paternal grandparents were David and Elizabeth Hamilton. He was a native of Ireland and came to this country when twenty years of age as a bound apprentice, settled in South Carolina, where he married and reared a family, and late in life moved to Georgia and settled in Gwinnett county, where he died. He followed farming after reaching his majority, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. Mr. Hamilton's father was born in Edgefield district, S. C., where he was raised on the farm, and made farming his life-pursuit. He came to Georgia and settled in Gwinnett county in 1820; later he went to Florida, where he was during the Seminole war, in which he served as a volunteer in 1836. He moved back to Georgia in 1847, and died in 1848. He was quite a large slave-owner and a very enthusiastic and active member of the Methodist church. Mr. Turner's maternal grandparents were William and Elizabeth Turner. He was of German descent and born in South Carolina, where he lived until he died. He was the owner of quite a number of slaves, and a prosperous farmer. He was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Mr. Hamilton was reared a farmer, and has made farming the business of his life. His education was very limited. In 1862 he enlisted in Company I, Capt. Hutchins, Sixteenth Georgia regiment, and was with his command engaged in the seven days' fight around Richmond, and in all the battles of that campaign except Gettysburg and Fredericksburg. He had a finger shot off at Cedar Run, and in the battle of Spottsylvania court house his clothing was perforated by eleven bullets, he escaping unhurt. He was made prisoner at Knoxville, but after nine days' detention he escaped. He started in life with nothing, and bought 150 acres of land on credit, which he paid for and has added to until he now owns nearly 600 acres of excellent land, a large portion of which is under cultivation. In addition to this he operates a large cotton gin and owns an interest in a grist-mill, which does a large and profitable business. He is very highly esteemed by his neighbors. Mr. Hamilton was married in 1855 to Miss Millie V. Gower, born in Gwinnett county in 1839, daughter of R. M. and Millie (Burford) Gower. He was born in Clarke county, was a large farmer, and moved to Gwinnett county, where he lived till he died. Of the children which blessed this union, ten survive: Sarah E., Mary J., Martha A., R. T. L., Ella V., Abel S., R. M., David T., Maude and May. Mr. Hamilton and his wife are members of the Primitive Baptist church.

R. A. HAMMOND, physician and surgeon, Loganville, Walton Co., Ga., son of J. J. and Elizabeth (Rambo) Hammond, was born in Walton county, Ga., in 1852. His paternal grandparents were Abraham and Lillie (Ellsberry) Hammond. He was born in Virginia, of German descent, and when a young man came to Georgia and settled in Wilkes county. He afterward moved to Walton county, and was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain. He was a man of considerable wealth, and a useful member of the Missionary Baptist church. Dr. Hammond's father was born in Wilkes county, and moved to Walton county in 1845. He was a large planter, and in addition conducted a general merchandise store. He served with marked faithfulness in the late civil war, and was a member of the Baptist church, of which he was a deacon for a number of years. His maternal grandparents were Kinchen and Mary (Foster) Rambo. He was a native Georgian, and for many years practiced law. He was a very conscientious and devoted member of the Primitive Baptist church, and finally gave up his legal practice, was ordained a minister of his faith and finished his course in the active service of the Master, and died beloved by all who knew him. Dr. Hammond was reared on the farm and was given as good an education as the schools of the period of his boyhood afforded. He read medicine under Dr. J. F. Grower of Dalton, Ga., and then attended lectures at Jefferson college, Philadelphia, from which he was graduated in 1876. Soon after his graduation he located in Loganville, was honored with calls the second day after, and they have increased in volume and value ever since. His patient attention and skill have brought him success; he has established an extensive and remunerative practice, and ranks as high as any member of the profession in the county. Quiet and unassuming, his success is due to real merit. Dr. Hammond was married in 1877 to Miss Florence Camp, born in Gwinnett county in 1860, daughter of Merritt and Jane (Crawford) Camp. He was born in Gwinnett county, was a man of great energy and force of character, enterprising and a first-class farmer, a man of wealth, and financially as strong as any man in the county. He served with fidelity as a private soldier during the late unpleasantness. This union has been blessed with six children: Curtis, Lizzie, Joseph, John B., George P. and Claude, deceased. Dr. Hammond is a royal arch Mason, and himself and wife are useful members of the Methodist church.

T. J. HARRIS, farmer and miller, Jersey, Walton Co., Ga., son of John C. and Mary (Willis) Harris, was born in Newton county, Ga., in 1848. His paternal grandparents were Thomas and Nancy (Huff) Harris. He was born and reared in Wilkes county, where he married, and in 1829 moved to Newton county. He owned a number of slaves, and was a prosperous farmer. Mr. Harris' father was born in Wilkes county and came to Newton with his father when a small boy, where he grew up on the farm, was educated and married, and lived until he died. He owned considerable slave property, and was a successful farmer. His maternal grandparents, William and Susie (Gwatney) Willis, were natives of Virginia, and came to Georgia early in the 30's. (Was on the road "when the stars fell.") He was engaged with Joel Colley as overseer for a number of years, then he bought a piece of land and followed farming until he died. Mr. Harris received a good education for the times and began life by working on a farm. In 1870 he bought a piece of land, saved money and bought more, until he now has a 1,400-acre plantation, and a profitable ginnery and milling interest. Industrious and frugal and a good manager, he is one of the most prosperous farmers in the county. Mr. Harris was married in 1870 to Mary J. Clay, born in Walton county in 1852, daughter of Augustus W. and Elizabeth (Wilkinson) Clay. He was a farmer and one of the earliest settlers of Walton county. Of the children born to them, three are living: Myra B., Luvadas and Park W. Mrs. Harris is a devout member of the Methodist church.

J. T. LABOON, farmer, Wesley, Walton Co., Ga., son of Mason C. and Emily (Mullican) Laboon, was born in Walton county in 1852. His grandfather on his father's side, Peter Laboon, was a native of France, came to this country with the Marquis de La Fayette in 1777, and was a soldier in the patriot army in the revolutionary war. After the war he settled in South Carolina, where he worked at his trade as a blacksmith until he died. Mr. Laboon's father was the youngest son of his parents, and was born in South Carolina. He migrated to Georgia in 1835, and the next year volunteered as a soldier in the Seminole war. After his discharge he returned to South Carolina, where he married and soon after came back to Georgia and pursued his vocation as a blacksmith, supplemented by farming, until he died in 1887. He accumulated quite a large property, and during the late unpleasantness served on the Home Guards. His grandparents on his mother's side were Benjamin and Margaret (Jarvis) Mullican. He was of Welsh descent, and born in Maryland, whence he migrated to North Carolina, and thence to South Carolina, where he pursued his vocation of farming. Mr. Laboon was reared on the farm, learned blacksmithing under his father, and as he grew up during the war period, received but little education. Blacksmithing, with farming as a supplement, has been his life-pursuit. He has enjoyed prosperity and owns now a fine 600-acre farm under excellent cultivation. He ranks among the foremost as a mechanic and farmer, and is highly esteemed by the community in which he lives. Mr. Laboon was married in 1878 to Miss Annie E. Foster, born in Clarke county, Ga., in 1858, daughter of George M. and Jane (Fielding) Foster. He was born in Clarke county, was raised a farmer, moved to Walton county, and served as a volunteer in the Florida war under Capt. John P. Lucas. They have six children living: Lloyd, Brandt E., John S., George M., Nannie F. and James F. He is a master Mason, and himself and wife are members of the Christian church.

HENRY DICKENSON M'DANIEL was born at Monroe, Walton Co., Ga., Sept. 4, 1837. His father, Ira O. McDaniel, was a pioneer, and his mother was the daughter of Daniel Walker, a prominent merchant of Atlanta. Henry took the honors in the class of 1856 at Mercer university, and began the practice of law at Monroe in 1857. He opposed secession, being the youngest member of the secession convention, but voted for and signed the ordinance, and was made a member of the standing committee on the relations with the slave-holding states of North America. He took an active part in the war and served gallantly till its finish, attaining the rank of major. When hostilities ended he resumed the practice of law at Monroe. He was elected to the constitutional convention of 1865, and was elected state representative in 1872, state senator in 1874, 1878 and 1880, and governor in April, 1883, to fill the term of Alexander H. Stephens, deceased; and in 1884 for the full term, ending 1886. As governor he approved the new capitol act, choosing the five commissioners who, with the governor as ex-officio, erected the fine structure strictly within the appropriation. During his term of office nearly a million dollars of principal of state bonds were paid, and the interest upon the bonded debt of the state was reduced about $130,000 annually. Gov. McDaniel distinguished himself in the battle of Gettysburg as a leader of Anderson's brigade in the third day of the battle, and in the retreat through Maryland was shot through the body and taken prisoner. After spending five months in the hospitals of the north, he was sent, in December, 1863, to Johnson's Island, from which he was not released till July, 1865. Mr. McDaniel was the author of the measure which originated in the house of representatives during the session of 1874, taxing the railroads of the state like other property.

J. M. MICHAEL, farmer, Monroe, Walton Co., Ga., son of William and Lany (Cannon) Michael, as born in Walton county in 1840. His paternal grandparents were Jacob and Lucinda Michael. He was a native of North Carolina, reared a farmer, moved to Virginia, and came thence to Georgia. Mr. Michael's father was born in Virginia, came to Georgia with his father about 1791, and settled in what is now Oglethorpe county, and subsequently moved to Walton county; here he settled in the woods and cleared a farm when the Indians were roaming all around. For ten years he followed wagoning, a business profitably followed at that time by up-country slave-owners and land-holders when there were no railroads. He was superintendent of the construction of the first road built in the county. His maternal grandparents were Spy and Lany Cannon. He was a native of Scotland, emigrated to America when young, came to Georgia and settled in Jones county. Mr. Michael was raised on the farm and received a good education. In 1861 he enlisted in Company C, Capt. George Hillyer (ex-judge of the Fulton circuit court, ex-mayor and now a citizen of Atlanta), Ninth Georgia regiment. At the end of a year he was discharged on account of sickness; but subsequently entered the cavalry service under Capt. W. D. Grant, participated in the battles of Murfreesboro and Perryville, and served under the command successively of Forrest, Wheeler and Morgan. On one occasion he was captured but remained a prisoner only thirty minutes. After the war he resumed farming and has been satisfactorily successful, has a good farm of 630 acres and a comfortable home. Mr. Michael was married in 1866 to Miss Alice S. Wise, born in Oglethorpe county in 1843, daughter of Sherwood and Cynthia (Colquitt) Wise. He was closely related to ex-Gov. Henry A. Wise of Virginia, migrated to Georgia and settled in Oglethorpe county. He gave his entire attention to farming, and his success met his most sanguine expectations. He did faithful service as a volunteer soldier in the Seminole war. Of the children which blessed this union seven are living: Willie S.; Monia; Annie Laurie; Lany (who gained a scholarship at Milledgeville); Edwin E.; May, and Nellie. His wife and four of the children are active and useful members of the Baptist church.

W. E. MOON, farmer, Monroe, Walton Co., Ga., son of Joseph and Eda (Hudson) Moon, was born in Walton county in 1826. His paternal grandparents were Thomas and Sarah (Brooks) Moon. He was a native of England, and with two brothers came to America and settled in Georgia; from them the families bearing this name in the south descended. He was a farmer and lived in Columbia county, Ga., until he died. Mr. Moon's father was born in Columbia county in 1795, moved to what is now Walton county in 1819 and lived there all his life. He was a good farmer, a large slave-owner, a justice of the peace for twenty years and a member of the Missionary Baptist church. His maternal grandparents were William and Sarah (Booker) Hudson. He was a native Georgian, a farmer, and lived in Rockdale county, Ga., many years previous to his death. Mr. Moon was reared on the farm and what little schooling he received was obtained at the old-time log school house. In 1862 he enlisted in Company G (Capt. Barrett) Thirty-fifth Georgia regiment. With his command he participated in many hard-fought battles, among them Seven Pines, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. He came out of the war with a capital of $13 and commenced life anew. He now owns a splendid 1,150-acre plantation, makes good crops and is prosperous. Mr. Moon was married Dec. 19, 1844, to Miss Susan J. Willingham—born in Walton county in 1828—daughter of Cash and Martha (Moon) Willingham. He was a native of Columbia county, Ga., was a well-to-do farmer, and late in life moved to Walton county, where he died. They have eight living children: Francis, Cicero, Benjamin F., Stephen A. D., Robert L., Elizabeth, Columbus and William. Mr. Moon is a master Mason.

J. E. NUNNALLY, farmer, Nunnally, Walton Co., Ga., son of W. M. B. and Mary H. (Talbot) Nunnally, was born in Walton county in 1835. His paternal grandparents were John and Susan (Burton) Nunally. He was a native of England, emigrated to this country before the revolutionary war, in which he served as a soldier in the patriot army for seven years. After the war he was sheriff of Powhattan county, Va., thirty years, and changed the county books from British sterling pounds and pence to United States dollars and cents. In 1815 he moved to Georgia and settled in Clarke (that part now known as Oconee) county. Mr. Nunnally's father was born in Virginia, was a soldier in the war of 1812, and came to Georgia with his father's family in 1815. In 1820 he settled in the woods in what is now Walton county, lived in tents until he could fell timber and build a house, and had not even a horse. He, however, went to work resolutely, prospered, and accumulated a large and valuable estate. He was a very active and exemplary member of the Baptist church. His mother was the youngest daughter of James Talbot, who was a native of Wilkes county, Ga., a brother of whom ran for congress in opposition to Gov. Troup, who defeated him by a small majority. Mr. Nunnally was raised on the old homestead and received a fairly good education at the country schools. In 1861 he enlisted in Company H (Capt. T. G. Anderson), Eleventh Georgia regiment, with which he participated in the battles of Yorktown, Richmond and Second Manassas. At this last-named battle he was severely wounded and finally had to submit to the amputation of his left leg and return home. He was elected tax collector of the county and served to the close of the war. Just before its close he collected as much as $1,000,000 a month—Confederate currency. At this time a horse and buggy were the sum total of his possessions, but now he is the happy and prosperous possessor of nearly 600 acres of as good land as there is in the county, and of the unaffected esteem of his fellow-citizens, as is evidenced by the public positions to which they have elected him and in which they have kept him. He served the county twelve years as a jury commissioner; he was elected in 1890 to represent the senatorial district, comprising Clarke, Oconee, Walton, Newton and Rockdale counties, in the general assembly, and served on the committees on lunatic asylum, of which he was chairman, railroads, temperance and enrollment. He is chairman of the county board of education and of the democratic congressional committee. Mr. Nunnally made his first purchase of land and was married to Miss Sallie M. Hardeman, daughter of W. B. Hardeman, in 1865. Mr. Hardeman was a soldier in the Seminole war and is now farming in Morgan county, Ga. Mr. Nunnally is a master Mason, and himself and wife are members of the Missionary Baptist church.

J. P. ROCKMORE, merchant-farmer, Loganville, Walton Co., Ga., son of E. M. and Nancy A. (Thompson) Rockmore, was born in Newton county, Ga., in 1845. His grandparents on his father's side, John and Mary (Barnes) Rockmore, were native Georgians. He was a son of an emigrant from France who came to this country when young and settled in Georgia; was a planter all his life, accumulated quite a large property, and was a member of the Missionary Baptist church. Mr. Rockmore's father was born in what is now Newton county in 1814, followed farming all his life, was a soldier during the Seminole war, acquired large estate, and died in 1858. He was a deacon in the Missionary Baptist church. His grandparents on his mother's side were Joe and Elizabeth (Lemsford) Thompson. He was born in Wilkes county, Ga., in 1797, was a planter and quite rich, and moved to Mississippi, where he died. Mr. Rockmore was raised on the farm and received but a limited education. In 1863 he enlisted in a company commanded by Capt. Carroll, but being seriously injured by the running away of a mule, was compelled to return home. After the war he found himself the possessor of a horse, so he bought a small farm and began life, worked hard and saved some money. In 1873 he embarked in a general merchandising business at Loganville, in which he has been successful, does a large and satisfactory business, and has, besides, large and profitable milling and cotton-ginning interests. Mr. Rockmore was married in 1867 to Miss Elizabeth Braswell—born in Gwinnett county, Ga., in 1848—daughter of Ephraim and Dollie A. (Moore) Braswell. He was born in South Carolina, whence he moved to Georgia in 1828 and settled in Walton county. He was a farmer and merchant and served in the Seminole war. Himself and wife lived to be seventy years old. Of the children which blessed this union seven survive: Marshall L., Ephraim, Maude, Estella, Claude, Dollie A. and Henry Grady. Mr. Rockmore and his wife are active members of the Methodist church.

B. R. SMITH, merchant-farmer, Social Circle, Walton Co., Ga., son of W. G. and K. (Hardwick) Smith, was born in Jasper county, Ga., in 1839. His paternal grandfather was Guy Smith. He was born in Virginia, of English descent, was a large planter, a Primitive Baptist preacher, and served as a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. Some time after the close of the war he migrated to Georgia and settled permanently in Oglethorpe county. Mr. Smith's father was born in Virginia in 1776, came with his father to Georgia, and became an extensive planter and prominent in public and political affairs. He was captain of a company during the last war with Great Britain. He was an "old line" whig before the war, and at one time was spoken of as a candidate for governor. He moved from Oglethorpe to Jasper county, where he died in 1865. He was a man of great natural ability and force of character—prominent and popular. Mr. Smith's maternal grandmother, Mary (Coffee) Hardwick, Georgia born, came of a family among the oldest in the state. Mr. Smith was reared on the farm, received a good primary education, attended and was graduated from Emory college, Oxford, Ga. During the war between the states he served on detail duty with the rank of captain, and continued in the service until the surrender. After that event he resumed his agricultural operations with the most satisfactory results, and in 1878 moved to Social Circle and engaged in general merchandising, in which he has succeeded in establishing the second largest business in the city. He continues his planting interests with unabated ardor and vigor in running a fifty-horse farm. Progressive, enterprising, energetic and of unusual business ability and sagacity, he ranks high in the social and commercial world. Mr. Smith was married in 1863 to Miss Lizzie Flournoy—born in Jasper county in 1842—daughter of W. M. and Sarah (Maddox) Flournoy. He was a native of Jasper county, and was a large and wealthy planter. This wife died an exemplary member of the Methodist church, leaving one child, B. G. In 1889 he contracted a second marriage with Miss Maggie Barrett—born in Walton county in 1843—daughter of Dr. W. S. and Elizabeth Barrett. He was an early settler in Walton county, had an excellent reputation professionally and as a citizen, and attained to great prominence and influence. He served during the unpleasantness as a captain and as a surgeon, and has represented the county in the general assembly. Mr. Smith is a very ardent member of the masonic fraternity, in the mysteries of which he is very far advanced, and himself and wife are very prominent and influential members of the Methodist church.

A. J. SWORD, farmer, Loganville, Walton Co., Ga., son of John and Mary (Casson) Sword, was born in Walton county in 1837. His paternal grandfather, James Sword, was a native of Ireland, migrated to the country when young, and settled in Pennsylvania, and served seven years as a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war. After independence was proclaimed he came to Georgia and lived to the age of one hundred and four years. Mr. Sword's father was born in Lincoln county, Ga., and moved to what is now Walton county in 1812, and that same year enlisted as a soldier in the last war with Great Britain. His principal occupation was farming, but he also worked as a mechanic. Six of his sons served in the Confederate army during the war between the states, one of whom was killed, and another died of fever while in the service. His maternal grandfather, James F. Casson, was born in Edgefield district, S. C., whence he came to Georgia in 1810, and settled in what is now Walton county. He followed farming all his life. Mr. Sword was reared on the farm, and received a good education under the tuition of Robert Gwinn, one of the best country school teachers of his time. In 1862 he enlisted in Company D, Capt. W. D. Grant, Second Georgia cavalry, and with his command participated in many important battles, among them: Murfreesboro (first and second battles); Perryville, with the command that drove the Union forces from Lookout Point; Chickamauga, New Hope Church and Waynesboro, where he had his horse shot from under him. After the war he came home very poor, but by hard work and economy he has become the owner of a 400-acre tract of good land, has a comfortable home and the respect and esteem of his fellow-citizens. Mr. Sword was married in 1859 to Miss Amy L. Moon, born in Walton county in 1842, daughter of J. M. and Mary E. (Richardson) Moon. Her grandfather, William Richardson, was a soldier in the revolutionary war. Her father was born in Columbia county, Ga., was a volunteer soldier in the Seminole war, is still living in Walton county, and draws a pension. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Sword, nine are living: Mary E., John M., Fannie W., W. H., James T., A. F., Annie, Carrie B. and Sallie W. Mr. Sword has been a justice of the peace for many years, and is a member of the masonic fraternity.

WARE COUNTY.

MILES ALBERTSON, an energetic and prosperous business man of Waycross, Ware Co., was born April 8, 1845. He is a native of Rohrsburgh, Columbia Co., Penn., where his father, Edward Albertson, was a successful farmer, who died in 1862; his wife was Almira Albertson. The son, Miles, was being given a good common school education, but after his father's death he left school and devoted himself to the carrying on of the farm and the care of the younger children until 1871. In November of that year he engaged in the manufacture of lumber, introducing the first portable mills into that part of the state, and continuing in the business for about ten years. In May, 1881, with his brother, W. C. Albertson, he came to Georgia and founded the town of Braganza, building a large mill and taking up extensive tracts of land, some 2,000 acres, besides large stumpage privileges. Seven years later they moved the mill to Clinch Haven, Clinch Co., and having greatly enlarged it, engaged in business with Paxton & Mattox, to whom he sold out in December, 1888, and who still carry on a thriving business. Mr. Albertson then came to Waycross for the purpose of educating his children, and the following July entered into a contract with the city of Waycross to establish the excellent system of electric lights now in use. Later he engaged in planing mill business with R. H. Murphy & Co., which business, after enlarging, he combined with his own. On New Year's day, 1890, the lights were first turned on. The following August he organized the Satilla Manufacturing company with a capital of $52,000, of which J. S. Bailey is president; H. W. Wilson, secretary and treasurer, and Mr. Albertson himself superintendent and general manager; for the grand success of which the credit is due chiefly to Mr. Albertson, as well as for the extension of the business, which has become an important factor in the development of Waycross. In March, 1891, this company built the ice factory which now supplies the city, having a capacity of six tons per day. In June, 1893, Mr. Albertson leased from the corporation, for the term of five years, the entire combined plant, as lessee becoming sole proprietor and manager. The products are largely shipped north and to south Florida, through correspondence. Mr. Albertson has been a stockholder and director in the South Georgia bank from the time of its incorporation. He is also waterworks commissioner, and, in fact, has from the first identified his own interests with those of the city of his adoption, whose upbuilding he has constantly forwarded. He is a member of the masonic fraternity. May 18, 1871, Mr. Albertson married Miss Hittie Ann Hayman. They have been blessed with four children, two sons and two daughters. The eldest son, Ward Benjamin, is assistant cashier of the South Georgia bank; the eldest daughter, Emma B., is attending school at Macon.

GILBERT M. ARCHER, Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., only son of David Isaiah and Sarah Elizabeth (Lee) Archer, was born in Screven county, Ga., July 15, 1855. His father was a farmer with whom he remained until twenty-one years of age, receiving such educational advantages as were afforded by the common schools. Having attained his majority he entered the employ of Leon Johnson, and was for two years engaged with him in the mill and lumber business, after which he engaged with the Atlantic & Gulf (now Savannah, Florida & Western) railroad, as track hand, at forty cents per day, a small remuneration, but affording an excellent stepping stone to something better, for in three weeks Mr. Archer received promotion to the place of foreman; two years later he was advanced to roadway and construction train service, and after six months was appointed a supervisor. About four months later he was sent to Jacksonville to assist in building the Waycross Short Line from Jacksonville to Waycross. After the completion of this enterprise he returned to Savannah, remaining there as supervisor two years, when he was sent to the Gainesville division of the Savannah, Florida & Western railroad and located at Jasper, Fla., for six years; Jan. 1, 1889, he was transferred to Waycross as supervisor, in which position he still remains. Although the business of the railroad demands Mr. Archer's constant attention, he nevertheless takes a deep interest in public affairs, and especially in whatever tends to the advancement of the city, and at present represents his ward in the city council. He is a member of the Roadmasters' association, and also of the masonic fraternity. In November, 1878, Mr. Archer married Miss Elizabeth Palmel Smith, daughter of Millington and Caroline (Best) Smith of Screven county. Mr. Smith was government agent, and cared for the families of soldiers during the war; the elder Mr. Archer was also in the Confederate army, and most of the time with the Effingham Hussars. Mr. and Mrs. Archer have one daughter.

DR. WILLIAM PIERRE BABCOCK, a leading citizen of Millwood, Ware Co., Ga., a native of Rhode Island, was born at Westerly, Sept. 11, 1839, and is a son of Pierre Greene and Martha (Wilcox) Babcock. He was well educated, having attended the public schools and academies in his native city and later in New York state, where he received his diploma from the Oswego Homeopathic Medical society, to which the training of hospital practice was added. In September, 1861, he enlisted in Company D, of the Eighty-first New York infantry. He received various promotions, so that at the close of the war he was mustered out a captain. He was in several different brigades and corps, and at of great promise, just ready to enter the profession of medicine and surgery with the time of mustering out was provost marshal of Gloucester county, Va. Mr. Babcock was in numerous engagements, the chief ones being: Yorktown, Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, Malvern Hill, White Oak Swamp and Cold Harbor, where he was wounded and sent to the hospital. He was with the Federal forces which were first to enter Richmond, and his regiment was placed in charge of Libby prison. The year preceding the Federal prisoners had constructed a Union flag from mutilated clothing of suitable colors, and on the Fourth of July flung it to the breeze. Of course it was confiscated by the Confederates, who concealed it, and Mr. Babcock was so fortunate as to find it during his stay in Richmond. This flag was carried off by northern relic hunters. Dr. Babcock assisted in raising the first Union flag over Castle Thunder—the political prison of the Confederacy. The commanding officer of Libby prison placed him in charge of the ward in which were confined the Confederate officers—military and political. The health of Dr. Babcock has been impaired ever since the war, and he draws a pension from the government. At the close of the war he returned to New York, where, with the exception of short intervals he remained until the fall of 1878, when he came to Georgia; settling first at Glenmore, afterward at McDonald's Mills, Coffee Co., and later at Millwood, his present home, where he has been chiefly engaged in the mercantile business, practicing medicine but little. Dr. Babcock is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and also of the masonic fraternity, and is worshipful master of the local lodge. March 16, 1864, Dr. Babcock was married to Miss Cecilia Margaret Davis, daughter of David and Sarah (Cole) Davis. They have now no children, their eldest son, a young man of great promise, just ready to enter the profession of medicine and surgery with marked honors and attainments, having been buried March 11, 1894. A younger son died Sept. 19, 1883.

JAMES STACY BAILEY, a prominent citizen of Duke, Ware Co., Ga., was born in Montgomery county, Ga., Oct. 9, 1848. His father, William Stacy Bailey, was born in Woolwich, Me., March 5, 1818, his parents being Abner and Mahala Bailey—the former descended from an Englishman who accompanied a certain duke on his mission to this country to lay out a grant of land he had acquired. Meanwhile Bailey's son and the duke's daughter yielded to the passion of love and ran away and were married. The lady was disinherited, but in course of time, all other lineage having become extinct, the duke sought to find her, the only inheritor of an estate amounting to over three million dollars. Her descendants were found, but during the revolutionary war all records of the marriage had been destroyed; unable to prove this marriage, nearly a century was spent in a vain attempt to prove their title to the estate, which eventually reverted to the treasury of the English government. Mr. Bailey's grandfather was a soldier in the war of 1812 and his great-grandfather was a soldier in the war of the revolution. William Stacy Bailey after numerous vicissitudes settled in Montgomery county, Ga., in 1846, where he married Miss Mary Elizabeth Pitman, July 20, 1847, who died in 1886, after which he married Mrs. Nancy Clemens, widow of Senator Clayton Clemens. In 1855 he brought his family to Ware county, settling near the present site of Waycross, on a farm of 500 acres; which homestead still belongs to the family, in addition to some city property. During the war Mr. Bailey served as private and as captain, having charge of the Rifles at Atlanta. He has been in the lumbering business during his entire residence in Georgia, and was treasurer of Ware county for twelve years. He is a devoted Methodist and also a member of the masonic fraternity. His son, James Stacy, was but a child when the family moved to Ware county, where he received training both from private tutors and in the common schools. He early developed remarkable business talent, especially for milling, in which he became interested when but eighteen years of age. With his father and brother he engaged in extensive lumbering operations on the Satilla river. Two years later he formed a partnership with his father and Cuyler W. Hilliard, and three years afterward Mr. R. B. Reppard, of Savannah, was admitted to the firm, which lasted three years, when Mr. Reppard purchased the entire business. Mr. Bailey then formed a new partnership with Mr. Hilliard for lumbering operations in Nassau county, Fla., in connection with a mercantile business, which was carried on some thirteen or fourteen years. For two years of this time Mr. Bailey, with his brother, was working on the Saint Mary's river as J. S. Bailey & Co. In 1890 he closed out both these partnerships and bought an interest in the firm of W. T. Scott & Co., also in the lumbering business. About the same time he entered the Satilla Manufacturing company, of which he is president. Mr. Bailey was one of the organizers and is now one of the directors of the South Georgia bank. He is a very large owner of real estate, of which some is in Tennessee, some in Florida, some in Georgia. He owns about 5,000 acres, with a lease of 35,000 acres that has not been cut, and his mill is one of the largest in the state. During his residence in Florida Mr. Bailey represented his district—Nassau county—in the state senate for four years. He is a master Mason and takes great interest in the fraternity. Mr. Bailey is an ardent Methodist, a trustee and a steward of the church, and also superintendent of the Sabbath school of the Methodist Episcopal church in

R. P. Bird

Duke. Jan. 30, 1877, Mr. Bailey married Miss Margaret Elizabeth Hilliard, daughter of Cuyler W. Hilliard, of Hilliard, Fla. After her death he married, in August, 1890, Miss Mattie May Taylor, daughter of Rev. John R. Taylor, of the Florida conference. Mr. Bailey's two partners, Walter T. Lott and Calvin L. Thigpen, are his brothers-in-law, having each married one of his sisters.

ROBINSON PULASKI BIRD is the third son of James Robinson and Mary Holmes (Daniels) Bird, and was born Dec. 12, 1842, at Taylor's Creek, Liberty Co., Ga. His father was a leading Methodist of that region and also quite prominent in public affairs, being for a number of years justice of the inferior court. The father of Judge Bird was a soldier in the war of the revolution and a witness of the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. Mr. Bird's grandfather, Daniels, also served in that memorable struggle. Mr. Robinson was educated in an institute in Liberty county, at the age of nineteen years entered the army as a non-commissioned cavalry officer, and at the close of the war was second sergeant, having declined further promotion. He served throughout the war, participating in many engagements, being in the Fifth Georgia cavalry, commanded by Gen. R. H. Anderson, now only seventy-five strong, but with 200 left out of the six regiments in his brigade. He also served on Gen. Anderson's staff in the Florida campaign of 1864. After the war Mr. Bird engaged extensively in the mill and lumber business until the product declined to ruinous prices. In 1876 he engaged in teaching, alternating it with mercantile and other business, his health precluding constant teaching. He established schools in Bulloch and Jefferson counties, which are still flourishing, and was largely influential in the elevation of the schools in these sections. In 1888 he moved to Waycross, where he has continued the work of education, and has also been engaged in contracting for the construction of buildings and in newspaper work with the "Herald." During the years 1893 and 1894 Mr. Bird has served as clerk of the city council, and is clerk of the water-works commission and of the board of health. He is a devoted Methodist and has been secretary of the St. Paul Sunday school for many years. He is a member of the Society of Confederate Veterans, and is also an active temperance worker—a member of the Good Templars. July 25, 1866, Mr. Bird was married to Miss Josephine Sarah Hines, whose father, Judge Thomas R. Hines, of Savannah and Effingham, was many years a member of the general assembly. He is a large land and mill-owner, notwithstanding he lost probably $50,000 by destruction of property during Sherman's march through the state. Mr. and Mrs. Bird are the parents of three sons and three daughters, all now at home. The sons are all promising young men, rising in business, and taking a place in the foremost ranks of society. The oldest, Charles R., is farming; the second, Thomas P., is foreman of a railroad department; the third, Joseph Gordon, a namesake of Gen. Gordon, is a dealer in beef. Mr. Bird has a sword which was carried through the war.

STEPHEN LINCOLN BISHOP, Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., is the eldest son of Ephraim and Hannah (Hendrickson) Bishop, and was born in Champaign county, Ill. He received his early education in the common schools of his native county and later attended a business college in Wellington, Kas. He then began business for himself, farming one year, and after that teaching for four years in the schools of Summer county, Kas. He came to Waycross in March, 1888, and accepted a position with the Cherokee Farm and Nursery company, with which he has continued his connection, and is now a stockholder and secretary of the company. Mr. Bishop has been active politically in connection with the Farmers' alliance, and subsequently with the people's party, and is at present chairman of the county committee. Mr. Bishop was married Jan. 29, 1888, at Anson, Kas., to Miss Stella Blanche Cromer, daughter of Joseph P. and Margaret M. Cromer, of Summer county, Kas. The father was a farmer and a soldier in the Federal army during the late war and marched with Sherman from Atlanta to the sea. Mr. and Mrs. Bishop have been blessed with two daughters.

WILLIAM J. CARSWELL, Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., is the third son of Matthew and Harriet Eliza (Kilpatrick) Carswell, and descended from Scotch and Irish ancestors who several generations ago settled in St. George's parish. His grandfather was a captain in the revolutionary army, and the land on which he lived is still in the possession of the family. Matthew J. was a farmer, but a man of public spirit who for a number of years was on the board of education. He served in the Confederate army during the last year of the war; his eldest son was also a soldier and surrendered with Johnston's army. Another son, Dr. Alexander Washington Carswell, came from Burke county to Waycross in 1884 and established a very successful practice. He was a prominent and influential citizen and mayor of Waycross in 1889; he had just been re-elected for 1890 when he died, leaving three children and his widow, now Mrs. George L. Youmans. William J. Carswell, who was born in Whitfield county, Aug. 19, 1854, was educated in the common schools at Hephzibah. In 1873 he began clerking, but after four years was obliged to give it up on account of his health, and engaged in farming. This was followed by two years of school teaching, and then he entered the mill service, which business he still follows. He has been for six years a member of the board of education. He is a deacon in the Baptist church, which he has several times represented at conferences. He has been an Odd Fellow, but his other duties preclude his giving much attention to this. April 20, 1877, Mr. Carswell married Miss Mamie Lyon, who died four years later, leaving one daughter. April 13, 1882, he married Miss Lilla T. Jones, daughter of Thomas F. and Eliza J. Jones, and by this union has another daughter. Mr. Carswell is warmly interested in the welfare of Waycross and active in every effort for the city's advancement.

STEPHEN EDWARD CRIBB, Glenmore, Ware Co., Ga., first-born son of John Thompson and Annie (Williams) Cribb, was born Aug. 21, 1853, in Georgetown district, S. C. His father, who was a farmer, died when he was but eight years old, and two years later he was obliged to earn his own living, having obtained such education only as a boy of that age could acquire in the common schools. But he must have made excellent use of his opportunities, as at this early age, ten years, he entered as clerk into a store connected with a turpentine firm, where he remained for six years. He then engaged in the turpentine business on his own account until 1883. Up to this time Mr. Cribb had remained in his native county, but that year he moved to Georgia, making his home in Glenmore, Ware Co., where he still remains. The next year he engaged in mercantile business, and also as agent for the Savannah, Florida & Western railroad. At the end of three years he discontinued the railroad agency, engaging instead in the turpentine business, and also continuing his traffic in general merchandise. In November, 1893, he added a saw-mill plant, which he now operates in connection with a planing mill and barrel stave machine, as well as his turpentine still. Mr. Cribb has also an interest in a store in Jennings, Fla., in partnership with M. L. Harton, under the firm name of M. L. Harton & Co., an enterprise which was originally undertaken by Mr. Cribb himself some three years before. Mr.

Cribb's specialty is the turpentine business, he having a farm of 6,000 acres, with about 4,000 acres in operation. The store, saw-mill, etc., are merely adjunct to this, the staves and lumber being mostly on orders from others. In all these different enterprises he employs about seventy men. Mr. Cribb is also a justice of the peace and notary public. He was married in 1877 to Miss Mary Jane Newton of Horry county, S. C. Her father, William Newton, a first lieutenant in the Confederate army, was killed near Richmond. Mr. and Mrs. Cribb have four boys and one girl living.

BURRELL SMITH FISHER, an active business man of Millwood, Ware Co., Ga., was born at Whiteville, Columbus Co., N. C., March 25, 1857. His father, Bryant Fisher, was a farmer, engaged in the turpentine business and served in the Confederate army during the civil war. He was captured in the seven days' fight before Richmond, but soon after was exchanged. Mrs. Fisher was Miss Nancy Jane Dyson, the daughter of a wealthy farmer, who died at the beginning of the war, but her brothers were in the service of the Confederacy, and one of them, Benjamin Dyson, received a wound in the shoulder, which resulted in his death. Young Fisher enjoyed but meager educational privileges, attending school less than a year, but made good use of these. He worked for nine years at the cooper's trade in his old home, then, at the age of twenty-six, came to Worth county, Ga., and for three years ran a turpentine still for H. Woodman & Co. He then removed to Ware county and engaged in farming and operating a ginnery for D. K. Coleman, with whom, in December, 1889, he embarked in the manufacture of naval stores. In December, 1892, he bought out Mr. Coleman, and has since then carried on the business alone. He works some twelve lots, only one of which he owns, the remainder being on lease; he employs about sixty men and nine mules and horses, and has his own cooper-shop for making pine barrels. Beginning without education or means, he has by untiring industry and energy, strict economy and prudent investment, under what he is pleased to acknowledge a "smiling Providence," prospered, and is thankful that what he terms a "bright little bunch of children" have always been amply provided for. Dec. 7, 1875, he was married to Miss Nancy Catharine Guinn, daughter of John and Nancy Guinn of Onslow county, N. C. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher have been blessed with eight children: Lillie P., naval stores manufacturer; a son, sixteen years old (name not given), who manages the commissary department for his father; Eddie Franklin; Burrell B.; Willie Lee; Henry Grady; Chester Arthur, and Ruby Pearl. Mr. Fisher is a stanch democrat and a member of the masonic fraternity.

WILLIAM BARDEN FOLKS, M. D., who died in Ware county in April, 1886, is well worthy of commemoration, for his influence was not only wide-spreading but enduring—being still felt, although he has passed from earth. Dr. Folks was born in Jefferson county, Ga., Nov. 6, 1830. He received a good common school education, and then devoted himself to the study of the healing art, and in 1855 graduated from the medical college at Savannah. After a year's practice in his native county he established himself in Ware county in a practice of wide extent and very lucrative. The first few years of the long period of his residence in Ware county, his home was in Waresboro, at that time the county seat; later for many years he lived at Waycross, where he was not only prominent and popular as a physician, but as a citizen, honored and well-beloved; for a number of years he was mayor of Waycross, and for a term was senator from the Fifth district in the general assembly. During the war he was a surgeon in the Confederate army, in which service he contracted the disease which ultimately terminated his life. In December, 1849, Dr. Folks married Miss Mary Jefferson Miller, and to them were born three sons: F. C., G. P. and W. B.

FRANK CLINGMAN FOLKS, M. D., the first-born son of Dr. William B. Folks, and the worthy heir of his honorable name, was born in Jefferson county, Oct. 13, 1852, and came with his parents to Ware county in 1857. The following years were passed at Waresboro, Tebeauville, Whigham and Valdosta, Ga., successively, at each of which the education of the youth in the elementary branches progressed rapidly, so that on reaching manhood he was well fitted to act well his part in life, and finally entered the employ of the Atlantic & Gulf railroad at Savannah. But with a natural and laudable interest in the profession so long and honorably represented by his father, he began the study of medicine in 1874 in the office of Dr. William Duncan, and took a course of lectures in Savannah Medical college, graduating in March, 1876. The young physician began practice in Homerville, Clinch Co., and after two years there and one year in Jasper, Fla., he removed to Waycross in 1880, where he has since remained. Dr. Folks emulates his honored father not only as an eminent physician, but as a valued citizen of his town and state, ever watchful for whatever may be for their best interest. His disinterested efforts in their behalf are recognized by his fellow-townsmen, and Dr. Folks is at present mayor of his city, a dignity which has also been conferred upon him in former years. In 1888 and 1889 he was honored with the election as state senator from this district, the Fifth. Dr. Folks is local surgeon for the Plant system, and member of the National Association of Railway Surgeons; he is also a member of the masonic fraternity.

G. P. FOLKS, physician and surgeon, Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., is a son of W. B. and Mary E. (Jefferson) Folks, and was born in the county where he now lives March 24, 1866. He attended the common schools and helped his father in the drug business in his early years, later conducting a drug store of his own. He applied himself to the study of medicine and was graduated with high honors at the Louisville Medical college in 1889. He began the practice of his profession at Dupont, Ga., but a year later moved to Waycross, where he has been eminently successful, having established a large and remunerative practice. He married Miss Bell Knox, daughter of Capt. J. Knox, a prominent citizen of the county, and they have two children, Helen D. and Franklin P. Dr. Folks belongs to the Methodist church, while his wife is a Presbyterian. He is an enthusiast in his profession, and belongs to local as well as national medical associations. Dr. Folks is a member of the Knights of Pythias and I. O. O. F. fraternities, taking great interest in each. In politics he is a democrat. In connection with his practice Dr. Folks owns a fine farm in Ware county, which he profitably manages. With his interesting family he lives in a fine new residence in Waycross.

JAMES HENRY GILLON, a well-known business man of Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., is a native of Macon, born Feb. 28, 1859. His parents were James Henry and Mary Frances (Hobbs) Gillon, the former a master mechanic of the old Macon & Brunswick railroad, a Mason of high degree, and also an Odd Fellow. The son, James Henry, received a common school education, after which he served an apprenticeship to E. Crockett, Macon, Ga., as founder and moulder. After the termination of this apprenticeship in 1880 he continued some years in the employ of Mr. Crockett, then moved to Brunswick, Ga., where for four years he worked as foreman for E. Briesewick. In May, 1887, he came to Waycross and started a foundry and machine shop, which he continues to operate with success. July 1, 1894, he formed a partnership with Gordon G. Parker, under the firm name of Gillon & Parker; they are constructing a plant in order to increase capacity and supply the growing demand, and expect to at least double their productions this year. Mr. Gillon has purchased the site for the new plant, and a home in Waycross, in the advancement of which city he manifests a hearty interest. For three years he was a member of the Waycross city council, 1888-89-90; and is now first lieutenant of the Waycross Rifles, in rank the second company in the state. He is a member of the Episcopal church, in which he is a vestryman, and a lay reader; he is also a member of the Knights of Pythias, of which order he has been an officer. Feb. 16, 1882, Mr. Gillon married Miss Alice Margaret Hudson, daughter of Richard B. and Sallie Hudson, of Macon, Ga. Mr. and Mrs. Gillon have two daughters.

CHARLES MARVIN GRIFFING, of Waycross, Ware Co., is the second son of David Combs and Marilla (Hilliard) Griffing, of Norwich, N. Y., in which place he was born Oct. 10, 1870. He was educated at home and in the common schools of his native town and in 1892 began for himself by engaging in a newspaper enterprise at Macclenny, Fla. After eight months he sold out and came to Waycross, where in November he engaged with the Cherokee Farm and Nursery company, in which he has been very successful, having had previous nursery experience. He is now a stockholder and manager of the Cherokee business. Mr. Griffing is still unmarried. A young man of courage and perseverance, he is on the highway to success.

WILLIAM DYSON HAMILTON, a well-known citizen of Waycross, Ware Co., is a native of Washington, Wilkes Co., Ga., and was born June 9, 1832. He is the only one living of the ten children of George and Elizabeth (Dyson) Hamilton, the former a planter who died before the late war. Mrs. Hamilton is of English ancestry, an early progenitor of hers being a clergyman, Rev. Dyson, who came over with Oglethorpe. The Dyson family for generations has been prominent in Wilkes county. Young Hamilton was educated at his birthplace, where he remained until 1856, in the fall of which year he went to Augusta to accept a position in the clerical department of the Augusta & Savannah railway, under Dr. Francis T. Mills, who was the president of the company. A year later he resigned this position and in 1858 moved to Screven county and engaged in merchandising, together with farming; he was the owner of Station No. 5, at Halcyon Dale, and owned the place, controlling the agency until 1875. At the outbreak of the war Mr. Hamilton raised a company—"Brown" Light infantry—with which, as its captain, he entered the service of the Confederacy, Aug. 9, 1861, and was assigned to coast service on Tybee island, being a part of the Twenty-fifth Georgia regiment, which he had helped to form, and which was commanded by Col. (later general) Claudius C. Wilson. Upon the fall of Fort Royal the island was evacuated and the regiment returned to duty about Savannah. In January, 1862, Capt. Hamilton was so injured, his foot being crushed by the fall of a horse, that in May he was obliged to leave the service and return home. He afterward recruited a part of a cavalry company designing to re-enter the service, but was not able to do so, and was at home at the time of Sherman's march, the camp of the latter at one time being for three days within three miles of Mr. Hamilton's home. In 1877 Mr. Hamilton moved from Screven to Effingham county, still making farming his business, and in 1884 he moved to Waycross, his present home. As well as being a successful manager of his own private affairs, Mr. Hamilton has been prominent for many years in the public affairs of his native state. For three years, 1868-69-70, he represented Screven county in the state legislature, where he was on several important committees. Since coming to Waycross he was for three years clerk of the city council, and has been connected with city and county courts and is now justice of the peace; he has also been a member of the board of education for Waycross and is president of the Ware County Veterans' association. Mr. Hamilton is a faithful member of the Baptist church; in politics he is a democrat, and is a prominent Mason, and for six consecutive years served as worshipful master. July 16, 1857, Mr. Hamilton married the daughter of Maj. Willis Young, of Screven county, Miss Alice Young. She has since died, leaving one daughter, married, and having one child. Oct. 12, 1874, Mr. Hamilton married Miss Florence E. Brewer, daughter of George Brewer, and they have been blessed with two sons and four daughters. Mr. Hamilton and his family live happily in their pleasant home, and are greatly esteemed in the community.

JOHN HENRY HILLHOUSE, a progressive citizen of Waresboro, Ware Co., Ga., was born in Randolph county, Ga., Sept. 14, 1864. He is the second son of Richard Henry and Georgia Amanda (Roper) Hillhouse, the former a prominent architect and builder of Cuthbert, Ga., who served in the Confederate army, was wounded, and returned home and died before the close of the war. The father of Mrs. Hillhouse was the owner of a large plantation in Calhoun county, Ga., and was killed by one of his slaves who, when on the scaffold about to be hung, confessed that he had stolen up behind his master, who was reading under a tree and had slain him with his hoe. The education of young Hillhouse was obtained chiefly in the common schools of Shellman, Randolph Co., Ga. In 1876 he entered a store at Poland, Ga., as salesman, and after remaining there two years, accepted a position as operator and agent with the Brunswick & Western railway, in whose employ he has since remained, working at different points, but since April 5, 1889, at Waresboro. He is agent both for the express and railway companies, as well as telegraph operator, and deals somewhat in real estate. He manifests great interest in public affairs and is a member of the city council and of the school board. Mr. Hillhouse is a member and deacon of the Missionary Baptist church. Nov. 3, 1886, he married Miss Orrie Louise Costellow, daughter of William H. and Louise Costellow, a union which has been blessed with three children: Charles H., Louise M. and Frank B.

HON. LEMUEL JOHNSON, one of the most highly esteemed citizens of Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., and a successful merchant and lumber dealer, was born in Appling county May 5, 1844. He is the son of Hon. Duncan and Lujoyce (Sellers) Johnson, both natives of Georgia, their parents having come to this state from North Carolina in the early days when settlers were few and the Indians numerous. Duncan Johnson was a farmer who represented his county in the general assembly two terms; was justice of the inferior court many years, and served in the Indian war. He was a man of unswerving integrity and honor, and was among the leading men of his county. He died June 27, 1857, aged sixty years; his widow died June 17, 1867, aged fifty-four years. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom nine grew to maturity, and eight are still living: Samuel D.; Silda, now Mrs. Matthew Smith, of Appling county; Mary, now Mrs. B. O. Quinn, of Wayne county; Sophronia; Lemuel; James M., living in Pierce county; Keziah, now Mrs. Joseph Corson, of Appling county; Duncan,

J. H. Hillhouse

now living in Florida; Ellen, now Mrs. John H. Sweat, of Pierce county. Lemuel Johnson enlisted Aug. 12, 1861, in Company F, Twenty-sixth Georgia regiment, Col. E. N. Atkinson. He was a musician, but volunteered for the seven days' fight around Richmond, and served through the war; still has his parole, dated at the surrender, April 9, 1865. In 1867 he began business for himself in the town of Sellers, twenty-five miles from the railroad, carrying on a mercantile business in connection with his farm with splendid success. Three years later he moved to Pierce county, and carried on the same business for a like period of time. He then added the lumber business to his trade in general merchandise, and these two lines of business have engaged his attention ever since. In 1880 he moved to Appling county, and later to Ware county, with constantly increasing success, becoming the possessor of wealth, the merited reward of sturdy effort and strict integrity. His responsibilities are numerous and weighty, as an enumeration of them will show. He is a member of the firm of Stillwell, Millen & Co., Savannah; L. R. Millen & Co., New York, and Benrick Lumber Co., Hazelhurst. He is also general manager of the Waycross Lumber Co.; president of the Augusta Lumber Co.; general manager of Waycross Air-line Railroad Co.; part owner of Millen & Son's railroad from Millen to Stillmore, Ga.; a stockholder in the Satilla Manufacturing Co.—electric light, ice factory and planing mill; a stockholder and director of the First National bank, and also in the bank of Waycross; a stockholder in the C. C. Grace Co., which is doing an immense wholesale and retail business in Waycross. The Waycross Lumber Co., mentioned above, is the most extensive lumber-dealing concern in the state, owning 360 lots of land of 490 acres each, and manufacturing and shipping to all parts of the world. But Mr. Johnson has too much public spirit to confine his efforts entirely to the accumulation of wealth, and is known far and wide for his interest in every good and noble cause. He represented his district, Appling, Wayne and Pierce counties, in the Georgia senate from 1880 to 1884, and his record was a most excellent one. He has refused further legislative honors, but gladly furthers the interests of his home city. Here he is a member of the school board, one of the trustees of school property, and a member of the sanitary and waterworks commission. He was on the building committee of the fine new M. E. church, of which he is an ardent and faithful member, has been steward, and is on the board of trustees. Has been for four years one of the trustees of Emory college, Oxford, one of the best equipped educational institutions of the Methodist church in the south. Besides all this he finds time to keep up his standing in the orders of Knights of Pythias and Knights of Honor, of which he is past dictator, and of the masonic fraternity, in which he holds one of the highest offices in the gift of the chapter, and is one of the trustees of the property—a fine block. Feb. 3, 1869, Mr. Johnson married Miss Anna J. Youmans, daughter of Charles and Eliza (Lagg) Youmans, of Pierce county. Mr. Youmans, a prominent farmer, was justice of the inferior court for many years, and filled other offices of trust and honor to the satisfaction of his constituents. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are the parents of nine children: Marie, wife of Prof. Wm. S. Branham, of Oxford, a graduate of Emory college, and now teaching school in Gordon; Mrs. Branham is a graduate of the Wesleyan Female college at Macon, class of 1887; Herschel V., who was a student at Emory college, when he died, in his sophomore year, Jan. 22, 1888, at the age of only sixteen years; he was a boy of remarkable talent, beloved and respected by all who knew him; Ida Lester, Alvin, Kate, Jeannette, Clifford C. and George L. Alvin is an unusually talented youth; though but seventeen years of age he has had charge of a locomotive for two years—the youngest engineer on record. Mr. Johnson's educational opportunities were quite limited, yet by his own determined effort he has acquired an extensive store of knowledge, and his superior intelligence and ability are recognized wherever he is known. The fact that in spite of discouragements and restricted privileges he has risen from a comparatively poor boy to wealth and influence is a result almost wholly due to his honorable and upright life. Devoting himself unselfishly to the advancement of every movement and every cause calculated to promote the material, educational and religious interests of the city and county, he enjoys the unqualified esteem of the intelligent community so highly favored by his membership.

ARTHUR MERRILL KNIGHT, a prominent business man of Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., is of New England ancestry on the paternal side, being the grandson of Peter M. Knight, a Maine ship-builder; possessed withal of much literary taste and ability, as is attested by a unique volume, Gems of Poetry, written and beautifully illustrated with the pen by his own hand in 1832—a volume carefully treasured and dearly cherished by his grandson. Albion Williamson Knight, the son of this poet, was born in Brunswick, Me., Jan. 5, 1823. Having studied the healing art he began its practice at White Sulphur Springs, Fla., his practice constantly growing in extent and successfulness. Having remained here about twenty years, he moved in 1871 to Live Oak, Fla., whence after a year he moved to Jacksonville, where he remained until his death, Sept. 6, 1889. He had been health officer for fourteen years, which to some extent crowded out his other practice; was secretary of the State Medical association, also of the masonic lodge, and was an elder in the Presbyterian church. Dr. Knight's wife was Miss Caroline Deméré, a descendant of one of two brothers of that name who came over with Oglethorpe and settled at Frederica on St. Simon's island, where Mrs. Knight was born. Her brothers were in the southern army during the war. Arthur Merrill Knight was the fifth son of Dr. and Mrs. Knight, and was born at White Sulphur Springs, Fla., Nov. 16, 1859. His early training was received in the common schools of his native town and of Live Oak; at Jacksonville he attended a parochial school, supplementing the knowledge there acquired by private study. In 1876 he began clerking for his brother, with whom he remained about a year and then engaged with M. P. Moody. In 1878 he clerked for H. P. Holbrook, and the succeeding year formed a co-partnership with E. S. Hull. In less than a year he sold out. Subsequently he occupied various clerical positions until in 1885, when he took a six months' trip to Colorado for the benefit of his health. In November, 1886, he accepted the position he now holds as passenger and freight agent for the Plant system at Waycross. In this position he has had to do largely with the growth and development not only of the railroad but also of the city of Waycross. He is intensely interested in local public affairs and development in general, and carries many responsibilities. He is a stockholder, secretary and treasurer of the Waycross Herald Publishing company, also of the Waycross Barrel Manufacturing company, and is president of the bank of Waycross. He owns some real estate, and is also doing a real estate and insurance business. In 1889-90 Mr. Knight was city alderman from his ward, and in 1891-92-93 was mayor of the city. As Episcopal church warden he appointed the building committee which is now completing a neat rectory costing $1,500—in addition to the land, a part of the church realty, which is worth about $1,000. May 6, 1884, Mr. Knight was married to Miss Susan Fatio Daniel, daughter of Col. James Jaquelin and Emily (L'Engle) Daniel, of Jacksonville, Fla. Col. Daniel, who was widely known for his large-hearted benevolence, died in 1888 of yellow fever, a sacrifice to his care and sympathy for the suffering, to whom he devoted himself. The mother of Mrs. Daniel, Mrs. Susan Fatio L'Engle, of whom her granddaughter, Mrs. Knight, is a namesake, died in Jacksonville March 5, 1895, in the eighty-ninth year of her age. Mr. Knight and his wife have been blessed with two sons, Jaquelin Emile and Arthur Merrill.

THOMAS ELIJAH LANIER, one of the active, intelligent men of business of Waycross, Ware Co., was born in Screven county, Ga., July 31, 1845. He is the eldest son of Robert F. Lanier, a Methodist preacher, a member of the south Georgia conference, by which he was sent, in 1857, to Clinch county, then very sparsely settled, where he lived upon a small farm near the present site of Homerville. In 1863 he removed to Lowndes county, near Ocean Pond, on the present site of Lake Park. The son, Thomas E., being a poor boy, and reared on the farm, had but limited educational advantages. When but seventeen years of age he volunteered as a soldier in the service of the Confederacy. After two years, at the storming of Fort McAllister, December, 1864, he was captured and sent to Point Lookout, Md., where he remained a prisoner until after the close of hostilities, receiving his discharge June 28, 1865. Returning home Mr. Lanier found his father's property gone, so he went to work on the farm to help restore and replenish it. Jan. 11, 1866, he married Miss Sarah Strickland, daughter of Henry Strickland, of Ocean Pond; who died in Jasper, Fla., in November, 1881. After his marriage Mr. Lanier rented a small farm and engaged in farming, plowing with oxen for lack of means to purchase horses or mules. After three years, his health failing, he sold out for something over $1,000, and having a natural genius for mechanics, moved to Valdosta and learned the art of watchmaking of James M. Gray, with whom he remained three and a half years. He then bought out his employer and set up for himself, and by his diligence and reliability soon built up a fine business. Then came reverses—fire, and severe illness—so that he was reduced almost to his starting point. Accepting what he could get for his property he sold out and moved to Jasper, Fla., where for four years he carried on the mercantile and saw-mill business, but without success. In 1883 he returned to Georgia and settled in Waycross, and entered into the business for which he was so much better adapted. Although he began without capital and on a small scale, merely as a repairer of watches and jewelry, he little by little added to his stock, gaining meanwhile the confidence of the people, until his success has been almost phenomenal. Now, after little more than ten years, he is owner of one of the largest and best jewelry establishments in southern Georgia; and having already gained a competency can retire from active business whenever he sees fit. But being still in the prime of life, only in his fiftieth year, hale and strong, and bidding fair to live to a ripe old age, it is to be presumed that Mr. Lanier will continue to keep abreast of the activities of the growing city in which he lives. When he came to Waycross it was but a struggling village of about 600 inhabitants, where homes were offered free to settlers by the generous founder, Dr. Lott. Mr. Lanier at once entered heartily into every enterprise whose object was the improvement of the town, and especially schools and churches, and the laying out and drainage of the city. He served several times on the board of aldermen, and was one of the committee who framed the present city charter. He was chairman of the building committee of the new Methodist church, of which he is a member. He was active in establishing the public school system, and started the first school of importance. Mr. Lanier is a strong advocate of temperance and has labored hard to keep whisky out of Waycross, and, in fact, to promote everything which will tend to elevate the character of the community, and to oppose everything debasing. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, holding the highest office in the gift of the lodge. Mr. Lanier has dealt considerably in real estate, and has erected several dwellings and other buildings. His life has been temperate, honorable and industrious, and he enjoys the confidence and esteem of the whole community.

JOSEPH PARKER LIDE, one of Waresboro's merchants, and the present incumbent of the postoffice, was born in King's Mountain, N. C., July 18, 1863. His father, Robert Hopkins Lide, was a farmer, who entered the service of the Confederacy, and early in the war was put in the Ore Banks iron works, for the protection of which 100 men were detailed. Mrs. Lide was Miss Rachel Parker, the daughter of Cortez Parker, for fifteen years—until his death—superintendent of King's Mountain gold mine. Young Lide, having obtained a limited education in the common schools, at eighteen years of age began life for himself as a clerk. After a year in this employment he engaged as mate on the steamer Santee, on the Peedee river; and a year later he went to Florida, where for two years he worked in a saw-mill, and then spent three years as a sailor on the west coast of Florida for the Naples Land Improvement company. After two years more of clerking and saw-mill work he came to Waresboro and accepted a situation as salesman with J. M. Spence & Co. In 1892 Mr. Lide entered into business on his own account, carrying on a general merchandise establishment, in connection with which he also served as postmaster. He has also been a member of the council, and mayor pro tempore. He is not a politician, although interested in whatever will be for the benefit of the city, and a strict democrat. Mr. Lide is a member of the Methodist church, and also belongs to the Knights of Pythias. April 10, 1892, he married Miss Lavina Anna Miller, daughter of David J. and Serena (Sweet) Miller, of Waresboro. Mr. and Mrs. Lide have one son, Robert Miller.

THOMAS MILLER M'CONNELL, Manor, Ware Co., Ga., second son of William Scott and Laura Mary (Blakely) McConnell, was born in Williamsburg district, S. C., April 3, 1860. His father, who was a farmer, a naval store keeper, and a justice of the peace, was born Sept. 26, 1827. He served in the Confederate army as a private, and received a wound in the right side, which ultimately resulted in his death, March 19, 1881, at the age of fifty-four years. There is nothing known of Mr. McConnell's grandparents on his father's side more than that they always lived in commanding prominence in their community. His grandfather on his mother's side, William H. Blakely, was a teacher, and his grandmother, Carthenia Blakely, was a lady that commanded the highest respect from all who knew her. Mr. McConnell's opportunities for education in his boyhood days were but limited; however, he continued to add to his stock whenever able until he became intelligent and well informed. At the age of twenty years he left home, carrying with him as his only legacy an iron will coupled with an ambition that would make any millionaire proud if he could only realize its actual worth. At this time he engaged in the turpentine business in the woods of Georgetown county, S. C., as a laborer, where he remained about three years. Leaving there in 1883 he moved to Echols county, Ga., and followed the same business with Capt. J. B. Withers for a short time, then he moved to Manor, Ware Co., working for the same employer for about a year. He then bought out the business and continued it in his own name until 1891, when two of his brothers, W. G. and J. E. McConnell, became associated with him as partners. In the meantime he had bought a turpentine farm near Waresboro, Ga., and established a new farm at Blunt's Ferry, Fla. He realizes from these turpentine farms an annual production of about 125,000 gallons of spirits of turpentine and about 7,500 barrels rosin, and employs about 300 men and fifteen teams. He owns and leases about 34,000 acres of land, and has, besides, a good farm at his home. In addition to this he owns a pear orchard of 1,200 bearing trees at Naylor, Lowndes Co., Ga. He carries on a general mercantile and supply business, and has done a great work in building the magic little town of Manor, as well as being a source of help to the surrounding country. He owns some bank stock and a large interest in the Florida Land and Improvement company. He has a $20,000 paid up life insurance policy, and owns considerable stock in the Interstate Building and Loan association of Atlanta, and is president of the board of his town. Mr. McConnell is a master Mason, and a member of the Methodist church in Manor. Mr. McConnell was married to Miss Agnes Frazier Britton, daughter of Thomas Nelson and Rebecca Ervin (Gordon) Britton, of Chappel, Georgetown Co., S. C. Mr. Britton was born in 1812, died in 1892, and was a captain in the Confederate army—having charge of a company on the coast. He was a man quite prominent in public affairs. Mr. and Mrs. McConnell are the parents of four daughters: Sue Ethel, born Jan. 1, 1886; Rubie Edith, born April 8, 1888; Laura Scott, born Jan. 10, 1889; Frazier Pearl, born Nov. 27, 1891.

JOHAN CLOUGH M'DONALD, the youngest son of Capt. McDonald by his first wife, was born Nov. 7, 1859, on his father's farm near Waresboro. Having obtained a good common school education, in 1877 he entered Moore's Southern Business university, Atlanta. Determining to follow the legal profession he went to Savannah and read law under Hon. Rufus E. Lester, present member of congress from the first district. On June 18, 1880, although he lacked several months of having reached his majority, was admitted to practice. Since that time he has devoted himself to his profession with persevering ardor, and has met with constant success, his practice being extensive not only in his own county, but also in those surrounding it. Although his chief and constant attention has been given to the duties of his profession, political preferment has not been wanting, but has come to him unsought. In 1885 Mr. McDonald was mayor of Waycross, was at one time chairman of the congressional district committee, and for several years chairman of the county democratic committee. Mr. McDonald is held in the highest esteem by the citizens of Waycross, and by a large circle of influential friends. He is a member of the Georgia Bar association and in 1884 was admitted to practice in the supreme court. Mr. McDonald was married June 28, 1894, to Miss Annie, daughter of Capt. A. W. Hilliard, formerly of Waycross (until 1880), but now of Dinsmore, Fla. Capt. Hilliard belongs to one of the oldest families of Ware county, and is recognized as one of the most straightforward and upright of men. Mr. McDonald is a Knight of Pythias, and has filled all the local offices in the gift of the order, also that of representative to the state lodge. Mr. and Mrs. McDonald are working members of the Methodist church.

JOHAN CLOUGH M'DONALD, Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., is of Scotch descent, a grandson of Dr. Randall McDonald, a native of the Isle of Skye, who came first to South Carolina, later to Georgia, where for many years he carried on his large plantation, together with a successful and extensive practice. He served for some time as senator in the general assembly and died in December, 1864. His wife was Miss Catharine Miller, and their son, William Angus, was born Feb. 11, 1817, in Bulloch county. He received a good common-school education and served for four years in the Indian wars. For many years he has been an important character in the political affairs of his county; he was representative in the years 1842, 1847-48, 1877, 1888-89; he was state senator in the years 1856, 1867-68, 1882 and 1883, and was sent to the constitutional convention of 1877. At the outbreak of the war Mr. McDonald raised a company which formed a part of the Twenty-sixth Georgia regiment; later he was promoted to the position of lieutenant-colonel, but during the Cold Harbor engagement he received a wound from which his recovery was not perfect, so that he was compelled to resign, but he never lost his interest in his associates in the midst of the dangers and trials of war, and devoted much of his time and means to the relief of their families, and of the wounded. In 1841 Mr. McDonald married Miss Tabitha, a daughter of Capt. James A. Sweat, who died in 1859, leaving five sons and five daughters, the youngest being John C. McDonald, the subject of this sketch. In 1860 Col. McDonald married Miss Mary Dean, of whom death bereaved him in 1872. She was the mother of five sons and two daughters. Col. McDonald's third wife, Miss Rebecca Thompson, is the daughter of a well-known minister, who is also a successful planter. To them have been born one son and four daughters. Col. McDonald has been a resident of Ware county for sixty years; on his present farm thirty-nine years; is hale and hearty, bidding fair to become a centenarian. He has twenty-two children, fifty-eight grand-children, ten great-grandchildren, and has moreover reared a number of orphans, fitting them for lives of usefulness and honor, and long after he has passed from earth his influence will be felt in ever-widening circles. He has been a Methodist for forty-nine years, and a preacher thirty-five years, and is also a member of the masonic fraternity.

JOHN HENRY MILLER, Manor, Ware Co., Ga., eldest son of Ezekiel Stephen and Eleanor (Dyers) Miller, was born Jan. 24, 1835, on Glenmore farm, four miles from his present home, the region being then inhabited chiefly by Indians. His father, a farmer who served in the Seminole war and died in 1863, was the youngest of the nine children of William and Amy (Barker) Miller, the latter a native of Ireland, the former an Englishman who came to America prior to the war of the revolution, in which he was a soldier. Passing his boyhood and early manhood on that backwoods farm, in a sparsely settled community, John H. Miller had but few educational privileges, only attending school about four and a half months. Early in the war, Oct. 1, 1861, he enlisted in the Twenty-sixth Georgia regiment, in what was then Company H, later, upon re-organization, Company K. He was under Gens. John B. Gordon and Evans, and in a number of battles: Seven Pines, both battles of Manassas, both at Harper's Ferry, Fredericksburg, Sharpsburg, Warrenton, Spottsylvania, Malvern Hill, Lynchburg, Cold Harbor, Cedar River, Monocacy, Gettysburg and Fisher's Hill. At this last, Sept. 22, 1864, he was captured and sent to Point Lookout, Md., where he was held until after the surrender, when he was released June 18, 1865, arriving home July 11. He returned to his farm work for the remainder of that year, then moved to Clinch county, where he also pursued the same occupation. After five years he moved to Manor, Ware Co., his present home, where he continued for some years to devote himself to farming and gardening. The present town of Manor has come into existence and grown to its present size since Mr. Miller made his home within its borders. For twenty-two years he has been justice of the peace, and is postmaster. Mr. Miller is a deacon in the Primitive Baptist church, and has been a member of the masonic order. Dec. 28, 1865, he married Mrs. Lavina Lee, daughter of Richard A. and Lavina (Newman) Bennett. Mrs. Miller has a son and a daughter by her first husband.

FRANK C. OWENS, now a retired merchant of Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., is the youngest of the four children of John and Floeyann (Sheffield) Owens, and was born at White Sulphur Springs Oct. 14, 1864. His father was a successful planter at Evergreen, Fla.; was also prominent in public affairs, and held several important positions. Young Owens attended school in Saint Mary's, Ga., and later took a partial course at the South Georgia college, Thomasville, Ga., and at Moore's Business university, Atlanta, Ga. Before completing his education he was with J. & T. Kydd at Fernandina, Fla., and from 1882, for seven years, he was traveling salesman for Lippman Bros., of Savannah, Ga., during which time he engaged in the mercantile business in Oviedo, Fla., and in Waycross, Ga. In 1889 Mr. Owens gave up traveling and settled in Waycross, his own affairs having grown to such magnitude as to demand all his attention. A year later the stocks of his two stores were destroyed by fire, and Mr. Owens then purchased the land upon which he erected a handsome brick block, known as the "Owens Block," containing ten stores and the Phoenix hotel of forty rooms. Immediately upon the completion of his block in '91, Mr. Owens started four of the stores, in which an excellent business has been carried on ever since. Mr. Owens is also the owner of valuable real estate in Chattanooga, Tenn., and Thomasville, Ga. In May of 1894, at the age of twenty-nine, he was elected president of the Bank of Waycross, which position he resigned in anticipation of retiring from business, which he did in June of '95. He is an enterprising and useful citizen, whose worth is appreciated by his fellow-townsmen. In 1890, on New Year's day, Mr. Owens married Miss Theo Wright, whose father, Capt. A. B. Wright, of Greenville, S. C., served in the Confederate army throughout the war.

THOMAS SPALDING PAINE, a leading merchant of Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., is the youngest son of Charles Joshua and Ann (Johnson) Paine, the former a prominent physician of Georgia, and for a number of years dean of the physicians of the state, whose duty it was to examine all physicians before license to practice could be given. Dr. Paine died in 1859. His son, Thomas S., who was born in Milledgeville, April 17, 1839, was educated in the public schools of his native city, and in the military school at Marietta. Immediately after his father's death in June, 1859, the young man left the city of his birth and went to Thomasville, where for two years he was engaged in clerical positions, which he resigned in July, 1861, to enter the Confederate army. He received the commission of first lieutenant of Company B, Twenty-ninth Georgia regiment, which was sent to the coast. The following April he was transferred to Brevard's battalion of Florida as ordnance sergeant, under Gen. Finnegan, stationed near Jacksonville, whose force had an engagement Nov. 9, 1862, with the gunboats on the St. John's river. In January, 1863, Mr. Paine organized a cavalry company, Company E, of the Twentieth Georgia battalion, and was stationed on the coast that year. In April, 1864, the battalion was ordered to Virginia where, in an engagement with the Federal forces advancing upon Cold Harbor, the colonel, J. M. Milen, and Maj. Thompson, were killed, and the battalion was attached to the Tenth Georgia regiment. This regiment was in the battles at Cold Harbor, Trevilian Station, where Mr. Paine received a slight wound, and at White House. The next January they were transferred to Gen. Joseph Johnston's command and sent to Charleston, from which time until the surrender they were almost constantly engaged in skirmishes. After his discharge, and return home Mr. Paine at once went into the drug business, but after some time sold out and traveled in the interest of the Botanic Blood Balm Co., until 1892, when he resumed the drug business in Waycross, his present home. In this he has greatly prospered, and has moreover identified himself with the interests of the city. Dec. 24, 1862, Mr. Paine was married to Miss Lena Mary Seixas, of Thomasville, a granddaughter of Jacob Seixas, a refugee from the island of San Dominigo during the insurrection. He has in his possession a valuable family relic—a solid gold snuff-box weighing five ounces and worth $150, a present from his wife's father. They have two daughters and two sons, one of the latter a railroad engineer; the other is engaged in the store with his father. Mr. Paine and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church.

WILLIAM RILEY RATCLIFF, Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., was born in Worth county, Ga., Nov. 29, 1850. He is the eldest son of Redding Luke and Clarkie (Kimball) Ratcliff, the former a son of Luke Ratcliff, who ran away from his home in North Carolina and engaged in farming in western Florida; he served in the Indian war, during which he was taken ill, and was given a furlough to return home, but died upon the way. His son continued as a farmer in Florida, and there on the farm young William R. was reared, receiving only such education as was obtainable in a backwoods school. Having reached the age of twenty-one, he rented a farm, which he worked for two years, and then spent a year in Texas, employed on railroads. He returned to work two years on his father's farm, and also took a forward stride educationally by devoting eight months to study in school. He then again went into railroad work, three months as a common laborer, after which he received promotion, being placed in charge of repair work on the Atlantic & Gulf railroad at Argyle. In 1878 Mr. Ratcliff came to Waycross, and late in the next year was put in charge of the track-laying crews upon the new line between Waycross and Jacksonville, on which he laid the first rail. On this new line, after its completion, he had charge of a construction train for about three years, and then was put in charge of a division as supervisor at Savannah. Two years later he was given the supervision of the Waycross Short line, which he has held ever since. During some of the time Mr. Ratcliff has been in this business convict labor was employed, and he was in charge of the convict force. He is a member of the Roadmasters' Association, in which he takes an active interest, often contributing articles upon appropriate subjects at the meetings of this body. Mr. Ratcliff is also a member of the Employers' Mutual Relief association, pertaining to the Plant system, in which system he takes a deep interest, and has aided greatly in promoting its welfare and present success. He owns some real estate in Waycross. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. Oct. 1, 1881, Mr. Ratcliff married Miss Georgie Ann Smith, daughter of Azaniah and Katie (Yates) Smith. Mr. Ratcliff and his wife have one son.

HENRY WADSWORTH REED, Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., one of Ware county's most widely known and influential citizens, was born in Neenah, Wis., March 12, 1856. He is the second son of Harrison and Ann Louisa (Turner) Reed, the former a man of great influence in public affairs both west and south. He was the first editor of the "Milwaukee Sentinel"; in December, 1847, he was made a member of the constitutional convention from Marquette and Winnebago counties, Wis. From 1868 to 1872 he was the honored governor of the state of Florida. Both he and his wife are lineal descendants of Pilgrim stock, each having had an ancestor among the passengers on the historic Mayflower. Mr. Reed's grandfather, Joseph Turner, an officer in the revolutionary army, was a direct descendant of Jonathan Turner of the Mayflower. Several members of the Turner family who are near relatives of Mr. Reed are prominent in the affairs of Wisconsin; William J. Turner is president of the board of education of Milwaukee; two other uncles were members of the first constitutional convention of the state. When Henry W. Reed was four years old his mother died and he was sent to live with relatives in Flint, Mich., where he was trained in the public schools until he was about twelve years old. His father had made his home in Florida, and the youth, for the benefit to be derived from its excellent curriculum, entered the John S. C. Abbott Academy at Farmington, Me., where he remained for over two years, studying for the two years following at Syracuse university, Syracuse, N. Y. Thence Mr. Reed returned to Jacksonville, Fla., to engage in various surveying and engineering enterprises, toward which his natural bent was strong, and for which he had been fitting himself by private study and preparation. So marked were his progress and ability that at the early age of twenty-two years he was placed in charge of the Peninsula railroad, from Waldo to Tampa, Fla., as superintendent of construction. Within two years he was promoted to the responsible position of locating engineer on the Waycross & Jacksonville line, having as one of his functions the locating, planning and laying out the present city of Waycross, whose citizens thoroughly appreciate his enterprise and public spirit. Within a year Mr. Reed was advanced past intermediate positions to that of master of roadways for the Savannah, Florida & Western railroad, which place he has just resigned after fourteen years of such judicious administration of his department as to contribute largely to making the Plant system what it now is. Mr. Reed now turns from these familiar duties, carried on with such rare tact and energy to such marvelous success, and assumes new duties for which his extensive and varied experience has well fitted him. He has the care of the large financial interests in this region of his aunt, Mrs. Mitchell, widow of the widely known Hon. Alexander Mitchell of Milwaukee, Wis. He is president of the National bank of Brunswick, Ga., and organized the Bank of Waycross, Waycross, Ga. Although his time, and to some degree his interest, must be by these new duties divided between Brunswick and Waycross, the citizens of the last named will continue to claim Mr. Reed as their fellow-citizen. He holds large property interests here, and will be as ever solicitous for the prosperity of the city for which he has done so much. He has been a member of the city council three terms, for six years president of the board of education, and was largely instrumental in the inauguration of the present excellent school system—in behalf of which he is still working, with still greater benefits in view. The city is largely indebted to him for its excellent system of water-works and artesian water, he having made the plans and superintended the construction, besides serving upon the board of sanitary and water-works commissioners. His marked ability and extensive knowledge of railroad affairs have given him prominence among railroad men throughout the country, and for two years he held the position of secretary and for the last two years has been president of the Roadmasters' Association of America; he is a highly esteemed member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, of the American Academy of Political and Social Science of Philadelphia, and of the American Institute of Civics of Boston. While in college he was secretary and vice-president of the Delta Upsilon college fraternity, to which he still belongs. An enumeration of the enterprises in which Mr. Reed's efficient support has been felt would be incomplete without reference to the Cherokee Farm and Nursery company, of which he was one of the originators, and of which he is still the head as president. Since its beginning in 1883 this enterprise has grown amazingly, and is one of the most successful enterprises of the kind in the south. It ships products to all parts of the United States and even to foreign countries; has large orders from the north, and keeps twenty agents at work in the southern states. It is also doing a very valuable and useful work in experimenting with foreign fruits, especially Japan and Russian cherries, pears, plums, etc. Of these the Japan varieties seem especially adapted to this locality. Other fruits are doing finely; plums, blackberries, strawberries and grapes, and even figs and olives, which are better adapted to Florida. By voice and pen, as well as by practical effort, Mr. Reed has advocated these trials—of Japan varieties especially. Although a close and interested student of public and political affairs, Mr. Reed is in no sense a politician, nor has he sought political favor, preferring to give his time and energy to the promotion of the greatest good to all with whom he came in touch, unbiased by political prejudices. Still young in years, Mr. Reed may look forward to a long period of ever-widening usefulness and influence. His honorable career should be an inspiration and incentive to lofty aims and earnest effort to every young man, even though lonely and discouraged. On May 4, 1880, Mr. Reed was married at Waldo, Fla., to Miss Emma Livingston, a lineal descendant of Philip Livingston, signer of the Declaration of Independence, and a member of the noted family of that name which settled in the beautiful valley of the Hudson river in colonial times.

JAMES CARLISLE RIPPARD, a physician of extensive and successful practice in Ware county, post-office Waycross, is a Pennsylvanian, born in Wilkesbarre Nov. 30, 1857. His parents were Josiah Alexander and Catharine Pauline Rippard, the former a well-known and esteemed bank cashier of Wilkesbarre. The son, James C., having received a good education in the public schools of his native city, continued with a course in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, Md., graduating in 1881. Returning to Wilkesbarre, the young physician opened an office in March of the same year, and for nearly ten years remained there in practice, in which his skill and diligence achieved success. In 1889 he was made president of the Luzerne County Medical society, a well-deserved recognition of his worth. Early in 1891 he came south, and, after brief stops in Savannah and Fort Valley, he finally located in Waycross, his present home, where he devotes himself with assiduity to his extensive practice. Nevertheless, he has a strong interest in the welfare of his adopted city, and is always foremost in all that will tend to promote her greatest good. He is an active and devoted member of the Presbyterian church. June 28, 1893, he married Miss May Barnes, of Waycross, formerly of Urbana, Ohio.

WILLIAM WALTER SHARPE, Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., is of English lineage, his grandfather having come from England in 1820 and settled in Winnsboro, S. C., moving later to Jefferson county, Fla., where he engaged in the tannery business, and where he spent the remainder of his life. His son, James Edward Sharpe, served in the Mexican war and well nigh lost his sight from an attack of measles. He married Angeline, daughter of Daniel Ulysses McNeil, who settled in Lowndes county, and later moved to Quitman, where he held the office of sheriff some twenty-five years; he was also treasurer of the county for eight years, and was a man prominent among his fellows, and having large influence in the community. His only son, William W., was born Aug. 22, 1857, at Long's Mill, Brooks Co.; he acquired his education in the common schools of Quitman. After some six months' experience as a clerk he opened a general store in Boston, Ga., in September, 1873, with W. A. McNeil, but sold out in 1874 to A. H. McCardel. That summer young Sharpe made 100,000 brick in Quitman. In the fall he went to Monticello, Fla., and served a year's apprenticeship at bricklaying, and the next two years served an apprenticeship to learn cabinet-making and undertaking; after which he went into partnership with B. C. Pollard, from whom he had learned the trade. In a short time he moved to Valdosta and opened a general furniture and undertaking business in his own name, but with D. W. Rountree as silent partner. This he gave up in April, 1881, to enter the employ of the railroad company as foreman of a carpenter gang in Savannah, having charge of the wharves and terminal repairs of the Savannah, Florida & Western Railway company. In 1886 he was promoted to the division superintendency, which position he still holds. He had charge of the changing of the gauge of the Savannah division before his promotion. The present responsibilities devolving upon Mr. Sharpe are very heavy, he having the care and maintenance of all the buildings, wharves, tracks, bridges, telegraph lines and structures of all kinds, with the custody of all the property of the company within his division limits. The standing and ability of Mr. Sharpe as a railroad man are widely recognized. He is secretary of the Roadmasters' Association of America, before the convention of which, held in Chicago in September, 1893, he read a valuable paper entitled "How to Maintain the Best Track at Least Cost"; for it he was awarded the first premium. The talents of Mr. Sharpe are not confined to railroad affairs; he is general manager and secretary of the Waycross Tobacco Growers' and Manufacturing association with a capital of $25,000, a growing business; he has also dealt largely in real estate. Moreover he has taken active part in public affairs; he has been alderman of Waycross three years, and chairman of finance and public property committees three years. Mr. Sharpe is prominent in the masonic order, in which he is past master and past and present H. P. of his chapter; and has been representative to grand lodge and grand chapter, and served on committee of jurisprudence. He is a faithful member of the Methodist church, and active as steward. March 2, 1880, Mr. Sharpe married Miss Inez Estelle Ashcraft, daughter of Augustus Bruce and Caroline (Williams) Ashcraft, of Newnan. Her father was a private in the Confederate army, and wounded; her grandfather was a Presbyterian minister of Connecticut. Mr. and Mrs. Sharpe have one son and one daughter. Mr. Sharpe is a large-hearted and thoroughly public-spirited man, and has done much for the welfare of the city of his adoption; when in the council he advanced the paving enterprises, and introduced "fire district" rules. He is identified with the democratic party.

WILLIAM JOB SMITH, one of the leading business men of Waycross, Ware Co., is the eldest living son of Nathaniel and Louisa Frances Smith, and was born in Lowndes county, Ga., April 10, 1851. During his infancy his parents moved to Hamilton county, Fla., and after the war to Jasper, where his father engaged in mercantile business. In 1862 his father enlisted in the Confederate service, and served through the war. His grandfather was an officer in the war of the revolution, going from Carolina. Young Smith, besides making use of such school privileges as his own neighborhood afforded, also attended school in Jacksonville, Fla., for a short time. Later he clerked for his father until 1870, and then engaged in business at Smithville for about two years. In 1873 on account of his health he went to farming. In January, 1880, he moved to Waycross, and opened a livery, boarding and sale stable, the first in the city. Two years later he discontinued this, engaged in a general merchandising business, and about 1886 took Mr. John Wiley Adams, a progressive young business man, a native of Florida, into partnership. Mr. Smith has also had an interest in various other firms in Waycross, and has started several friends in business. He has handled considerable real estate, building the fine block now occupied by himself and his business associates. Nor have his interests been wholly selfish.

He has taken a very active part in the public affairs of Waycross, having been a member of the council several years, and mayor one year. He is a member of the board of education, of the committee for building a school edifice, has been prominent in his efforts for the exclusion of the liquor traffic, and for the promotion of morality and sobriety. He is a leading business man in this community, and also has established a mercantile business in Dawson. Early in 1894 Mr. Smith associated with himself and his former partner, Mr. Adams, Mr. William Parker, under the corporate name of The Smith-Adams-Parker company. Mr. Parker is a native of Appling county and the son of a physician of large practice—a man of great ability and varied talents. Mr. Parker served through the war, since which he has been variously engaged—in farming, carpenter work, carriage repairing, stencil work, printing, and printed the “Coffee County Gazette”—now “The Pioneer”—on a cylinder press of his own construction. After moving to Waycross Mr. Parker published the “Weekly Headlight” for about five years; this paper is now published monthly, and is the official organ of the Christian Layman workers, of which Mr. Parker is president. This association has built a large edifice in Waycross for its annual conventions, and has twenty-three working classes scattered from Columbus, Ga., to Jacksonville, Fla. This organization originated in 1886 in a class conducted by Mr. Parker among the poor, which grew in interest and usefulness, and developed into this large and helpful, undenominational society, still growing rapidly and doing a great work. Mr. Parker has been prominent in mercantile affairs, the real estate business and building, and is a Methodist—a steward and class leader. On entering partnership with Messrs. Smith and Adams he united the shoe business with theirs. Mr. Smith is a member of the Methodist church and is also a steward; he is a prominent Mason and Odd Fellow, having been through all the chairs of the last-named fraternity, being deputy district grand, and member of the grand lodge. Jan. 6, 1876, Mr. Smith married Miss Margaret Theresa Staten, daughter of Capt. Q. B. Staten of Clinch county. They have been blessed with four girls and two boys.

JOB ELBERT WILDER SMITH, a prominent citizen of Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., is the eldest living son of James David and Edith (Folsom) Smith. He was born Nov. 24, 1854, in Hamilton county, Fla., but very soon after his birth his parents moved to Echols county, Ga., where they still reside. The father represented his senatorial district in the general assembly two years; and was a member of that body in 1876, when called for the constitutional convention of 1877. His son, after receiving a good common school education, attended the university of Georgia, Athens, two years, and then attended medical lectures at the Georgia Medical college, Augusta, during the winters of 1879-80, concluding with a course at Vanderbilt Medical college, Nashville, Tenn., from which he graduated March 1, 1882. He had engaged in the drug business at Jasper, Fla., in 1880, also practicing medicine; but in the fall of 1883 he sold out the drug business and devoted himself exclusively to the practice of his profession. During his residence here he was a member of the city council. In December, 1888, he moved to Waycross, where he is well known and esteemed, not only as a skillful and progressive physician, but as a public-spirited citizen, doing all in his power for the welfare of the city of his adoption, where he has established a fine practice, and built an elegant and commodious home. Ambitious to stand in the front rank of the profession to which he is devoted, Dr. Smith took a post graduate course at the Post Graduate Medical school and hospital in New York city, in 1892. He is surgeon for the Savannah, Florida & Western railway. He is an active member of the board of education; a faithful member and deacon in the Presbyterian church; and worshipful master of the lodge, and a member of the chapter. He is also an Odd Fellow, in which order he is past grand. Dr. Smith was married March 23, 1880, to Miss Cordelia Carter, daughter of John A. and Mahala (Walker) Carter, of Echols county, Ga., and to them have been born one son and three daughters: Darwin Roy, Vista, Irene, and Juno.

THOMAS LEANDER STRICKLAND, Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., second son of Allen C. and Katharine (Sweat) Strickland, was born Nov. 27, 1850, in Pierce county, Ga. He was educated in the common schools, and in 1867 he left home to enter the employ of his brother, J. W. Strickland, as clerk. He remained with him for six years, and then was for five years employed in saw-mills. An opening then presented itself in business for which Mr. Strickland seemed especially fitted, and he entered, to continue it with success up to the present time. He is engaged in the sale of pianos and organs, traveling most of the time, having for his field the southern half of Georgia. His home is in Waycross, in the growth and prosperity of which city he is sincerely concerned, although his business precludes his taking a very active part in public affairs; he has, however, been justice of the peace and postmaster. He is a devoted member of the Presbyterian church, in which he is a deacon. He is also a royal arch Mason. Dec. 20, 1876, Mr. Strickland was married to Miss Daisy Owen, daughter of Dr. James D. Owen, of Rome, Ga., now deceased. Dr. Owen was the first assistant physician of the state insane asylum for a period of time, which position he was compelled to resign on account of ill health, after which he moved to Rome. Mr. and Mrs. Strickland have but one child, a daughter.

J. L. SWEAT, Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., is a native Georgian, having been born in Ware county Sept. 21, 1847. He is next to the youngest son of Samuel and Maria Sweat, the grandson of a revolutionary hero, Nathaniel Sweat, of North Carolina, and belongs to a family prominent in the southeastern region of our country, the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida. Young Sweat was reared on a plantation in Pierce county, attending the country schools and completing his education at Blackshear academy. He enlisted in the Confederate cavalry service in 1862, at the early age of fourteen and a half, and for the remaining three years of the war was a brave and gallant young soldier. After the war he located at Homerville, Clinch Co., where he engaged in business and was married, and having studied for the bar, was admitted to plead and practice in 1869. For several sessions he held a clerical position at Atlanta in the general assembly, was a clerk for awhile in the executive department under Gov. Smith, and held the office of chief clerk of the house of representatives of Georgia in 1875-76. He was twice elected representative from Clinch county to the general assembly, serving in the house in 1880-81-82 and '83, and was placed on several important committees, and by his eloquence, industry and popular manners, made himself a leader in that body. In nearly every congressional convention of the old First Georgia district he was for years a delegate and an influential and controlling spirit, and was frequently a member of state conventions. He was also a delegate from Georgia to the national democratic convention at Chicago in 1884, and again at St. Louis in 1888. In 1887 he removed to Waycross, where he has since resided and has been one of the prime movers and factors in the upbuilding of that beautiful city. Upon the resignation of Judge Atkinson in the spring of 1892 he was appointed by Gov. Northern judge of the superior courts of the Brunswick circuit, embracing the counties of Appling, Camden, Charlton, Coffee, Clinch, Glynn, Pierce, Ware and Wayne, and was subsequently elected by the legislature without opposition. In politics Judge Sweat has always been a consistent democrat, and as a lawyer was one of the most successful practitioners at the bar. Religiously he is a Methodist, and is also a leading Mason. His career on the bench has won for him golden opinions from both the bar and people, and he is frequently mentioned for congressional honors. Able, tireless and popular, and just now in the prime of mature, vigorous manhood, an exalted and brilliant career still awaits him in the future.

DANIEL B. SWEAT, Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., is a grandson of Nathaniel Sweat, a North Carolinian, who early in the present century came to Ware county, where he dwelt for the remaining fifty or sixty years of his life, carrying on his farm in the midst of the then wilderness, and part of the time with hostile Indians all around him. He served in the Seminole war, and was for a number of years justice of the peace. His son, Thomas M., was born Nov. 8, 1831, and married Miss Eliza Phillips, a native of Emanuel county, Ga., born Jan. 10, 1826. They, too, remained upon the farm until 1879, when Mr. Sweat became a merchant in Waycross. During the war he served in the Confederate army, in charge of a squad in a detachment of troops. He is an active member of the M. E. church south, also a prominent royal arch Mason. His son, Daniel B., was born in Ware county June 30, 1864, and received a common school education, remaining on the farm until at the age of sixteen he entered the "Reporter" office at Waycross as an apprentice. So rapid was his progress, and so great the confidence and esteem in which he was held by his employer that he was soon promoted to the position of foreman. He held the position until 1886, when he purchased the plant and continued the publication until March, 1891, when he sold out to the Waycross Herald Publishing company. With this firm he continued two years as solicitor and traveling correspondent, acting also meanwhile as agent of the Equitable Life Assurance society of the United States. Having been constantly interested and actively engaged in Sunday school work, Mr. Sweat, to advance this work, now began the publication of the "Sunday School Revival," which was from the first a success, and which has grown rapidly, both in patronage and size, and has been adopted as the official organ of both the Georgia and Florida Sunday School associations. To this, and to a general job printing and publishing business, Mr. Sweat now devotes his time and energy. Nov. 16, 1887, he married Miss Hattie Lanier, sister of the well-known T. E. Lanier, of Waycross, and daughter of Rev. R. F. and Mrs. H. M. Lanier, of Jasper, Fla. Mrs. Sweat died at Waycross June 27, 1890. On May 16, 1894, Mr. Sweat led to the marriage altar Miss Minnie L., youngest daughter of Mr. C. C. Buchanan, a prominent citizen and real estate dealer of Waycross, Ga.

BRAD WATSON, a young and enterprising merchant of Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., was born in Brooks county, Ga., Feb. 9, 1874, the only son of a thrifty farmer, Shepherd Watson, and his wife, Susan Emma (Slaughter) Watson. Young Watson was educated in the common schools of Ware county, to which his parents moved in 1884. At the age of thirteen he commenced clerking in the store of A. R. Bennett, but the next year changed for a like situation with Grace & McNeil, which he retained about two years. In November, 1890, being considerably under eighteen, this energetic young business man made his first trip as a buyer, preparatory to opening a store for himself, with F. C. Owens as his partner, under the name of Brad Watson & Co. This business was continued until July 1, 1895, when Mr. Watson purchased his partner's interest. His business is in a most thriving condition, his store being the leading dry goods house of the city, and indeed, of the county. Mr. Watson is an earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal church. His extraordinary business capacity and unswerving integrity command the highest respect and best wishes of the community.

WILBUR P. WHELPLEY, an enterprising citizen of Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., was born at Cobden, Ill., Sept. 5, 1866. His father, Dr. Jerome Twining Whelpley, was one of the early proprietors of the Poughkeepsie Business college. His mother, Charlotte (Chase) Whelpley, was the daughter of Hon. Warren Chase, for three terms representative from California in the congress of the United States. He drafted and introduced the bill admitting Wisconsin into the Union, and was a man of note; was influential and prominent, and a personal friend of Abraham Lincoln. His grandson, Wilbur P. Whelpley, was educated in Illinois in some of the best institutions of learning in the state. In 1885 he entered business as agent for the Illinois Central railroad, learning telegraphy, and doing station, freight and passenger work generally. The next year he took charge of a station for the Cotton Belt railroad, having also the agency for the construction of the Little Rock branch, but on account of poor health and through the influence of Capt. H. W. Reed, he moved to Florida, whence in October, 1886, he came to Waycross, where he accepted a position with the Plant system as union ticket and passenger agent, which position he retained until Jan. 1, 1894. He then formed a partnership with M. R. Penfield, under the firm-name of Whelpley & Penfield, and they became proprietors of the Southern hotel—a fifty-room, first-class hotel in Waycross. Mr. Whelpley has also been somewhat interested in real estate and his business talent and integrity have won him the respect of his fellow-citizens. Though not married, he is very popular in society, and especially active in the organization of societies. He is a leading member of the Waycross Rifles, a military company which is one of the best in the state.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN WILLIAMS, deceased, was born in Greene county, N. C., Sept. 2, 1820; his parents, Joseph and Avy (Murphy) Williams, were also natives of that state, where for many years his father was a wealthy and successful planter; they were parents of ten children, of whom Dr. Williams was the youngest. He was reared in his native state and there received his elementary training, afterward attending Madison university in New York. In 1843 he began reading medicine with Dr. Robbins, of Troy, N. Y., subsequently attending the medical college at Albany, where, during his stay, he was a student in the office of Prof. James McNaughton. In 1849 he returned to his native state and engaged in the practice of his profession. But his natural aptitude for public affairs seemed to eclipse his great professional ability, for in 1850 he was elected to represent his county in the North Carolina legislature, which honor was conferred upon him by successive re-elections for six years, until in 1856 he removed to Georgia, residing for a short time in Burnt Fort, Charlton Co., later settling at Sunny Side, Ware Co. In 1872 Dr. Williams moved to Waycross, being one of the first two settlers in that town, in the advancement of which he materially assisted, ever making every effort to promote its welfare. He was instrumental in establishing the first private school in the town and then in conjunction with Dr. Lott, W. S. Bailey and Capt. C. W. Hilliard, instituted the first academy, erecting a building for the same in 1874, and all this time he was carrying on a large practice, and superintending the affairs of his plantation. Moreover he engaged in various other useful enterprises; laid off portions of the city of Waycross, carried on the real estate business, operated the first turpentine still on the S. F. & W. R. R., and the first saw-mill on the B. & W. R. R. Dr. Williams served for a short time in the Confederate army, and later was a member of the first constitutional convention. His wife was Miss Sarah F. Hicks, a daughter of Samuel and Sarah Hicks, of New Hartford, N. Y. Dr. Williams died May 7, 1892, leaving his wife and seven children, five of whom are residents of Waycross: Mrs. H. J. Lott, Henry C., Joseph S., Miss Mattie F. and Benjamin H., dentist. The other members of this honorable family are Mrs. S. V. Houk, Gordon county, Ga., and Dr. William P., Blackshear, Pierce Co., Ga.

JOSEPH SAMUEL WILLIAMS, a distinguished citizen of Waycross, Ware Co., was born in Burnt Fort, Charlton Co., Feb. 9, 1860. He was the second son of Dr. Benjamin F. and Sarah F. (Hicks) Williams, with whom he early removed to Sunny Side, Ware Co., and again, in 1872, to Waycross, where his father erected the first house. The early education of young Williams was chiefly under private instruction. He attended the state university at Athens for two years, and then took a law course at the same institution, graduating in August, 1886. The same year he was admitted to practice on diploma in Oconee county, Judge N. L. Hutchins, presiding, and was afterward admitted to practice in the supreme court. The young practitioner was city attorney for Waycross in 1887. Aug. 2, 1890, he was appointed by Gov. John B. Gordon as judge of the county court, and on the expiration of his term was re-appointed by Gov. Northen for the second term of four years, from April 24, 1894. Judge Williams early in life gave evidence of his oratorical talent, having been awarded one of the medals during his university course as the leading orator in the sophomore class in 1879. He was a member of the Sigma Nu fraternity, also of the Demosthenian society. Still in early life, a man of marked ability, and diligent in the pursuit of his professional duties, honored and beloved by all who know him, Judge Williams will without doubt go on to a brilliant and successful future.

WILLIAM WILSON, the eldest son of Solomon and Pidian Wilson, was born April 16, 1826, in the province of Posen, Prussian Poland, where he received his early education and served an apprenticeship as a tanner; for nine years he worked at his trade at a number of different establishments in various places, and then, in the fall of 1848, he started for the United States, making a short stay in England on the way. His first two years in America were spent in Philadelphia, chiefly in work at his trade, after which for four years he was engaged in mercantile business at Columbus, Ga., when he sold out and returned to Philadelphia. But the sunny south had woven her spell around him, and after two or three months he returned to Georgia and settled in Waresboro as a merchant. At the opening of the war Mr. Wilson entered the army, joining Company E, of a regiment which was assigned to Gen. Joe Johnston's command and afterward under Gen. Hood. Mr. Wilson served in the various engagements in and around Atlanta and in numerous skirmishes, but was neither wounded nor captured, and at the end of the struggle received an honorable discharge. He then returned to Ware county and engaged in lumbering. In 1884 he removed from Waresboro, which up to this time had been his home, and permanently settled in the growing town of Waycross, with the activities and interests of which he has ever since been identified. He carries on a large and thriving business and in 1890 erected an elegant new block which does credit to his enterprise and taste and is an ornament to the city. Mr. Wilson is a prominent Mason, and has held various positions of honor in the fraternity. In 1858 he was married to Miss Martha J. Smith, of one of the most highly esteemed families in the community.

LEON A. WILSON is the eldest son of William and Martha J. (Smith) Wilson, and was born in Waresboro, Ware Co., Ga., Nov. 14, 1859. His early education was acquired in the common schools in part under the instruction of Col. G. M. T. Ware in Waycross. He afterward read law with Messrs. Jackson, Lawton & Basinger, Savannah, and June 9, 1880, was admitted to practice in the superior court and in February, 1891, to the supreme court. From his earliest entrance into public life the worth and ability of Mr. Wilson have been recognized by appointments and elections to positions of trust and responsibility. In 1883 he was appointed by Gov. Stephens judge of the county court, which office he resigned at the end of two years. The ensuing year he was elected mayor of Waycross. In 1892-93 he represented Ware county in the general assembly and was placed upon several of the most important committees—general judiciary, incorporations, etc., and was appointed chairman of that on temperance. In 1894 he was elected to represent the fifth senatorial district in the general assembly. Mr. Wilson is one of the standard-bearers of the temperance cause in Georgia and is a member of the prohibition executive for his district. He has already won a front position in his profession in his circuit and in the supreme court, and his past services in the legislative halls of Georgia prove him to be a man of marked ability, energy and uncompromising integrity. Few men have a better record than Leon Wilson, and undoubtedly distinguished professional and political honors await him in the future. Mr. Wilson was happily married Sept. 23, 1882, to Miss Carrie Murphy, of Waycross, formerly of Dunellen, N. J., a union which has been blessed with three children. He is actively devoted to the interests of the Methodist church, of which he is an influential member and chairman of the board of stewards.

WILLIAM MANASSAS WILSON, of Waycross, Ware Co., Ga., youngest son of William and Martha J. Wilson, was born in Waresboro, Ware Co., Ga., Oct. 21, 1861, his middle name being given in commemoration of the first battle of Manassas. He was educated in the common schools of his native county, and spent his early years, until 1877, in farming, when he went into the store with his father, where he remained until the close of 1882. Having been elected clerk of the superior court, he removed to Waycross, the county seat, and entered upon his duties in January, 1883. He held this position for ten years, having been elected bi-ennially. Upon the removal of his father to Waycross Mr. Wilson again engaged with him in the various mercantile enterprises in which they have been so successful. He had no small part, together with his father and brother, Hon. L. A. Wilson, in the erection of the fine new block now occupied by them with others, and which contains three large and elegant stores, numerous offices, and the hall of the Knights of Pythias. Mr. Wilson has been active in promoting whatever has seemed for the real interest of the city of his adoption. Was a member of the building committee for the new court house, which in 1890 was completed at a cost of $26,000, by Miles & Bradt, of Atlanta, who built Georgia's state capitol. In 1889 he was appointed one of the water works commissioners, and re-appointed in 1891 for a term of six years. In this connection he was influential in forwarding the admirable system which was completed in 1893 at a cost of $30,000. Mr. Wilson is a charter member of Wakefield lodge, Knights of Pythias, organized in 1885, has been through all the chairs and has been clerk of the exchequer for five years. Jan. 21, 1885, Mr. Wilson married Miss Sarah Phoebe Pinckney, a daughter of Eustis and Julia Pinckney, of Columbia, S. C.; her grandfather, the noted Dr. Charles Courtney Pinckney, was a son of Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, of South Carolina, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and a member of the convention which framed the constitution of the United States. Mrs. Wilson is also a niece of Bishop Lynch, who for twenty-five years was bishop of South Carolina. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are the parents of two sons and two daughters.

WARREN COUNTY.

WILLIAM B. B. CASON, minister and farmer, Warrenton, Warren Co., Ga., son of John F. and Nancy (Baker) Cason, was born in Warren county, Dec. 21, 1837. His mother was a daughter of Blake Baker, of Washington county, Ga., and his parents had eleven children born to them, of which he was the second—eight girls and three boys—of whom four girls and one boy are deceased. Until he was eighteen years old his time was divided between farm-work and school; then his father made him overseer of his plantation, and continued him for four years; was then overseer for others until May 11, 1861, when he enlisted in the McDuffie Rifles, Capt. E. H. Pottle, Fifth Georgia regiment, Col. J. K. Jackson. He was in many engagements of more or less importance. In the raid on Santa Rosa island, Fla., he was shot through the thigh, and was off duty five weeks, after which he rejoined his command at Pensacola. At Chickamauga he received a wound on the elbow of his right arm, from which he has never entirely recovered. While the Confederates were falling back from Dalton he was shot through the wrist, which disabled him from bearing arms; so he carried the field hospital knapsack. On his arrival at Bentonville, N. C., he was detailed to hospital service, in which he was continued until the surrender. Returning from the war he resumed farming, and followed it until 1869, when he went to Hephzibah, Ga., and attended the high school of which Rev. W. L. Kilpatrick was principal. He then taught school several years at different places, after which he clerked five years for merchants at Thomson and Jewell's, Ga. He then returned to his farm, where he has since remained, satisfied with the companionship of an interesting family, and the abundant products of a well-managed farm. In 1873 he was regularly ordained a minister, but his voice failing he was compelled to abandon preaching. He stands excellently well with the people, and is a useful citizen notwithstanding his misfortune. Mr. Cason was married Aug. 31, 1865, to Miss Amelia, daughter of Jasper McCreary, of Warren county, by whom he has had seven children: Jasper Newton; D. May, now Mrs. G. W. Etheridge; William Edgar; Nannie Amelia, now Mrs. R. L. Bowen; John Franklin; Ida Davis, and Marion Pitts, deceased. Mr. Cason is a master Mason.

LAWSON A. CASON, farmer and merchant, Warrenton, Warren Co., Ga., son of James M. C. and Ellen (Montgomery) Cason, was born in Warren county Sept. 21, 1837, the seventh of nine children. He worked on the farm and attended the common country schools while a lad and youth, until 1857, when he took charge as overseer of his father's and neighboring farms. In 1862 he bought a farm, and engaged in farming on his own account. During the civil war he was in the state militia, in a company of which T. S. Hunley was captain, Second Georgia regiment, Col. Storey. He was not in any important engagement, and was stationed at Augusta at the time of the surrender. After the war he returned to his farm, and in 1871 commenced a general merchandise business in connection with it, which he has since continued. He has been successful and prosperous in both farm and store, and stands well as a farmer and merchant. Mr. Cason was married Dec. 12, 1861, to Miss Louisa L., daughter of William Neal, of Warren county, by whom he has had eleven children, six daughters and five sons—two of whom are dead. He is a master Mason, and a member of the Baptist church, which he joined in 1852.

GEORGE T. CLARKE, farmer, Warrenton, Warren Co., Ga., son of Richard H. and Julia A. E. (Cheely) Clarke, was born Aug. 14, 1847. His parents were natives of Virginia who came to Georgia early in life, and Mr. Clarke was the first of ten children—six boys and four girls—born to them. One son and one daughter are dead. His boyhood and youth were spent on the farm and at school. In 1863 he enlisted in Company B, Capt. King, Twenty-seventh Georgia battalion, Maj. Stubbs, and was in the battles at Bentonville and Greensboro, N. C. When he was eighteen years of age he had to take charge of the family farm, and managed it with skill and profit. When he reached manhood he went to Augusta, Ga., and engaged as a clerk about fifteen months, and then returned to the farm, where he remained nine years. The next three years he was engaged in railway work, after which he permanently settled down to farming, which he has since pursued with satisfactory results. Mr. Clarke married Miss Julia Ann, daughter of John Brown, of Virginia, who has borne him six children—four daughters and two sons—of whom two daughters and a son are deceased. He is an active member of the Methodist church.

EPHRAIM P. DAVIS, lawyer, Warrenton, Warren Co., Ga., son of W. P. and Sarah (Hearn) Davis, was born in Campbell county, Ga., July 10, 1858. His parents were natives of Campbell county, his mother being a daughter of Jacob Hearn, and he the eighth of nine children born to them, two of whom died early in life. He was raised and worked on the farm, going to school as opportunity presented. When nineteen years old he entered Emory college, Oxford, Ga., where he remained three years, and then left, without graduating, so as to give a younger brother an opportunity for a better education, the circumstances of the family being inadequate to meet the expenses of two at college. After he left college he went to Oswichee, Russell Co., Ala., where he taught school nine months, and then returned to Campbell county and read law in the office of Roan & Rosser, at Fairburn, Ga. At the September term of court in 1882 he was admitted to the bar, Judge Samson W. Harris presiding, and immediately afterward located at Warrenton, where he has secured a large and valuable and influential clientage. He is noted for the careful preparation of his cases, his zeal and fidelity, and his general success in the management of them. Mr. Davis was married Dec. 23, 1889, to Miss Mamie, daughter of Capt. James F. Fowler, of Warren county, who has borne him two children—a son, James Cecil, and a daughter, Carwee. He is a master Mason, and has been a member of the Methodist church from childhood.

SAMUEL H. GHEESLING, farmer, Warrenton, Warren Co., Ga., son of Samuel A. and Lizzie (Duggan) Gheesling, was born Dec. 27, 1864. His father was a farmer of some prominence in Warren county, and his mother was a daughter of Asa Duggan, a well-to-do farmer of Washington county, Ga. Mr. Gheesling spent his early years on the family farm, and was educated at the near-by schools. When eighteen years old he rented land from his father and commenced farming for himself. Two years later he bought land from his father, on which he has farmed since with success. He is industrious and frugal, of sterling qualities, and commands the utmost respect from all who know him. On Nov. 10, 1892, he married Miss Cornelia, daughter of J. T. Harris, of Warren county, by whom he has had one child—a son—which he had the misfortune to lose by death.

JOHAN G. J. HUFF, farmer, Warrenton, Warren Co., Ga., son of George M. and Uniti (Hobbs) Huff, was born in Warren county Sept. 29, 1825. He was the second of eight children—four boys and four girls—and worked on the farm and attended school until he was eighteen years old. At that age his father placed him in charge of the plantation as overseer, and he continued as such for seven years. He then bought land in his native county and farmed on it on his own account until his father died, when he bought the old homestead, where he has since lived and prospered. In connection with his farm he has conducted a general merchandise store with advantage to the community and with profit to himself. In 1863 he enlisted in the Linton Stephens battalion, which was sent to Savannah, and was there during the siege. With his command he was in many engagements of more or less importance in Georgia and South Carolina, and in the battle of Honey Hill, S. C. He was at home on furlough at the time of the surrender. In 1854 he was elected justice of the peace, and re-elected consecutively for twelve years. Mr. Huff was married April 16, 1851, to Miss Vashti A. F., daughter of Rev. Jonathan Huff, of Warren county, by whom he has had eight children—six boys and two girls—of whom two boys have died. He is a prominent member of the Baptist church.

T. WILLIAM PEARCE JOHNSON, farmer, Warrenton, Warren Co., Ga., son of William and Rebecca F. (Johnson) Johnson, was born in Warren county Aug. 10, 1861. During his boyhood he worked on the farm and attended the common schools of the county. He continued on the farm until he reached manhood, when he commenced farming on his own account, and his success has equaled his most sanguine expectations. Content with the employments and returns of farm life, he has sought no other source of distinction or of emolument. He is highly esteemed as a farmer and citizen; and as he is a young man, he has ample time, as he assuredly will have opportunity, for entering other fields of enterprise. Mr. Johnson was married Jan. 11, 1883, to Miss Sallie S., daughter of Elias Wilson, of McDuffie county, Ga., by whom he has had two children, one of whom is dead. He is an ardent member of the Methodist church.

THOMAS M. JONES, farmer, Warrenton, Warren Co., Ga., son of Adam and Mary (Hardwick) Jones, was born in Warren county March 13, 1831. He was raised on the farm and educated in the common schools of the locality and period. On the death of his father the management of the estate devolved on him, and he has managed it with great ability and to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. He is a good and progressive farmer, whose probity of character commands the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens. In 1864 he enlisted in Company I, Capt. J. S. Fowler, First Georgia battalion, Col. E. H. Pottle, Gen. Carswell's brigade, and Maj.-Gen. Smith's division, and was in the battle of Honey Hill, S. C. He has been a notary public, and ex-officio justice of the peace since 1880; and in 1886 was a county commissioner. He has been a consistent and devoted member of the Baptist church since 1873.

ROBERT P. H. LAZENBY, farmer, Warrenton, Warren Co., Ga., son of S. J. and Frances L. M. (Bacon) Lazenby, was born in Warren county Oct. 26, 1831. He was reared on the farm and attended the neighboring country schools until he was seventeen years of age, when he went to Madison county, Miss., where he attended a high school under Prof. Maure. He remained there two years, and on his return entered upon the management of his sister's plantation, which he has continued with gratifying success to the present time. Soon after the war between the states began he enlisted in Company B, Capt. Hall, Forty-eighth Georgia regiment, Col. William Gibson, and was assigned to the army of northern Virginia. He participated in the seven days' fight around Richmond, Seven Pines, Fredericksburg, and other battles of equal importance. His health failing he secured a substitute and returned home, and has since devoted his entire time and attention to the plantation interests confided to him.

THEODOSIUS E. MASSENGALE, merchant-farmer, Norwood, Warren Co., Ga., son of Dr. Theodosius and Angelina (Pettit) Massengale, was born in Wrightsboro, Columbia (now McDuffie) Co., Ga., June 22, 1848. His grandfather, Capt. White, was a brave officer and won distinction during the revolutionary war. His maternal grandfather, Pierson Pettit, was born in Paris, France, and came to this country when a small boy and made his home in Virginia. Some years later he came to Georgia and settled in Columbia county, where he became a prominent lawyer and wealthy planter. Mr. Massengale was the sixth of eight children—three daughters and five sons—born to his parents. He attended the Wrightsboro high school until he was fifteen years old, when he ran away and joined a company commanded by Capt. John K. Jackson, entered the Confederate service, and was an active participant in the exciting fights around Atlanta. He attended school two years after his return from the war, and then engaged in farming in connection with a general merchandise store, first at Thomson, McDuffie Co., Ga., and later, in 1872, moved to his present location, where he has continued to the present time. He had the honor of christening the town of Norwood—intended as a compliment to the distinguished Georgia ex-senator. From 1882 to 1884 he was county school commissioner of Warren county, and from 1880 to 1882, and again from 1884 to 1888 he was a member of the county board of education. In 1888 he was elected to represent his senatorial district—composed of the counties of Greene, Taliaferro and Warren—receiving a very large majority, his own precinct giving him 143 out of 151 votes cast, leaving eight votes to be divided among opposing candidates—a practically unanimous vote. He was made chairman of the committee on journals, and second on the committee on finance, and was particularly distinguished for his usefulness on the floor, being strong in debate, and fluent, forcible and elegant in his delivery. Mr. Massengale is a progressive, enterprising and broadminded man of generous impulses, and is noted for his liberal contributions in aid of the building of schools and churches and other houses for public use. No appeal for pecuniary assistance for a charitable object that he believes to be for the public good is unheeded by him. No citizen of Warren county stands higher in the public estimation—none is stronger or more substantial financially—none has a stronger hold on the public confidence. He has accumulated a competency and has done it by liberal dealing and an unselfish policy—doing unto others as he would be done by. "To his state and friends he is as true as a mother to her babe." Mr. Massengale was married June 12, 1872, to Miss Sallie E., daughter of Rev. Leonard Rush, of Talbot county, Ga., who died February, 1892, having borne him four children—two boys and two girls. Feb. 14, 1894, he married Miss Mary, daughter of Hon. Nathan A. Crawford, of Lincoln county, Ga. Mr. Massengale is a master Mason, and an influential member of the Methodist church. Ex-state school commissioner James S. Hook held Mr. Massengale in high estimation as county school commissioner, and expressed his appreciation of his worth when preparing sketches of state senators in 1889, by heading it with the following quotation:

The rest is all but leather and prunello."

EDWARD S. O'BRIEN, merchant, Barnett, Warren Co., Ga., son of Henry and Almira P. (Trull) O'Brien, was born in Charleston, S. C., Jan. 8, 1847. His father was born in County Limerick, Ireland, and came to this country when young. His mother was born in North Carolina, and was of an old family of note. His father securing a position in the navy yard at Warrington, Fla., his early boyhood was spent there, where he received his early schooling. When he was thirteen years old the family returned to Charleston, where his education was finished at the public and other schools. In 1862 the family refuged to Washington, Wilkes Co., Ga., where he secured a position as assistant to the railway agent, and remained until September, 1863, when he became assistant agent of the railway at Barnett. In 1865 he was appointed agent, and received the additional appointments of express agent and postmaster. The railroad and express agencies he held until 1884, and is still postmaster. In 1866 he engaged in merchandising under the firm name of Battle & O'Brien, and in 1867 he bought his partner's interest and has since conducted the business on his individual account. He has done a good business, been successful, and is a prominent citizen. June 10, 1868, he married Miss Emma M., daughter of Beder Proctor, of Taliaferro county, who has borne him thirteen children—ten sons and three daughters, six of the sons deceased. In religion Mr. O'Brien is a Roman Catholic.

JAMES A. WOOD, deceased farmer, Warren county, Ga., son of Joseph and Rebecca (Hamilton) Wood, was born in Warren county in 1823. He was reared on the farm, and educated at the common schools of the county; and when he attained his majority engaged in farming as a life-occupation. He supplemented his farming business by dealing in fine horses, for which he had a real passion, and was accounted one of the best judges of horse-flesh in all that part of the state. He was a man of great energy of character, enterprising and progressive in his farm management, and the matter of improvement of stock—in which he was regarded as high authority. He was one of the most happily constituted of men, genial and companionable—everybody's friend, and, apparently, everybody was his friend; if he had an enemy it was never known to him. During the disastrous war he was a member of the state militia, gallantly participated in the defense of Atlanta, and was in the service at the time of the surrender. After that event he returned to his farm, which he conducted with his accustomed success until his death, which occurred Jan. 12, 1884. He was an enthusiastic member of the masonic fraternity. He was married twice, the wife surviving him being the daughter of Hon. Joseph Adkins, late senator of the Georgia legislature. Mr. Wood was a Christian and a kind and affectionate husband.

WASHINGTON COUNTY.

LOUIS COHEN, banker, Sandersville, Washington Co., Ga., son of Samuel and Adaline Cohen, was born in Bromberg, Prussia, Jan. 7, 1849. In 1852 his parents migrated to Georgia and settled in Irwinton, Wilkinson Co. After four years' residence there they removed to Americus, Sumter Co., Ga., where he grew to manhood. His primary education was as good as the unsettled condition of the country at that time could afford, and this was supplemented by a business course in the Bryant and Stratton school in New York. While yet a mere boy he went to Bainbridge, Ga., and opened a store, but after running it a few months he returned to Americus and transacted a general merchandise business until 1877, when he transferred his business interests to Sandersville and continued them with exceptionally good success for ten years. Then (1887) he discontinued merchandising and in company with Morris Happ, now of Macon, Ga., established a banking house, which has grown to be one of the best of its class in the south. In 1890 Mr. Happ retired and left Mr. Cohen the sole proprietor, who, since then has conducted the business under the commercial designation of The Banking House of Louis Cohen. The success he has had, not only in this, but his other financial ventures, is due to his integrity of character, and the strictly business principles which govern him. Besides being at the head of the Sandersville financial institutions, he is president of the Sandersville & Tennille railway, the construction of which is due almost entirely to the pluck, perseverance and financial ability of Mr. Cohen. Under discouragements and a persistent opposition, growing out of certain local and railway influences, and obstacles which would have appalled one of a less indomitable spirit, he persevered until the work was accomplished—a work which has been of inestimable advantage and benefit to the business interests and people of Sandersville, a service for which the people hold him in high estimation. As might be expected a man of Mr. Cohen's progressive views and exuberant public spirit could not be overlooked when citizens must be chosen to manage public affairs; so when a citizen of Americus, and hardly of legal age, he was elected a member of the board of aldermen, and was continued as such until his removal to Sandersville. Here, also, his public spirit and recognized ability brought him to the front, and he has served as mayor of the city several terms and he is now a member of the county board of education. He is a conspicuous and worthy representative of that class of American citizens, native-born and naturalized, who have done so much towards rehabilitating the south and developing her magnificent possibilities. Mr. Cohen was married July 29, 1874, to Miss Annie, daughter of P. Happ, one of the leading merchants of Sandersville, by whom he has had two children: H. Edward and Florence, whose bright qualities fitly adorn their beautiful home.

LEON A. GRAYBILL, physician, Oconee, Washington Co., Ga., son of Tully and Anna (Tucker) Graybill, was born in Washington county March 10, 1853. His grandfather, John Graybill, migrated from Pennsylvania to Georgia and settled in Hancock county, whence, in 1849, he moved to Texas. Dr. Graybill's

father was the only member of the family who remained in Georgia. He had graduated in medicine at Lexington, Ky., and had located near Oconee in Washington county, where he had established himself in a good practice, and where he continued most of his lifetime. He had received an excellent education and was a man of fine natural ability and taste. He was an "old-line whig" in politics, and represented the county in the general assembly a number of terms. During the closing years of his life his health was very much impaired. He was an active member of the Baptist church, and died in October, 1883. Besides the subject of this sketch—an only son—his parents had three other children: Mary, Mrs. V. S. Joyner, Sandersville; Emma, Mrs. Dr. J. S. Wood, Irwinton, Ga., and Laura, Mrs. Robert J. Moye, Harrison, Ga. Dr. Graybill received a good primary and preparatory education, and having studied medicine under his father, attended lectures at the Bellevue Hospital Medical college, New York, from which he was graduated in 1880. He immediately located at Oconee, where he has lived ever since and built up an extensive and remunerative practice; in addition to this he has been interested for a number of years in a large general merchandising business. In 1892 he was selected as one of the democratic standard-bearers to represent Washington county in the general assembly, but, although he made a good race, he was defeated. Dr. Graybill was married in Washington county in 1882 to Miss Mary, born and reared in the county, daughter of M. G. Wood, Sr., who has borne him five children: Anna Lou, Nina, Mary, Leon A., and Laura.

J. H. JACKSON, planter, near Davisboro, Washington Co., son of Josiah and Sallie (Harris) Jackson, was born in Franklin county, N. C., May 12, 1830. His father was sheriff of Franklin county many years, and was also a soldier during the Seminole war and in the war with Mexico. In 1849 he migrated from North Carolina to Georgia and settled near Davisboro, where he died some years afterward of cancer. He was a good and thrifty farmer, a good manager, and accumulated considerable property. Of nine children born to him four survive: J. H., the subject of this sketch; John, planter, Palmer, Tex.; Catharine, single, with J. H.; Carrie, wife of John Huff, Griffin, Ga. Mr. Jackson remained on the farm some years after arriving at maturity and then went to Savannah, where he spent some six years previous to the outbreak of the unpleasantness. He enlisted in Company K, of which he was made second lieutenant, First Georgia regiment. He did so believing that Georgia would not go out of the Union, but when Fort Pulaski was fired upon he resigned and returned home. When Atlanta was besieged, however, he joined the state troops and participated in the defense of that city. After the surrender he rented land one year, and then bought a small tract, to which he has gradually but steadily added until now he owns a splendid 900-acre plantation, and is accumulating property very fast. He is one of the largest, and is credited with being one of the best and most successful planters in the county, and is a pushing, energetic, go-ahead manager. He works the county convicts and has done so for fourteen years. Mr. Jackson was married in Sandersville in 1854 to Miss Martha, daughter of George Franklin, a member of an old and very wealthy Georgia family. She was reared and educated in the county. Several children have been born to them: Ellen, wife of W. H. Kitchen, Washington county; J. A., Palmer, Tex.; Vita, wife of W. S. Grubb, Davisboro, Ga.; Sallie, deceased; Joe S., Palmer, Tex.; Carrie, deceased. He is a very enthusiastic and active member of the populist party, a master Mason and an influential member of the Christian church. Mr. Jackson is especially and justly proud of his two boys in Texas. The oldest went there a few years ago, settled a few miles from Dallas, and put up a gin. He now has a large ginnery and oil-mill, and is worth about $50,000—the result of remarkable business sagacity and management. His brother joined him last year.

NATHAN H. JORDAN, planter, Davisboro, Washington Co., Ga., son of Cornelius and Hearty (Haines) Jordan, was born in Washington county March 19, 1846. His grandparents on both sides—Thomas Jordan and Nathan Haines—migrated from North Carolina to Georgia and settled in Washington county in the early part of this century. They were thrifty and successful planters, became quite well off in property and themselves and wives lived to a ripe old age. His grandmother Haines was noted for being very religious. Mr. Jordan and Mr. Haines were whigs in politics, and the Jordans were ardent Baptists, while the Haines were enthusiastic Methodists. Mr. Jordan's father was born in Washington county, where he was reared a planter, continued one all his life, and married and reared his family. His parents reared to maturity several children: Catharine, wife of Miles Tanner, Sanford, Fla.; Jane, Mrs. Dr. J. H. May, Washington county, deceased; Luna Ann, Mrs. W. H. Fulgham, Riddleville, Washington county; Amos A., John county, Ga., deceased; Stephen Thomas, Leesburg, Ga.; Nathan H., the subject of this sketch; Cornelius, Atlanta; Sarah E., widow of Sol. Wilson, Riddleville; Araminta, unmarried, Tennille; Roberta, Mrs. W. N. Harmon, Tennille; A. Y. H., Washington county. His father was considered a very excellent farmer and accumulated a quite large property. He gave all his children a common school education and a fair start. His wife died in 1860, and himself in 1870. Mr. Jordan was reared a planter on the old plantation, and has lived in Washington county all his life. He enlisted as a private in Company B, Twelfth Georgia battalion, and served in the army in Virginia, about Richmond, and was seriously wounded in his left knee in the battle at Cold Harbor. When he was able to get about he was sent to Augusta, Ga., where he was on guard duty at time of the surrender. The vigilant attention and care exercised by him in the management of his business interests may be conceived when it is stated that he conducts five different plantations containing in the aggregate 2,600 acres. He lived on one of these until about five years ago, when he moved to Davisboro, where he has lived since, taking much interest in the affairs of the town and county, and exercising a wide and strong salutary influence—the extent and value of which may be estimated when it is remembered that his family and connections are old settlers, numerous and wealthy. Mr. Jordan is also vice-president of Davisboro bank. He is a strong teetotaler and an enthusiastic advocate of the temperance cause, always willing and ready to work for it. Mr. Jordan was married in Washington county in 1881 to Miss Nancy, daughter of Hopewell and Sarah Hooks, who, including Mrs. Jordan, reared ten children, the others being: Lucinda Olivia and Martha, unmarried, who make their home at the old homestead near Warthen, with Nathaniel H., also unmarried, who is considered one of the best farmers in the county, has accumulated a good property and who strives always to make his home a pleasant resting place for the weary traveler; Bennett, Gibson, Glascock Co.; Gabriel S., Dublin, Ga.; Sarah J. Kelley, deceased; Mary Harris, Texas; Winnifred H. Smith, Sandersville, Ga., all highly respected citizens. Mr. and Mrs. Jordan have not been blessed with any children. He is an uncompromising working democrat and an enthusiastic master Mason, having been instrumental in organizing the local lodge of which he is worshipful master, and himself and wife are prominent and influential members of the Baptist church.

STEPHEN B. MILLS, physician, Dwight, Washington Co., Ga., son of Stephen and Mary (Gladin) Mills, was born in Washington county Nov. 24, 1829. His grandfather, John Mills, migrated from North Carolina to Georgia when a young man, and settled in Washington county. He married and farmed, reared a family of ten children, and when he died was eighty-four years old. Dr. Mills' father was born in the county, and grew to manhood on the farm. He was a man of great energy and a good manager, and accumulated a quite large property before the war. But when Sherman was "marching through Georgia" his mills were burned, his stock "confiscated," and his plantation almost ruined. It so preyed upon his mind that it was believed to have hastened his death. He was a very earnest democrat, and early in life was a captain of the militia—when it was a coveted local distinction. He was the father of ten children: James W., Washington county; John F., deceased; Solomon L., died during the war; Stephen B., the subject of this sketch; Mary E., Mrs. A. W. Jackson, Sandersville, Ga.; Patience A., widow of H. B. Hooks, Washington county; Martha J., deceased; Lydia A., deceased; Julia Ann; and Julia Frances, deceased. He died Sept. 6, 1873, aged seventy-four, and his widow died July 3, 1880, aged seventy-nine years. Dr. Mills was reared on the farm, and received a fair education, read medicine under Dr. John Stone, then attended lectures at the Medical college of Georgia, Augusta, from which he graduated in 1858. He returned home after his graduation, remaining about a year, and then practiced with his preceptor a short time. When the war between the states began he enlisted in Company C, Forty-ninth Georgia regiment, as a private, and after serving as such a few months was assigned to duty as assistant surgeon, in which he continued during the war, mostly in Virginia. Returning from the war he settled in the present neighborhood, where he has continued since, having a very large practice, and conducting a large farming interest, which from small beginnings has increased to 1,200 acres. He is very popular as a citizen and as a medical practitioner, and has been very successful. Dr. Mills was married in Washington county July 21, 1864, to Miss Mattie Lee, daughter of Green and Charity (Bate-man) Mills, by whom he has had no children. Her grandfather, Jesse Mills, came from North Carolina to Georgia, settled in Washington county, where he married, and after rearing a family moved to Crawford county, Ga., where he died. Her father reared three children: Mrs. Mills; Andrew, who was killed in the battle of Seven Pines; and William G., now living in Washington county. Dr. Mills is a democrat and a prominent member of the Baptist church.

M. NEWMAN, county ordinary, Sandersville, Washington Co., Ga., son of David and Hinda (La Zelle) Newman, was born in Posen, Prussian Poland, Jan. 9, 1827. Having been liberally educated and his father a broker, he acquired an intimate practical knowledge of business methods. When nineteen years of age, in order to escape the military service exacted by the government, he determined to emigrate to the United States, which he did and landed in New York in May, 1846. He soon obtained employment in a large wholesale and retail clothing establishment in that city. The following year he came to Savannah, Ga., and thence in the fall to Sandersville, and entered upon his mercantile career, has lived a much respected and honored citizen, and established a large and successful business. In March, 1862, he enlisted in Company C—of which he was made second lieutenant—Forty-ninth Georgia regiment, and with his command participated in many of the bloodiest and most stubbornly contested battles of the conflict, among them: Seven Pines, Mechanicsville, Cold Harbor, Frazer's farm, Malvern hill, Cedar run, second Manassas, Ox hill, Harper's ferry, Shep-herdstown, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Mine run, Wilderness, Spottsylvania court house, Jericho, Nance's shop, and Petersburg. He was slightly wounded once and captured twice; the first time at Ox hill, but was soon exchanged, and the second time at Fort Gregg, April 2, 1865, where his command made a gallant and desperate charge—entering with 250 men, and coming out with only 34 alive, who were taken prisoners. He has many highly appreciated testimonials of his efficiency and popularity as an adjutant while in the service. As an evidence of the respect had for his judgment by his superior officers one instance will be given. Invited to a consultation—as was frequently done—in regard to enlisting negroes in the Confederate service, he promptly and unreservedly advocated it; in fact he was the first person to urge the policy. He drafted a plan for carrying it practically into effect and submitted it to his ranking officer, who endorsed it and started it to headquarters. It was endorsed by every officer up to the immortal Confederate commander—who approved and returned it. After the surrender he returned to Sandersville and resumed business, which he continued with increasing expansion and success until 1881, when, responding to the call of his appreciative fellow-citizens, he accepted the office of ordinary of Washington county—to which he has been successively re-elected and holds to-day. Bringing to the discharge of its important duties the system and punctuality of a thoroughbred and thoroughgoing business man, he is recognized as one of the best officials in the state. As an honorable and reliable merchant he ranked among the foremost; as a soldier none exhibited greater courage or faithfulness; and as a public officer he is without a superior. Of progressive proclivities, and development on all lines, he has bestowed much study and thought to scientific agriculture. Consulting the best publications on the theory and practice of cultivating the soil, he is accepted as authority on the subject. Mr. Newman, though of Jewish faith, married Ann M. Ainsworth, a member of one of the oldest and best Gentile families in the county. Four children have blessed the union, two of whom are living: James D., and Isadore W., who succeeded their father in business, and are now one of the strongest firms in the city.

WAYNE COUNTY.

JOHN W. BENNETT, a promising young lawyer at Jesup, Ga., and son of John T. and Rebecca Jane (Akins) Bennett, of Wayne county, was born Sept. 15, 1865, about sixteen miles south of Jesup. His great-grandfather came from England to America probably toward the close of the last century. His grandfather, Braxton Bennett, was one of the early settlers of Wayne county, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. John T., Mr. Bennett's father, was, in early life, elected receiver and collector of taxes, and subsequently served eight years as treasurer for the county of Wayne. John W. Bennett was married to Charity Gertrude, daughter of Lewis and Sarah (Geiger) Price, of Liberty county, Ga., Dec. 31, 1889. Mr. Price was a Baptist minister of considerable note, a farmer and stock-raiser, and has served Liberty county as school commissioner. Mr. Bennett's early education was limited to that obtainable at the "old field" schools in that section. When of age, with means of his own, he paid the expenses at the State university at Athens for a two years' literary course and a one-year course in the law department. In August, 1889, he entered upon the practice of law at Jesup, meeting with excellent encouragement and obtaining his share of verdicts in suits brought. He is paying particular attention to criminal and corporation practice. In 1889 he was appointed prosecuting attorney by Judge Fort. He soon after drafted a bill investing the governor with the authority to make such appointment, and placed it in charge of the member from Wayne, by whom it was introduced into the legislature, and it became a law. Under the law he was subsequently appointed prosecuting attorney for the county by Gov. Northen. He held the office from the time he entered upon the practice until he was elected a member of the general assembly in 1892. For a young man and youthful member, he was given no little prominence and made a splendid record. He was always at the post of duty—in committee or on the floor of the house—prompt and efficient. He was complimented with the chairmanship of the committee on wild lands, and did equally excellent and efficient service on several other committees. Mr. Bennett introduced a bill providing for the employment of the state's convicts on the public highways; but as the contract system would not expire until 1896, it was regarded as premature by the committee to whom it was referred, and in compliance with the request of the committee, who did not wish to make an adverse report, he withdrew the bill. Mr. Bennett also took a conspicuously active part in having the bill passed providing for the payment of the public school teachers quarterly instead of at the end of the year. Professionally and politically, Mr. Bennett seems to have a bright and honorable career before him. Such is his popularity, and so high the estimation in which he is held, his fellow countrymen had him to represent them again in the general assembly. He enjoys the honorable distinction of being the only representative who has been elected for a second term in the general assembly since the war. He is president of the school board of trustees. Mr. Bennett is an ardent democrat, a member of the I. O. O. F. and the Knights of Pythias, and a Missionary Baptist in religious faith.

A. H. CHANCY, Dale's Mill, Wayne Co., Ga., is one of the busy men in his community, being a member of the mercantile firm of Nicholas & Chancy, runs a farm and wood and turpentine business, and is postmaster, having been appointed in 1892. A. H. Chancy was born Sept. 19, 1867, and is a son of James and Elizabeth (Hilton) Chancy, natives of Wayne county, being one of six children born to them. Mr. Chancy's father, who was a merchant-farmer, died about 1880. His mother afterward married Willard Goodye, by whom she had no children. Dec. 5, 1890, Mr. Chancy married Carrie, daughter of James H. and Fannie (Hopps) Nicholas, both Georgians. To them two children have been born: James A. and Vernon N. Mrs. Chancy is an active member of the Missionary Baptist church. Like many others in this part of the state, Mr. Chancy had a poor start in life, but he is now making good headway for a good competency in the not distant future. Besides his interest in the store, he has a one-third interest in a large body of land and owns a fine lot of live stock. In politics Mr. Chancy is a democrat.

G. W. DRAWDY, M. D., is a prominent physician and surgeon, for many years a citizen of Jesup, Ga. He is a son of William Thomas and Eliza (Coursey) Drawdy, and was born in Wayne county April 12, 1855. His great grandfather, William Thomas Drawdy, was a native of South Carolina, and lived there and served in the patriot army in the war for independence. When he died he was ninety-seven years of age. William, Dr. Drawdy's grandfather, was a farmer and stock-raiser, and settled in southern Georgia early in this century. The doctor's parents were natives respectively of Wayne and Tattnall counties. The early education of Dr. Drawdy was obtained in the public schools of Wayne and Liberty counties, and when a young man he taught three terms. In the spring of 1883 he graduated from Atlanta Medical college, and afterward attended one course of lectures at a medical college in New York, and one at Jefferson Medical college, Philadelphia. In April, 1883, he located in Jesup, where he has since continued in the practice, excepting the intervals of absence attending medical lectures in New York and Philadelphia. His reputation for skill in the different branches of his profession is excellent, and he has established an extensive practice. April 12, 1887, Dr. Drawdy celebrated his birthday by his union by marriage with Jennie Irene, daughter of John D. and Mary E. (Manning) Rumph, natives respectively of Glynn and Wayne counties. Mr. Rumph was a lawyer who attained to some distinction in his profession, enjoyed the confidence of a numerous and wealthy clientage, and represented Wayne county in the general assembly. To Dr. Drawdy and his wife one child only, Essie Lee, has been born. Dr. Drawdy is a democrat, is at present chairman of the democratic central committee of Wayne county, and has served Jesup as an alderman one year. He is a Mason and has acceptably filled all the important offices in the blue lodge, and is past high priest of the R. A. chapter. He has also filled the important offices of the I. O. O. F. and the K. of P. fraternities, and represented all three in their respective grand lodges. He is also surgeon of the Georgia volunteers, with the rank of lieutenant. Mrs. Drawdy is a valuable and consistent member of the Methodist church. The many fraternal and other honors bestowed show the appreciation of his fellow-citizens, while the ample competency he has accumulated, and his management of it, demonstrate his unquestionable financial ability.

J. D. HARBISON. This gentleman is the popular and efficient ticket agent at Jesup, Ga., of the E. T., Va. & Ga., and the Sav., Fla. & Western railways. He was born May 29, 1863, near Decatur, McMinn Co., Tenn., and is the son of Capt. W. L. and Sarah (Blevens) Harbison, now residents of Athens, Tenn. Capt. Harbison is a native of Polk county, east Tennessee, a very successful lawyer, and is attorney for the E. T., Va. & Ga. railway. His wife was the daughter of J. W. and Elizabeth (Guinn) Blevens. J. D. Harbison was married Aug. 7, 1889, to Agnes, daughter of R. B. and Martha J. (Bryan) Hopps. Mrs. Hopps is a daughter of James M. and Mary (O'Neal) Bryan. Mr. Hopps is a son of Daniel G. and Frances (Bennett) Hopps, natives respectively of Wayne and Ware counties. Mr. Hopps is still living and is in his eightieth year. He represented Wayne county in the general assembly of Georgia two terms and served in the state senate one term. Daniel G. was a son of Richard and Marguerite (Gibson) Hopps. Richard Hopps, great-grandfather of Mrs. J. D. Harbison, was a British soldier in the war of 1812, and deserted from a man-of-war ship and joined the Americans, in company with four or five others. They deserted at night, and after wading eight or nine miles across rivers and through swamps, finally reached Fancy Bluff, near Brunswick. Mr. Hopps' real name was Howerett, but after deserting he changed it to that his descendants now bear. Mr. Harbison began life a poor man, but by close attention to business and the prompt and conscientious discharge of his duty, aided by energy and business ability, he has achieved success. He entered upon railway work in July, 1887, as a clerk in the freight department of the E. T., V. & G. R. R. office at Jesup. After fourteen months' faithful service he was rewarded by promotion to the joint agency of the two railways already mentioned, a significant recognition of probity of character and business ability. Mr. Harbison enjoys enviable popularity and the active confidence of the railway authorities and the general public. Mr. and Mrs. Harbison have had two children born to them: D. Olin, born June 6, 1890, and Cecil, born Oct. 18, 1893. Both are prominent members of the Methodist Episcopal church south. Mr. Harbison has a beautiful home, which occupies one of the most desirable sites in Jesup.

C. C. HILTON, merchant and farmer, is also postmaster at Screven, Wayne Co., Ga., an office which he has satisfactorily filled for four years. He was born March 8, 1854, in Appling county, Ga. While he was a child his parents moved to Wayne county, where he has since lived. He is a son of William and Elizabeth (Lyons) Hilton, natives of Barnwell district, now Barnwell county, S. C. Mr. Hilton was a farmer all his life, and was seventy-two years old when he died. Mr. and Mrs. Hilton had eleven children born to them, nine of whom lived to be grown. During the late civil war he served in the "Home guards." C. C. Hilton was married Nov. 17, 1890, to Bettie, daughter of William Hoskins, a native and farmer of Jackson county, Fla. One child, Eldis Etta, has been born to them. Mr. Hilton began life poor, and what he has is the result of hard work and economy. He owns his well-stocked store, has a nice comfortable residence in Screven, and a large body of land near by. Mr. and Mrs. Hilton are earnest, liberal members of the Methodist Episcopal church, abounding in good works, and actively participating in the most important of that church's organizations.

B. O. MIDDLETON, of the firm of Middleton, Wells & Co., merchants, Atkinson, Wayne Co., Ga., is one of the most prominent citizens in the county. He was born in Liberty county, Ga., Dec. 2, 1849, and was the elder of two children born to his parents, W. S. and Mary A. (Drawdy) Middleton, natives of Liberty county. His father was a physician and surgeon—a graduate of Baltimore Medical college—and enjoyed an extensive practice. In 1859 Dr. Middleton removed to Hortense, Wayne Co., but finally located at Jesup, where he died in 1884, aged sixty-one years. Dr. Middleton was a son of Alexander G. and Mary (Townsend) Middleton, Georgia born, of English extraction. A. G. Middleton was a farmer and stock-raiser. B. O. Middleton was married Dec. 9, 1868, to Mary J., daughter of Benjamin and Ellen (Strickland) Howard, old Georgia families. Of eight children born to Mr. and Mrs. Middleton six are living: Willie, Groomes, Ida, Gussie, Dowse B. and Pearl. At the age of nineteen, with very limited means, Mr. Middleton commenced the struggle of life, and has succeeded in placing himself in very comfortable circumstances, while winning and keeping the confidence and good-will of his fellow-citizens. He was clerk of the superior court of Wayne county for eight years, and for several years justice of the peace. At this time he is a member of the board of education. Mr. Middleton is the principal owner of the stock in the store, has a nice comfortable home, quite a large body of good land and a large number of cattle and other stock. Mr. Middleton is a master Mason and a Knight of Pythias, and he and Mrs. Middleton are members of the Methodist church, of which he is a steward. Mr. Middleton is a benevolent neighbor, affectionate husband, indulgent parent and of unimpeachable integrity. In all his business transactions he shows a due regard for that Christian teaching, "Do as you would be done by," and by his upright life enjoys the confidence of the whole community.

G.ODFREY ODUM, of Odum, Wayne Co., Ga., has been one of the most successful and is one of the wealthiest citizens of Wayne county. Mr. Odum was born in Bulloch county, June 22, 1832, and was one of ten children born to his parents, James and Mary (Thomas) Odum, eight of whom lived to be grown. Mr. Odum was a farmer and lived in Bulloch county until he died. His widow married Andrew Kicklighter, who was of Scotch descent and died not long afterward while on a visit to Savannah. Godfrey Odum began life an orphan and poor. After farming a few years he engaged in merchandising about six years. At the age of twenty-six he removed to Appling, now Wayne county, not far from his present home place, which he settled about 1882. Few men have been so continuously successful—a success which may be measured by the fact that he possesses 12,000 acres of land, probably more than any other person in the county, is very rich in live stock and can control at any time $10,000 in cash. He is now a farmer and stock-raiser. Mr. Odum was married Sept. 18, 1856, to Rebecca, daughter of James and Eliza (Bradley) Moody, both natives of Liberty county, where they lived and died. Mr. and Mrs. Odum have had two children, one, Visey (Mrs. T. A. O'Quin, Wayne county), and another which died in infancy. Mrs. Odum is a devout member of the Missionary Baptist church. In politics Mr. Odum is a staunch democrat, and has served the county as justice of the inferior court four years. He is a master Mason. Mr. Odum is strictly a business man, being prompt, and exacting promptness in all appointments and obligations. The postoffice and railway were named in his honor.

R. S. REDDISH, Odum, Wayne Co., Ga., is a fine specimen of the successful, big-hearted and hospitable farmer and stock-raiser of southern Georgia. Mr. Reddish was born within 200 yards of his present home, May 8, 1851, and is a son of Isham, Sr., and Harriet (Stafford) Reddish, natives respectively of Appling and Tattnall counties. Isham Reddish, Sr., in his day was about the most prominent farmer and stock-raiser in his county. Mrs. Harriet Reddish was a daughter of Ezekiel Stafford, a native of Tattnall county, Ga. R. S. Reddish was married Feb. 19, 1885, to Eliza, daughter of Joshua Clarey, a native of Appling, now Wayne county. Mr. Clarey was a farmer and stock-raiser, who, though not rich, was very highly esteemed by all who knew him. To Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Reddish five children have been born: Linton L., Rosena C., Ralph L., William P., and one which died in infancy. Mr. Reddish inherited a fine property, but his increase of it, independently of outside enterprises, reflects the highest credit on his excellent ability as a business man and farm manager. He is the owner of about 6,000 acres of land, half a thousand cattle, 3,000 sheep and horses, mules and hogs. His country residence is an elegant one for the locality, and he enjoys nothing more than to dispense a generous hospitality. He is a democrat in politics, and is so much liked he could probably be elected to any county office, but unambitious of such honors, and devoted to his farm and the delights of his beautiful home, he is content with private citizenship. Mrs. Reddish is a consistent and devout Methodist, and finds her chief enjoyment in the home circle.

THOMAS C. RUMPH, joint freight agent at Jesup, Ga., of the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia and Savannah, Florida & Western railways, was born at Fair Lawn, near Waynesville, Wayne Co., Ga., Jan. 11, 1857. He is a son of John D. and Mary E. (Manning) Rumph, natives of Glynn county, Ga. Mr. Rumph's father read law under Judge T. T. Long of Waynesville, later of Florida, and at one time enjoyed a practice as large and lucrative as that of any member of the profession in this section of the state, and was a prominent, popular and influential politician. As a lawyer he was successful in all lines of practice, and as a politician for many years represented Wayne county in the general assembly. Mr. Rumph died in February, 1882, aged fifty-eight years. Mrs. Rumph is still living, and at sixty-nine years of age is as active as many women are at half her age. They had nine children born to them, of whom six lived to be grown. Thomas C. Rumph was married April 9, 1883, to Louise J., daughter of Thomas and Eliza Drawdy, by whom he has had four children: Mary Eliza, Anita Lucille, Laura Beatrice and Robert Fleming. Mr. Rumph began life poor, but by industry and energy has worked his way up to his present responsible position. He was a clerk for several years in a general store in Chatham county before he entered the railway service. He went into the railway office as an under clerk, but the interest he manifested in the business, and his efficiency attracted attention, and secured promotion until he was appointed to his present responsible position as joint agent of the two roads; in which he gives the fullest satisfaction to the railway officials, and to the patrons of the railways, and commands the respect and esteem of his subordinates. He owns a beautiful residence in Jesup, and has investments in building and loan associations. On recommendation of the grand jury he was appointed notary public by Gov. A. H. Colquitt immediately after having obtained his majority, an office which he filled with great credit to himself. He is now chairman pro tem of the commissioners of roads and revenues of Wayne county. He is an active and prominent member of the Knights of Pythias and Mrs. Rumph is a pious and ardent member of the Methodist church.

J. G. TUTEN, M. D., Jesup, Ga., son of John A. and Susan C. (Dowling) Tuten, was born in Beaufort district (now Hampton county), S. C., Feb. 15, 1870. His grandparents were Green and Mary Tuten, old citizens of Beaufort district, and his father was a highly respected and well-to-do farmer and stock-raiser. Dr. Tuten received some education in the public schools of Hampton county, and at the early age of sixteen with no other equipment, without a cent, began to hew out for himself fame and a fortune. A few years later he attended course lectures in the medical department of the university of Georgia, and graduated March 3, 1890. He located at Robertsville, S. C., where he remained until August, 1890, and then removed to Jesup, where he has been phenomenally successful professionally and financially. In November, 1892, he purchased a one-fourth interest in the drug business of H. W. Whaley & Co. Dec. 10, 1891, Dr. Tuten married Minnie Lee Walters, born in Macon county, Ga., daughter of Charles W. Walters, farmer and carriage manufacturer. Beginning his business life at sixteen, without money, moneyed friends or influence, his only equipment a meager education, unbending integrity, an honorable ambition, and a will to dare and to do, he has established an excellent reputation in his profession, built up a large and remunerative practice, and is rapidly adding to an already handsome property. He is recognized not only as an able and skillful physician, but also as an exceedingly able business man. Dr. Tuten is a master Mason and a Knight of Pythias, and has served his lodge one term as prelate. He is a Missionary Baptist, and Mrs. Tuten is a Methodist.

H. W. WHALEY, merchant and banker, Jesup, Ga., son of W. H. and Elizabeth (Burroughs) Whaley, was born in England, Feb. 8, 1848. When he was about one year old his parents came to this country and settled in Philadelphia, Penn. Four years afterward his father removed to Nansemond county, Va., thence to New Market, where he remained one year. From there, about 1858, the family removed to Jacksonville, Fla., and later to Jefferson county, same state. In 1865, when Mr. Whaley was a youth of seventeen, Mr. Whaley's father came to Jesup, which has since been his home. The latter took considerable interest in military affairs and was captain of the Wayne county rifles. Mr. H. W.

Whaley was married in 1874 to Georgia Lee, whose father was captain of a company raised in Appling county, and was killed in the battle of Seven Pines in Virginia. Capt. Lee was highly esteemed by all who knew him, and was noted for the bravery and chivalry characteristic of the family whose illustrious name he bore. Maude Lee, a charming young lady, is the only child Mr. and Mrs. Whaley have had. Mr. Whaley began life as a poor man, and the large property he now has is the result of energy, industry and enterprise, guided by an almost unerring business sagacity. He began as a small merchant, and his business and profits increased as he enlarged and extended his financial operations, including in them saw-milling and the turpentine business, and finally, banking. In 1892 he organized the Merchants and Farmers' Savings bank, of which he is the principal stockholder, and of which he is the master spirit and president. Though a good all-round business man, his predominant characteristic is that of financier. Mr. Whaley is an active democrat, and in 1884 was elected to the legislature, and served one term. He was a member of the finance committee and two other important committees. He is a royal arch Mason, a member of the I. O. O. F., and a Knight of Pythias, and has filled all the offices of the two last-named fraternities. He is first lieutenant of the Wayne county cavalry company.

WEBSTER COUNTY.

B F. BARGE, merchant-farmer, Weston, Webster Co., Ga., son of B. F. and Nancy (Barnes) Barge, was born in Stewart county, March 16, 1845. His father was born in North Carolina and came to Georgia when about twelve years old, 1828, and made his home with an uncle in Washington county. He was a soldier in the Creek Indian war in 1836, entering upon his duties as a lieutenant and commissioned afterward as a captain. He married Miss Barnes in 1838 and settled in Washington county; but in 1842 he moved to Stewart county, which was his home until he died in 1872. He was a democrat and held the office of justice of the peace. His widow died in 1894, aged eighty-two years. Both of them were exemplary members of the Methodist church. They were the parents of six children; those living are: B. F., the subject of this sketch, and J. W., now in Stewart county. Those deceased are: Rebecca, wife of Adams; Elizabeth, wife of Ammons; Joseph A., died at Greensboro, N. C., during the war, and an infant. Mr. Barge was raised in Stewart county, and educated at the common county schools. In 1863 he enlisted in Company A, Fifty-fifth Georgia regiment, with which he went through the war. On his return home he engaged in farming in earnest. In 1882 he moved from Stewart to Webster county, where he has enjoyed uninterrupted and exceptional prosperity. Besides having one of the largest and best farms in the county he has a mill near Weston. In 1894 he embarked in general merchandising in Weston, and in connection with it conducts a large cotton warehouse business. He is one of the foremost business men of the county, and is developing unusual business capacity and financial ability. He is public-spirited, progressive in all things; and while on the alert to advance the material interests of the community, is particularly active in educational and religious matters. Mr. Barge was married Nov. 19, 1875, to Miss Mary Emma, born in Chattahoochee county, daughter of William N. King, formerly of Chattahoochee county, by whom he has had two children: Willie, now attending Wesleyan Female college, Macon, Ga., and Mary Frank, attending the high school at Weston. Himself and all his family are active members of the Methodist church.

JOHAN P. BEATTY, farmer, Preston, Webster Co., Ga., son of Robert and Sarah (Peel) Beatty, was born in Jefferson county, Ga., Aug. 18, 1825. His paternal grandparents, Henry and Margaret (Culbirth) Beatty, were natives of Ireland, who emigrated to this country just after the revolutionary war and settled in Jefferson county, Ga., where he followed farming. About 1830 he moved to Houston county, Ga., whence, subsequently, he moved to Stewart (now Webster) county, where he made his home with his son until he died at a very advanced age, about 1850. His wife had died many years previously. Both of them were exemplary members of the Presbyterian church. They were the parents of seven children, all deceased: James (born in Ireland); John; Robert; Hugh; Henry; Nancy (married Henry Young); Mary (married Thomas Young). Mr. Beatty's father was born in Jefferson county in 1793, where he received his education and grew to manhood and married; a happy incident of his marriage being that his family and that of his wife were neighbors and friends in Ireland; her parents, John and (Gamble) Peel, having emigrated from Ireland just before the revolutionary war. In 1828 he removed to Houston county, whence, after remaining eight years, he moved to Stewart county, where he lived until Sept. 11, 1877, dying at the age of eighty-four. His wife died Dec. 24, 1876, aged eighty-three. Mr. Beatty was an "old-line whig. Of seven children born to Mr. Beatty's parents two died in infancy, the others were: Margaret C., deceased wife of A. P. Lowry, Texas; Sarah J., wife of J. H. Stapleton, Cordele, Ga.; John P., the subject of this sketch; Nancy, wife of James F. Stapleton, Webster county; Eliza D., married Robert Lowry, Texas, both dead. Mr. Beatty was about twelve years old when his father moved from Houston county to near the place where he now lives—receiving the principal part of his education in Houston county. He grew to manhood on the farm and for many years superintended his father's farming interests. In 1856 he was elected sheriff of Webster county—being the second person who held the office. In 1861 he represented Webster county in the general assembly, and since the war he represented the county twice in the same body. In 1863 he enlisted in Company F, Forty-sixth Georgia regiment, and was at once commissioned as its captain, and gallantly discharged the duties incumbent on him until the surrender. In 1887 Capt. Beatty moved to Preston, and for about six years acted as railway agent. He has been treasurer of the county four years, and has recently been re-elected for a third term. He is a hale and hearty gentleman for his age, and no citizen of the county commands more profound and general respect. Mr. Beatty was married Jan. 13, 1853, to Miss Eliza R. Prim, who was born in what is now Webster county. Eleven children blessed this union, of whom eight survive: Martha A., wife of John B. Nicholson, Webster county; Robert A.; John T.; Albert S. J.; Mary E., wife of Harper Smith, Sumter county; Gussie Lou, wife of T. C. Edwards, Lee county; Susie P., wife of G. A. Drew, Marion county; and Katie H. The mother of these, an exemplary member of the Baptist church, died Aug. 10, 1882, aged forty-eight years and eleven months. Oct. 25, 1883, he contracted a second marriage with Mrs. Frances C. Bell, of Webster county. Capt. Beatty is a master Mason, and himself and wife are consistent members of the Baptist church.

J. T. DISMUKES, physician and surgeon, Weston, Webster Co., Ga., son of William H. and Mary (Cook) Dismukes, was born in Lee county, Ga., in 1831. His father was born in 1799 in Hancock county, Ga., where he was reared and educated. After his marriage he lived two years in Clarke county, Ga., whence he moved to Jasper county, Ga., and, later, to Lee (now Webster) county, where he lived until he died, in 1879, aged eighty years. He was one of the first settlers in the locality—the nearest mill being at Fort Gains, Ga., and the nearest cotton market, Macon. He was a soldier in the Creek Indian war of 1836; and a justice of the inferior court when his farm was included in Stewart county; and was a member of the general assembly four years. He was a democrat and always took an active part in politics. During the war between the states he was very anxious to enter the army, but on account of his age was not allowed to do so. His mother was a daughter of Zadoc Cook of Clarke county, one of the most remarkable men of his time. Mr. Cook was thirty-one years of age before he entered school, which he did with his eldest daughter, Mary. He was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, in which he was severely wounded in a battle near Savannah, and left on the field for dead. But he retained consciousness, and by superhuman effort managed to crawl to a neighboring house, where he received needed attention. For twenty-four years he was a member of the general assembly, and was a member of congress—1817-1819. His memory was so retentive that he could repeat verbatim the resolutions offered and the speeches delivered by his legislative associates. He lived to be about one hundred years old, and retained his very remarkable memory to the last. The late Gen. Phil. Cook was a near relative. Twelve children blessed this union: Martha, wife of Sam Williford; Missouri, wife of John Robeson; Mary Jane, widow of Augustus Parrott, killed during the war; J. T., the subject of this sketch; C. W.; C. Z. M., who was a soldier in the war with Mexico (deceased); W. H., who served during the late civil war (deceased); Caroline T., deceased wife of B. Griffin, Mississippi. Four died in infancy. Dr. Dismukes was raised on a farm near his present residence, and was educated at the common schools of the county. Having studied medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Clem E. Cheatham of Dawson he entered the medical college of Georgia, Augusta, from which he graduated—Dr. H. V. M. Miller, now of Atlanta, being then a member of the faculty. After graduating he located in that part of Lee now included in Terrell county, near the present site of Dawson. He practiced there two years and then moved to his present location then known as "Hardmoney," now Weston. Early in the war between the states he enlisted as a private in Company K, Seventeenth Georgia regiment, but soon afterward was commissioned as assistant surgeon, in which capacity he served until the surrender. He was present at the seven days' fight around Richmond, Second Manassas, Sharpsburg, Gettysburg, Chickamauga, and the siege of Petersburg. On his return home after the war he resumed the practice of his profession, in which he has been successful—his patronage extending for miles around, even into adjoining counties. Dr. Dismukes was married in 1868 to Miss Nancy J.—born and reared in Talbot county, Ga.—daughter of Joseph and Mary (Drennin) McCall. Her father was killed in the battle at Kennesaw Mountain, and her mother is a member of Dr. Dismuke's family. To Dr. and Mrs. Dismukes nine children have been born: Alice, wife of John Sims; William J., merchant, Weston; Forrest S., Coffee county; twin sister of Forrest, died in infancy; Robert Toombs; H. M.; Charles D.; Z. C.; and M. G.—these last five at home. Dr. Dismukes is a democrat, and himself and wife are members of the Methodist church, of which he is a trustee.

J. J. DIXON, planter, Webster (postoffice Richland, Stewart) county, Ga., son of R. M. and E. C. (Clemmons) Dixon, was born in Stewart county in 1847. His paternal great-grandparents, Shade F. and (Merrick) Dixon, were natives of North Carolina, whence they came before marriage to Georgia, and settled on land afterward included in Stewart county—among the earliest settlers in that part of the state. They reared a large family, were members of the Primitive Baptist church, and lived to be quite old. His grandfather, Thomas Dixon, the eldest son of the above, was born in what is now Stewart county in 1792. He moved to Alabama in 1857, where he died in 1872. He was a soldier in the war with Mexico. He was a democrat in politics, and a member of the Primitive Baptist church. His children were R. M.; Thomas; Lizzie, married a Mr. Pinkston; Mattie, married a Mr. Bass; Harriet, married a Mr. Clemmons, who died, and she then married D. G. Rodgers; Alice, married a Mr. Sasser; and Shade F., San Antonio, Texas, the youngest and only survivor. Mr. Dixon's father, the oldest child, was born in what is now Stewart county in 1825, where he grew to manhood, and was educated. In 1846 he married his wife—born in 1826 in Houston county—daughter of Nelson Clemmons. Mr. Clemmons was born in Georgia and moved his family to what is now Stewart county, in 1829, and settled near Richland, where he raised his family, all of whom are now dead except Mrs. Dr. Z. F. Coffin, Stewart county. Mr. Dixon's parents settled near Richland—then known as "Box Aucle," where they lived until 1860, when they moved to D. G. Rodgers' place near Preston, Ga. In 1862 he enlisted in Company F, Forty-sixth Georgia regiment, and was made second lieutenant of his company. He was taken sick with pneumonia and died in September, 1863; and his widow died in 1869. He was an uncompromising and active democrat, and himself and wife were members of the Primitive Baptist church. They were the parents of six children: J. J., the subject of this sketch; W. N., died in Texas; Georgia Ann, married J. J. Nicholson, and moved to Florida, where he died; she is now living near Geneva in that state; Robert T. (see sketch in these Memoirs); Marshall, killed by a fall from a cotton screw in 1894; Thomas, died in infancy. Mr. Dixon attained to manhood on the old home place, which he now owns, and was educated in the near by country schools. When sixteen years of age he enlisted in Company B, Second Georgia regiment, served in Georgia, Alabama, and South Carolina, and participated in the battles of Chickamauga, Powder Springs, Jonesboro and the defense of Atlanta, and was at Columbus, Ga. He was wounded at the battle of Jonesboro and sent to the hospital at Barnesville, Ga., and was soon afterward furloughed and came home. As soon as he was sufficiently recovered he rejoined his company at Gadsden, Ala. He was twice captured—first at Jonesboro, and next at Columbus, but on each occasion very soon made his escape. At the time of the surrender he was at Milledgeville, Ga. Returning home he engaged in farming, to which he has devoted his entire time and attention, and is one of the largest farmers, as well as one of the richest men in Webster county, where he wields a wide and strong salutary influence. Mr. Dixon was married December, 1868, to Miss Lydia Albourn, born in March, 1851, in sight of her present home, daughter of Josiah H. Carter, who was born in Bibb county, Ga., and who came to Stewart and settled in what is now Webster county, and participated in a battle near his place in the Creek Indian war. Mr. and Mrs. Carter had nine children: Catharine, deceased wife of David Warren; Biddie, wife of Washington Warren, near Richland; George N., physician, killed at Chancellorsville, May 3, 1863; Martha, widow of E. Nowell, lives at the old homestead; J. W., physician (deceased); Lydia A., wife of the subject of this sketch, and three who died in infancy. Mr. Carter died in 1880, aged seventy-eight years, and his wife died in September, 1879, aged sixty-four years, both of them members of the Primitive Baptist church. To Mr. and Mrs. Dixon two children have been born: Robert J., bookkeeper for T. F. Carter, Richland, Ga.;

and Cora, wife of Curtis Whaley, Parrott, Terrell Co., Ga. Mr. Dixon is a very strong democrat, and takes great interest in politics though no office-seeker; and Mrs. Dixon is a prominent member of the Missionary Baptist church.

ROBERT T. DIXON, farmer, Webster county (P. O., Richland, Stewart Co.), Ga., son of R. M. and E. C. (Clemmons) Dixon, was born in Webster county in 1856. He was raised on the old homestead and was educated at the common schools of the county. He began life with very little, but by hard and continuous work on his farm, economy and a judicious investment of his incomes, he has accumulated a quite large estate. His home is between two and three miles from Richland, where he owns a large and valuable tract of land under excellent cultivation. He attends strictly and assiduously to his farming interests, on which he principally relies, and looks carefully after his other investments, and is one of the rising men of the county. Mr. Dixon was married in 1878 to Miss M. Nicholson, daughter of N. N. Nicholson, a well-to-do farmer of Chattahoochee county. She died soon afterward childless, and subsequently he married Katie Snelling, daughter of John Snelling, who was one of the earliest settlers of Stewart county. His father, Richard Snelling, was the first settler at Richland, as well as one of the first of Stewart county. Of the family of John Snelling three only are living: Katie (Mrs. Dixon), Warren, and Mrs. Fannie Williams, of Richland. Mrs. Dixon was educated at Weston and is the mother of three children: Elma, William Carver and Henry M. He is a stanch democrat and a master Mason, and Mrs. Dixon is a devoted member of the Baptist church.

WILLIAM G. IVEY, farmer, Weston, Webster Co., Ga., son of E. and Arenia (Bridges) Ivey, was born in what is now Terrell county, Ga., in 1840. His grandfather, Madison Ivey, was born in North Carolina, but lived and died in this state. Mr. Ivey's father was one of four children, and was born in North Carolina. He left that state and came to Georgia before he reached manhood and settled in Stewart county. He engaged first as an overseer, which he followed a number of years, and then he bought a small tract of land to which he gradually added as he made money. Mr. Ivey grew to manhood on his father's farm and attended the near-by country schools. In 1861 he enlisted in Company E (Capt. L. R. Reddings), Thirty-first Georgia regiment, and for a brief period was stationed at Savannah. He was next ordered to the front, and his command became a part of Stonewall Jackson's "foot cavalry." He participated in the seven days' fight around Richmond, in which he received a bullet wound which compelled him to return home, where he remained eleven months. On his recovery he returned to his command, and was with the forces near and around Richmond and Petersburg until the end of the war. Returning home, he turned his attention exclusively to farming, at which he made money. He owns a very excellent small farm about eight miles from Weston which he rents and himself cultivates a fine forty-acre farm in the vicinity of Weston which he prizes and enjoys as a model home. He is also proprietor of the hotel in Weston. His success demonstrates his practical good judgment and management. Mr. Ivey married Mary, daughter of James Harris, of South Carolina, who has borne him eight children: Harris S., Walter E., Leila E., Lizzie E., Rena A., William L., Agnes R. and Bertie. He is a strong democrat and himself and wife are members of the Baptist church.

A. K. PATTERSON, physician and farmer, Weston, Webster Co., Ga., son of D. G. and Barbara (McNair) Patterson, was born in North Carolina, Jan. 29, 1845. His father was born in North Carolina in 1818, where he was reared and educated. He married Miss Barbara McNair, who was a native of Scotland, and not long afterward (1850) he migrated to Georgia and settled in Columbus, Ga. From there he moved to Talbot county, Ga., and thence to Sumter county, where he remained until 1878 or 1879, when he went to Atlanta, where he remained until he died, June 11, 1883, aged sixty-five years. During the war he served in the capacity of a civil engineer, but most of his life was spent in farming. He was an ardent friend and promoter of education and was particular to give his children the best possible advantages in this direction. Before the war he was an old-line whig. His widow died in December, 1893, aged seventy-three years, and both of them were strict members of the Presbyterian church. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom seven lived to be grown: A. K., the subject of this sketch; Mary J., wife of B. F. Carter, North Carolina; Sallie M., wife of W. K. Turksbury; A. M., died in New York; D. E. is in Texas; W. C. is in Weston, Ga., and G. C. in Terrell county, Ga. Dr. Patterson was reared principally in Georgia and was educated at the common schools of the counties in which his father lived. During the war he enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Ninth Georgia battalion, and served with it until the close of the war, acting as sergeant. After the war he studied medicine and then attended lectures at the Atlanta Medical college, from which he was graduated in 1869. He immediately located in Bullock county, Ala., but after practicing there two years came to Webster county, which has since been his home, and where he has established a large and profitable practice. He is public-spirited and progressive and takes a lively interest in every movement calculated to promote the material interests of the community, as well as its educational and religious advancement. He takes a decided interest in politics—not for selfish ends, but to secure incorruptible and capable men to fill the offices. In the summer of 1894 he received a severe stroke of paralysis, from which he has partially recovered. Dr. Patterson was married June 30, 1872, to Miss Ann Eliza, daughter of Frederick and Frances Bell, of Webster county, who has borne him six children, all living, and at home: Clarence Hugh, Mamie L., A. K., Jr., Barbara Anna, Daniel G. and Casper Wistar. He is a staunch democrat and an ardent member of the masonic fraternity.

FERDINAND C. SAUNDERS, planter, Weston, Webster Co., Ga., son of James M. and Sarah (Sell) Saunders; was born in Warren county, Ga., in October, 1820. His maternal grandfather, Sell, was born in England, and was a ship-carpenter. He migrated to this county about the beginning of the revolutionary war and assisted in building a dock for the British government at Savannah after they captured the city. Subsequently he revolted and joined the revolutionary army. He died and was buried near Wrightsboro, in Columbia (now McDuffie) county. Mr. Saunders' father was a native of New Jersey, and came with his father to Georgia when the Mississippi river was the western boundary of the state. He was married in Warren county in 1816 to Miss Sarah Sell, and lived in that county twenty-two years, when he moved to Stewart (now Webster) county, and settled within one-half mile of where the subject of this sketch now lives, where he engaged in farming until he died, aged seventy-four years. Eight children were the fruit of this union: Ferdinand C., the subject of this sketch; Lucius, died of rheumatism during the war; Napoleon, died of pneumonia during the war; Septimus, killed at Kennesaw mountain; Mark, Webster county; Zephaniah, deceased; Emeline, deceased wife of a Mr. Howell; Palmyra, wife of a Mr. Holt, of Texas. Mr. Saunders when sixteen years of age moved with the family to Stewart (now Webster) county, and was educated in the country schools of Warren and Stewart counties, and when he attained to manhood engaged in planting. In May, 1863, he enlisted in the Fourth Georgia regiment, Fourth brigade, Georgia militia, and continued in the service until the surrender, during which service he received two wounds, one at Atlanta, and another at Doctortown, Wayne Co., Ga. Returning from the war he resumed farming, to which he has almost exclusively devoted his time and attention. He is solid, substantial and entirely reliable, and a model citizen. He has never sought nor held any public office excepting one, that of notary public, being fully content with the labors and pleasures and profits of good farming, and the quietude of domestic life. Mr. Saunders was married in 1843 to Miss Carom, of Randolph county, who died early in 1846 without issue. Toward the close of the same year he contracted a second marriage with a daughter of William and Tarissa (Gilbert) Brooks, natives of North Carolina, who migrated thence to Georgia and settled in what is now Stewart county. Five of the nine children born to them are now living: Sallie, wife of Robert McCollum, Dawson, Terrell Co., Ga.; Elliott Rufus, at home; Georgia, wife of Wright Tracy, Sumter county; John, Anderson county, Tex.; Napoleon, Hunt county, Tex. Before the war Mr. Saunders was an old-line whig, but since the war he has acted with the democratic party. He is a Universalist in his religious belief, while Mrs. Saunders is a strict member of the Baptist church.

W. J. SIMS, merchant-planter, Weston, Webster Co., Ga., son of H. H. and Jane (Moore) Sims, was born in Sumter county, Ga., in 1835. His paternal grandfather was George Sims, who early in life migrated to South Carolina, and settled in Lancaster district. Mr. Sims' father grew to manhood on the farm and was educated in that district. He married Miss Mary Croxton, who bore him one child—Malsey—and died. For his second wife he married the mother of the subject of this sketch, and about 1830 or 1831 moved to Georgia and settled in Sumter county. He subsequently moved to Marion county, where he followed farming and died at the age of sixty. His wife died in 1847, before his death. He was a soldier in the Creek Indian war, and later in life took great interest in politics, giving a strong support to the democratic party. He was a member of the masonic fraternity and himself and wife were members of the Baptist church. Seven children were the fruit of his second marriage: Sarah, wife of Uriah Boyett, Sumter county; W. J., the subject of this sketch; John, Sumter county; Martha, wife of James Graham; Senoia, Coweta county, Ga.; Zacharias, Weston; Marion, Americus, Ga.; James, deceased; and George, deceased. Mr. Sims attained to manhood on the farm, soon after which he went to Alabama. When the war between the states began he returned to Georgia, and in 1861 enlisted in a command organized by Col. A. S. Cutts, known as Sumter's Flying artillery, C. S. A. With this command he participated in the seven days' fight around Richmond, second Manassas, Sharpsburg, Gettysburg, Chancellorsville and Spottsylvania court house, besides numerous other less important engagements. The command suffered most in the battles at Dranesville, Va. Although he was in some of the most sanguinary and hotly-contested battles of the war he was so fortunate as to escape unhurt. The command served until April 9, 1865, when it disbanded and nearly all of his company walked home—he walking nearly all the way. He arrived at home May 2, and at once engaged in farming, which he has since followed with most satisfactory results. His farm is one of the largest and best in the vicinity of Weston. He is a fine farmer, and takes great interest superintending and improving it, and adding to its conveniences and comforts. He takes no further interest in politics than to support the best men for public office. For the past twelve years he has been interested in a general merchandise store in Weston, and has secured a good and annually increasing trade. Mr. Sims was married in 1866 to Miss Melissa McGarrah of Sumter county, daughter of James McGarrah, a native of one of the Carolinas. Mrs. Sims, a devout and exemplary member of the Baptist church, died June 4, 1895, leaving five children: Oscar, near Weston; George W., merchant, Weston; Emily, wife of James E. Dennard, Webster county; Florence and Lizzie, these two last at home.

WILLIAM H. SPANN, planter, Weston, Webster Co., Ga., son of William F. and Lucy (Spears) Spann, was born in Webster county, Jan. 30, 1859. His paternal grandparents, Henry William and Sophia (Clark) Spann, were natives of Jefferson county, Ga., whence, about 1837, they moved to Lee (now Webster) county, and settled within four miles of where the subject of this sketch now lives. Politically he was a staunch old-line whig, and died during the late war, aged about fifty years. His widow survived him many years—was seventy-five years old when she died—a long-standing exemplary member of the Missionary Baptist church. They were the parents of the following children: William F., Webster county; George G., Texas; James, near Eufaula, Ala.; P. H., Preston, Ga.; Carrie, wife of J. R. Stapleton, merchant, Preston; Mary, wife of J. H. Smith, Terrell county; Laura, wife of Tyra Timmerman, Terrell county; Susan, deceased wife of G. W. Cole; J. G., deceased; Sophia, deceased wife of T. J. Stapleton; Mrs. J. N. Bowen, deceased; and two who died in childhood. Mr. Spann's father was born in Jefferson county, and was about ten years old when his father moved to Lee (now Webster) county, where he was raised on the plantation and educated at the near by country schools. About the beginning of the war between the states he moved to Alabama, and soon afterward enlisted in the Twenty-seventh Alabama regiment, and continued in the service until the surrender. In 1869 he returned to Webster county, where he is still living, engaged in farming. While he is an ardent partisan, he takes little interest in practical politics further than to exercise the right of suffrage. Mrs. Spann is an active member of the Missionary Baptist church. Ten children have blessed this union: Sophia, wife of D. M. Nicholson, at home; William H., the subject of this sketch; Naomi Josephine, at home; Mary Eliza, wife of J. B. Clark; Susan Idella, wife of H. S. Fletcher; J. G., near Preston; G. L., at home; Nancy Ella, at home; Sarah, deceased; and an infant, which died unnamed. Mr. Spann was reared in Webster county, and received a very good education at the common schools of the county. In 1881 he began farming on his own account, and in 1886 moved to and settled where he now lives. He now owns 1,000 acres of good land, the result of his own labor and good management, and is one of the largest, as well as one of the best farmers in the county; has a great number of head of live stock, a gin of large capacity, and a saw-mill. He is very active in politics, but has never sought an office and would not accept one if tendered him. Mr. Spann was married in 1881 to Miss Theodosia, daughter of Archibald Nicholson of Webster county, who has borne him two children: Lizzie May and Ernest Linwood. Mr. Spann is an uncompromising democrat.

JAMES R. STAPLETON, merchant-farmer, Preston, Webster Co., Ga., was born in Stewart (now Webster) county, June 27, 1848. His paternal grandfather, Thomas Stapleton, moved from Jefferson to Randolph county, Ga., about 1833, and was killed by the Indians in 1836, during the Creek Indian war. Mr. Stapleton's father was born in Jefferson county, Ga., March 24, 1815. He was reared and educated in that county, and was about eighteen years of age when his father moved to Randolph county, and lived with him until he married. He was a soldier in the Creek Indian war, and at its close devoted himself to farming as a life-pursuit. Some years afterward he moved to what afterward became Webster county, of which he was the second treasurer, an office which he held until removed by the Bulloch administration. He was married in 1842 to Miss Martha Peel, born in Jefferson, then of Stewart county, and to them eight children were born, of whom five are living: Thomas J., farmer, Bronwood; George, merchant, Americus; James R., the subject of this sketch; Nancy Elizabeth, deceased; Henry C., deceased; Lawson, traveling salesman; Francis Bartow, deceased; and Sarah E., wife of W. H. Clark, Preston. They are living near Preston now. He is a master Mason, and himself and wife are members of the Missionary Baptist church. Mr. Stapleton attained to manhood in Webster county, in which and Troup county he was educated. In 1864 he enlisted in the state militia, in which he served until the surrender. He then returned home and engaged with his father in farming. In 1872 he commenced teaching, which he followed two years, and then commenced merchandising in connection with farming. His farming interests are extensive and his firm, Stapleton, Nicholson & Co., does the largest business in Preston, of which he is general manager and secretary and treasurer; and he holds very considerable property in Preston. For eight years consecutively he was school commissioner. While a staunch democrat, very popular and a very active partisan, he seeks no office. Mr. Stapleton was married in 1878 to Mrs. Carrie Bush, widow of James M. Bush. Of five children which blessed this union, three are living: Annie Laurie, Carrie Sue and Jennie Florence. He is a master Mason.

T. J. THARP. Oftentimes extraordinary individual characteristics and intellectuality are found in the walks of life where they are not looked for. But they are none the less deserving conspicuous position in Memoirs such as are presented in these volumes; and, besides, they afford examples worthy of emulation. Such characteristics and example are presented in the following sketch of a member of the Tharp family. T. J. Tharp, county ordinary, Preston, Webster Co., Ga., son of David and Elizabeth Ann (Jefferson) Tharp, was born in Louisiana, Oct. 24, 1850. His paternal grandfather, C. A. Tharp, was born in 1790, and raised at a place known as "Stone creek" settlement in what is now Twiggs county, twelve miles southwest of Macon, Ga. His character and life were remarkable; he was a typical self-made man. Farming was his life-occupation; he devoted himself to it, and lived in Twiggs county until he died. When twenty-seven years of age he was ordained a minister of the Missionary Baptist church, and continued in active service until about two years before he died—a period of nearly fifty years. During this period he served four churches, for which he would never receive a cent of compensation; one of his congregations, however, presented him with a copy of Commentaries on the Bible. During his ministry he was moderator of Ebenezer Baptist association twenty-one years. He was an ardent secessionist, and when Capt. Folsom presented the flag to the first company that went from Twiggs county he made a very eloquent and soul-stirring address. He offered his sons the choice of going to school or going to work—and he saw that no time was lost in carrying out their choice. He was a large and successful planter, owned 1,600 acres of land, and freed fifty slaves. Yet this man received but two weeks' schooling, lived all his life in Twiggs county, exercised a wide influence, and was a student to the day of his death. He gave a good education to all his children that lived to be old enough to receive it. He died in 1867, aged seventy-seven years, and his widow died in 1870, aged about seventy years. They were the parents of sixteen children (two of whom were ministers), four of whom are living: Simeon, Baptist minister, Twiggs county; Martha, wife of T. H. Jones, Twiggs county; Emma, wife of E. A. Nash, Twiggs county, and a daughter, wife of Seaborn Passmore, Texas. Mr. Tharp's father, David, was born in 1816 in Twiggs county, where he was reared and educated. When twenty-two years of age he went to Louisiana on a visit to relatives, and while there met and married Miss Elizabeth Ann Jefferson. He remained there, engaged in planting until he died in 1857, aged forty-one years. To this union three children were born, of which two survive: T. J., the subject of this sketch, and Elizabeth Ann, wife of James Torbert, Sumter county. His widow died in 1858, aged about thirty-five years. Mr. Tharp came to Georgia with his sister in 1860 to live with an uncle who had no children. He was educated and grew to manhood in Twiggs county. In 1883 he went to Cuthbert, Ga., where he engaged in the sewing machine business. From there he went to Alabama, where he lived two years, and then returned to Georgia and located in Sumter county in 1885. He remained there one year and then moved to Webster county and engaged in merchandising. In 1892 he was elected ordinary for four years, and is discharging its duties with the promptitude and faithfulness characteristic of the family. Mr. Tharp was married in 1883 to Miss M. C. Cobb, a native of Alabama, by whom he has had five children, of whom four are living: Minnie C., V. T., C. T. and David C. Mr. Tharp is a prominent and influential citizen.

JAMES P. WALKER, farmer, Weston, Webster Co., Ga., son of N. F. and Susan M. (Palmer) Walker, was born in Upson county, Ga., in 1836. His paternal grandfather was James Walker, a native of North Carolina, of Welsh descent. He was a soldier in the patriot army during the revolutionary war, and commanded a brigade at the battle of Cowpens, S. C. Soon after the war he married Charity Smith, a native of South Carolina, came to Georgia and settled in Washington county, whence he moved to Putnam, and afterward to Upson county, Ga., where he died in 1848, aged ninety-six years, and was buried at Hootensville with military honors. He followed farming all his life, was highly respected, honored, and himself and wife were exemplary members of the Primitive Baptist church. They reared eight children: William W., accidentally killed himself in a deer hunt; N. F., father of the subject of this sketch; Benjamin, deceased; Allen Mc., deceased; Mary, deceased wife of Elisha Perryman; Lucretia, deceased wife of Martin Stampes; Sarah, deceased wife of Daniel Grant, and Amanda, deceased wife of Enoch Womble. Mr. Walker's father was born in Washington and reared principally in Putnam county. In 1823 he went with his parents to what is now Upson county. He was a pupil of the Hon. William H. Seward, afterward United States secretary of state under President Lincoln, who taught school in Georgia. He married in Upson county; his wife, however, was born in Hancock county, Ga., and was reared by Dr. David Kendall, her mother dying when she was quite young. She died a devoted member of the Methodist church, in Upson county, in January, 1859. He moved to Crawford county in 1874, where he subsequently died, aged ninety-three years. He was a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, was very charitably disposed and highly esteemed and popular. Politically he was an "old-line whig" and voted in 1860 for Bell and Everett. Eight children blessed their union, four living: James P., the subject of this sketch; B. F., in Crawford county; D. K., in Upson county; M. B., Crawford county. Those dead are: W. A., who was a practicing attorney at the time of his death; N. M., and one that died in infancy unnamed. Mr. Walker was reared in Upson county, where he received his primary education. His preparatory education he received at Collingsworth, Talbot Co., then under the principalship of Mr. McQueen, an accomplished educator, and then he entered Emory college, Oxford, Ga., from which he was graduated in 1858. Returning he read medicine and then attended a course of lectures at the Medical college of Georgia, Augusta, and afterward attended lectures at and was graduated from Jefferson Medical college, Philadelphia. Subsequently he read law and was admitted to the bar. He enlisted as a member of the Upson guards, which was attached to the Fifth Georgia regiment, and went to Pensacola, Fla. Soon after he was assigned to the quartermaster's department and was the ranking and commanding officer of Upson county just before the conscript act was passed. During his service—ranking as a lieutenant—he participated in the seven days' fight around Richmond, Gaines' Mill and Second Manassas, where he was wounded by the concussion of a shell, which incapacitated him for field service. He returned home and was assigned to duty in the quartermaster's department, where he remained until the war closed. After the surrender he settled in Webster county, which has since been his home, and where he has made farming his life occupation. He has been very prosperous and is a leading and very influential citizen—his literary culture and attainments not being surpassed in the county. In 1882-83 and again in 1890-91 he represented the Twelfth senatorial district in the general assembly and served on some of the most important committees. Besides some minor county offices he has held the chairmanship of the board of education for twelve years and is serving as a trustee of the lunatic asylum under appointment by Gov. W. J. Northen. Mr. Walker was married in 1859 to Mary E., daughter of Rev. J. G. M. Ball, at the time clerk of the Superior court of Webster county. To them twelve children have been born: W. F., physician, Columbus, Ga.; Sallie P., at home; Chattie L., Laura Augusta and Milton A. are still living. An interesting member of his family is Miss Blanche Harwood, a niece. Mr. Walker is a democrat and Knight Templar Mason and has been a member of the finance committee of the grand lodge of Georgia a number of years. Mrs. Walker and family are prominent and active members of the Methodist church.

J. FLETCHER WRIGHT, planter, Gooseberry, Webster Co., Ga., son of Jacob and Nancy (Howell) Wright, was born in Edgefield district, S. C., May 23, 1842. His paternal grandfather, James Wright, was a native of Ireland, who, on his emigration to this country settled in South Carolina. Mr. Wright's father was born in Edgefield district, in that state, and lived there until he died in 1863. His mother was a daughter of Joseph Howell. Mr. Wright grew to manhood and was educated in Edgefield district, and in 1862 enlisted in Company A, Twenty-second South Carolina regiment, and remained with it until the surrender. He bore a part in the battles of Secessionville and Kingston, after which the command was ordered to Virginia, went with the army into Maryland, and then participated in the battles at Petersburg. At this battle he was shot in the head by a negro soldier and for eight months lingered from the effects of the wound—during eight weeks of which he was blind and paralyzed. After the war he returned to South Carolina, where he remained until 1867, when he came to Georgia and settled in Webster county. He is a good and prosperous farmer, a genial gentleman, and very much liked. His home is a beautiful one, situated about four miles from Weston. Mr. Wright was married in 1869 to Miss Carrie, daughter of John Jennings, formerly of Edgefield district, S. C., by whom he has had one child—Lovenia, wife of W. M. Dunn. Mr. Wright is a very ardent democrat, but never sought or held office. He is also a member of the masonic fraternity, and himself and wife are members of the Missionary Baptist church.

WHITE COUNTY.

JOHN RANDOLPH GLEN, editor and publisher, Cleveland, White Co., Ga., son of James and Susan (Littlejohn) Glen, was born in Nacoochee Valley, White Co., Dec. 10, 1866. His paternal grandfather, John Glen, was a native of Lochwinnoch, Scotland, a skilled mechanic, who emigrated to this country about 1820, and settled in Orange county, N. Y., where he married Miss Eliza Baldwin. He afterward came to Georgia and settled in Athens, Clarke Co., where he was engaged in building and outfitting the old Athens (first) cotton factory. Subsequently he moved to Nachoochee Valley, where he died in 1880, aged eighty-six years. His wife died there in 1871. Mr. Glen's father was born in Glen county; his mother was a daughter of Abraham Littlejohn of North Carolina; and both are now living in Nachoochee Valley. To them six children have been born, all of whom survive: Mamie; Annie; Jessie, wife of Oscar Kenimer; Lizzie; James L.; and John R., the subject of this sketch. Mr. Glen was reared and educated in White county, and from 1882 to 1886 engaged in teaching school; the next year he went to Fort Wayne, Tex., and engaged in merchandising two years. From there he went to the mining districts of Montana, and for awhile engaged in mining. Later he embarked in commercial enterprises at Pecos City, El Paso and Corpus Christi, Tex. In 1891 he returned to his home in White county, and after a brief service as editor of the "Clarkesville Advertiser" he bought the "Cleveland Progress," of which he has since been proprietor and editor. It is the organ of the county and of the democratic party, ranks high among the weekly papers of Georgia, has a large and excellent patronage; and while it has been a great financial success, has attained to marked influence in northeast Georgia. In addition to his newspaper he has a fine job printing outfit, from which he turns out excellent work. In 1893 Mr. Glen's services to his party were recognized and rewarded by his appointment as postmaster at Cleveland.

JOHN J. KIMSEY, lawyer, Cleveland, White Co., Ga., son of Thomas M. and Emeline (Stover) Kimsey, was born in Cherokee county, May 23, 1849. His paternal great-grandfather, Benjamin Kimsey, was a native of Ireland, emigrated to this country before the revolutionary war, and settled in North Carolina. His grandfather, also named Benjamin, was born in Buncombe county, N. C., where he lived and farmed until he died. Mr. Kimsey's father was born in Buncombe county, N. C., in 1802, where he was raised. Early in life, he, with his brother William, came to Georgia and settled in Habersham (now White) county, and engaged in farming and stock-raising. For forty years of his life he was a minister of the Baptist church, and preached in the border counties of Georgia and North Carolina, by whose people he was very highly esteemed. He died May 1, 1864. His wife was a native of Habersham county and by her he had nine children: Sarah, wife of G. M. Dodd; Rebecca, wife of Hon. W. A. Reeves, White county; Adeline, wife of W. G. Blackwell; James P.; John J., the subject of this sketch; Georgia, wife of T. A. Christy; Singleton M.; Henry D., and Louisa. Mr. Kimsey was about a year old when his father settled in what is now White county, in which he was raised and educated. Deciding to adopt the legal profession he commenced the study of law under Hon. M. G. Boyd, then of Cleveland, now of Dahlonga, Ga., and at the March term of Hall superior court, 1873, Judge George D. Rice, presiding, he was admitted to the bar. He located at once in Hiawassee, Towns Co., but in 1874 he moved to Cleveland, where he has since lived and practiced law. He has risen rapidly in his profession, won an enviable reputation, and the confidence of a large and influential clientage. He is regarded as one of the soundest lawyers in the circuit, is a safe counselor and an able advocate, and does a large general practice in the northeastern circuit. He has managed important cases successfully before the supreme court of Georgia, and had much to do with establishing judicial precedents in that tribunal. In 1877—at the age of twenty-eight—he was elected to represent White county in the general assembly, and was re-elected in 1880 and 1882, serving three terms. Among other committees he was placed on that on judiciary, one of the most important, where his legal acquirements made him a potential power in shaping its recommendations for legislative action. His influence and usefulness as a wise legislator, and in behalf of the interests of his constituents cannot be overestimated. Oct. 29, 1894, he was elected by the general assembly judge of the superior court of the northeastern judicial circuit for the term of four years. Mr. Kimsey was married Dec. 23, 1876, to Miss Lou E., daughter of Hon. C. P. Craig of White county, and formerly a member of the general assembly. Three children have blessed this union: Minnie, Bertha and Bonnie. Early in 1886 Mrs. Kimsey died, and in the latter part of the same year he married Miss Nora, daughter of M. R. T. Kenimer of Cleveland, and of the children born to them two—Fannie and Clifton Clay—are living. Being comparatively young, and of commanding ability, few men have before them brighter prospects for professional distinction and political preferment.

GEORGE SCOTT KYTLE, lawyer and county school commissioner, Cleveland, White Co., Ga., son of Calvin H. and Caroline H. (Dean) Kytile, was born in White county, July 7, 1870. On his father's side his family is of German ancestry, his great-grandfather, Zachariah Kytile, having been born in Germany, and emigrated to this country and settled in South Carolina before the revolutionary war, during which he was a soldier in the patriot army. His paternal grandfather, Zachariah Kytile, was born in Spartanburg, S. C., where he grew to manhood and married, and afterward migrated to Georgia and settled in Habersham county, where he died in 1868. He was a farmer and raised a family of ten children. Mr. Kytile's father was born in Habersham county, Dec. 3, 1830, and received such education as could be obtained at the country schools in that locality and period. After completing his own education he taught school eleven years in all, in Habersham and White counties before and after the war. In 1862 he enlisted in the Third Georgia cavalry, which formed a part of Gen. Wheeler's command, served during the war and actively participated in the fatiguing marches and bloody skirmishes and battles which made that command so famous for daring and bravery. Since the war he has been elected to many offices of honor and responsibility, all of which he has filled acceptably, serving the best interests of the people. In 1868 he was elected to represent White county in the general assembly. In 1876 he was elected a member of the county board of education, and was re-elected for twelve years consecutively, rendering efficient and valuable service. Recognizing his ability and appreciating what he had done, the people, in 1888, elected him county commissioner, and when his term expired re-elected him. He resigned, however, in 1893, when he was succeeded by his son. He is justly regarded as one of White county's most useful citizens, and is held in very high estimation. In 1865 he was married to Miss Caroline H., daughter of Wiley Dean, born in Habersham, and now a citizen of White county. Mr. Dean married Miss Anna Wiley, by whom he had nine children, and died while in the army during the late war. His wife was born in 1832 and died in 1876. To Mr.

Kytle's parents thirteen children have been born, all of whom survive: John Wiley; George Scott, the subject of this sketch; Martha E., wife of John M. Haynes; Mary J., wife of Albert H. Henderson; Emma J.; Henry M.; Robert Lee; Alexander Stephens; Anna; Beulah; Birdie May; Jura and Frances. Mr. Kytle received his primary education in the common schools of the county, and then attended the Hiawassee (Towns county) high school. Then, September, 1889, he entered the sophomore class, Mercer university, where he took a classical course and graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in June, 1892, ranking high in the class. Without loss of time he went to Lexington, Ky., and entered the Commercial college there and took a full business course, graduating December following. During vacations, while pursuing his studies, he taught school to defray his expenses. Returning home, he entered the office of Hon. John J. Kimsey, under whose able preceptorship he read law, and was admitted to the bar at the March term, 1894, of Towns county superior court, Judge C. J. Wellborn, presiding. He at once opened an office in Cleveland and entered upon the practice under the most encouraging auspices, and the promise of a brilliantly successful professional career. The estimation in which he is held by his fellow-citizens in White county could not be more emphatically expressed than it was by his election in 1893, at the age of twenty-two, as county school commissioner, the youngest man in the state honored by being elected to that very responsible office. The energy and self-reliant determined spirit he has always displayed, and his exceptionally rapid advancement accomplished by his persistent exertions while yet so young, guarantee pre-eminence in whatever he undertakes. Of scholarly attainments, and ambitious, broad-minded, and possessing liberal views, he may be regarded as one of the rising young men of the state—one who will leave his impress on her history.

ELIJAH F. STARR, physician and surgeon, Nacoochee, White Co., Ga., son of Elijah and Hannah (Townsend) Starr, was born in Greene county, Ga., July 20, 1820. His paternal grandfather, Henry Starr, was a native of Maryland, who married a Virginia lady, and migrated to Georgia about the beginning of the present century. Dr. Starr's father was born in Maryland in 1780, and about the time he reached manhood he came to Georgia, where he married his wife, a member of an old Virginia family, and, in 1824, moved to Habersham county and bought and settled on land now included in White county. He was a farmer and stock-raiser and died at his home Jan. 5, 1837. His widow died in 1870, aged ninety years. They reared a family of six children, two sons and four daughters, of whom the doctor is the sole survivor. Dr. Starr was about four years old when his parents settled in Habersham (now White) county, where he was educated and grew to manhood. He completed his education in Clarkesville, where the late Stanhope Erwin was one of his instructors. Having determined to adopt the medical profession he began the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. William J. Rusk, of Clarkesville, and then entered the medical college of Georgia, Augusta, from which he graduated in 1844. He located at first at Nacoochee, but very soon afterward went to Fairmont, Gordon Co., Ga., whence, a few years later, he moved to Rome, Ga., where he established a fine professional reputation and a remunerative practice. In 1856 he returned to Nacoochee, where he located permanently. Early in the civil war he was commissioned surgeon of the Twenty-fourth Georgia regiment, which was assigned to Gen. Longstreet's division, army of northern Virginia, with which he rendered three years' skillful and valuable service on many of the bloodiest battlefields of that disastrous conflict. Among the battles in which, with his command, he participated, were: Gettysburg, Antietam, second Manassas, seven days' fight around Richmond, siege of Knoxville, Chickamauga, etc. His health failing, he resigned and came home and resumed the practical duties of his profession—his fame and patronage increasing with the years, and embracing White and Habersham counties. He has made a study of, and has been especially successful in the treatment of acute diseases and inflammatory rheumatism. The first year of his practice he successfully treated a case of inguinal hernia in Towns county, and has since operated for the same conditions with equal satisfactory results. He is widely and favorably known to the college faculties and the medical profession generally throughout the state, and particularly to the people of White and contiguous counties. Dr. Starr was married in May, 1846, to Miss Hannah M., daughter of Maj. Edward Williams, of Nocoochee valley, by whom he has had ten children, two of whom, only, survive: Lulu, wife of C. L. Hutchins, Gwinnett county; and Ellene, at home. Of the others, Mary H., died Sept. 15, 1893; Amelia E., wife of F. L. Asbury, died Aug. 26, 1893; Tattie, matron Wesleyan Female college, Macon, Ga., died Sept. 20, 1893; George Williams, died Sept. 5, 1893, and four died young.

ABNER FRANKLIN UNDERWOOD, physician and surgeon, Cleveland, White Co., Ga., son of Dr. Joseph and Macriah (Dunagan) Underwood, was born in Elbert county, Ga., Aug. 6, 1825. His paternal grandfather, Joseph Underwood, was one of seven brothers of English descent, born in Virginia, who after his marriage migrated to Georgia and settled in Elbert county near the Savannah river. His maternal great-great-grandfather was a native of Ireland, who emigrated to this country and settled in South Carolina, where he married. His maternal great-grandfather, Joseph Dunagan, son of the above, was born in South Carolina, was a frontiersman and a local Methodist preacher, and a bonafide pioneer of western civilization. He penetrated the then western wilds as far as Kentucky, where he met Daniel Boone, and, later, helped him build the first blockhouse, constructed on the present site of the city of Nashville. He died west of the Mississippi early in the present century. His mother's father, Abner Dunagan, was a prominent farmer in Habersham county. Dr. Underwood's father was born in Elbert county in 1799, where he was raised and where he married. In 1832 he moved to Habersham county, where he practiced medicine, which he continued during his active life. In 1872 he moved to Alabama, where he died in 1875. He practiced his profession, he always declared, because he loved to do so, not for gain. Of the children born to him ten reached maturity: Abner F., the subject of this sketch; Thomas Gibbs, M. D., Franklin county, Ga.; Delilah, wife of Jephtha A. Merritt, White county; Frances E., wife of M. V. Edwards, White county; Bersheba Adeline, deceased wife of Ped Latham; Sarah Emeline, widow of John C. McMackin, Atlanta; Mary L., deceased wife of Thomas L. De Voe; Jasper W., M. D., White county; William B., Baptist minister, Texas; Reuben Case, died in Kansas in 1871, at which time he was a student at law. Dr. Underwood was about seven years old when his parents moved from Elbert to Habersham, and settled on land now included in White county. Here he received the best education to be obtained under frontier and pioneer conditions. Approaching manhood he decided on being a physician, commenced its study under the direction of his father, and in January, 1847, was duly licensed and began the practice, in which he was eminently successful from the start, professionally and financially. Some years afterward he attended lectures at the Atlanta Medical college, from which he graduated in 1860. Since that time he has successfully practiced in White and adjoining counties, doing an extensive and remunerative practice. But Dr. Underwood could not be restricted to the routine of his practice; the activity of his mind and the interest he felt in the public good and advancement, impelled him to be an active participant in the politics of the day. He was opposed to secession, but when it became an actuality he patriotically went with the state; believing in the right, he seriously questioned the policy of secession. He was steadfastly a supporter of Mr. Stephens' policy of compromise, and, as such was elected in 1863 to represent the Thirty-second senatorial district in the general assembly, serving his constituents faithfully and acceptably. In 1865 he was elected a member of the constitutional convention; and was also elected a delegate to the constitutional convention of 1877. In this convention he had the distinguishing honor of being named as one of the special judiciary committee of twenty-six, of which Hon. Robert Toombs was chairman, the most important committee of that body, and whose recommendations, engrafted on the constitution, have molded subsequent legislation. After the war he sincerely and patriotically accepted the situation, and was ready to accept the measures of reconstruction, save those incorporated in the fifteenth amendment to the Federal constitution. He has been and is a firm supporter of the popular and uniform education of white and black; and believes that the education of the colored race will, in the end, solve the great racial question—and he is a stanch supporter of his conviction. He has all his life been a strong and consistent democrat, frequently sent to its conventions, and invited to its councils—in all of which he has been prominent and influential—in this respect his zeal and vigor are unimpaired by age. Dr. Underwood was happily married June 3, 1850, to Sarah Ann—born in Lumpkin county, Ga.—daughter of John and Martha Cantrell, and of the children born to them five survive: Joseph W. H.; Amanda M., wife of George M. Quillian, Hall county; Thomas G., physician, born March 9, 1858, now at Maysville, Banks Co., Ga.; Hopson B., born Jan. 8, 1861, farmer, White county; and Martha L., born March 23, 1864, wife of Dr. A. S. Cantrell, Milton county. On Dec. 11, 1890, Dr. Underwood contracted a second marriage with Mrs. Mary J. (nee Eubanks) Faulkner, daughter of Giles Eubanks, in whose congenial companionship he is spending the closing years of his active and useful life. Joseph W. H. Underwood was born in Hall county, Ga., Sept. 15; at the June term, 1877, of Towns county superior court, was admitted to the bar, Judge George N. Lester presiding. He has an excellent practice in the superior courts of his own and adjoining circuits, and in the supreme court of Georgia. He is a sound lawyer, ranks well with the profession, and has a large and influential clientage. In 1875 he was appointed postmaster at Cleveland, but resigned in 1877. Oct. 25, of that year, he married Miss Mary O., daughter of John H. and Nancy Craven of White county.

EDWIN P. WILLIAMS, farmer, Nacoochee valley, White Co., Ga., son of Edward and Mary (Brown) Williams, was born in Burke county, N. C., Nov. 27, 1814. His father was born in Lowell, Mass., the latter part of the last century. When a young man he came to Charleston, S. C., and, later, went thence to Morgantown, Burke Co., N. C., where he married his wife, who was a daughter of Daniel Brown, one of the first settlers and oldest citizens of the county. He came to Georgia in 1823, and purchased a large tract of land in Nacoochee valley, then in Habersham, now in White county. He died just before the war. Mr. Williams was nine years old when the family migrated to this state, and grew to manhood and was educated in Nacoochee valley, in the shadow of Mount Yonah; and there, hale and hearty, at the age of eighty, he still lives. Farming has been his life occupation; but, in connection with it, he has conducted a general merchandise store, and stock-raising. Mr. Williams' superior business qualifications, unswerving integrity and uprightness of character and sound judgment pointed to him as a general administrator of estates, as a consequence of which very many estates, of relatives and others, have been entrusted to his management, and all accountings have been made with the most scrupulous exactitude, giving satisfaction in each case. Although utterly indifferent to political office, he was induced to become a candidate in 1858 to represent the county in the general assembly; and after a most exciting and hard-fought contest succeeded in defeating Col. William B. Shelton, one of the ablest and most popular citizens then in the county. It is needless to add that Mr. Williams represented the county with his accustomed fidelity and faithfulness, and of course to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. He was also the contracting builder of the public buildings at Cleveland, the county site of the new county (White) just before the war—a work honestly done. Among the interesting incidents of the north Georgia pioneer are the visits he remembers and likes to tell about, of John C. Calhoun to his father's home in the long ago. That distinguished statesman once owned valuable mining interests in that section, where there is a mine now that bears his name. Mr. Williams is yet active and on the alert, now as ever, for the new and good, and no citizen ranks higher in all those excellencies which make the model citizen. Mr. Williams was happily married in Burke county, N. C., in 1838, to Jane Elizabeth, daughter of Alfred Perkins, a descendant of one of the oldest and most prominent families in that county, and a cousin of Gov. Caldwell. Of ten children born to them the following are living: Alfred, Nacoochee; Robert, Nacoochee; Sarah Jane, wife of Gaylor Bristol, Nacoochee; Lusannah, wife of J. R. Lumsden; Hattie, wife of J. L. Johnson, Gainesville, Ga. Of those deceased, Church, a youth of unusual promise, entered the Confederate service, and died of brain fever at Goldsboro, N. C., in 1862, when only sixteen years of age.

WHITFIELD COUNTY.

JOSEPH BOGLE, of Whitfield county, residing in Dalton, and at present ordinary of that county, was born in Blount county, Tenn., in 1843. His father, Capt. John W. Bogle, died soon after the birth of Joseph, and in 1844 the latter was brought by his mother to Whitfield county. Later the family settled in Gordon county, where Mr. Bogle was reared, and where he learned the tanner's trade while in the service of his uncle, Joseph Bogle, a prominent citizen of Bartow county, and at one time justice of the inferior court of the county. The opening of the war found him thus engaged. His sympathies and surroundings naturally prompted him to take sides with the Confederacy. He enlisted as a private soldier in Company I, Fortieth Georgia infantry, commanded by Col. Abda Johnson, and shortly afterward was engaged in the battle of Tazewell, the siege of Cumberland Gap and Perryville. He fought in the Tennessee and Kentucky campaign under Gen. Bragg. His regiment being ordered to Vicksburg, he proceeded thither. He fought at the battle of Baker's creek and throughout the celebrated siege of Vicksburg in May and June, 1863. During the siege he was severely wounded, having been shot in the left arm, the ball lodging in a Testament in the pocket of his coat; he thus miraculously escaped death. After the capture of Vicksburg, on July 4, 1863, he was paroled and returned to his home.

On being exchanged a few months later he rejoined his regiment in time to participate in the battle of Missionary Ridge, although by reason of his wound he was unable to take an active part in the fight. For a short time he was detailed to serve in the postoffice department of the army. He accompanied his regiment from the Tennessee line to Atlanta, and was engaged in that series of battles and skirmishes which finally resulted in the capture of that city in 1864. He fought at Resaca, New Hope Church, Kennesaw Mountain and Peachtree Creek. He was finally made prisoner of war in front of Atlanta and sent to Camp Chase, Ohio, where he remained until the close of the war. On his release he settled permanently in Whitfield county and engaged first in the tanning business and then in agricultural pursuits. About 1880 he settled in Dalton. He was elected and served three terms as alderman and one term as tax receiver of Whitfield county to the eminent satisfaction of the public, a fact best evidenced by his nomination and election to the office of ordinary of Whitfield county in 1893. He is an efficient and capable official, and the people of Whitfield county could not intrust business to better hands. Mr. Bogle is an active member of the Baptist church at Dalton. He is a member of the American Legion of Honor. He has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Lou Longley, whom he married in 1868. Six children are the fruit of this marriage: Bertha, wife of W. J. Vandiver, agent for the Georgia Central railroad at Barnsville, Ga.; John W., foreman of the Cherokee Manufacturing company at Dalton; Frank H., engaged in farming in Whitfield county; Lena, Edgar and William. His first wife died in 1882. In 1884 he was again married to Miss Christina Scott, of Whitfield county, and by this marriage they have two children: Walter Scott and Grace. The father of Mr. Bogle was a native of Tennessee. His mother was Nancy J. Henderson, also born in that state. His only sister, Mrs. William Dillard, of Gordon county, is deceased. The family are of Scotch-Irish extraction. Three brothers of the name of Bogle settled in the United States, Pennsylvania, Virginia and North Carolina respectively. Mr. Bogle is a descendant of the Virginia family, some of whom settled in Tennessee.

D. C. P. CLARK, one of the oldest citizens of Whitfield county, was born in this county on April 20, 1836. Whitfield has always been his residence. He grew up on a farm and has been engaged during the chief part of his lifetime in agricultural pursuits. His father was Benjamin Clark, born in Lincoln county, N. C., May 31, 1793. He married Lucy Dalton, daughter of Rev. John Dalton, a Baptist minister in Rutherford county, that state. Benjamin Clark was the first settler in what is now Tunnel Hill, arriving there March 15, 1832. He engaged in farming and followed that occupation during the remainder of his life. He served in the war of 1812. In 1836 he went to Texas and participated in the movement led by Davy Crockett and Gen. Sam Houston, which resulted in the independence of Texas. For this service he was afterward paid a liberal sum of money by the state of Texas. At the commencement of the late war he entered the Confederate service and performed military duty for six months, when, owing to ill health and old age, he honorably retired. He survived until Dec. 6, 1876, and died in Whitfield county, aged eighty-four years. His wife died Jan. 8, 1882. In his early life he represented Haywood county in the legislature of North Carolina. By his marriage he had nine children: Mary T., wife of John S. Martin; Zachariah D.; Myria S., wife of Francis Williams; Lucy M., wife of H. M. Ward; Benjamin M., William S., John J., Alfred W. and David C. P. Mr. D. C. P. Clark entered the Confederate service, enlisting in Company D, of the First Confederate Georgia regiment, commanded by Col. George A. Smith, of Macon. His first service was at Fort Gaines, Ala., protecting the coast line, May, 1863, when his command was ordered to Tennessee to join Gen. Bragg, who was then making preparations for the celebrated campaign of that year. He fought at the battle of Chickamauga, where he was slightly wounded. During this battle and the remainder of his service he acted as sergeant of his company. On Nov. 25 he fought at Missionary Ridge and later went into winter quarters at Dalton. At the opening of the Atlanta campaign his regiment fought under Johnston from Dalton to Atlanta, constituting the reserve force at Resaca, and was engaged at New Hope church, Kennesaw Mountain, Peachtree Creek and at Atlanta. During the battle of Atlanta, July 22, 1864, his term of service having expired, and being unable to obtain a furlough to return to his home, and recognizing the Confederate cause to be a failure he retired from the ranks and withdrew to the north of the Ohio river. A few months later he returned to his home and again engaged in farming. During the past fifteen years he has been justice of the peace and has served the public in that capacity faithfully and well. He is an all-round good citizen, with a large and influential number of stanch friends in Whitfield county. On Jan. 20, 1859, Mr. Clark was married to Mrs. Emily McSpadden, daughter of Isaac Hufaker. They have six children: Mitchell L., David P., deceased, Auroria T., Annie L., Isaac O. and Robert R. His paternal grandfather, Benjamin Clark, was a soldier of the war of the revolution who fought for the liberties of the colonies. His maternal grandfather was John Dalton, who also fought on the colonial side in that war. Mr. Clark is a member of the Baptist church.

H. P. COLVARD, one of the rising young business men of Dalton, Ga., is a native of the state of Tennessee, and was born at Pikeville, Bledsoe Co., April 27, 1869. He was reared in that county and educated in White county, completing his studies in 1887. For a short time he engaged in merchandising in Bledsoe county, and then for four years was a traveling salesman for the Southern Monumental company, of Chattanooga, Tenn. He finally settled in Dalton on Nov. 11, 1892, and resolved to embark in business on his own account. He became engaged in the marble and stone trade under the firm name of Baker & Colvard, manufacturers and dealers in marble and granite monuments. The business of the firm prospered during two years, engaged extensively in that industry, and became one of the reliable institutions of the city. In January, 1895, Mr. Colvard purchased the interest of his partner and became the sole operator of the plant, which is now known as the Dalton marble works. An excellent grade of work is being turned out by the present proprietor, the market for his product extending from Texas to Maryland and throughout the South generally. Mr. Colvard is a shrewd business man, possessing a good share of energy and activity in his business methods and transactions. He is one of the most popular business men of Dalton, and stands well in business and social circles, at all times displaying those qualities inherent to success in life. His father was Jesse Colvard, who was born near Murphy, N. C., Oct. 7, 1800. By his second marriage to Miss Sarah Cooper they had three sons and five daughters: Nancy, wife of W. M. Smith, of Chattanooga; Ann, wife of M. De Board, of Pikeville, Tenn.; Jennie, wife of John Childers, now of Texas; W. A. Colvard, of Kentucky; H. P., Dalton; A. T., of Pikeville, Tenn.; Florence, wife of R. Pendergrass, of Billingsly, Tenn.; and Lilah, residing with her parents in Tennessee. The father of Mr. Colvard died on Jan. 23, 1876, at Pikeville. Mr. Colvard is a member of the M. E. church south, is a master Mason—member of Dalton lodge No. 105; a member of the K. of P., Dalton lodge No. 29, and of the order of Woodmen of the World, at Dalton.

JOHN F. HARRIS, M. D., belongs to one of the oldest families of Murray county, where he was born in 1854. His father was Miniard Harris, born in North Carolina in 1800, who settled in Gwinnett county in his youth and early in the 30's moved to Murray county, where he passed the remainder of his life engaged in planting. He was one among the successful farmers of his section and enjoyed many years of prosperity. He filled numerous offices of trust and responsibility in his county, including those of treasurer and tax collector. He married Miss Martha M. Holland, daughter of Jacob Holland, one of the first settlers of Murray county, but formerly of South Carolina. They reared ten children, two daughters and eight sons: Eliza, wife of J. A. Glass; Martha, deceased; James F., a physician of prominence, Murray county; W. D. Harris, an eminent lawyer of Texas, and at present judge of the district court in that state; Dr. John F., subject of present sketch; T. J. Harris, a practicing lawyer at Summerville, Ga.; D. H., a dentist at Dalton; M. B., a prominent member of the bar at Fort Worth, Tex.; S. H., a physician at Nashville, Tenn., and George W., an attorney, Fort Worth, Tex. Miniard Harris died in Murray county in 1867. His wife survives him. Dr. John F. Harris was educated in the schools of Murray county, and in 1876 entered the North Georgia Agricultural college at Dahlonega and pursued a course of study during two years. He next taught school in Murray county and read law at Spring Place, was admitted to the bar, but never engaged in the practice of that profession. From his early youth his heart was set on the study and practice of medicine. He accordingly placed himself under the guidance of Dr. W. Anderson, of Spring Place, and commenced the study of medicine. Later he attended, from 1881 to 1883, the Eclectic college of medicine in Atlanta, and was graduated from that institution in 1883 with special honors and was valedictorian of his class. He began the practice of his profession in his native county, and in 1884 he moved to Parker county, Tex., where for three years he enjoyed a large and lucrative practice and rapidly rose to prominence in his profession. Ill health compelled him to abandon his adopted state; he returned to Murray county and resumed his practice. In 1893 he settled in Dalton. His experience as a physician has been very extensive and he stands high in the medical fraternity in North Georgia. His professional skill and private character are vouched for by the best citizens in his community. His success in treating diseases of children and also diseases of the mind and nervous system has been remarkable. He was a member of the State Medical association of Texas and is now of the Medical association of this state. He was recently appointed by Gov. Atkinson a member of the state board of medical examiners. In 1881 he married Miss Mary E. Pindiset, of Tennessee. They have two children: Ray Winifred and Laura Ella.

CHARLES H. HUMPHREYS, of Dalton, a prominent educator, was born in Bradley county, Tenn., June 10, 1856, where he lived with his parents until 1869, when he moved with his family to Murray county, Ga. He was educated at the public schools and at Sumach seminary, where he pursued a classical course of study during four years, and was graduated in 1882. He finished his studies at Holbrook Normal university, near Knoxville, Tenn. At intervals during his period of study he taught school at Rock Spring, in Walker county, and the proceeds of his salary were expended in defraying his expenses at the seminary. During the years 1883-84-85 he taught school in Gordon county, at Coosawattee seminary. In 1885 he became principal of the Sumach seminary. There he continued to administer instruction and direct the study of students from several states during five years. In 1890 he moved to Dalton and gave instruction in music for upward of two years. He resumed his place at Sumach seminary, where he remained until 1894, when he entered upon his duties as principal of the Dalton high school and located permanently in that city. Mr. Humphreys is a gentleman of excellent educational qualifications and possesses the art of imparting successfully his thoughts and acquirements of mind to others. His manner is refined and dignified, yet devoid of fastidiousness and ostentation. His career as an educator has been eminently successful. Early in life he cultivated a taste for music and became proficient in that art after studying under distinguished masters. His aim in life has chiefly been the development of the moral and mental faculties of youth, and hundreds of his former pupils in different states will bear testimony to the value of his labors, and the high standing of the institution over which he so long presided. He is a ruling elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian church at Sumach. He belongs to the masonic fraternity and is past-worshipful master of Sumach lodge No. 55. For many years he has been identified with the Sunday school work in his church and has been superintendent of the Sunday school and chorister. In 1882 Prof. Humphreys was married to Miss Lucy A. Harris, daughter of Capt. W. G. Harris, of Murray county, a playmate of his youth, and during their married life his assistant and co-laborer at the seminary. For six years he enjoyed the blessings which their union brought him, then his wife died in Murray county in 1889. Three years later, in 1892, he was married to Miss Lenora Smith, daughter of Dr. F. W. Smith, of Spring City, Tenn. One child, Mary E., has been born to them. Dr. Smith is a native of Ohio, where he practiced medicine for twenty-five years. About 1885 he emigrated to Tennessee and later settled at Dalton, where he now lives and practices his profession. The father of Prof. Humphreys was Rev. John R. Humphreys, born in Tennessee in 1826 of Irish descent. For many years he was a successful teacher and a Presbyterian minister in the state of Tennessee. He married Miss Mary Henkle, of that state, daughter of George Henkle, a native of Germany. Eight children were the issue of their marriage, four of whom survive: William L., a farmer in Texas; Sarah C., wife of John S. Hambright, also of Texas; Charles H., and Rebecca E., wife of John F. Smith, of Dalton. The father of Prof. Humphreys died in Murray county, Dec. 31, 1878. His mother died Dec. 25, 1891, in Whitfield county.

HENRY K. MAIN, physician, Dalton, was born in Ashe county, N. C., in 1844. In 1849 his parents settled in Gordon county, Ga., and there he was reared. The ancestor of the Main family in North Carolina was Henry Main, the great-grandfather of Dr. Main, who was born in Salisbury, England, and immigrated to Ashe county in the last century. He fought in the colonial army during the revolutionary war, was taken prisoner at the battle of Brandywine, and pressed into the British service, in which he compulsorily continued during the remainder of the war. His son was Charles Main, grandfather of Dr. Main, also born in Ashe county. Dr. Main's father was Lemuel Main, the seventh son in a family of sixteen children, born and reared in Ashe county. He married in 1843 Miss Sarah Kinnamon, near Taylorsville, Tenn., and had four children. Of these, Barbara E., wife of L. J. Cook, Blue Spring, Ga.; Delara, wife of J. S. Dupree of Whitfield county; and Dr. Main, survive. At the commencement of the war, Dr. Main was in his eighteenth year. The chivalrous spirit of youth incited him to enlist in Company A, Thirty-sixth Georgia infantry, commanded by Col. Jesse A.

Glenn, and he was made sergeant of his company. He fought in the Tennessee and Kentucky campaign in 1862, and was engaged at Tazewell, Cumberland Gap, Richmond, Ky., and Murfreesboro. His command having been ordered to the support of Vicksburg, he fought in 1863 at Baker's Creek, where in a hand-to-hand contest he shot down the commander of a battery and performed gallant service on the field. He fought through the celebrated siege of Vicksburg and after its capture he was paroled. He again joined his regiment after the battle of Chickamauga, and was engaged at Missionary Ridge. The winter of 1863-64 he passed in winter quarters at Dalton, and the following spring and summer he served in the Atlanta campaign. He fought under Johnston and at Resaca, but sickness compelled him to abandon the service during the Atlanta campaign, and he finally returned to his home after undergoing the hardship of soldier-life for upwards of three years. Having qualified himself after the war for the medical profession by a thorough course of study, he engaged in its practice during a period of ten years at Blue Springs, Sugar Valley and Calhoun. He was very successful, and in 1879 he moved to Dalton, where he has continued to reside and follow his profession. He has also for many years conducted, in connection with his practice, a large and prosperous drug business. In 1877 Dr. Main married Mrs. De Alva C. Whittaker of Smithville, Ga. By this marriage they had one son, now deceased, and Mrs. Main died in November, 1882, at Dalton. April 10, 1889, he married Miss Alice McNabb of Knoxville, Tenn. They have had three children, one son and three daughters, of whom the daughters survive: Florence, Myrtle and Susan Electa. Dr. Main is an active and widely known member of most of the benevolent and secret organizations of this state. He is a royal arch Mason, a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and belongs to the uniformed rank of the Knights of Pythias. He is also a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, and has been lodge deputy of the Good Templars at Dalton. He has given much attention to the art of music, which he has thoroughly mastered, and has been three times elected president of the northwestern musical convention at Dalton. He has also served as vice-president of the Pharmaceutical society. For many years he has been a member of the Joseph E. Johnston camp of Confederate veterans at Dalton, and in 1894 was a delegate from that camp to the annual reunion at Birmingham, Ala. Dr. Main has also served as president of the Thirty-sixth Georgia Regiment association since 1889. He is in every way one of Dalton's substantial and worthy citizens, and is an excellent representative of the conservative but progressive element which controls and directs both the social and business affairs of that city.

FRANK MANLY. Among the enterprising business men of Dalton the name of Frank Manly, president of the Manly Machine company, appropriately finds a place in this chapter. Mr. Manly was born in Dalton in 1866. He received his preliminary education in the schools of his native town. In 1882 he entered Emory college, Oxford, Ga., and pursued a classical course of study during three years. In 1885 he went to Philadelphia and became the representative of the Manly & Cooper iron works of that city. For three years he continued in the service of that institution, traveling in its interest through the northern and western states, and rapidly acquired a practical knowledge of his business, which afterward became of important value to him. In 1888 he returned to Dalton and established the foundry and machine shop, and the business now known as the Manly Machine company. His enterprise soon gained a sound footing among the manufacturing institutions of Dalton. The specialty of this company is the manufacture of saw-mill machinery, boilers and engines, which are being produced on an extensive scale for the southern market—the demand coming from every southern state. This plant is a favorable and important one among the industries of Dalton, and from its very incipency the establishment has been a financial success to the stockholders; and may be considered a fixture among the successful business plants in that enterprising city. In 1892 Mr. Manly married Miss Maggie Pitner, daughter of Maj. T. H. Pitner, an old and prominent citizen of Whitfield county. They have one child, Howard. The father of Mr. Manly is Dr. W. J. Manly, for many years a practicing physician at Dalton, now retired from the active duties of his profession. He was born in Dorset, Vt., in 1821, where he studied medicine and practiced during many years. He married Miss Martha Willard of Malone, N. Y., and located at Dalton about 1859. They have four children: Maggie, wife of Dr. C. P. Gordon, a leading physician at Dalton; Gertrude, wife of Hon. T. R. Jones, a prominent member of the Whitfield bar, a lady of excellent and accomplished literary attainments; Mr. Frank Manly; and Nelly of Dalton. Both of the parents of Mr. Manly are still living. Mr. Manly takes an active interest in the progress and welfare of his town, and is possessed of that hopeful and trusting spirit which invariably distinguishes the successful business man. He is prominent in any and all legitimate movements having for their object the advancement and prosperity of Dalton and its people. He fairly represents the spirit which at the present time predominates in the social and industrial life of the south; influenced by a laudable ambition to seize the opportunity which fortune and the occasion presents to meliorate the condition and enhance the value of property. The south is fortunate in possessing such stable and persevering characters, and Dalton is happy in being classed among the number of business towns where this element is daily recognized. Mr. Manly is one of the active members of the Presbyterian church at Dalton and one of its staunch supporters.

REV. M. A. MATHEWS. This scholarly and distinguished divine, at present pastor of the First Presbyterian church at Dalton, and justly considered one of the ablest members of the clerical profession in this state, is a native of Georgia. He was born at Calhoun, in Gordon county, in 1867, and was reared in that county. His father is M. L. Mathews, a native of Halifax county, N. C., born in 1827, and was the son of Frank C. Mathews, a prominent planter born in that state in 1765 and died in 1850. M. L. Mathews settled in Gordon county, Ga., about 1840. He married in 1851, at Summerville, in Chattooga county, Miss Melinda Clemmons, daughter of George W. Clemmons, for many years engaged in the hotel business at that place. Melinda Clemmons was born in Jackson county, Tenn., in 1833, and moved with her parents to Chattooga county in 1843. By that marriage they had twelve children, two of whom survive: Miss Laura, now of Dalton, and Rev. M. A. Mathews. Rev. M. A. Mathews was educated at the Gordon institute and early resolved to embrace the clerical profession. Under the supervision of a private tutor he was enabled to pursue the Princeton college theological course and in 1886, before he attained his majority, he was licensed to preach the gospel. In 1887 he was ordained and given charge of the First Presbyterian church at Calhoun, where, with a mind fully equipped for the task and its responsibilities, he entered upon his pastoral duties and continued in their discharge during a period of four years. From the outset his career was marked with brilliant and successful achievements in the cause of the gospel. In him, as well became his mission and profession, were united the simplicity and artlessness of the true Christian teacher, the persuasive eloquence of the enthusiastic evangelist, the logical powers and cogent reasonings of the finished scholar, and the courtly bearing and refined manners of the true gentleman. The great talents of such a man must necessarily be known abroad, despite the humility of the character, and pressing invitations to participate in evangelistic work were extended to him from all parts of the country, and pulpits and forums await his pleasure and opportunity. These invitations he accepted and continues to accept in so far as his services as an evangelist does not deteriorate from his duties as a resident pastor. In 1887-88 he took an active part in the temperance work and agitation then being vigorously conducted throughout this state, and his labors largely contributed to the success of that movement. On May 1, 1893, he became pastor of the First Presbyterian church at Dalton. His labors at that place have met with distinguished consideration and marvelous success. The large increase in the membership of the church was a fitting and invariable response to his practical but aggressive efforts and Herculean labors in the field of morals and religion. In promoting and advancing the cause of the gospel among men Mr. Mathews is no theorist. He is pre-eminently a practical man, a man of method and sense, who avails himself of any and all justifiable means to reach the hearts and enlighten the understanding of men. In the affairs of everyday life he is active and enterprising, lending his aid and influence to any enterprise or measure intended to promote the material welfare of his fellow men, believing that such enterprises and measures, when legitimate in themselves, are but other agencies through which the blessings of God are conferred upon man. His services as an evangelist have been rendered gratuitously, and pecuniary offers for his religious services have never governed nor influenced his pastoral duties. He has felt it his duty to decline numerous flattering offers and calls to large and wealthy pastorates, believing the labor which he undertook in his present charge is still incompletd. Consequently a pressing call to the First Presbyterian church at San Antonio, Tex., at a proffered salary of $4,000 per year, he has felt it his duty to decline. Similar offers from other churches he has also declined. Recently he accepted an invitation from the hands of his friend, Dr. Talmage, of the Brooklyn tabernacle, to occupy his pulpit in the city during the latter's contemplated trip abroad, a pleasure denied him, however, by reason of the conflagration which resulted in the destruction of that famous temple of worship. Mr. Mathews is still a young man, and in the natural order of things can hardly be said to have reached that period of life when the mental powers are supposed to attain the highest stage of development. Life is still before him, with its golden opportunities to serve his Maker in the service of society, to promote by his efforts and example the welfare and happiness of his kind. He needs no promptings in his labors. As a preacher in the pulpit, a lecturer on the forum, and a writer for the press, this tireless and indefatigable servant has pursued the even tenor of his way in expounding the truths of the gospel, ever cheerful and full of hope that in the end his labors will receive that reward which the Redeemer promised. Mr. Mathews is a devoted student of profane literature, as of religious subjects. His library at Dalton is, perhaps, the largest private miscellaneous collection of books in the state. Within its precincts he lives and works, prepares his lectures and sermons, entertains his friends and visitors by an occasional conversazione in an elegant and charming manner. He is a royal arch Mason, takes an active interest in masonic affairs, and at the meetings of the craft is always a welcome attendant.

DAVID W. MITCHELL is one of the prosperous planters of Whitfield county, and tax collector. He was born in Franklin county, Ga., Jan. 6, 1835, and was the son of James Mitchell, also born in that county, a prominent character in his day, who settled in what is now Whitfield county prior to 1837, and was engaged in the service of the United States in the removal of the Cherokees from Georgia. James Mitchell married Lucy, daughter of C. W. Bond, of Murray county, and David W. is the issue of their marriage. He was reared on a farm and married Miss Mary Bromlow, daughter of William Bromlow, one of the pioneer settlers of Whitfield county. The issue of their marriage was nine children: Charles H., Nancy, George J., Augusta, William, Samuel, John, Lucy and Molly, now deceased. Mrs. Mitchell died in Whitfield county, Oct. 1, 1887. At the commencement of the war Mr. Mitchell resolved to support the cause of the south, and joined his fortunes to the Confederacy. In 1862 he enlisted in the Fourth Georgia cavalry, commanded by Col. Avery, but soon retired from the cavalry service and enlisted in the Thirty-ninth Georgia infantry, commanded by Col. McConnell, and saw active service in this state until his capture in 1864. He was confined a prisoner of war at Louisville until May 18, 1865. He returned home and engaged in farming in Whitfield county and soon retrieved the damage his interests had sustained by the havoc of war, in which he freely participated when the honor of his state demanded his presence on the field of battle. Mr. Mitchell has manifested but little inclination to engage in active politics. But in 1893 he became the candidate of his party for the office of tax collector, and was elected, and entered upon the discharge of his duties. The people of Whitfield county expressed their approval of his official conduct and their appreciation of his services by re-electing him to this office by an increased majority in 1895. His official services have been rendered in an efficient manner and in a measure to amply justify the indorsement he has recently received at the hands of the voters of Whitfield county. The paternal grandfather of Mr. Mitchell was a native of Virginia, who settled in Franklin county, Ga., early in this century. He served in the war of 1812 under Jackson and fought at the battle of New Orleans. He lived to a ripe old age and died in Franklin county in 1849. The father of Mr. Mitchell died in Grand Junction, Tenn., in 1879. His mother still survives at that place at an advanced age.

CAPT. AGRIPPA P. ROBERTS, one of the oldest of Whitfield's esteemed citizens, is a native of Rutherford county, N. C., and was born on March 1, 1830. He was a son of Noah Roberts and Harriet Chandler, who married in South Carolina. His mother was a native of Virginia, and a daughter of Timothy Chandler. Noah Roberts was born in Rutherford county in 1805, and died in Tippah county, Miss., Feb. 7, 1894. Early in life he settled in Rowan county, N. C., where he soon attained prominence, and was elected sheriff, serving creditably in that capacity for many years. In 1847 he moved with his family to St. Louis, and for one year was there engaged in mercantile business. In 1848 he came to Murray county, Ga., and later settled at Dalton, where for several years he conducted a hotel business. He finally migrated to Tippah county, Miss., where he lived during the remainder of his life, an esteemed and respected citizen. At the commencement of the war he rendered such aid as lay in his power to the Confederate cause, and was one of its zealous supporters in that state. Capt. Roberts grew to manhood in North Carolina, where he received a liberal education at Valley Cruces and at Salisbury. On completing his studies he engaged in merchandising at St. Louis, and in 1848 moved to Spring Place, Murray Co., Ga., where he engaged in merchandising until his marriage in 1852 to Miss Josephene Berry, a daughter of Eli P. Berry of that county. He settled at Dalton after his marriage, and was soon after clerk of the inferior court, which office he filled for six consecutive years. In 1858 he retired from office and engaged in farming until the war called him from his home. At the commencement of hostilities he enlisted in Company H, Thirty-sixth Georgia infantry, commanded by that distinguished Georgian, Col. Jesse A. Glenn, who still resides at Dalton, the nestor of the Whitfield bar. He was commissioned captain of his company, and served in this capacity during the greater portion of the war. He served through the campaign of 1862 in Tennessee and Kentucky, was engaged at Cumberland Gap, Big Hill, Richmond, and later at Murfreesboro. His command having been ordered to the support of Vicksburg, he fought at the battle of Baker's Creek, and throughout the siege of Vicksburg. On the surrender of that city, in July, 1863, he was paroled and returned to his home. On being exchanged in the autumn of that year he joined his regiment after the battle of Chickamauga and fought at Missionary Ridge. He entered winter quarters at Dalton, and in the spring of 1864 he engaged in the celebrated retreat of Johnston to Atlanta. He was engaged at Resaca, New Hope Church, Kennesaw Mountain, and in all the battles and skirmishes fought on the approach to Atlanta. During the trying siege of that city he gave his best service to its defense. After Atlanta was taken he was detailed in the commissary department, where he remained until the surrender of the Confederate armies in the spring of 1865. He returned to his home, engaged in planting and in 1867 was elected sheriff of Whitfield county, an office which he filled with great credit during the following ten years. He is one of the best known citizens of north Georgia, of sterling character, and scrupulous honor. By his marriage Capt. Roberts reared seven children: Sarah; Cicero, who died in New Orleans, July 31, 1894; Mary, wife of W. H. Kirk of Dalton; William, now of Anniston, Ala.; Lucy, stenographer for the Cherokee Manufacturing company at Dalton; Josephine of New Orleans; and Lizzie of Dalton. The paternal grandfather of Capt. Roberts was Martin Roberts, a soldier of the war of the revolution. He was born in Rockingham county, Va., and served under Gen. Washington. He was an able supporter of the colonial cause, and furnished supplies in great quantities to the continental army. He settled in Rutherford county, N. C., where he died in 1838. Capt. Roberts aided in the establishment of the United Confederate Veterans at Dalton, and since its organization has been the commander of Joseph E. Johnston camp No. 34.

ADDISON HILL SHAVER, proprietor and publisher of the "Dalton Argus," was born at Hampton, York Co., Va. His family, which is a numerous one, are all Virginians. His father, Rev. David Shaver, D. D., for twenty-eight years was the editor of the "Christian Index," Atlanta, and is at present on the editorial staff of that paper, was born in Virginia about 1815, and resided in that state until 1867, when, with his family, he settled in Atlanta, and there assumed the editorial charge of the "Index." The life of Dr. Shaver has been devoted to religious work as pastor of different Baptist churches in Virginia, and in conducting religious newspapers in that state and in Georgia. Dr. Shaver married at Lynchburg, Va., the daughter of Samuel Nowlin. Of this marriage, one daughter, Kate, the wife of Wallace P. Reed, of the "Atlanta Constitution" staff; David, engaged in the job printing and book trade in Augusta, and Addison H. Shaver, survive. The wife of Dr. Shaver died at Augusta in 1893. Mr. Shaver was educated at Mercer university, Macon, Ga. In 1876 he became proprietor of a weekly newspaper, since which time he has been connected with the newspaper business continuously. He arose rapidly in the journalistic profession, and in various capacities has been connected with the leading newspapers in Georgia and Tennessee, among others, the "Atlanta Journal," "Atlanta Constitution," "Newberry Observer," "Albany Advertiser," and the "Chattanooga News," of which last paper he was managing editor, retiring therefrom in 1892 to become editor and proprietor of the "Dalton Argus," one of the leading weekly newspapers in north Georgia—the official organ of Dalton and Whitfield county. For several years he has been a correspondent of the leading metropolitan journals, his work being of such a character as to bring him into special prominence as a writer and all-round newspaper man, while his early experience in connection with and management of the country press has made him a master of the mechanical part of the business. Through his efficient business management and editorial ability, the "Argus" has taken its place among the leading and most reliable weeklies published in Georgia. His latent ability is boundless, and his versatile and forcible pen irreproachable. He disapproves of all manner of affectation, or rhetorical bombast. His idea of responsibility and duty in an editor is that he should be honest, fearless and out-spoken; that he should stand upon his own merits, and give his associates their deserts; he should write naturally and avoid oratorical display; he should be free from egotism, be able to see and recognize the merits of his contemporaries and associates; use brains, have charity, common sense and good humor. Possessing these various characteristics and accomplishments, Mr. Shaver's success in the newspaper world is no marvel, but is the result of the practical application of these rules of propriety, industry, and common sense which lead to success. Since settling in Dalton he has strongly supported every movement intended to promote the prosperity of his town, county and section. In 1890 he married Miss Lula McCord, a daughter of Hon. J. R. McCord of Rockdale county. He is identified with ex-Gov. Northen in the immigration movement.

ANTHONY JOHNSON SHOWALTER, publisher and printer, Dalton, was born in Rockingham county, Va., May 1, 1858. From the paternal branch of his family he inherited a fine taste for music. This taste he early cultivated and developed to a degree of perfection that enabled him to take his place as the leading composer, instructor and musical author in the southern states. His name is familiar in musical circles throughout the United States, both as an author and an accomplished professor and teacher of the art of music. Since 1880 he has been constantly engaged in establishing normal schools in every southern state—utilizing those institutions for the purpose of imparting instruction in the art of teaching music. Those schools have been conducted by Mr. Showalter upon an extensive scale, have been more largely attended, and more successful than any kindred institutions in the south. This work has occupied the greater part of his time since he became a resident of this state, and its beneficent results have greatly enhanced his professional reputation, and constitute an enduring monument to his labors. He has composed more extensively, perhaps, and is the author of more music books than any music writer of his age. The house of which he is the head conducts a large printing plant at Dalton and publishes a music journal known as "The Music Teacher," of which periodical he is the editor-in-chief. This journal is now in the eleventh year of its existence and has a circulation in the United States of more than 5,000 copies. His publishing house at Dalton is a very extensive and flourishing establishment, and under his immediate superintendence has not only attained a high standard of excellence in the character and quality of its work, but has grown to be the best equipped and most complete of its kind in the southern states. Among the most successful publications are the following: Good Tidings Combined, National Singer, Work and Worship, Glad Evangel, Class Choir and Congregation, Showalter's Theory of Music, Perennial Songs, The Singer's Ideal, Glorious Praise, Revival Choir, and Song-land Messenger. Some of these have reached a circulation of over 100,000 copies. Mr. Showalter is an elder in the Presbyterian church at Dalton and a most liberal contributor to its support. He is a royal arch Mason, a member of the Dalton lodge 105 and of Western chapter 80 and is organist and chorister of his lodge and chapter. He settled in Dalton in 1884. In 1881 he was united in marriage to Miss Callie Walser, of Texas. They have six children: Tennie, Karl Redan, Essie, Jennie Louise, Mary Lena and Maggie May. The father of Prof. Showalter is John A. Showalter, a native of Virginia, where he resides and is engaged in agricultural pursuits. At intervals during many years he has taught school and given musical instruction in the Shenandoah valley. He married Susan Miller and reared seven children: Mary E., wife of John Manking, of Rockingham, Mo.; Anthony J.; Lydia, wife of B. F. Senger, residing near Charlottesville, Va.; Benjamin F., of Rockingham county, Va.; J. Henry, professor of music, residing in Ohio; Jacob M., of Rockingham, Va., and Hettie, wife of Newton Smith, also of that county. The paternal grandfather of Prof. Showalter was Anthony Showalter, born in Rockingham, Va., in 1800, and died there in 1873. Mr. Jackson Showalter, of Georgetown, Ky., the champion chess player of the United States, and Judge Showalter, of Chicago, are cousins of the distinguished musician. Prof. Showalter has spent the past summer in Europe hearing the music and studying the methods of the teachers and choir leaders in England, France, Germany, etc., and being still young in years, will doubtless live to reflect still greater credit upon his adopted state.

GEN. BRYAN M. THOMAS. Dalton, the county seat of Whitfield county, prominent in the military annals of this state, and noted for its seminaries of learning and the culture of its inhabitants, has not unfrequently been the home of men eminent in the various professions and walks of life. Gen. Thomas has for years been a familiar figure in educational circles and his ripe scholarship and intuitive mind have enhanced his reputation as an instructor of youth. His family and kindred have played an important part in the history of Georgia and the Federal Union. He was born near Milledgeville in 1836, the son of Hon. John S. Thomas, also a native of Georgia, born near Augusta about 1775. John S. Thomas was reared among the hardy pioneer inhabitants and the surviving veterans of the revolution. In many respects he was a man of remarkable character, and early in life became prominent in public affairs and business circles. For many years he held the position of cashier in the old Central bank at Milledgeville, where his business tact, excellent judgment and practical acquaintance with commercial questions made his services invaluable. During his long career he was a stanch friend and supporter of Gen. Andrew Jackson, whom he knew intimately, and under whom he served in the war of 1812 as a lieutenant of artillery, his commanding officer being the celebrated Gen. Coffee. He fought later under Jackson in the Creek war and was engaged in the battle of the Horse Shoe, and at Calibee, Ala. About 1834 he served in the lower house of the general assembly, the associates of jurists and lawmakers whose reputations have long since become national, and whose public records have largely contributed to the history of our common country. He was the intimate friend of William H. and George W. Crawford, whose unlimited confidence he possessed during the lives of those distinguished statesmen. In the autumn of 1860 he was elected to the secession convention, and sat as a delegate in that body during its deliberations at Milledgeville in the winter of 1861, taking an active part in the proceedings. At the commencement of hostilities between the states he proceeded to Richmond and tendered his services to the secretary of war, asking for authority to proceed to Indian territory and raise a regiment of Cherokees, whose friendship he had always possessed, and still retained, to be used in the Confederate service. He was then in his eighty-seventh year, and his advanced age proved a bar to the acceptance of his services. He married Miss Mary B. Neal, daughter of Simpson Neal, of Savannah, by whom he had five children, two sons and three daughters: John G., now of Milledgeville, a graduate of Yale college, who studied law under Judge Pettigru, of Charleston, and practiced his profession until the commencement of the war; he is now engaged in planting; Henry, who served in the Confederate army throughout the war and died in 1892 at Milledgeville; Bryan M.; Mary N., now living at Milledgeville, and Eliza N., now deceased, who married Hon. Arthur Wright, a prominent banker of Thomas county, Ga. John S. Thomas died at Milledgeville in 1880 at the advanced age of one hundred and five years. Gen. Thomas was educated at Oglethorpe university and the United States Military academy at West Point. In 1854, being his junior year at the university, he received an appointment to a cadetship at West Point. He passed a creditable examination, being the first appointee from his district who had succeeded in that trying ordeal in many years. He entered diligently upon his studies, which he pursued during a course of four years, and in 1858 was graduated in a class nearly every member of which was destined to take a conspicuous part in the calamitous conflict which soon followed. During a part of the period of his cadetship Col. Robert E. Lee was superintendent of the academy, and thus early in life he was favored with the acquaintance of that distinguished man, whose memory he holds in profound veneration. Soon after graduating he was assigned to Company A, Fifth United States infantry, with the rank of second lieutenant. Later, during the Navajo campaign in 1860-61, he commanded the company, and saw his first military service in the field in the campaign against the Indians in New Mexico and Utah territory. In the spring of 1861, his native state having withdrawn from the Union and joined the Confederacy, he resolved, as a southern man, to follow in the wake of his people and defend the honor and dignity of Georgia. He forwarded his resignation to the war department in April of that year and returned to Milledgeville. From there he proceeded to Montgomery, Ala., then the seat of the new government. His services were readily accepted, and he was assigned to duty as drillmaster, with authority to muster in troops. Later he served on the staff of Gen. J. M. Withers for two years with the rank of major. He was engaged in the battles of Fort Pillow, Shiloh and Corinth. He served through the Tennessee and Kentucky campaign of 1862 and was present at the battle of Mumfordsville, where he aided in the capture of 6,600 Federals. He also fought at the battles of Perryville, Murfreesboro and Chickamauga. After the fight at Chickamauga he was commissioned a brigadier-general, and was ordered to the Gulf coast, where he commanded the troops during the remainder of the war. On April 9, 1865, in an engagement having for its object on his part the protection of the eastern defenses to Mobile, he was taken prisoner and confined a prisoner of war at Dauphin island until the latter part of June, when he was released and returned to his home. He engaged in planting in southwest Georgia, but his education and long military service ill fitted him for the pursuit, which he soon abandoned, and settled in Whitfield county in 1881, and was appointed by Gen. Longstreet United States deputy marshal for the northern district of Georgia. He served creditably in that capacity three years. He next established a private school, which he conducted several years, and in 1891 he was appointed superintendent of public schools at Dalton, which position he still continues to occupy, and in which he gives universal satisfaction. Gen. Thomas is a man of scholarly tastes and dignified bearing, with affable and agreeable manners, whose mind is well stored with a rich and varied fund of knowledge. His associations with and recollections of the distinguished characters of the present and past generation enliven his conversation with pleasing anecdotes and interest the listener. In the autumn of 1864 he married Miss Mary Withers, daughter of Gen. J. M. Withers. Gen. Withers was an old and intimate personal friend of President Jackson, a graduate of the United States Military academy at West Point and colonel of the Ninth regiment, United States infantry, during the Mexican war. He possessed the friendship of Gen. Grant, whom he befriended in the Mexican war, and during that president's administration he was tendered the collectorship of the port of Mobile, which he declined. By this marriage Gen. and Mrs. Thomas have four children: Eloise W., wife of J. D. Erwin, of Atlanta; Hattie Huger, John S. and Scylla. The paternal grandfather of Gen. Thomas was James Thomas, a native of Virginia, who settled at Augusta, Ga., in the last century, and served in the patriot army in the war of the revolution. He was presented with a sword by Gen. Nathaniel Greene for gallant conduct and meritorious service. He died near Milledgeville about 1844 at an advanced age.

WILLIAM EARL WOOD, M. D. Among the members of the medical profession at Dalton whose learning and skill have formed the basis of professional success is Dr. William E. Wood. He is by birth and education a Georgian; and comes from an old and respected line of ancestors whose labors and industry have contributed to the social and industrial development of this state since the early years of this century. Dr. Wood was born in Banks county on July 8, 1864. His father was James O. Wood, born in Jackson county, Ga. He married Louisa Thomas, daughter of Joel Thomas of Elbert county, a soldier of the war of 1812, in which he fought under Gen. Jackson, and was present and engaged in the battle of New Orleans. The paternal grandfather of Dr. Wood was Joshua Wood, a native of South Carolina, who settled in Jackson county early in the century. James O. Wood entered the Confederate service at the commencement of the war, enlisting in Marlow's command, and fought during the war in the army of north Virginia. At the close of the contest he returned to Banks county and engaged in agriculture and merchandising, in an effort to restore his fortune which, together with his home, had been ruined by the war. By his marriage with Louisa Thomas he has five children: Thomas N., deceased; James M., a farmer in Banks county; William E.; Arthur W., also of Banks county; and Belle, wife of John W. Dowdy of Jackson county. Dr. Wood was educated at Harmony Grove high school, where he completed his literary studies. He early desired to enter the medical profession, and with that object in view he commenced the study of medicine under the guidance of Dr. L. G. Hardeman of Harmony Grove. In the autumn of 1877 he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York city, and at this celebrated institution he diligently pursued his studies during the years 1887-88-89. Later he attended the medical department of the university of Georgia, Augusta, and was graduated therefrom 1890. Being well equipped for the practice of his profession he settled at Monroe, Ga., where he remained three years and enjoyed a successful practice. In 1893 he settled in Dalton, where he continues in the practice of medicine and surgery, and ranks high in his profession. Dr. Wood makes a specialty of the diseases of women and children; and justly enjoys the confidence and esteem of the people of Dalton. He is an ardent student and a painstaking worker in the profession to which he has devoted his life, and for which nature and his superior medical education have so eminently fitted him. Few physicians of his years have been or are so thoroughly equipped for the important responsibilities attached to the practice of medicine and surgery. In November, 1892, Dr. Wood was married to Miss Iranora, daughter of Nathaniel Frantz of Clear Spring, Md., and to them one child has been born—Iranora. Dr. Wood is a master Mason, a member of the Georgia Medical association, and of the American Medical association.

WILCOX COUNTY.

JOHAN C. AUSLEY, planter and turpentine farmer, Pitts, Wilcox Co., Ga., is the son of Merritt Ausley, deceased, and was born in Robinson county, N. C., Dec. 2, 1848. His opportunities for a good education were very limited, but having been endowed with more than the ordinary amount of good hard sense and a natural bent for business, he has by right use of his talents, won his way to success. From the close of the civil war until he left his native state he was engaged in the manufacture of naval stores. He came to Georgia in 1887 and located in Wilcox county. One of the most enterprising citizens of the county, he runs three turpentine stills, and is also extensively engaged in farming. He belongs to the masonic fraternity. He was joined in marriage in 1875 to Miss Mary McCaskill of South Carolina. Three sons and one daughter constitute their flock: Thomas Allen, seventeen years of age, and a graduate of a business college at Atlanta; Charles Merritt, fifteen years; Nannie Gertrude, thirteen years of age, and Calvin K. C., ten years of age. Mr. Ausley is one of the solid men of his county and deserves the success which his energy and business ability have brought him.

DR. DUNCAN F. M'CRIMMON, physician and surgeon, Rochelle, Wilcox Co., Ga. The grandparents of this gentleman were of Scotch descent, an earlier member of the family having migrated from Scotland to North Carolina. Braving the ills and discomforts attendant on pioneer life, they emigrated to Georgia, being among the earliest settlers of the state. These members of the family were marked by that strong individuality so often found in pioneer settlers of the states of America. The father of Dr. McCrimmon was a farmer by occupation, and was held in high regard by the people of his county, who honored him by several terms in both branches of the legislature, where he performed the duties devolving upon him most faithfully. Dr. Duncan F. McCrimmon is a native of Montgomery county, Ga., and was born May 15, 1837. After receiving a common English education in 1859 he entered the Atlanta Medical college as a student of medicine. He finished one course and then spent a year at the Oglethorpe Medical college at Savannah, where he was graduated in 1860. After leaving school he located on House creek in Wilcox county. In 1862, entering the Forty-ninth Georgia regiment, he was detailed as physician for the counties of Wilcox and Irwin. In this capacity he served during the war, and remained at House Creek, where he had a very large practice, until 1890, when he removed to Rochelle. He was married in 1864 to Miss Rebecca Wilcox, a daughter of Capt. T. L. Wilcox. To them have been born the following children: Charles L., railroad contractor, in Florida; Louis B., farmer; Hattie, wife of E. L. Revere, Rochelle; Duncan, Julia and Sallie, at home. Dr. McCrimmon was a member of the constitutional convention of 1877. In 1892 he was chosen by the people of his county to represent them in the general assembly, and while serving in that body was a member of the following committees: Agriculture, hygiene and sanitary, lunatic asylum and penitentiary. He is a member of Rochelle lodge, F. and A. M., No. 270, and of the Hawkinsville chapter. Prominent in politics, and a most successful physician, he stands among the foremost people of the place in which he lives.

HON. THOMAS L. HOLTON, judge of the county court of Wilcox county, Abbeville, Ga., and a lawyer of excellent practice and ability, graduated from the state university of Georgia, law department, in 1889, since which time he has been actively engaged at Abbeville. His father, John R. Holton, was a farmer by occupation, and died in 1874. Thomas L. Holton was born Jan. 9, 1867, in Appling county, Ga. Like many of our leading professional men, he passed his boyhood on the farm, receiving the ordinary common school education. He entered the university in 1888 and graduated with honor the following year as stated above. Six years of faithful and painstaking service at the bar have placed Judge Holton in the front rank of his profession. He was appointed judge of the county court Oct. 1, 1893, and holds the office acceptably to both clients and attorneys. Judge Holton took something better than a diploma from Athens, Ga., having carried away one of her fairest daughters, Miss Ida Haudrup. Their nuptials were celebrated in October following his graduation, since which time two lovely children have come to brighten their home: Winnie was born Dec. 22, 1891, and William Cecil, born Nov. 13, 1893. Judge Holton is a stanch democrat.

DR. JOSEPH D. MAYNARD, physician and surgeon, Abbeville, Wilcox Co., Ga., was born in Jones county, Ga., Dec. 26, 1856. He is the son of Sanford B. Maynard, who was a native of Edgefield district, S. C., whence he moved to Georgia. By occupation a planter, and a most successful one, highly esteemed and kindly regarded in the county where he lived, he died in 1868. Dr. Maynard was educated at Tremble institute, Winchester, Tenn. In 1882 he matriculated at Atlanta Medical college and was graduated in 1883. He was enabled to do this by reason of having read medicine for several years previously under a preceptor. He then supplemented his course in the Atlanta college with a short one at Vanderbilt university, Nashville, Tenn., and then entered actively on the practice of his profession at Tallapoosa, Ga. After one year he removed to Abbeville, where he has since resided. When he removed to Wilcox county there were only three physicians within its limits, making a large territory to be covered by each. On April 11, 1883, he was united in marriage to Miss Lillie May, daughter of William M. Shephard, at that time a resident of Atlanta, subsequently moved to Savannah. Dr. and Mrs. Maynard are the parents of two very bright and beautiful little girls, the elder of whom, Lillie May, is eight, and the younger, Jessie Myrtle, six years of age. Dr. Maynard is a blue lodge Mason, and exemplifies in his life the teachings of that noble fraternity. He is prominently identified with the railroad interests of his section, being surgeon for the Savannah, Americus & Montgomery railway, of which he is a director; and projector and president of the Waycross & Abbeville railway.

LEWIS F. NANCE, a county commissioner and prominent citizen of Rochelle, Wilcox Co., Ga., was born in Robeson county, N. C., Dec. 29, 1846, the son of Joshua Nance, deceased in 1873. The latter was a man of fine influence in his county, a member of the legislature, and county commissioner for years prior to his death. Lewis F. Nance was hardly of proper age to do much service in the late war, but he gave all he had, and that was himself. While a member of the Seventh battalion of junior reserves, stationed at Fort Fisher, he was captured by the enemy on Christmas day, 1864, and spent the remaining days of the war in a Yankee prison. Agriculture had been his occupation in North Carolina until 1882, and since in Wilcox county, Ga. He has a good six-horse farm, and also operates a two-still turpentine farm. Mr. Nance is a gentleman who has always commanded the respect of his fellow-citizens, and does his duty patriotically in filling important offices, which, while the pay is only the consciousness of duty well-done, must be held by men of standing and integrity to insure good local government. He married in North Carolina Miss Rebecca, daughter of Henry and Matilda Howell, and has reared a family of six children, of whom he is justly proud, as follows: William O., aged twenty-four, married to Miss Claudia Jackson of Dooly county, Ga.; Ella E., aged twenty; Julius A., aged eighteen; Almon J., aged fifteen; Mary A., aged twelve; and James F., aged ten years.

HON. DAVID B. NICHOLSON, solicitor of the county court of Wilcox county, postoffice Rochelle, Ga., and a lawyer of superior ability, is a native of North Carolina, in which state, Duplin county, he was born Sept. 19, 1853. His father was the late Rev. David B. Nicholson of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, who was for years one of the most gifted divines in the North Carolina conference. Mr. Nicholson is a college-bred man, having graduated at that justly celebrated school, Trinity college, N. C., in 1875. The early part of his career was spent in the school rooms of his native state, where he occupied good positions, for two years being a teacher in the academic department in the Clinton Female institute. Concluding to enter the legal profession he began reading in 1880 under the preceptorship of Col. William A. Allen of Kenansville, N. C., and was there admitted to the bar. He remained at Clinton until March of 1893, when he concluded to become a Georgian, and is now, as stated, a member of the bar of Wilcox county, where he expects to pass the remainder of his days. Mr. Nicholson was a man of considerable prominence in North Carolina, where he was esteemed for his rare qualities of head and heart. In 1881 he represented Duplin county in the lower house of the legislature, and in 1887-88-89 was reading clerk of the senate. In 1891-92-93 he was assistant chief clerk of the house. Soon after coming to Georgia he was appointed solicitor of the county by Gov. Northen and at the next session of the general assembly the appointment was confirmed. He is a fine judge of law and formidable opponent before a jury. The thorough manner in which he has taken up his work in the home of his adoption augurs well for his future success. Mr. Nicholson was happily married in Sampson county, N. C., in 1876, to Miss Katie Powell, and is the father of five sons and one daughter: Luke P., Justin L., Edwin F., Mary Z. and David B., Jr., and James M. Nicholson.

JOHN F. POWELL, physician and surgeon, Kramer, Wilcox Co., Ga., is one of the younger physicians of the county, and is a native of one of the most beautiful cities of the south, having been born in Atlanta, Ga., April 14, 1859. His father, Frank E. Powell, was a very skillful mechanic of that city, a machinist. He was a master of his trade, a kind and indulgent father, and an intelligent gentleman. He died in 1864. Dr. Powell received a good grammar school education in the excellent schools of his native city, sufficient for him to enter one of the professions. He chose that of medicine, and with that end in view he entered the Southern Medical college in 1884. Two years later he graduated from this institution with honor. He then spent a short period in Atlanta, after which he went to Gresston, and took charge of the medical department of the Gress Lumber company's camps. For nearly four years he remained here, until the camps were removed to Kramer, when he began practice there. He was appointed physician to the state wards here, and fills the position most faithfully at all times. Dr. Powell was the first physician to separate the white convicts from the black, and his camp had them separated long before the law prohibiting their confinement together was enacted. In 1887, at Eastman, Miss Lula F. Sapp became his wife. She is the granddaughter of Dr. David Sapp of that place, and a niece of Dr. Buchan, late representative of Dodge county. To this marriage have been born two children—both boys, and of the sturdiest kind—the elder born in 1891 and the younger a child of seven months, named respectively John and Charles F. A member of the Medical association, and a physician of much sound sense and practical knowledge, he is one of the few to merit the good will and kind regard of friends, neighbors and patrons. He ranks high as a surgeon and enjoys a large practice in both branches in the country surrounding Kramer.

ADOLPHUS A. F. REID, Abbeville, Wilcox Co., Ga., is the son of Jesse Reid, and is a native of Brunswick county, Va., where he was born June 16, 1816. Jesse Reid was a soldier in the war of 1812, and also held various civil offices of trust; was a member of the Virginia legislature for twenty-two consecutive years. He moved to Oglethorpe, Ga., in 1839, where he died in 1861, at the advanced age of eighty-six years. His son, Maj. Reid, was educated under Henry A. Dwight, a nephew of the celebrated divine of that name. He engaged in farming and milling on attaining manhood and was instrumental in founding the now flourishing town of Abbeville. Maj. Reid entered the army as captain of a company of state troops, and was afterward promoted to the rank of major, in which capacity he served during the siege of Atlanta. As a personal friend of the president of the Confederacy, he was honored by being in a position to aid Mr. Davis and his party in their attempted escape through this section of the state. Since the war he has been engaged in merchandising and farming at Abbeville. Of his marriage in 1863 to Miss Mary A. Stubbs, of Bibb county, Ga., a cousin of Col. Stubbs, who attained prominence in the late war, five of the children born are living. One of them married Dr. Royal, of Abbeville, and another is the wife of Edward Williams, a prominent lawyer of the same place. Maj. Reid holds a warm place in the hearts of the citizens of Wilcox county.

ALFRED R. ROYAL, Abbeville, Wilcox Co., Ga. The gentleman who is here mentioned is one of Abbeville's most trusted physicians. He comes from Worth county, where he was born Jan. 11, 1856, and where his parents still reside, his father, John P. Royal, being a planter in that county. Dr. Royal located in Abbeville in 1888, where he immediately fell into popular favor. Previous to his coming he had spent six years at Crisp, Irwin Co., Ga., where he had a large practice and an influential following. The year prior to his location in Irwin county he had spent in Dooly county, where he made his initial effort, having graduated in 1883, after a two years' course in the medical school of Atlanta. Dr. Royal is also a graduate of that celebrated post-graduate school, the New York Polyclinic, having taken a course there in 1887. At this time he gave especial attention to surgery, and now enjoys the reputation of being the leader in that branch of medical jurisprudence in Wilcox county. Besides engaging actively in the practice, Dr. Royal for several years carried on a drug business, but the outside demands on his time became so urgent he found it necessary in 1893 to dispose of it. As a physician Dr. Royal is peculiarly skilled in his diagnosis of cases, seldom failing to locate the seat of the disease. He is frequently in demand as consulting physician, evidencing the confidence reposed in him by his fellow craftsmen. Twice has Dr. Royal entered the matrimonial state. A niece of Gen. Eli Warren, Miss Martha R. Shinholser, became his first wife, Nov. 16, 1882. Her death occurred Jan. 24, 1885, leaving one son, Warren, born Jan. 7, 1885. Miss Anna Reid, a daughter of Maj. A. A. F. Reid, of Abbeville, became his second wife, Jan. 6, 1887. A daughter, Rebecca, was born to her April 1, 1888; Alfred R., Jr., and Edward H., born Sept. 30, 1892. Death again removed the wife and mother in October, 1892. Dr. Royal is a Free and Accepted Mason, Abbeville lodge No. 272, and a chapter Mason. He is also a Knight of Honor, being past dictator of that order.

E. H. WILLIAMS, attorney-at-law, Abbeville, Wilcox Co., Ga., is the eldest of six children born to Dr. Charles Williams, who was a physician of Georgetown, S. C., and who died in 1863. Edward Herbert was born April 19, 1854. Although the school period of his life was interrupted by the war and the disturbed condition of affairs immediately following that event, he succeeded in securing an academic education. Choosing the law for a profession he began its study under Richard Dozier, Esq., and subsequently with Joseph H. Earl, attorney-general of the state. He was admitted to the bar in his native state, and practiced at Lake City and Kingstreet until 1887, when he located at Abbeville. Prior to and since his admission to the bar Mr. Williams taught school in several different states. Since his coming to Abbeville he has made an earnest and patriotic citizen, serving as mayor of the town, and increasing the membership of the Abbeville guards, of which excellent military organization he is now captain. In 1892 Mr. Williams became a member by marriage of an influential Abbeville family, being happily wedded to Miss Laura, daughter of Maj. A. A. F. Reid. Two beautiful children are inmates of their home: Belle Reid and Martha Lovel. The character of Mr. Williams' citizenship has been such since his location in Abbeville as to cause the inhabitants of that bailiwick to feel indebted to his native state. Georgia needs such timber.

ROSSER ADAMS WILSON, saw-mill proprietor, Reidsfield, Wilcox Co., Ga., was born at Eatonton, one of the most beautiful and aristocratic towns of central Georgia, Aug. 3, 1859. His father, William A. Wilson, is an eminently successful teacher, having had charge of the Eatonton high school for a number of years, and from there was called to the presidency of Furlow Female college at Americus, Ga. He was a soldier of the late war and was captain of a company in a Georgia regiment. The people of Sumter county have honored him with their suffrages at several different times as their representative and he is now president pro tem. of the state senate. Mr. Wilson received a good academic education and has made practical use of it in the mercantile and saw-milling business. Prior to 1891 he was located at Leslie, Ga., whence he moved to Reidsfield, on the A. & W., in Wilcox county, where he is at present engaged in business. As a business man he has been very successful; his methods being such as to keep him entirely unencumbered—something somewhat unique among country merchants. In June, 1878, Mr. Wilson consummated a marriage with Miss Cora B., daughter of J. W. Bailey, a successful and prosperous planter of Sumter county. His talent for business and his decision of character have given him a position of influence in the county of his adoption, which he uses with rare judgment.

WILKINSON COUNTY.

FRANKLIN A. CANNON, Stephenville, Wilkinson Co., Ga., son of James and Leah West (nee Stanley) Cannon, was born in Wilkinson county, Sept. 16, 1842. His paternal grandfather, Nathaniel Cannon, was born in South Carolina in 1760, was a farmer, and married Miss Frances Sumner. The latter part of the last century he came to Georgia with his family and settled in what is now Wilkinson county, where himself and his children acquired a great deal of land, became very prominent, and were classed among the most solid and best citizens in the community. He died April 8, 1844, aged eighty-four years, and his widow died Jan. 1, 1850. Mr. Cannon's father was born March 5, 1809, in Wilkinson county, and followed farming all his life. By his marriage with Mrs. West he had the following children: Hardy; William, Company F, Third Georgia regiment, killed at Manassas; Mary F., widow of H. M. Green; Benjamin F., Company F, Third Georgia regiment, killed near Richmond, July 18, 1862; Nancy A., deceased; Edward B., Company F, Third Georgia regiment, killed at Gettysburg; Winniford, widow of James A. Sheffield; Franklin Allen, the subject of this sketch; Leah M.; Rachel A., deceased; Lucretia J., wife of R. J. Stuckey; Joseph M., deceased; Elsie, wife of N. Perry, and George W. Mrs. Cannon was twice married, and by her first marriage to Joshua West she had two children: James Stanley, born in 1827, and Frances E., widow of James Helton, born March 15, 1830. Mr. and Mrs. Cannon were both very devoted members of the Primitive Baptist church. Mr. Cannon died June 13, 1857; Mrs. Cannon, who was born Feb. 25, 1810, in Jones county, N. C., died July 20, 1874. Mr. Franklin A. Cannon was reared on the farm, and received a fairly good education. In June, 1862, he enlisted in Company F, Third Georgia regiment, and at the battle of Malvern Hill received a gun-shot wound from which he was disabled, and was discharged at Orange Court House, Aug. 12, 1863. On his return from the army he taught school, then attended Emory college, Oxford, a year, and also Oglethorpe university a year. He taught first in 1866, and has taught school more or less ever since. He taught in Twiggs county and adjoining counties nine or ten years. Himself and his youngest brother, George W., born Oct. 3, 1853, own about 1,400 acres of excellent land, where they with three sisters and a niece are living, enjoying the fruits of their labor and the soil, unembittered by any jealousies. Nathaniel Cannon, soon after settling in Wilkinson county, donated the land where "Old Sandy church" was built. Of this congregation he remained a member until the year 1836, when the church separated into two factions known as Missionary and Primitive Baptists. He went with the Primitives and donated the land that Mount Olive church was built on, and remained a devoted member of that church until his death. He was interred in the cemetery at "Old Sandy," where all of the deceased of the Cannon family have been buried, except those who sleep beneath Virginia's soil. Nathaniel and Frances Cannon had four sons: Miles, Allen, Wiley and James. Miles married Miss Isler and had seven sons and one daughter. Four of these sons were killed in the late war: Nathaniel, Nathan, Wiley and David. John G. and Miles J. are yet living in Wilkinson and Laurens counties, are engaged in farming, and each has a family. William married and moved to Louisiana about the year 1858, and the only daughter, Nancy J., widow of Wiley Bender, resides in Laurens county. Allen married Mrs. Rigbee and had two sons and four daughters: Iverson, William F., Lucretia, Fannie, Phoebe and Jane. Iverson was tax collector of

Wilkinson county at the time of his death, about 1858, and left a widow but no children. William F., Company F, Third Georgia regiment, received a gun-shot wound while engaged on the battlefield at the Wilderness, which caused his right arm to be amputated. He married before the war closed, and engaged in farming and merchandising near Toombsboro, Ga. He was successful and accumulated a large property, was elected sheriff, then ordinary of Wilkinson county, and these offices he filled with efficiency and honor. He then engaged in a wholesale mercantile business in Macon, Ga., where himself and family enjoy the fruits of his large farm near Toombsboro. Lucretia became the wife of Wiley Fordham, deceased; Phoebe, wife of James Pierce, deceased; Fannie, widow of Thomas Dixon, resides in Wilkinson county, and Jane, wife of Joel Lofton, lives in Florida. Wiley Cannon settled in Wilkinson county, remained a few years, then moved to Sumter county. Nathaniel and Frances Cannon had four daughters: Didema, Keziah, Joicie and Lizzie. By Didema's marriage with Nathaniel Mason she had three sons: James A., captain Company F, Third Georgia regiment; Nathaniel E. (both are substantial farmers residing in Wilkinson county); John, deceased. She also has six daughters by that marriage. By Didema's second marriage with Geo. Brack there were born three sons: Miles, Eli and Franklin, and two daughters, Elizabeth and Dorinda. These settled in Wilkinson county. Keziah married a Mr. Turner, who moved to Randolph county; Joicie married George Harrison and had one child, Elizabeth, and is deceased; Lizzie married Nathan Bowen, had one child, William, and is now deceased. James Stanley West, son of Mrs. James Cannon, married Elizabeth J. Harrison, whose mother was Joicie Cannon, in the year 1850. He moved to Appling county, Ga., where he lived until 1859; in the latter part of that year he settled in Texas, where he has reared a large and very interesting family

WILLIAM DICKSON, deceased, once a much-respected and prominent citizen of Wilkinson county, was born in Hancock county, Ga., in 1814. His father, Thomas Dickson, came to Wilkinson county when he was a small boy, and died soon after attaining to manhood and his marriage. Mr. Dickson received as good an education as the schools of the time and locality afforded, and when grown engaged in farming. He was married in 1844 to Miss Frances, born in Georgia, daughter of Joseph and Sennia (Mitchell) Paine. The two families—the Paines and the Mitchells—came nearly the same time, about 1800, from North Carolina to Georgia, and settled in Hancock and what is now Wilkinson county, where both accumulated property and became prominent. There were no oak trees, the growth being pine and wild oats. After his marriage Mr. Dickson settled down to quiet farm life, and was content with his employment and its profits, his family are esteemed and loved for their unostentatious neighborly kindness and piety. They raised two children: Mollie, wife of Hansford A. Hall, and John Allen, sketches of both of whom will be found in these Memoirs. Mr. Dickson was an ardent master Mason, and died in 1874. His venerable widow, a devout and devoted member of the Methodist church, is yet living, a benediction to the little family circle of which she is a member.

JOHN ALLEN DICKSON, farmer, Toombsboro, Wilkinson Co., Ga., son of William and Frances (Paine) Dickson, was born in Wilkinson county Jan. 1, 1847. His boyhood was spent at the homestead, and he received a fairly good education at the common schools of the county. Early in 1863, when only sixteen years old, he enlisted in Company F, Second regiment of state troops—familiarily called "Joe Brown's pets"—faithfully performing such service as was assigned to him. On June 22, 1864, Stephens' brigade, of which his command was a part, was sent to the front, and in an engagement on the Powder Springs road near Marietta he was shot through the hip. Soon afterward his father came for him and took him home. Twenty-three pieces of bone were taken from the wound, from the effects of which he was confined to his bed and lay on his back four months. He did not re-enter the service; but as soon as he was able he went to school for a year, and then engaged in farming, which he has since followed with exceptionally favorable results. He owns nearly 2,000 acres of very fine land, on which he has a large and well improved plantation, running fourteen plows. He is a model farmer and manager, and is one of the really solid and substantial citizens of Wilkinson county. Mr. Dickson was married March 2, 1869, to Sarah M., daughter of James and Elizabeth (Sutton) Wright. Mr. Wright was a native of Wilkinson county, and was a thrifty, money-making man, acquired considerable property, and became quite prominent. The Suttons were from North Carolina, coming to Georgia early in life. Mr. Wright died in October, 1852, and his widow died Jan. 26, 1894, aged eighty-one years. Both of them were consistent members of the Baptist church. To Mr. and Mrs. Dickson eight children have been born: Elizabeth, wife of B. J. Brown; William L., James R., John David, Grover C., Mary C., and Leonard A. Mr. and Mrs. Dickson worship at the Baptist church.

WILLIAM ALFRED HALL, planter, Red Level, Wilkinson Co., Ga., son of William Anderson and Edna (Paulk) Hall, was born in Wilkinson county in 1838. His paternal grandfather, Isaac Hall, was one of the earliest settlers of what is now Wilkinson county, and a near relative of Dr. Lyman Hall, one of the Georgia signers of the Declaration of Independence, for whom Hall county was named. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. Mr. Hall's father was born in Wilkinson county Nov. 3, 1811; was for many years a justice of the peace, was a justice of the inferior court, and a member of the board of county commissioners. He was a man of limited means, made annually about fifty bales of cotton, and was of unusual kindly and benevolent disposition. During the war he was detailed to look after the comforts and necessities of soldiers' families. He was also recognized as a man of marked ability, discharging every public duty with conscientious fidelity and excellent judgment. He was a democrat, and himself and wife were members of the Methodist church. He died July 12, 1892, and his wife, born Jan. 1, 1816, died Sept. 10, 1885. Mr. Hall's mother's father, Paulk, was a descendant of the early settlers of Georgia. Their children were: Mansel M., Company F, Third Georgia regiment, killed at Petersburg; William A., the subject of this sketch; Hansford A., farmer, Wilkinson county; Mary M., deceased; Isaac O., wounded at Atlanta, and died as the result of the amputation of his leg; and Luther A., lawyer, was with the Second regiment, Georgia state troops. Mr. Hall grew to manhood on the old homestead and received only limited educational advantages, to which he added afterward. In 1861 he enlisted in Company D, Fifty-seventh Georgia regiment. He was with the forces at Vicksburg, where he spent forty-eight days and nights in the trenches. He remained with the army until the close of the war, and surrendered at Greensboro, N. C. Returning home he directed his attention to his extensive planting interests, which he has managed with exceptional skill and pecuniary success. He is progressive in his views and practice, and fully alive to all movements promising the material, educational and religious advancement of the county. He has been a member of the board of education six years, and of the board of commissioners five years. Mr. Hall was married in 1868 to Miss M. Vanlandingham, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Dean) Vanlandingham. He was of German extraction, the family having emigrated to Georgia about the close of the last century. This union has been blessed with eight children: Cora E., Max E., Flora L., Ira, Emma R., Alma, John M., and Ethel, all at home, forming an attractive and interesting family circle. He is a master Mason, and himself and wife are prominent members of the Methodist church, of which he is a steward and trustee.

HANSFORD A. HALL, farmer, Toombsboro, Wilkinson Co., Ga., was born in May, 1844. He was raised on the farm and educated at the near-by country schools. He taught school in 1861, and the next year enlisted in Company A, Capt. (afterward colonel) S. T. Player, Forty-ninth Georgia regiment. With his command he was in many of the bloodiest and most stubbornly contested battles of the war, and innumerable skirmishes. He was a participant in the seven days' fight around Richmond, and was severely wounded at Gettysburg, while lying on the ground and supporting a battery. He was carried to the field hospital, and at the end of three months reported for duty. At the battle of the Wilderness he was wounded in the right hip, which knocked it out of shape, and from the wound quite a number of pieces of bone were extracted. The ball is still in his body. After remaining a while in the hospital he came home on a furlough from time to time reported to the board at Macon, and was finally placed on the retired list. As soon as he was able he engaged in farming, and has followed it since as a life-pursuit. He is one of the largest farmers in the county, and is generally regarded as one of the best. He owns now 4,500 acres of splendid land, after having given 1,100 acres to his son; and his farm is said to be one of the best improved and best equipped of any for miles around. He has made nearly all he has and has displayed superior farming ability and business management. He has served the people as justice of the peace and also as county commissioner. Mr. Hall was married in the fall of 1864 to Mary E., daughter of William and Frances (Paine) Dickson, and to them two children have been born: Willie A., born in November, 1865, a successful farmer near Irwinton, Wilkinson Co., and Isaac Oliver, born in January, 1875, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Hall and all the family are active members of the Methodist church, of which he is a steward and trustee.

WORTH COUNTY.

WILLIAM A. AARON, attorney-at-law, Ashburn, Worth Co., Ga., is one of the bright young men from north Georgia who have gone into the piney woods of the southern part of the state, carrying his home vim and determination with him. He is of Jewish descent, his father having emigrated to the United States from Germany in boyhood. He followed merchandising successfully and located in Newnan, Ga., where he was esteemed for his business ability. He fell at the hands of a band of outlaws which terrorized that vicinity in 1877. William A. Aaron was born Sept. 24, 1869, in Johnson county, Ga., and received his education in the schools of Sandersville and Statesboro. Before deciding on the law for a profession he tried a mercantile life and also gave school teaching a trial; but concluding that the law was a better field, he began its study in 1890 at Statesboro under that prince of lawyers, Col. H. T. Strange. After his admission he spent a year in Statesboro, then came to Ashburn. He is making a specialty, as much as is possible in a small town, of criminal law, and in representing minor heirs in unclaimed lands. Mr. Aaron is yet young in the profession, but has already established a reputation which augurs well for his future. He is one of the wheel horses of democracy in his section and delights in doing anything that will advance the interests of his party. He was happily married in June, 1893, in Effingham county, Ga., to Noral L. Futtrell, whose attractiveness and bright social qualities make her a most lovable friend and neighbor.

COLUMBUS A. ALFORD, saw-mill proprietor, Willingham, Worth Co., Ga., is a man of affairs in the county, where for the past twenty-two years he has been actively and successfully engaged in developing her wonderful lumber resources. His large saw-mill plant at Willingham supplies an extensive foreign and coast-wise trade, and under the management of Mr. Alford has placed its owner in comparatively easy circumstances. Mr. Alford's parents resided in Wake county, N. C., at the time of his birth, Feb. 6, 1850, where his father was a successful planter, lumberman and manufacturer of naval stores for a period of years—up to the time of his death in 1878. The son was given a good academic education and in 1871 came to Worth county, Ga., where he engaged in the manufacture of naval stores at Sumner for twelve years, thence removing to Willingham. During his residence in Worth county Mr. Alford has found time from business cares to take an active and influential part in the public life of the county, having served on the board of commissioners several years, and on the board of education, of which body he is now a member. In 1888, in appreciation of his services to the democratic party, and in recognition of his ability and worth as exemplified in his private affairs, he was nominated and elected to the state senate from the tenth district. He served in the two following sessions with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. He is a member of Worth lodge No. 194, A. F. and A. M., and of Warrior lodge of the Knights of Honor. Mr. Alford has been twice married, and is the father of seven children, his first wife having been Martha A. Sumner, of Sumner, Ga., who died in 1881, leaving two children: Beulah B. and Grace F. His second and present estimable wife was Jennie E., daughter of Benjamin Johnston, of Americus, Ga., who has borne him five children: Mattie B., Bennie L., Frankie E., Columbus A. and Earl J.

JOHN W. EVANS is a member of the well-known firm of J. S. Betts & Co., which operates one of the most extensive milling plants in southern Georgia, at Ashburn, Worth Co. His father, Sterling G. Evans, was a planter of Hancock county, who died in 1876, after a long and useful life. John W. Evans was born in Hancock county Sept. 27, 1844, and was educated at old Mt. Zion academy under the early teaching of ex-Gov. W. J. Northen. The great civil war began just as Mr. Evans was of that age when the fires of youth burn brightest, and the early days of the year 1861 found him a soldier in the Fifteenth Georgia regiment. He afterward became a member of the Ninth Georgia regiment, in which he served to the close of the war. Farming occupied his attention after the war till 1879, when he accepted the position of cashier in the banking house of Lewis Leonard & Co., at Hawkinsville, in which position he served with satisfaction till 1886. He then severed his connection with that institution to engage in the lumber business, which was offering great attractions along the E. T., Va. & Ga. railroad. Locating at Dempsey, Dodge Co., he operated successfully until 1888, being a member of the present firm. Mr. Evans was married in 1872 to Miss Ella, daughter of James Bohannon, one of Dodge county's most progressive and extensive planters, and they have had six children born to them, three sons and three daughters. His two oldest sons, George S. and John L. B., are already members of the same firm, though hardly of legal age. He is a man of fine business ability and of excellent social qualities, and deserves the success he has attained.

JAMES NICHOLAS REDLEY, physician and druggist, of Warwick, Worth Co., Ga., is living in the county of his nativity, where he was born Nov. 10, 1850. His father, David Redley, was a prosperous planter, and for many years was one of Worth county's best citizens. He died in 1887. Dr. Redley began the study of his profession in 1870 with Dr. T. W. Tyson, of Worth county, after having laid a good foundation in the common schools. In 1874 he matriculated at the Louisville Medical college, where he took two courses of lectures. In 1879 he entered the Atlanta Medical college, from which he was graduated with honor the following year. Locating at Warwick, he has spent the years since then in attending to the ills of a large clientele of patrons. As a physician Dr. Redley is of the highest rating, his practice being among the best citizens of his community. Socially he and his interesting family occupy a leading position, and enjoy the regard of the whole country-side. The doctor affiliates with the masonic fraternity, and has filled nearly every office in the gift of the members of Fort Early lodge No. 226. Dr. Redley lost the mother of his two eldest children in 1887, Miss Annie B., daughter of J. M. Rouse, whom he married in 1880. He married his present estimable wife, Miss Sallie Rouse, in 1892, she being a sister of his former wife. To her has been born one child. The names of his children are: James Nicholas, born June 5, 1882; Minnie Pearl, born March 4, 1884, and Ruth, born April 15, 1893.

WILLIAM L. SIKES, physician, druggist and extensive planter, Sumner, Worth Co., Ga., son of Eli and Charlotte (Burch) Sikes, was born in Dooly county, Ga., Jan. 31, 1851. His parents were Georgia born, his father being a small farmer. His boyhood days were passed during the late war, in consequence of which his educational advantages were limited, and good teachers being scarce what education he did receive was defective. The first money he made was when a boy twelve years old he made wire-grass hats. He became quite an expert, the demand became very large, and he accumulated quite a sum of money—for a boy of his summers—but it all went with the Confederacy. When eighteen years of age he commenced farming for himself; but at the end of two years accepted a situation as a teacher in a public school. Inspired by an ambition for a different field of labor and usefulness, and a predilection for the profession of medicine he commenced its study. He taught school two years, pursued his medical studies awhile and in 1874 attended lectures in Louisville at the Kentucky Medical college, and in 1879 matriculated at Atlanta Medical college, from which he graduated with honor the same year. He located at Isabella, the county seat of Worth county, where he successfully practiced until 1885, when he moved to Sumner, and in addition to his practice established a drug store. Not satisfied with what he knew, notwithstanding his flattering success, and ambitious of higher professional attainments, he went to New York in 1889 and attended a post-graduate course at the celebrated Polyclinic school in that city. He then returned to Sumner, where he has since remained. He is one of the leading physicians of his section of the state, and enjoys a practice limited only by his powers of endurance. He ranks high with the profession for ability and skill. In addition to his extensive practice and his drug store he conducts a large farm with marked success and profit; in fact, aided by the advice and intelligent co-operation of his wife, he has become one of the largest planters in Worth county.

As school commissioner of the county Dr. Sikes gives zealous attention to educational advancement, in which he takes great interest. Public-spirited and progressive, he is active in all matters promotive of the development of the county's resources; financially he is one of its solidest and most substantial citizens, and socially ranks with the most select. Dr. Sikes was married Sept. 14, 1880, to Miss Georgia V., daughter of James N. and Catharine Ford, and to them five children have been born: William A., born July 23, 1882; Gussie E., born May 27, 1884; Robert E., born July 18, 1886; Benjamin F., born Sept. 10, 1888; and Gladys I., born March 4, 1894. Dr. Sikes is a member of Warrior lodge, Knights of Honor, No. 3463, of which he is guardian and dictator; is a master Mason, and worshipful master of Worth lodge, No. 194, of which he has filled all the subordinate offices. He has been a member of the Baptist church since 1887, of which, the same year, he was elected a deacon.

BENJAMIN J. SLOAN, of the firm of Alford & Sloan of Willingham, Worth Co., was born in Crawford county on May 16, 1851. He is the son of Joseph A. and Rachel (Jeffcott) Sloan, natives of South Carolina. His father died in 1859, leaving him at the tender age of eight years with only a mother's guiding hands. He early showed signs of that business judgment which has brought him success, and when only a mere boy toddling around the saw-mills, was working for wages, and having acquired a fondness for mechanics has devoted the most of his life to the different branches of mechanical pursuits. Mr. Sloan was educated in the common schools and in 1885 assisted in establishing the present business, which has been conducted since in a most prosperous way. Mr. Sloan was married in 1880 to Miss Mattie A., daughter of B. Johnston. To this union have been born four children: Hugh J., Addie L., Bessie and Marguerite. Mr. and Mrs. Sloan belong to the Methodist Episcopal church, and he is a Mason in high standing. Mr. Sloan is a progressive man with a keen business scent and is watching with much satisfaction the great development of Georgia.

JAMES H. TIPTON, a rising young attorney of Warwick, Worth Co., Ga., is a native of Worth county, born Oct. 28, 1872, his father, C. G. Tipton, being a prominent and successful planter, and for years clerk of the superior court and mayor of Sumner. The son was educated in the high school at Sumner, and in 1893 began the study of law under Col. T. R. Perry, at Sylvester, Ga. He passed a successful and creditable examination April 26, 1894, and immediately located for the practice of his chosen profession at Warwick, where he is rapidly gaining a foothold. His careful and studious habits, and well-known integrity of character, and engaging social qualities augur for him a bright future.

JOSIAH S. AND JOHN H. WESTBERRY comprise the firm of J. S. Westberry & Bro., leading merchants of the town of Sylvester, Worth Co., Ga. Their father is Milton Westberry, a farmer and miller of the same county. Josiah S. was born Dec. 11, 1852, in Appling county, Ga. He received a very limited education on account of the chaotic condition of the country at the time when he should have been in school. He early evinced an aptitude for business, and in 1868 began the manufacture of naval stores in Worth county. This he continued with varying success until 1890, when he, in company with Daniel McGirt started a mercantile business at Polen. The following year he and his brother began the present mercantile business, since which time the firm has remained as above. Josiah S. married Miss Sarah C. McPhaul, and is the father of four children: Florien, Malcolm, Willie H. and Katie H. He is a member of Worth lodge, No. 191, A. F. & A. M., and of Jesup chapter. John H. Westberry was born Nov.

11, 1863, in Wayne county, Ga. He began his business career as a clerk for W. H. McPhaul at Sylvester in 1883, and in 1891 became a member of the present firm. He married Miss Minnie, daughter of T. M. Coram of Worth county, and has two children: Louise L. and Gladys. He is also a member of Worth lodge of Masons, of which he has been senior warden two years, and belongs also to the chapter at Tifton. The Westberry brothers are regarded as shrewd and careful business men, and are in every sense worthy members of the community in which they live.

WILKES COUNTY.

KIMBLE A. WILHEIT, merchant, Washington, Wilkes Co., Ga., son of Thomas T. and Julia C. (Freeland) Wilheit, both parents natives of Anderson district, S. C., was born in that district, June 4, 1869, the first born of six children. While he was yet quite young his parents moved to Lincolnton, Lincoln Co., Ga., where, until he was fourteen years of age, he attended the schools of the town. His father having died, he had to leave school and begin the battle of life. Securing a clerkship with Mr. J. A. Benson, of Washington, he remained with him eight years, when himself and Gabriel Toombs Anthony (another clerk of Mr. Benson's) bought Mr. Benson's business and engaged in merchandising under the firm-name of Wilheit & Anthony. Being industrious, of unbending integrity, and possessing the sympathy and unquestioning confidence of the people, they have built up one of the largest businesses in Washington. It is but another illustration of what can be accomplished by pluck and push, coupled with determination and well-directed energy. Alone, without money or influential friends, he has thus far successfully worked out life's problem. Mr. Wilheit was happily married Nov. 30, 1893, to Miss Kate Toombs Anthony, daughter of Edwin M. Anthony, Washington, Ga. He is a devoted member of the Methodist church, recognized as a true Christian, "always abounding in the work of the Lord." His Christian life, which it may reasonably be claimed is the foundation of his success, has won friends and applause, and affords an example well worthy of other young men.
